I believe, Mr. Chairman, the argument that was made, more than any other argument, for the return of Senator MORGAN to the other branch of Congress, a body which he has adorned with his learning for so many years—the chief argument that sent him back there the other day so triumphantly was his long, conspicuous, and able advocacy of the Nicaraguan Canal. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON of Alabama. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Civil Code for Alaska.

SPEECH
OF
HON. HENRY F. NAPHEN,
OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 17, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes—

Mr. NAPHEN said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I shall avail myself of the latitude allowed in debates on this bill by confining myself to another subject, one which is of more importance than the bill under consideration. Though the treaty with Spain was ratified in February, 1899, and a few days later the President in an address, speaking of our foreign possessions, said, "This whole subject is now with Congress, and Congress is the voice, the conscience, and the judgment of the American people," nevertheless Congress has not thus far been called upon to determine the status of the peoples of the Philippine Islands. I wish to call attention to this fact and place on public record my emphatic protest against the Philippine policy of the Administration—a policy which has tarnished the honor of the nation, a policy of burdensome taxation and an unwarranted expenditure of money, and waste of human life, and a policy which is contrary to the principles upon which our form of government rests.

I do this with sincerity, placing duty to country above all other considerations.

In our treatment of the peoples of our new possessions we have substituted for the law of justice the maxim of Rob Roy—

> That they should take who have the power,
> And they should keep who can.

The claim made that we came into possession of those islands through force of circumstances beyond our control is not true.

We declared to the world at the beginning of the war with Spain that it was not for a mercenary purpose, but for humanity and for the liberation of Cuba.

In a letter from Mr. Williams, our consul at Manila, to Mr. Cridler, dated February 22, 1898, he states:

"The condition here," referring to the Philippine Islands, "and in Cuba are practically alike. * * * A republic is organized here, as in Cuba."

Nothing was said indicating it to be our purpose to enter upon and forcibly retain possession of those islands, thousands of miles from our shores, inhabited by 10,000,000 of peoples, consisting of 84 different tribes, of all colors, from the deepest black to the lightest yellow, and of various customs, and speaking a babel of tongues.

The facts justify me in saying that it was the original purpose of the Administration to obtain and retain possession of those islands. This intention of the Administration was hidden and not at first disclosed. The people were charmed by patriotic phrases and lured along as the Pied Piper led the children of Hamelin by his music.

The day before the President sent his message to Congress recommending that a resolution be passed declaring a state of war to exist between Spain and the United States, Mr. Pratt, our consul at Singapore, was in consultation with Aguinaldo, the leader of the insurgents, and as a result of the interview he that same day telegraphed to Admiral Dewey:

> Aguinaldo, insurgent leader, here. Will come Hongkong arrange with Commodore for general cooperation insurgents Manila, if desired. Telegraph.
>
> PRATT.

Admiral Dewey replied:

> Tell Aguinaldo come as soon as possible.
>
> DEWEY.

And the next day Aguinaldo set sail to meet Dewey.

The following letter, dated May 5, is from Mr. Pratt to Mr. Day:

Mr. Pratt to Mr. Day.

No. 217.] CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Singapore, May 5, 1898.

SIR: I regret to have to report that the circumstances attending the departure from here of Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo to join Commodore Dewey, which I endeavored so hard to prevent being disclosed, were, in substance, made public in yesterday's edition of the Singapore Free Press, from the inclosed copy of which you will note, by reference to my reports Nos. 212 and 213 of the 28th and 30th ultimo, respectively, that though the facts are, in the main, correctly given, the dates are not quite accurate, and a certain amount of conjecture has been indulged in as regards my action in the matter and that of the Commodore.

Almost immediately after the occurence the editor of the above journal told me that he had been informed, but declined to say by whom.

I endeavored to get him to promise to keep the whole affair quiet, but, though he would not agree to this, he gave me his word not to mention it until after sufficient time should have elapsed to admit of General Aguinaldo's reaching Hongkong, which he must already have done.

Hence no harm can come of the disclosure, and though it is annoying, I suppose I should rather congratulate myself that the secret possessed by such a number was kept so long.

I have, etc.,

E. SPENCER PRATT,
United States Consul-General.

The publication referred to is as follows:

[The Singapore Free Press, Wednesday, May 4, 1898.]

THE WAR—IMPORTANT POLITICAL ARRANGEMENT—AGUINALDO IN SINGAPORE—AN INCOGNITO VISIT—HE JOINS ADMIRAL DEWEY—PLAN CARRIED OUT BY AMERICAN CONSUL-GENERAL.

Just before the actual outbreak of hostilities between Spain and the United States Singapore has been the scene of secret political arrangement by which Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo y Fami, the supreme head of the revolutionary movement in the Philippines, has entered into direct relations with Admiral Dewey, commander of the American squadron in China waters while that officer was still at Hongkong.

In order to understand and appreciate this interesting historical incident properly, it will be necessary to allude to the causes leading to the second appearance of the rebellion in the Philippines, which was almost coincident with, though not instigated by, the strained relations between Spain and the United States.

In December last Gen. Primo de Rivera, who above all other Spanish generals has an intimate knowledge of the country and its inhabitants, found the position untenable for both parties.

Neither of these had the remotest chance of terminating the rebellion decisively, the rebels secure in their mountain fastnesses, the Spaniards holding the chief towns and villages on the coast. Primo de Rivera therefore sent two well-known Philippine natives, occupying high positions in Manila, to propose terms of peace to General Aguinaldo in Biac-na-Bato. A council of the revolutionary government was held, in which it was agreed to lay down arms on condition of certain reforms being introduced. The principal of these were:

1. The expulsion, or at least secularization, of the religious orders, and the inhibition of these orders from all official vetoes in civil administration.
2. A general amnesty for all rebels, and guaranties for their personal security and from the vengeance of the friars and parish priests after returning to their homes.
3. Radical reforms to curtail the glaring abuses in public administration.
4. Freedom of the press to denounce official corruption and blackmailing.
5. Representation in the Spanish Parliament.
6. Abolition of the iniquitous system of secret deportation of political suspects, etc.

Primo de Rivera agreed to these reforms in sum and substance, but made it a condition that the principal rebel leaders must leave the country during His Majesty's pleasure. As these had lost all their property or had had it confiscated and plundered, the Government agreed to provide them with funds to live in a becoming manner on foreign soil.

The rebels laid down their arms and peace was apparently secured; but no sooner had they done so and returned to their houses than the intransigeant religious orders commenced at once to again persecute them and trump up imaginary charges to procure their rearrest. The Spanish Government, on its side, imagining itself secure, desisted from carrying out the promised reforms, thinking another trick like that played on the Cubans after the peace of Zanjon, arranged by Martinez Campos, might succeed. The Filipinos, however, with this business before them, refused to be made dupes of, and have taken up arms again, not alone in the immediate districts round Manila but throughout the archipelago, which merely awaits the signal from General Aguinaldo to rise en masse, no doubt carrying with them the native troops hitherto loyal, and for which loyal service they have received no thanks, but only ingratitude.

Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, accompanied by his aide-de-camp, Col. Marcelo H. del Pilar, and his private secretary, Mr. J. Leyba, arrived incognito in Singapore from Saigon on April 21, 1898. In Saigon, where Aguinaldo had remained for one week, he had interviews with one or two old Filipino friends now resident there. The special purpose of Aguinaldo's visit to Singapore was to consult other friends here, particularly Mr. Howard W. Bray, an old and intimate English friend, for fifteen years resident in the Philippines, about the state of affairs in the islands generally—particularly as to the possibility of war between the United States and Spain, and whether, in such an event, the United States would eventually recognize the independence of the Philippines, provided he lent his cooperation to the Americans in the conquest of the country.

The situation of the moment was this, that the conditions of the honorable peace concluded on December 14, 1897, between President Aguinaldo, on behalf of the Philippine rebels, and H. E. Governor-General Primo de Rivera, on behalf of Spain, had not been carried out, although their immediate execution had been vouched for in that agreement.

These reforms would have provided protection to the people against the organized oppression and rapacity of the religious fraternities, would have secured improved civil and criminal procedure in courts, and have guaranteed, in many ways, improvements in the fiscal and social conditions of the people. The repudiation by the Spanish Government of these conditions, made by General Primo de Rivera, now left the rebel leaders, who had for the most part gone to Hongkong, free to act. And it was in pursuance of that freedom of action that Aguinaldo again sought counsel of his friends in Saigon and Singapore, with a view to the immediate resumption of operations in the Philippines.

Meantime Mr. Bray, whose assistance to this journal on matters connected with the Philippines has been very considerable, as our readers will have seen, was introduced by the editor of the Singapore Free Press to Mr. Spencer Pratt, consul-general of the United States, who was anxious, in view of contingencies, to learn as much as possible about the real condition of the Philippines. It was a few days after this that Aguinaldo arrived incognito in Singapore, when he at once met his friends, including Mr. Bray.

Affairs now becoming more warlike, Mr. Bray, after conversation with Mr. Spencer Pratt, eventually arranged an interview between that gentleman and General Aguinaldo, which took place late on the evening of Sunday, the 24th of April, at "The Mansion," River Valley road. There were present on that occasion Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo y Fami, Mr. E. Spencer Pratt, consul-general United States of America; Mr. Howard W. Bray; Aguinaldo's private secretary, Mr. J. Leyba; Col. M. H. del Pilar, and Dr. Marcelino Santos.

During this conference, at which Mr. Bray acted as interpreter, General Aguinaldo explained to the American consul-general, Mr. Pratt, the incidents and objects of the late rebellion, and described the present disturbed state of the country. General Aguinaldo then proceeded to detail the nature of the cooperation he could give, in which he, in the event of the American forces from the squadron landing and taking possession of Manila, would guarantee to maintain order and discipline amongst the native troops and inhabitants in the same humane way in which he had hitherto conducted the war, and prevent them from committing outrages on defenseless Spaniards beyond the inevitable in fair and honorable warfare. He further declared his ability to establish a proper and responsible government on liberal principles, and would be willing to accept the same terms for the country as the United States intend giving to Cuba.

The consul-general of the United States, coinciding with the general views expressed during the discussion, placed himself at once in telegraphic communication with Admiral Dewey at Hongkong, between whom and Mr. Pratt a frequent interchange of telegrams consequently took place.

As a result another private interview was arranged at the American consular residence at the Raffles Hotel between General Aguinaldo, Mr. Spencer Pratt, Mr. Howard Bray, and Mr. Leyba, private secretary to General Aguinaldo.

As a sequel to this interview, and in response to the urgent request of Admiral Dewey, General Aguinaldo left Singapore for Hongkong by the first available steamer, the Peninsular and Oriental Malacca, on Tuesday, the 26th of April, at noon, accompanied by his aid-de-camp, Captain del Pilar, and Mr. Leyba, his private secretary.

The only interview or conversation with any strangers that General Aguinaldo had during his stay in Singapore other than the above interviews was during a visit paid by General Aguinaldo to Mr. W. G. St. Clair, editor of the Singapore Free Press, at the office of this journal. On that occasion General Aguinaldo was accompanied by Mr. Bray and Mr. Leyba.

Throughout the whole stay of General Aguinaldo in Singapore the editor was kept fully informed daily of the progress of affairs. Naturally, however, all statement of what occurred has been withheld by us until what has been deemed the fitting moment has arrived.

The substance of the whole incident in its relations to the recent course of affairs in the Philippines has been very fully telegraphed by the editor both to New York and London.

The influence of the incident on the future of the Philippines may prove to be of a far-reaching historical character.

AGUINALDO'S POLICY.

General Aguinaldo's policy embraces the independence of the Philippines, whose internal affairs would be controlled under European and American advisers. American protection would be desirable temporarily, on the same lines as that which might be instituted hereafter in Cuba. The ports of the Philippines would be free to the trade of the world, safeguards being enacted against an influx of Chinese aliens, who would compete with the industrial population of the country. There would be a complete reform of the present corrupt judicature of the country, under experienced European law officers.

Entire freedom of the press would be established, as well as the right of public meeting. There would be general religious toleration and steps would be taken for the abolition and expulsion of the tyrannical religious fraternities who have laid such strong hands on every branch of civil administration. Full provision would be given for the exploitation of the natural resources and wealth of the country by roads and railways and by the removal of hindrances to enterprise and investment of capital. Spanish officials would be removed to a place of safety until opportunity offered to return them to Spain. The preservation of public safety and order and the checking of reprisals against Spaniards would naturally have to be a first care of the government in the new state of things.

On May 20, 1898, Mr. Pratt sent a letter to Mr. Day containing a translation of a proclamation of the rebel leaders in Hongkong headed "American allies—the manifesto of the Filipinos," in which they called upon their brothers in the Philippines, "where you see the American flag flying assemble in numbers; they are our redeemers." The following is the manifesto referred to:

AMERICAN ALLIES—THE MANIFESTO OF THE FILIPINOS.

COMPATRIOTS: Divine Providence is about to place independence within our reach, and in a way the most free and independent nation could hardly wish for.

The Americans, not from mercenary motives, but for the sake of humanity and the lamentations of so many persecuted people, have considered it opportune to extend their protecting mantle to our beloved country, now that they have been obliged to sever relations with Spain, owing to the tyranny this nation is exercising in Cuba, causing enormous injury to the Americans, who have such large commercial and other interests there.

At the present moment an American squadron is preparing to sail for the Philippines.

We, your brothers, are very much afraid that you may be induced to fire on the Americans. No, brothers, never make this mistake. Rather blow your own brains out than fire a shot or treat as enemies those who are your liberators.

Your natural enemies, your executioners, the authors of your misery and unhappiness, are the Spaniards who govern you. Against these you must raise your weapons and odium; understand well, against the Spaniards and never against the Americans.

Take no notice of the decree of the Governor-General calling you to arms, although it may cost you your lives. Rather die than be ungrateful to our American liberators.

The Governor-General calls you to arms. What for? To defend your Spanish tyrants? To defend those that have depised you, and even in public speeches asked for your extermination—those that have treated you little better than savages? No! No! A thousand times no!

Give a glance at history and you will see that all Spain's wars in Oceania have sacrificed Philippine blood. We have been put to fight in Cochin China to assist the French in an affair that in no way concerned the Philippines. We were compelled to spill our blood by Simon de Anda against the English, who in any case would have made better rulers than the Spaniards. Every year our children are taken away to be sacrificed in Mindanao and Sulu on the pretense of making us believe these people are our enemies, when in reality they are our brothers, like us, fighting for their independence.

And having sacrificed our blood against the English, against the Annamites, against the people of Mindanao, etc., what recompense or thanks have we received from the Spanish Government? Obscurity, poverty, the butchery of those dear to us. Enough, brothers, of this Spanish tutelage.

Take note, the Americans will attack by sea and prevent any reenforcements coming from Spain; therefore we insurgents must attack by land. Probably you will have more than sufficient arms, because the Americans have arms and will find means to assist us.

There, where you see the American flag flying, assemble in numbers. They are our redeemers.

Our unworthy names are as nothing, but one and all of us invoke the name of the greatest patriot our country has seen, in the sure and certain hope that his spirit will be with us in these moments and guide us to victory—our immortal José Rizal.

On June 9 Mr. Pratt sent a letter to Mr. Day giving an account of an address presented to him by the Philippine colony at Singapore after Aguinaldo's success near Manila, in which they said:

Our countrymen at home and those of us residing here, refugees from Spanish misrule and tyranny in our beloved native land, hope that the United States, your nation, persevering in its humane policy, will efficaciously second the programme arranged between you, sir, and General Aguinaldo in this port of Singapore, and secure to us our independence under the protection of the United States.

To this Consul Pratt replied in part as follows:

Rest assured, though, that I fully understand and sincerely appreciate the motives that have prompted your present action, and that your words, which have sunk deep in my heart, shall be faithfully repeated to the President, to Admiral Dewey, and to the American people, from whom I am sure they will meet with full and generous response. (See Appendix for full account—Exhibit A.)

Mr. Pratt did not deny that such an agreement had been entered into with Aguinaldo, as claimed by the Filipinos, whereby their independence would be secured under the protection of the United States. On the contrary, he said:

I am thankful to have been the means, though merely the accidental means, of bringing about the arrangement between General Aguinaldo and Admiral Dewey, which has resulted so happily. I can only hope that the eventful outcome will be all that can be desired for the happiness and welfare of the Filipinos.

I admit that a letter was written by Mr. Day on June 16 to Mr. Pratt, in which he states:

It is assumed that you did not attempt to commit the Government to any alliance with the Philippine insurgents. * * * To obtain the unconditional personal assistance of General Aguinaldo in the expedition to Manila was proper, if in so doing he was not induced to form hopes which might not be practicable to gratify.

This letter, however, was written after Admiral Dewey and his heroic men achieved the glorious victory in Manila Bay, a victory which earned the deserved gratitude of a nation for that intrepid leader and his men, and after Aguinaldo arrived at Manila on one of our ships with thirteen staff officers, at the request of Dewey, and had gathered around him between eight and forty thousand men, who were supplied by us with arms, ammunition, and supplies, and also after they had rendered valuable assistance in subduing and holding the city of Manila, and we had treated them as our allies. That they were treated as allies is evidenced by a letter from General Anderson to Aguinaldo, dated July 6, 1898, from which I quote the following:

Very soon we expect a large addition to our forces, and it must be apparent to you, as a military officer, that we will require much more room to camp our soldiers, and also storeroom for our supplies. For this I would like to have your excellency's advice and cooperation, as you are best acquainted with the resources of this country. It must be apparent to you that we do not intend to remain here inactive, but to move promptly against our common enemy.

And in a letter from Major Jones written to Aguinaldo, dated July 17, which said in part:

Our nation has spent millions of money to send forces here to expel the Spaniards and to give a good government to the whole people, and the return we ask is comparatively slight. General Anderson wishes you to inform your people that we are here for their good.

There was no suggestion by us that it was our intention to deprive them of their independence.

It is claimed that Mr. Pratt was not authorized to act for us, yet he was in correspondence with our Secretary of State, and was supposed to keep him informed of what he was doing. If Mr. Pratt believed he did not have authority, he could have cabled Mr. Day before he cabled Dewey and before entering into negotiations with Aguinaldo.

I am justified in claiming that some inducements must have been held out to Aguinaldo. Some political pledges, express or implied, were given; otherwise, why did he, after having at first failed to gather his people around him and was about to sail away, return at the request of Admiral Dewey and successfully accomplish that for which we brought him to Manila.

I appeal to any lawyer on this floor, would he not be justified, if he were arguing a case with facts similar to this, in asserting that there must have been some promise given, express or implied?

Gentlemen, the American people are the jury in this case, and they will render a just verdict next November.

The first time we publicly indicated our purpose to obtain and retain possession of the Philippine Islands was in the communication from our Secretary of State to the minister of state of Spain, in which he declared it to be our intention to occupy and hold the city, bay, and harbor of Manila pending the conclusion of the treaty of peace which was to "determine the control, disposition, and government of the Philippine Islands."

The majority of the commissioners appointed by the President to negotiate the treaty of peace were members of the Senate—two of whom were on the Committee on Foreign Relations. They represented the Executive to negotiate a compact upon which they were thereafter to sit in judgment as members of the legislative branch of the Government, though the constitutional theory of our Government is that the executive, legislative, and judiciary departments are to be kept separate and distinct.

This commission received definite instructions as to the terms which were to be offered to Spain, though these instructions have never been made public. One of the principal requirements insisted upon by the commission was the cession of the Philippine Islands.

The first article of the protocol gave us authority to occupy and hold the city, bay, and harbor of Manila pending the conclusion of the treaty of peace, which was to determine the disposition, control, and government of the Philippines. Nevertheless, the President issued an order to the Secretary of War eleven days after the signing of the Paris treaty by the representatives of both nations, in which he said:

> The future control, disposition, and government of the Philippine Islands are ceded to the United States. In fulfillment of the rights of sovereignty thus acquired, and the responsible obligations of government thus assumed, the actual occupation and administration of the entire group of the Philippine Islands becomes immediately necessary, and the military government heretofore maintained by the United States in the city, harbor, and bay of Manila is to be extended with all possible dispatch to the whole of the ceded territory. * * * It will be the duty of the commander of the forces of occupation to announce and proclaim in the most public manner that we come, not as invaders or conquerors, but as friends. * * * The operations of civil and municipal government are to be performed by such officers as may accept the supremacy of the United States by taking the oath of allegiance. * * * Finally, it should be the earnest and paramount aim of the military administration to win the confidence, respect, and affection of the inhabitants of the Philippines by assuring to them in every possible way that full measure of individual rights and liberties which is the heritage of free peoples, and by proving to them that the mission of the United States is one of benevolent assimilation substituting the mild sway of justice and right for arbitrary rule.

(Letter appendix—Exhibit B.)

The President, on January 20, in instructions to the Secretary of State, informed him that he had appointed a commission to facilitate effective extension of authority throughout the islands, and stated that the treaty had not been ratified, but expected it to be by the time the commission arrived at Manila, and that he intrusted the temporary government of the islands to the military authorities until Congress should determine otherwise.

The territory was not ceded to us at this time. The treaty had not been ratified by the President with the consent of the Senate, as provided, nor had the terms of ratification been exchanged between the Governments.

According to the terms of the treaty, until its ratification we had not the right to occupy a foot of territory beyond the city of Manila. We had not succeeded to the sovereignty of Spain, and the Filipinos were not under our authority or sovereignty. Acting under that unauthorized possession, we occupied territory which had been occupied by the Filipinos as conquered territory. Nevertheless, on August 28, 1899, the President, in a speech at Pittsburg, said: "Every step taken was in obedience to the requirements of the Constitution. It became our territory, and is ours as much as the Louisiana Purchase, or Texas or Alaska. A body of insurgents, in no sense representing the sentiment of the people of the islands, dispute our lawful authority, and even before ratification of the treaty by the American Senate were attacking the forces who fought for and secured their freedom. This was the situation in April, 1899, the date of the exchange of ratifications."

Our action was in the nature of a declaration of war upon those people, who had been aiding us, and who had given no offense.

So far, then, from the acquisition of the Philippine Islands being forced upon us as the result of circumstances, it is apparent that their acquisition was contemplated from the beginning.

The treaty as made required the assent of two-thirds of the Senate. This number could not be obtained unless heroic measures were resorted to. Our troops and the Filipino forces were at this time facing each other peacefully awaiting the outcome of negotiations with Spain. There were in the Senate, as there are in all bodies, men who are afraid of being suspected of want of patriotism—halting, waiting, wavering men—not men of earnest and pronounced opinions, not men who considered only the public good, but of that class who look particularly to their own political fortunes and want to be on what they suppose the "popular side."

On the morning of the day the vote was to be taken upon the ratification of the treaty news came that our troops were fired upon by the Filipinos, and the wavering Senators went over to the majority. The treaty was confirmed by a single vote over the requisite number.

It was for the advantage of the Filipinos that the treaty should be defeated. If it was not ratified, the United States would not acquire even a paper title to the islands, and nonratification of the treaty meant practical independence for the Filipinos. It was for their interest to avoid a rupture. On the other hand, it was for the interest of the Administration seeking additional Senatorial votes to bring about a condition of things which would capture the weak and wavering.

General Otis could tell the facts—the real facts, and it is quite likely one of the reasons why he was retained there so long is, because he could throw a brilliant light upon this and many features of the Philippine campaign, for which he has been held responsible when he was only obeying orders.

It will go into history that the conflict from which the present war followed—a war that has caused a waste of human life and treasure—was brought about to secure the ratification of the treaty and the cession of the Philippine Islands. Regardless of our pledges to the Filipinos and the world, we propose to hold those islands without obtaining or asking the consent of the people and to govern them by laws in the making of which they have had no voice. All this we are told is for "civilization"—shooting them if they do not accept our authority. Let us not pretend to be there for the spiritual good of the people, when in reality we are there for nuggets of gold, mountains of iron and—power.

Civilization—civilization—many sins are committed in thy name.

In the language of Washington, in his Farewell Address, "The maxim is no less applicable to public than to private affairs—honesty is the best policy."

Jefferson foresaw the present condition when he said, "Indeed, I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just."

Assuming that the honor of the nation is not tarnished, will it pay us to hold possession of those islands?

The most careful examination of statistics show that the entire product of the islands, consisting of hemp, sugar, and copra, will not exceed $25,000,000 per year, and the entire imports have not exceeded over $12,000,000 a year. The cost of maintaining our soldiers in a foreign country is not less that $1,000 each man, per year. It must be conceded that from 30,000 to 40,000 men will be required permanently in the islands after we have conquered the people into sullen submission.

The 63,000 men we have there now will soon be disabled. Add to that the dead and the sick up to date, and it will reach 80,000. Our pension list is now over $130,000,000. This war will bring it over $200,000,000.

Where will we get 63,000 men to replace the men now there?

Add to that the expenses of the Federal lists to keep the people enslaved and force our modern Christianity upon them by the sword.

If the products were all plunder and the exports to the islands were all profit, the maintenance of the Army alone would almost consume the products and exports. The exports to China, about which we are hearing so much, it is safe to say, do not exceed $340,000,000.

If it were possible for the United States, by reason of its occupation of the Philippine Islands, to secure the whole of the trade with China and add to it the entire trade of the Philippines, the profit upon it would not equal the cost of maintaining the Army, Navy, and the civil administration necessary to keep the Philippines in subjection and properly carry on their government.

We owe to-day $4,380,000,000—almost $1,380,000,000 more than England, with her large navy and immense territory—and yet they tell us that it pays.

Verily this Administration needs an arithmetic as much as it needs a conscience.

It is safe to say that the cost of the war in the Philippines will reach $200,000,000 to date. Add to that the expenses of the current year, which will exceed $100,000,000, and it will be found that the cost of the Government has so increased that a man who has a family of five persons will, before the end of the year, have paid almost $20 as his share of the cost of our mission of "benevolent assimilation, march of civilization, manifest destination, and plain duty."

The function of government is to increase the material prosperity of its people, not to wave flags in their faces and rifle their pockets.

In the language of Macaulay:

> That is the best government which desires to make the people happy and knows how to make them happy.

If one-tenth of this money squandered in shooting down fellowmen because they refuse to submit to be treated as subjects, was judiciously employed in developing the harbors of our principal cities, it would call into existence ten times more trade for the country than we possibly can expect by holding those islands as a colonial possession and keeping a people under submission by military rule.

The money unnecessarily taken from the people could be used in perfecting the fortifications of our coast and make them more impregnable against the attack of a foreign power, and be used in a way that would materially promote commerce by improving the harbors of our principal cities. Then we would have the true expansion—industrial expansion—manufacturing expansion—commercial expansion. With deep and wide harbors to accommodate the deepest-draft vessels afloat, backed by a merchant marine, our vessels will carry the flag and the trade into every market in the world. This is the expansion we want, and the expansion we must obtain—an expansion that does not require the aid of the sword.

Let not our place among the commercial nations of the world be obtained at the sacrifice of human liberty.

Great Britain's object in the war of the Revolution was to control the trade and commerce of the United States. The response of the colonists, through Benjamin Franklin, was as follows:

> To me it seems that neither the obtaining nor retaining of any trade, how valuable soever, is an object for which men may justly spill each other's blood—that the true and sure means of extending or securing commerce is the goodness and cheapness of commodities; and that the profit of any trade can never be equal to the expense of compelling it and holding it by fleets or armies, and I am persuaded that cool, dispassionate posterity will condemn to infamy those who advise it, and that even success will not save from some degree of dishonor those who voluntarily engage in it.

Much has been said about the purchase of Louisiana. This was contiguous territory and came within the pale of our American system.

It was a territory fit for probatory before coming to statehood. Not so here. The peoples of those islands never can become Americanized. The inhabitants of the Louisiana territory asked to be annexed for their own protection. For their commercial interests, and their commercial rights they wanted to become a part of us. Its acquisition was peaceful and bloodless, and was the first step in the withdrawal of European sovereignty from this hemisphere, and prevented war. Every square mile of additional territory meant more room, more homes, and more opportunities for our people.

The Philippines we hold possession of through the sacrifice of lives. Their possession brings us within reach of European nations, and we will be obliged to enter into their councils, and if they engage in a war we will be liable to become involved. Even if we subdue the people into submission, a large standing army and navy will be necessary to defend the islands against the ambition and jealousy of other nations.

You can not go to the Philippines to live and work. Those islands only furnish a chance for capitalists to increase their wealth through the employment of cooly, contract, or practically slave labor, the product to be sold in competition with what we produce, while the cost of the army and navy necessary to keep the people in subjection and protect these capitalistic enterprises will be borne by the working people. The evidence is overwhelming that men from the temperate zone can not become acclimated in the Tropics, and such regions must continue to be permanently peopled by their native inhabitants.

Captain Hatch, of the Eighteenth Infantry, who was with the first troops to go to the Philippines and remained there for more than one year, recently stated that—

> The climate is that of the torrid zone. There is little difference between July and December. There is a constant, never-ceasing heat, that depresses and enervates the constitution of a man from the temperate clime. An American in the Philippines can not work in the sun or at outdoor labor. He would not live six months at such work. Only a Chinaman, a Filipino, or some one with a dark skin can ever work out of doors in the Philippines. An American may live in the Philippines, pursuing an occupation that would keep him under cover; out of doors, never.

This is borne out by the testimony of Professor Dean C. Worcester and many other authorities. The Philippines, therefore, can not be held as a possession to successfully colonize. If we retain them they will be a "weight around our necks." Let us hesitate before we commit ourselves to the policy of holding them, or we may repent; we will discover too late, that our supposed diamonds of great price are only paste.

Assuming that by retaining possession of those islands we have not violated national morals, and that from a mercenary standpoint it will pay us to keep them, there are still grave objections to our retention of them.

It can not be questioned but that the United States has a right to acquire territory either by purchase, cession, or conquest, but in holding it we must act within the limits of constitutional authority. In the interpretation of the Constitution it is to be construed in favor of justice, and the same rule should be followed that is adopted in interpreting a statute—that is, it should be construed according to the intention of the framers.

As stated by Chief Justice Taney, 19 Howard, at page 426, Scott vs. Lanford—

> The Constitution must be construed now as it was understood at the time of its adoption. As long as it continues to exist in its present form, it speaks not only with the same words but the same meaning and intent with which it spoke when it came from the hands of the framers, and was voted on and adopted by the people of the United States. What the Constitution was at that time I think there can be hardly any doubt.

If we retain possession of those islands and govern them as colonial dependencies, as proposed, our much-abused Constitution, which has been stretched and bent under the implied-power doctrine until in many respects it has lost its original meaning, will by this policy receive an additional wrench, and we must read into it the words "colonies" and "subjects." It must be stretched to cover new laws, new officials, new responsibilities, new duties, and new powers.

Instead of an instrument confining and restricting the powers of the Government, our Constitution has come to be regarded as a document in which the Government can find warrant for the exercise of any power.

Procrustes stretched and shortened his victims to make them fit his bed. The proposition now is to make our bed—the Constitution—in which we have rested for over one hundred years, adjustable to whatever giant or dwarf may come along our national highway.

Our Constitution is the foundation of all law. Respect for law is of necessity the foundation of democratic form of government, and whatever is done to undermine or weaken that respect is a source of great danger.

The practice of wresting the Constitution from its plain purpose to meet the exigencies of a particular occasion will have a distinctly pernicious effect upon the morals and conduct of the people, by causing them to regard law as something to be evaded, if possible, and obeyed as a last resort under compulsion.

There is no authority, even under the most elastic estimate of the implied powers of Congress, that confers a right upon the United States to hold and govern those possessions as colonial dependencies.

Herein precisely is where our form of government differs from Old World forms. To carry out this proposition, not only must our Constitution be trampled under foot, but the whole history and spirit of our institutions must be defied, and the flag robbed of its brightest glory.

Webster, in his speech in 1848 on the Mexican Star, used these words:

> An arbitrary government may have territorial government in distant possessions, because an arbitrary government may rule its distant territories by different laws and different systems. Russia may govern the Ukraine, the Caucasus, and Kamtschatka by different codes or ukases. We can do no such thing.

To assert this right is contrary to the vital principles of the Declaration of Independence, which the American people have believed in, and have no more questioned their truth, than they have questioned the Ten Commandments or the Sermon on the Mount, and is an insult to the memory of those who pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor for justice and liberty—an insult to the memory of those who suffered, bled, and died during the seven years' war of the Revolution.

It was against this method of government that the men of the Revolution fought. It can not be assumed that those who composed the Constitutional Convention, many of whom had been leaders in the struggle, and all ardent sympathizers and active supporters of that cause, should turn about and coolly make provisions to fasten upon other people that same galling yoke which they had so recently escaped. Rather is it to be supposed that they had in mind the principles of the Declaration of Independence, that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," and that the freedom which they had fought for and won, they intended sharing with all who might be entitled to our protection.

Exclusive Federal control of territory should be but a temporary stage, to be followed by the permanent condition of statehood. Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Law (page 188), says:

> Indeed, it could never have been understood that any territory which by purchase, cession, or conquest should at any time come under the control of the United States should permanently be held in a territorial condition—and when territory is acquired, the right to suffer States to be formed therefrom and to receive them into the Union must follow, of course—not only because the Constitution confers the power to admit new States without restriction, but also because it would be inconsistent with institutions founded on the fundamental idea of self-government, that the Federal Government should retain territory under its own imperial rule and deny the people the customary local institution.

The same point is emphasized by Chief Justice Marshall in Loughborough vs. Blake (5 Wheaton, 317–324). His language is as follows:

> The Territories are in a state of infancy advancing to manhood—looking forward to complete equality so soon as that state of manhood shall be determined.

In reply to the charge that the United States maintain a condition that the colonies denounced Chief Justice Marshall in the same case said:

> The difference between requiring a continent with an immense population to submit to be taxed by a government having no common interest with it, separated from it by a vast ocean and associated with it by no common feelings, and permitting the representatives of the American people under the restriction of our Constitution to tax a part of society which is in a state of infancy, advancing to manhood, looking forward to complete equality, so soon as that state of manhood shall be attained, as is the case with the Territories, * * * is too obvious not to present itself to the minds of all.

In Scott vs. Sanford (19 Howard, 393–446), Chief Justice Taney said:

There is certainly no power given by the Constitution to the Federal Government to establish and maintain colonies bordering on the United States or at a distance to be ruled and governed at its own pleasure, nor to enlarge its territorial limits in any way except by the admission of new States, but no power is given to acquire territory to be held and governed permanently in that character

Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, page 385, states that:

The establishment of distant Territorial governments ruled according to the will and pleasure of Congress would have a very natural tendency, as all preconsular governments have had, to abuse and oppression.

In the case of Murphy vs. Ramsey (114 United States, page 15) the language of the courts is as follows:

The power of Congress over Territories is limited by the obvious purposes by which it was conferred, and these purposes are satisfied by measures which prepare the people of the Territories to become States of the Union.

Justice Gray, in the case of Shively vs. Bollby (152 United States, 1–57), said:

Upon the acquisition of territory by the United States, whether by cession by one of the States, or by treaty with a foreign country, or by discovery and settlement, the same title and dominion pass to the United States for the benefit of the whole people in its trust for the several States to be ultimately created out of the territory.

The Philippine islands are as much a part of the dominion of the United States as Maine or California, and our sovereignty over the inhabitants is complete.

The Spanish treaty recognizes the nationality of the Spanish subjects remaining in the ceded territory who do not formally record a declaration of their intention to preserve such allegiance, to be held to have renounced it, and to have adopted the nationality of the territory in which they may reside.

Story on the Constitution, paragraph 1324, referring to territory acquired by conquest or treaty, says:

The ceded territory becomes a part of the United States. The act transferring the country transfers the allegiance of the inhabitants so that they become citizens of the Union thereby.

Hallett on International Law, page 380, holds that—

In either case—conquest or cession—the national character of the inhabitants who remain is deemed to be changed from that of the former to the new sovereign, and that in their relations with other nations they are entitled to all the advantages and subject to all the disadvantages of their new international status.

In the case of the American Sugar Company vs. Canter (1 Peters, 511), Chief Justice Marshall said:

On such transfer of territory it has never been held that the relation of the inhabitants with each other undergo any change. Their relations with their former sovereigns are dissolved and new relations between them and the government which has acquired their territory. The same act which transfers their country transfers the allegiance of those that remain in it.

In New Orleans vs. The United States (10 Peters, 662) it is laid down that—

The succession of sovereignty does not authorize the United States to exercise prerogatives of sovereignty not consistent with the Constitution of the United States.

In Johnson vs. McIntosh (8 Wheaton, 589) it is laid down:

The title by conquest is required to be maintained by force—the conqueror prescribes its limits—humanity, however, acting on public opinion has established as a general rule that the conquered shall not be wantonly oppressed and that their condition shall remain as eligible as is complete with the objects of the conquest. Most usually they are incorporated with the victorious nation and become subjects or citizens of the country with which they are connected. The new and old members of society mingle with each other—the distinction between them is gradually lost, and they make one people. Where this incorporation is practicable, humanity demands, and a wise policy requires, that the rights of the conqueror to property should remain unimpaired—that the new subjects should be governed as equitably as the old, and that confidence in their security should gradually banish the painful sense of being separated from their own connections and united by force to strangers.

If we retain possession of the Philippines, they can not be held as colonies or dependencies; they must be held as territory to be governed within constitutional limitations, with the beacon light of statehood held before them. The same Constitution which governs us must govern these inhabitants; every prohibition which binds Congress here binds it there. The Constitution is for their peoples as it is for us; the sacred rights which the Constitution guarantees are theirs as much as they are ours. Liberty does not mean one thing in the States and something entirely different in the Philippines.

In the language of Washington, "The cause of liberty is confined to no continent or climate."

This is the most serious question that has confronted us during our existence as a nation. If we hold them, we must make them a part of our Government, and open our doors to the cooly labor of the Philippines, which will enter into competition with American labor, and this reservoir of human labor will hopelessly submerge the workmen of America. "A gulf profound as that Serbonian bog betwixt Damiata and Mount Casius old" will then rise between wealth and poverty, and the workingmen will be ground down to a state lower than before.

Then it will not be a foe from without but a foe from within that we must fear. It is the degeneration and demoralization that will happen if this flotsam and jetsam of the Orient are brought here. When the "war drums throb no longer and the battle flags are furled," there will grow cancer-like in our nation, the discontent of labor. God forbid that the shadow of pre-revolutionary France is upon this nation. Let us hope that the cunning, clever, and unscrupulous demagogues will not have the opportunity to fan the flames of discontent into a fire that will cost millions in treasure and countless lives. Let us hope that the same hand that wielded the sword in defense of our country will, when the sword is beaten into the plowshare, be guiding the development of the country.

To hold the Philippine Islands will not only cause danger from within, but will be contrary to the teachings of the fathers of the Republic, and will be a departure from our traditionary policy, which has been "accretion, not colonization."

Washington in his Farewell Address said:

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. * * * Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or very remote relation. * * * Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. * * * Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities. Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. * * * We may choose peace or war as our interests, guided by justice, shall counsel. Why forego the choice of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by entangling our destiny with any part of Europe, entangle the peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, and caprice?

No one can deny but that which he warned us against will happen if we retain this territory thousands of miles away. We will not be in a position to choose betwen peace or war as we desire. No nation possessing foreign colonies has been able to choose between peace and war.

Jefferson, in writing to Madison concerning territorial aggrandizement, when a commercial treaty with England was in prospect, said:

Bonaparte would give us the Floridas to withhold intercourse with the residue of those (the Spanish) colonies. But that is no price, because they are ours in the first moment of the first war, and until a war they are of no particular necessity to us; but although with difficulty he will consent to our receiving Cuba into our Union—that would be a price, and I would immediately erect a column on the southernmost limit of Cuba and inscribe on it "Ne plus ultra"—"As to us in that direction." We should then have only to include the North in our confederacy, which would be, of course, in the first war, and we should have such an empire for liberty as she never surveyed since the creation.

In a letter to Thomas Payne, March 18, 1801, Jefferson wrote:

Determined as we are to avoid, if possible, wasting the energies of our people in war and destruction, we shall avoid implicating ourselves with the powers of Europe, even in support of principles which we mean to pursue. * * * we believe we can enforce those principles as to ourselves by peaceable means, now that we are likely to have our public councils detached from foreign views.

In a letter to William Short, October 3, 1801, on the Monroe doctrine, Jefferson said:

We have a perfect horror at everything like connecting ourselves with the politics of Europe.

On August 4, 1820, in a letter to William Short, he said:

I hope he [referring to the minister to Brazil by the Government of Portugal] sees and will promote in his new situation the advantages of a cordial fraternalization among the American nations and the importance of their coalescing in an American system of policy, totally independent and unconnected with that of Europe. The day is not distant when we may formally require a meridian of partition through the ocean which separates the two hemispheres, on the hither side of which no European gun shall be heard nor an American on the other, and when during the rage of the eternal wars of Europe the lion and the lamb within our regions shall lie down together in peace.

Monroe said in his annual message of December 2, 1823:

In the wars of European powers, in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part; nor does it comport us so to do. With the movements of this hemisphere we are of necessity more immediately connected, and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and impartial observers. The political system of the allied powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America. We owe it therefore to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies and dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere.

Our proposed policy will be a departure from the above.

Webster, on April 11, 1826, in a speech on the Panama mission, came boldly to the defense of the Monroe doctrine and said:

The country's honor is involved in that declaration. * * * I look upon it as a part of its treasures of reputation, and for one I intend to guard it. * * * I look on the message as forming a bright page in our history. I will help neither to erase it or tear it out, nor shall it be by any act of mine blurred or blotted. It did honor to the sagacity of the Government, and I will not diminish that honor.

Edward Everett, Secretary of State, outlines the policy of the United States on territorial growth, in a letter to M. Sartiges, December 1, 1852, when the United States was invited by France and England to become a party to the proposed convention relative to Cuba, said:

England within half a century has added very extensively to her empire. These acquisitions have created no uneasiness on the part of the United States. In like manner the United States have within the same period greatly increased their territory. The largest addition was that of Louisiana, which was purchased from France.

These accessions of territory have properly caused no uneasiness to the great European powers, as they have been brought about by the operation of natural causes and without any disturbance of the international relations of the principal states. They have been followed also by a great increase of mutually beneficial commercial intercourse between the United States and Europe; but the case would be different in reference to the transfer of Cuba from Spain to any other European power—we should view it in somewhat the same light in which France and England would view the acquisition of some important island in the Mediterranean by the United States, with this difference, it is true—the attempt of the United States to establish themselves in Europe would be a novelty.

How much more of a novelty is it to extend our territory in Asia?

Hamilton Fish, who was Secretary of State under General Grant, in a letter to Sir E. Thornton, in April, 1873, stated:

It is not the policy of the United States to undertake in Africa the management of movements within the particular range of private enterprise.

Secretary Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State under President Arthur, in a letter to Mr. Langston, in 1883, said:

The policy of this Government as declared on many occasions in the past has tended toward avoidance of possessions disconnected from the main continent. Had the tendency of the United States been to extend territorial dominion beyond intervening seas, opportunities have not been wanting to effect such a purpose, whether on the coast of Africa, in the West Indies, or in the South Pacific.

In another letter, in 1884, he said:

A conviction that the fixed policy dating back to the origin of our constitutional Government was considered to make it inexpedient to attempt territorial aggrandizement which would require maintenance by a naval force in excess of any yet provided for our national uses—has led this Government to decline territorial acquisition.

Secretary Bayard, in 1885, wrote:

The policy of the United States declared and pursued for more than a century discountenances, and in practice forbids, distant colonial acquisition.

President Cleveland, in his first annual message, said:

I do not favor the policy of acquisition of new and distant territory or incorporation of remote interests with our own.

Our Philippine policy is well described by John Morley in criticising the foreign policy of England:

First, you push on into territories where you have no business to be and where you had promised not to go; secondly, your intrusion provokes resentment, and in these wild countries resentment means resistance; thirdly, you instantly cry out that the people are rebellious and that their act is rebellion (this in spite of your own assurance that you have no intention of setting up a permanent sovereignty over them); fourthly, you send a force to stamp out the rebellion; and, fifthly, having spread bloodshed, confusion, and anarchy, you declare with hands uplifted to the heavens that moral reasons force you to stay, for if you were to leave this territory would be left in a condition which no civilized power could contemplate with equanimity or composure. These are the five stages in the Forward Rake's progress.

The words of Burke in 1775 apply with equal force at the present time concerning our policy in the Philippines:

To prove that they ought not to be freed, we are obliged to depreciate the value of freedom itself * * * all dread of a standing military force is looked upon as a superstitious panic. We grow indifferent to the consequences inevitable to ourselves from the plan of ruling half the world by a mercenary sword * * * between craft and credulity the voice of reason is stifled and all misconduct, all the calamities of war are continued * * * the use of force alone is but temporary. It may subdue for a moment, but it does not remove the necessity of subduing again, and a nation is not governed which is perpetually to be conquered. A further objection to force is that you impair the object by your very endeavors to preserve it * * * the thing you fought for is not the thing which you recovered.

Students of history and political science are opposed to our Philippine policy.

Andrew Carnegie said:

That Britain possesses her colonies is a mere figure of speech; that her colonies possess her is nearer the truth. Our colonial empire seems a big phrase, but so far as material benefits are concerned the balance is the other way.

Trade does not follow the flag in our day; it seeks the lowest prices current.

It has heretofore been the glorious mission of the Republic to establish upon secure foundations Triumphant Democracy: and the world now understands government of the people, for the people, and by the people. * * * Must the millions of Filipinos, who have been asserting their God-given right to govern themselves, be the first victims of Americans, whose proudest boast is that they secured independence for themselves? If we take these islands we will have to govern them as generously as Britain has governed her colonies. This will leave nothing but a source of expense.

John G. Carlisle said:

There is no room in the Constitution for a military despotism or for the exercise of arbitrary power by the civil authorities anywhere in the jurisdiction of the United States in time of peace, and whenever the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, or other islands shall become a part of our territory their inhabitants will be entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities secured to the people by the Constitution.

Professor McDonald, professor of history and political science in Bowdoin College, Maine, said:

The permanent governing of outlying districts or colonies in fact, though not in name, is so far foreign to our historic usage, and rests upon so different a theory of national organization, that the adoption of such a course might well be fraught with grave menace to our whole constitutional system * * * Instead of being the means of wealth to the mother country, the English colonies have become so great a source of expense that statesmen have wondered whether the load could be much longer borne. * * * The adoption of the policy of national expansion, even upon a moderate scale, means the adoption of a new scale of national taxation and expenditure and opens the doors to administrative outlays, direct and indirect, greatly in excess of those to which we are now accustomed.

Dr. Felix Adler said:

The principle that an inferior class shall be ruled by a superior class is a principle of aristocracy. The principle that no class shall be regarded as politically inferior, but that all shall participate on equal terms in the government, is the principle of democracy. The two principles can not keep house together in the same state. * * * If we accustom ourselves to see millions of persons who live within the territories which belong to the United States excluded from the rights of citizenship on the ground that they are not fitted to exercise them, the question will presently be raised—indeed, here and there it has already been raised—whether on the same ground millions of persons now exercising the franchise within the limits of the United States ought not to be deprived of their rights.

What is our duty in the present exigency? All the testimony goes to show that the Filipinos are capable of self-government. Admiral Dewey says they are better fitted for self-government than the Cubans. General Wheeler says:

I consider the Filipinos a very superior people—a people with great possibilities.

"Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
"In the strife of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side."

The time has come for us to decide. The sword that was unsheathed for freedom should be used in freedom's cause. The principles of imperialism should not be substituted for the teachings of Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln. We have an opportunity to win the greatest victory we ever achieved—to conquer ourselves and stand by the faith of the fathers. Give to the Filipinos the pledge we gave to Cuba. Give to them their freedom and our protection, and we will have the honor of bringing into existence a new nation, for which posterity will bless us.

EXHIBIT A.

[Inclosures.—The Straits Times, June 9.]

MR. SPENCER PRATT SERENADED—MEETING OF FILIPINO REFUGEES AT THE UNITED STATES CONSULATE—THEY PRESENT AN ADDRESS TO MR. SPENCER PRATT AND DRINK TO AMERICA, ENGLAND, AND ADMIRAL DEWEY.

The United States consulate at Singapore was yesterday afternoon in an unusual state of bustle. That bustle extended itself to Raffles Hotel, of which the consulate forms an outlying part. From a period shortly prior to 5 o'clock, afternoon, the natives of the Philippines resident in Singapore began to assemble at the consulate.

Their object was partly to present an address to Hon. Spencer Pratt, United States consul-general, and partly to serenade him, for which purpose some twenty-five or thirty of the Filipinos came equipped with musical instruments. Gradually the crowd gathered in the vicinity of the United States consulate, and, after a little quiet, preliminary music, Dr. Santos, as representing the Philippine community in Singapore, proceeded to read the following address, which was originally drafted in Spanish and then translated into French. The address was read in French, and the following is an English translation:

THE ADDRESS.

"To the Hon. Edward Spencer Pratt, Consul-General of the United States of North America, Singapore:

"SIR: The Philippine colony resident in this port, composed of representatives of all social classes, have come to present their respects to you as the legitimate representative of the great and powerful American Republic, in order to express our eternal gratitude for the moral and material protection extended by Admiral Dewey to our trusted leader, Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, who has been driven to take up arms in the name of 8,000,000 Filipinos, in defense of those very principles of justice and liberty of which your country is the foremost champion.

"Our countrymen at home, and those of us residing here, refugees from Spanish misrule and tyranny in our beloved native land, hope that the United States, your nation, persevering in its humane policy, will efficaciously second the programme arranged between you, sir, and General Aguinaldo in this part of Singapore, and secure to us our independence under the protection of the United States. Our warmest thanks are especially due to you, sir, personally, for having been the first to cultivate relations with General Aguinaldo and arrange for the cooperation with Admiral Dewey, thus supporting our aspirations, which time and subsequent actions have developed and caused to meet with the applause and approbation of your nation. Finally, we request you to convey to your illustrious President and the American people, and to Admiral Dewey, our sentiments of sincere gratitude and our most fervent wishes for their prosperity.

"SINGAPORE, June 8, 1898."

Dr. Santos, having presented the above address to Mr. Spencer Pratt, proceeded, speaking in French, to state his belief that the Filipinos would prove and were now proving themselves fit for self-government. While it would be very desirable that such a government should be under American protection, yet it would be found that the brave Filipinos, who were now driving the Spanish troops before them, were quite fit also to fill offices of civil administration. Referring to certain news which had been telegraphed from Europe, Dr. Santos deprecated the transfer of the Philippines from Spain to any power. He was quite confident that the sympathy of the American people would be with a nation who were struggling to be free.

THE UNITED STATES CONSUL-GENERAL REPLIES.

After listening to the address, the United States consul-general, also speaking in French, said:

"Gentlemen, the honor you have conferred upon me is so unexpected that I can not find appropriate words with which to thank you and with which to reply to the eloquent address you have just read to me. Rest assured, though, that I fully understand and sincerely appreciate the motives that have prompted your present action and that your words, which have sunk deep in my heart, shall be faithfully repeated to the President, to Admiral Dewey, and to the American people—from whom I am sure that they will meet with full and generous response.

"A little over a month ago the world resounded with the praises of Admiral Dewey and his fellow-officers and men for a glorious victory won by the American Asiatic Squadron in the bay of Manila. Now we have news of the brilliant achievements of your own distinguished leader, Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, cooperating on land with the Americans at sea. You have just reason to be proud of what has been and is being accomplished by General Aguinaldo and your fellow-countrymen under his command. When, six weeks ago, I learned that General Aguinaldo had arrived incognito in Singapore, I immediately sought him out. An hour's interview convinced me that he was the man for the occasion; and, having communicated with Admiral Dewey, I accordingly arranged for him to join the latter, which he did at Cavite. The rest you know.

"I am thankful to have been the means, though merely the accidental means, of bringing about the arrangement between General Aguinaldo and Admiral Dewey which has resulted so happily. I can only hope that the eventful outcome will be all that can be desired for the happiness and welfare of the Filipinos. My parting words to General Aguinaldo were, 'General, when you have proved yourself great, prove yourself magnanimous,' and from the treatment accorded to the recent Spanish prisoners it would appear that he had done so." [Applause.]

At the conclusion of Mr. Pratt's speech refreshments were served, and as the Filipinos, being Christians, drink alcohol, there was no difficulty in arranging as to refreshments. "Long life and prosperity" were drunk to Mr. Consul-General Spencer Pratt. Then the American Republic was cheered. Then Commodore Dewey was cheered for his gallant victory. Then England was cheered for sheltering the Filipino refugees.

PRESENTING A FLAG.

Then Dr. Santos, as the spokesman of the Filipino refugees, again addressed the audience with many complimentary remarks on the gallantry of Admiral Dewey and the skill and foresight of United States Consul-General Pratt, and with glowing forecasts of the prosperity that awaited the Philippine Islands under the new régime. He expressed a desire to have an American flag as a reminiscence of the day's proceedings. Mr. Spencer Pratt, again speaking in French, replied, saying:

"This flag was borne in battle, and is the emblem of that very liberty that you are seeking to attain. Its red stripes represent the blood that was shed for the cause; the white represents the purity of the motive; the blue field stands for the azure of the sky; the stars are the free and independent States of the Union. Take the flag and keep it as a souvenir of this occasion."

At the conclusion of Mr. PRATT's speech he handed an American flag to Dr. Santos, who received it reverently and waved it exultantly, amidst the cheers of the assembled Filipinos. The flag would, said Dr. Santos, be preserved so that future generations might look at it with pride.

[Singapore Free Press, June 9, 1898.]

MR. SPENCER PRATT AND THE FILIPINOS OF SINGAPORE—AN ADDRESS OF CONGRATULATION.

A little after 5 p. m. last evening a numerous deputation, consisting of all the Filipinos resident in Singapore, waited upon the American consul-general, Mr. Spencer Pratt, at his residence, and presented him with an address congratulatory of the American successes in the present war, and expressive of the thanks of the Filipino community here for the aid now being given by the United States to the aspirations of the Filipino people for national freedom.

There were also present Mr. W. G. St. Clair, editor of the Singapore Free Press; Mr. A. Reid, editor of the Straits Times, and Mr. Howard W. Bray, whose active sympathies with the Filipino nation are so well known as to entitle him to be styled "Aguinaldo's Englishman." Mr. Spencer Pratt and Mr. Bray both wore the badge of the Liga Filipina, presented to them by General Aguinaldo during his incognito visit to Singapore.

After Mr. Bray had performed the ceremony of introducing the deputation to Consul-General Spencer Pratt, Dr. Santos, the chief Filipino refugee here, who has been educated at Barcelona and Paris, delivered the address, of which the following is a translation:

"The Hon. EDWARD SPENCER PRATT,
"Consul-General of the United States of North America, Singapore.

"SIR: The Filipino colony resident in this port, composed of representatives of all social classes, have come to present their respects to you as the legitimate representative of the great and powerful American Republic, in order to express our eternal gratitude for the moral and material protection extended by Admiral Dewey to our trusted leader, Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, who has been driven to take up arms in the name of 8,000,000 Filipinos in defense of those very principles of justice and liberty of which your country is the foremost champion.

"Our countrymen at home and those of us residing here, refugees from Spanish misrule and tyranny in our beloved native land, hope that the United States, your nation, persevering in its humane policy, will efficaciously second the programme arranged between you, sir, and General Aguinaldo in this port of Singapore, and secure to us our independence under the protection of the United States.

"Our warmest thanks are especially due to you, sir, personally, for having been the first to cultivate relations with General Aguinaldo and arrange for his cooperation with Admiral Dewey, thus supporting our aspirations which time and subsequent actions have developed and caused to meet with the applause and approbation of your nation.

"Finally, we request you to convey to your illustrious President and the American people, and to Admiral Dewey, our sentiments of sincere gratitude and our most fervent wishes for their prosperity.

"SINGAPORE, June 8, 1898."

The address, which was written in Spanish, and read in French by Dr. Santos, the spokesman, was replied to in French by Mr. Spencer Pratt, to the following effect:

"Gentlemen, the honor you have conferred upon me is so unexpected that I can not find appropriate words with which to thank you, with which to reply to the eloquent address you have just read to me. Rest assured, however, that I fully understand and sincerely appreciate the motives that have prompted your present action, and that your words, which have sunk deep in my heart, shall be faithfully repeated to the President, to Admiral Dewey, and to the American people, from whom, I am sure, they will meet with full and generous response. A little over a month ago the world resounded with the praise of Admiral Dewey and his fellow-officers and men for a glorious victory won by the American Asiatic Squadron in the bay of Manila.

"To-day we have the news of the brilliant achievements of your own distinguished leader, Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, cooperating on land with the Americans at sea. You have just reason to be proud of what has been and is being accomplished by General Aguinaldo and your fellow-countrymen under his command. When, six weeks ago, I learned that General Aguinaldo had arrived incognito in Singapore, I immediately sought him out. An hour's interview convinced me that he was the man for the occasion, and having communicated with Admiral Dewey, I accordingly arranged for him to join the latter, which he did at Cavite. The rest you know.

"I am thankful to have been the means, though merely the accidental means, of bringing about the arrangement between General Aguinaldo and Admiral Dewey which has resulted so happily. I can only hope that the eventual outcome will be all that can be desired for the happiness and welfare of the Filipinos. My parting words to General Aguinaldo were, 'General, when you have proved yourself great, prove yourself magnanimous,' and from the generous treatment that we understand he has accorded to the Spanish prisoners taken in the recent fight he has done so." [Applause.]

Dr. Santos, then addressing his fellow-countrymen (Paysanos), called for successive "vivas" for the President of the United States, for Admiral Dewey, and for Consul-General Pratt; for England, the "nation hospitalière," and for the editors of the Singapore Free Press and Straits Times. Consul-General Pratt called for "vivas" for General Aguinaldo and the Filipino people.

Mr. Spencer Pratt subsequently presented an American flag to Dr. Santos for the Filipino deputation. "This flag," he said, "was borne in battle, and is the emblem of that very liberty that you are seeking to attain. Its red stripes represent the blood that was shed for the cause, the white the purity of the motive, the blue field the azure of the sky, the stars the free and independent States of the Union. Take it and keep it as a souvenir of this occasion."

On receiving the flag from the consul's hands Dr. Santos called for three cheers for the American nation, waving the flag on high, and stating that the Filipinos would always cherish this emblem, which would be preserved for future generations to look upon with pride.

A band of Filipino musicians was in attendance and played a selection of music, including some very pretty melodies of their native land.

This interesting ceremony terminated about 6 p. m.

EXHIBIT B.

[Circular No. 4.]

DIVISION OF CUSTOMS AND INSULAR AFFAIRS,
WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 16, 1899.

The following order of the President is published for the information and guidance of all concerned:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, December 21, 1898.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: The destruction of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila by the United States naval squadron commanded by Rear-Admiral Dewey, followed by the reduction of the city and the surrender of the Spanish forces, practically effected the conquest of the Philippine Islands and the suspension of Spanish sovereignty therein.

With the signature of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain by their respective plenipotentiaries at Paris, on the 10th instant, and as the result of the victories of American arms, the future control, disposition, and government of the Philippine Islands are ceded to the United States. In fulfillment of the rights of sovereignty thus acquired and the responsible obligations of government thus assumed the actual occupation and administration of the entire group of the Philippine Islands becomes immediately necessary, and the military government heretofore maintained by the United States in the city, harbor, and bay of Manila is to be extended with all possible dispatch to the whole of the ceded territory.

In performing this duty the military commander of the United States is enjoined to make known to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands that in succeeding to the sovereignty of Spain, in severing the former political relations of the inhabitants, and in establishing a new political power the authority of the United States is to be exerted for the security of the persons and property of the people of the islands and for the confirmation of all their private rights and relations.

It will be the duty of the commander of the forces of occupation to announce and proclaim in the most public manner that we come, not as invaders or conquerors, but as friends, to protect the natives in their homes, in their employments, and in their personal and religious rights. All persons who, either by active aid or by honest submission, cooperate with the Government of the United States to give effect to these beneficent purposes will receive the reward of its support and protection. All others will be brought within the lawful rule we have assumed, with firmness if need be, but without severity so far as may be possible.

Within the absolute domain of military authority, which necessarily is and must remain supreme in the ceded territory until the legislation of the United States shall otherwise provide, the municipal laws of the territory in respect to private rights and property and the repression of crime are to be considered as continuing in force and to be administered by the ordinary tribunals so far as practicable. The operations of civil and municipal government are to be performed by such officers as may accept the supremacy of the United States by taking the oath of allegiance, or by officers chosen, as far as may be practicable, from the inhabitants of the islands.

While the control of all the public property and the revenues of the State passes with the cession, and while the use and management of all public means of transportation are necessarily reserved to the authority of the United States, private property, whether belonging to individuals or corporations, is to be respected except for cause duly established. The taxes and duties heretofore payable by the inhabitants to the late Government become payable to the authorities of the United States unless it be seen fit to substitute for them other reasonable rates or modes of contribution to the expenses of government, whether general or local. If private property be taken for military use it shall be paid for when possible in cash at a fair valuation, and when payment in cash is not practicable receipts are to be given.

All ports and places in the Philippine Islands in the actual possession of the land and naval forces of the United States will be opened to the commerce of all friendly nations. All goods and wares not prohibited for military reasons by due announcement of the military authority will be admitted upon payment of such duties and other charges as shall be in force at the time of their importation.

Finally, it should be the earnest and paramount aim of the military administration to win the confidence, respect, and affection of the inhabitants of the Philippines by assuring to them in every possible way that full measure of individual rights and liberties which is the heritage of free peoples, and by proving to them that the mission of the United States is one of benevolent assimilation, substituting the mild sway of justice and right for arbitrary rule. In the fulfillment of this high mission, supporting the temporary administration of affairs for the greatest good of the governed, there must be sedulously maintained the strong arm of authority to repress disturbance and to overcome all obstacles to the bestowal of the blessings of good and stable government upon the people of the Philippine Islands under the free flag of the United States.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

This order will be duly proclaimed and enforced.

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Pensions and Pension Laws—A Review of the Work of the Pension Office under President McKinley—His Instruction to "Be Generous Within the Limit of the Law" has been Fully Carried Out by Commissioner Evans—A Brief Review of the Pension Legislation of the Republican Party—The Most Generous Pension Laws the World Has Ever Seen—The Pension Acts of 1900 and Their Effect.

SPEECH

OF

HON. CHARLES DICK,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, June 5, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11538) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. DICK said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The record of this Administration and of this Congress in regard to our soldiers and our pension laws needs no defense. It is not improper, however, now that the session is ending and three years of the Administration have passed into history, to briefly review the work that has been done in behalf of this class of our citizens, for whom our Government has cared and is caring with a tenderness and generosity unexampled in the history of nations.

WHAT THIS ADMINISTRATION HAS DONE FOR PENSIONERS.

Hon. Henry Clay Evans was appointed Commissioner of Pensions April 1, 1897.

He was born in Pennsylvania, and at an early age moved to Wisconsin, where he resided until he went into the military service in a Wisconsin regiment. After his muster out he served in the Quartermaster's Department until 1870, when he located at Chattanooga, Tenn., where he has since been engaged in business.

During the Administration of President Harrison he served as First Assistant Postmaster-General, and at the Republican national convention held at St. Louis, Mo., June 16, 1896, he was the principal competitor of Garret A. Hobart for the nomination as Vice-President, having received 277½ votes in the convention. He represented his district in the Fifty-first Congress.

He was elected governor of Tennessee on the Republican ticket in 1894 by a large majority, but was counted out by the Democrats, who controlled the machinery of the State.

Upon assuming the duties of Commissioner, Mr. Evans selected as Deputy Commissioners two ex-Union soldiers who had been employed in the Bureau for many years and who were thoroughly familiar with the pension system. He also appointed ex-Union soldiers to the other responsible positions in the Bureau. The two final adjudicating branches of the Bureau, viz, the board of review and the medical division, were placed in charge of experienced men, both ex-Union soldiers.

The chief of the board of review lost a leg in the service, and the assistant chief lost an arm and was otherwise severely wounded in action. The board of review is divided into four sections, all of which are in charge of ex-Union soldiers, two of them having lost an arm in battle. The great majority of the members of the board of review, whose functions are to pass upon the legal aspects of claims for pension, is composed of ex-Union soldiers of long experience in the examination of claims.

The organization of the medical division is similar to that of the board of review. The medical referee has a brilliant military record, having been granted a medal of honor by Congress for conspicuous bravery in action.

The majority of the medical examiners, whose duty it is to pass upon the medical questions involved in claims, are ex-Union soldiers.

The other important divisions in the Bureau are mostly in charge of ex-Union soldiers.

When Mr. Evans assumed the duties of his office, the President told him "to be generous within the limits of the law." In carrying out this policy the Commissioner called around him the ex-Union soldiers in the Bureau and asked their best efforts to aid him in carrying out the instructions of the President and the provisions of the pension laws as they exist. To the extent of his power he determined to make it a "soldiers' Bureau." The entire organization of the Bureau is consequently controlled by those who served in the Union Army. In all matters pertaining to the organization of the different divisions of the Bureau, in appointments, reinstatements, and promotions, the ex-Union soldier and sailor have been given the preference. The statute which gives preference to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors in the matter of appointments has been faithfully observed, and he has reinstated 157 ex-Union soldiers and sailors who had been discharged under former Administrations, besides promoting 287 of those now employed in the Bureau. He has also reinstated 23 ex-Union soldiers in the different agencies and promoted 29 to higher places. He has not stopped here in his good work, but in addition has reinstated and promoted 64 widows and orphans of deceased soldiers.

The Commissioner has fully realized the difficulties in his way in conducting the affairs of the Bureau to the satisfaction of all, and he therefore concluded that the soldiers of the country would appreciate the fact that their old comrades in arms were to have charge of the settlement of their claims.

No ruling of the Pension Bureau has ever evoked as much criticism and condemnation among pensioners and others interested in the work of the Bureau as Orders 225 and 239, issued during the Administration of President Cleveland.

Order 225 directed that all cases allowed under section 2 of the act of June 27, 1890, be drawn from the admitted files as rapidly as practicable, and that they be examined for the purpose of determining whether the allowances were in accordance with law. Under the operations of this order the names of many thousands of pensioners were dropped from the rolls and a great many pensioners had their pensions reduced.

The revision of claims referred to has not been done at all during the administration of Commissioner Evans. On the contrary, many of those who had been dropped under the former Administration have been restored to the rolls and a large number of those who were reduced have had their pensions increased.

Those who are familiar with the workings of Order 229 will readily recall the difficulties produced in the preparation of testimony and the many vexatious delays caused thereby. One of the first official acts of Commissioner Evans when he took charge of the Bureau was the revocation of said order, for which action he received the thanks of the national encampment Grand Army of the Republic.

The number of unsettled claims on file in the Pension Bureau June 30, 1897, was 578,099; the number on file June 30, 1898, was 635,059, and the number remaining on hand June 30, 1899, was 477,239. It will be remembered that with the advent of this Administration many thousands of new claims of all kinds were filed in the Pension Bureau, the number of original claims filed during the years 1897, 1898, and 1899 alone aggregating 126,136. The total number of all applications received during the fiscal year of 1899 was 164,881, while for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1898, the number was 218,489.

Notwithstanding this avalanche of new claims, which was added to the half million claims pending when Commissioner Evans assumed charge of the Bureau, the work of settling claims has been prosecuted with such diligence that at the end of the fiscal year of 1899 only 477,239 unsettled claims remained in the pending files of the Bureau, and only 172,197 of these are original claims, the balance being claims for increase or additional allowance.

In fact the work of the Bureau is now so nearly current that original claims can be settled as fast as they are completed by the claimants by furnishing the necessary evidence.

This result has been accomplished notwithstanding the fact that about 20,000 additional claims were filed last year on account of service in the war with Spain.

During the years of 1897, 1898, and 1899, nearly 140,000 original pensions were granted, while for the three years preceding 1897, viz, 1894, 1895, and 1896, only 118,644 of the same class were allowed.

On June 30, 1897, there were 976,014 pensioners on the rolls of the different agencies, while on June 30, 1899, the number was 991,519, showing a net increase since 1897 of 15,505.

The increase in the number of pensioners has grown steadily from year to year, the maximum number being in 1898, viz, 993,714. In 1894 the number was 969,544.

Since the close of the fiscal year 1894 there have been dropped from the rolls—

On account of death	185,572
Other causes, remarriage, etc	70,000
Total	255,572

And yet the roll has continued to increase each year until now it contains nearly 1,000,000 names.

The amount paid for pensions during 1893, the last year of the Harrison Administration, was $156,806,537.94.

During the following year (1894), which was the first year of the Democratic Administration, the amount paid for pensions dropped to $139,986,626.17, being a reduction in one year of $16,819,911.87.

During the present fiscal year up to May 31, 1900, the Pension Bureau has issued 90,918 certificates, and the number to be issued during the month of June will bring the total number of certificates issued for the year 1900 to over 100,000.

The payments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, on account of pensions will amount to over $140,000,000.

The annual value of the pension roll as it stood on June 30, 1899, was $131,619,961, and the average annual value of each pension was $132.74. The annual value of the roll is greater now than it ever was before.

Since April 1, 1897, over 12,000 names of pensioners, who had been previously dropped for various causes, have been restored to the rolls, and these persons are now receiving pensions amounting to $1,600,000 annually.

This work is still in progress, the Commissioner having directed the restoration of 503 names during the month of May, 1900.

In 1878 President Garfield predicted that the pension roll, which then aggregated $26,786,000, and embraced 232,137 pensioners, was at its maximum, but it has been steadily growing, until now the number of pensioners is nearly a million, and the amount necessary to pay the same is in excess of $140,000,000 a year.

In the State of Ohio alone, the number of pensioners on June 30, 1899, was 105,627, and the amount paid to them yearly was $15,456,003, or an annual average of $146.32 to each pensioner.

Since 1866 the total payments for Army and Navy pensions have been $2,389,910,974, and the magnitude of the pension roll, both as to the number of beneficiaries and the amount paid, has excited the wonder and admiration of the world.

ACT OF JUNE 27, 1890.

This beneficent law was passed by a Republican Congress, was approved by a Republican President, and has been so liberally administered by two Republican Administrations that there are now 420,912 soldiers and sailors, and 130,266 widows receiving its benefits who would not be entitled under the general pension laws. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, the sum of $64,321,460.77 was paid to the pensioners under this act, being nearly one-half of the entire amount disbursed on account of pensions. The total amount paid to pensioners under the act of 1890 since its enactment is more than $500,000,000.

ACT OF MAY 9, 1900.

While this large number of beneficiaries take pension under the act of 1890, it was found that the terms of the law debarred many meritorious claimants from sharing in its benefits, and therefore an act was passed May 9, 1900, popularly known as the "Grand Army bill," amending the act of June 27, 1890, so as to bring within its provisions all meritorious claimants requiring some measure of relief from the Government on account of disability or dependency. This bill had previously received the approval of the President and the officers of his Administration, including the Commissioner of Pensions, who had for several years past recommended legislation along the same lines.

It is expected that under the operations of this act many thousands of names will be added to the pension rolls, and the Comsioner of Pensions is now actively engaged in making preparations looking to the prompt settlement of all claims that may be filed under its provisions.

Section 3 of this act liberalizes the provisions for pensioning soldiers' widows. The law of June 27, 1890, provided that the widow must be "without other means of support than her daily labor" to give her a pensionable status. The Secretary of the Interior held that unless the widow's other means of support exceeded what her pension would be ($96) she might be deemed to be without other means of support than her daily labor. The act of May 9, 1900, section 3, provides that if the soldier's widow's net income does not exceed $250, she shall be pensionable. This act will be the means of placing upon the pension rolls, according to the estimates of Bureau officials, from 35,000 to 40,000 soldiers' widows—a generous increase of about $3,500,000 annually to these most deserving representatives of the nation's defenders.

It is a well-known fact that President McKinley in his message to Congress recommended this legislation; that it was recommeded by the honorable Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions. The Grand Army of the Republic at its national encampment at Philadelphia took occasion to commend the Commissioner for his recommendation of this generous liberalizing of the law.

ACT OF APRIL 15, 1900.

This is an act passed by Congress repealing the provisions of section 4716, Revised Statutes, so far as the same may be applicable to the claims for pension of dependent parents of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the Army or Navy of the United States during the war with Spain.

This law gives title to pension in cases where its beneficiaries aided and abetted the late rebellion and who furnished sons for the Army or Navy during the war with Spain who died or may hereafter die as a result of said service.

ACT OF APRIL 22, 1900.

This law, which was enacted by the present Congress, makes provision for granting an increase of pension to certain survivors of the war with Mexico who may become totally disabled and destitute.

This legislation will reach a very meritorious class of pensioners who have heretofore been debarred from applying for increase, notwithstanding they may have become totally disabled for the performance of any manual labor.

It is expected that a large number of beneficiaries will apply under this act, and their claims will receive prompt attention when filed in the Pension Bureau.

AMOUNT PAID FOR PENSION DURING THE YEAR 1899.

The payments on account of pensions during the year ending June 30, 1899, were $138,253,922.

The total payments on account of pensions during President Grant's first term were $116,136,275; during his second term, $114,395,357; during President Hayes's term, $145,322,489.

It will be noted that the payments for the one year (1899) were far in excess of the entire amount paid during the first or second Administrations of President Grant, and almost as much as was paid during the entire four years of President Hayes's Administration.

In the matter of allowances of original pensions it may be stated that during the first year of President McKinley's Administration there were allowed 52,648 original pensions. During the first year of President Cleveland's second Administration there were allowed only 39,085.

During the entire four years of President Grant's second Administration there were allowed only 42,917 original pensions.

RATES OF PENSION.

The rates of pension paid under the act of June 27, 1890, range from $6 per month (minimum) to $12 per month (maximum).

Total disability for manual labor under the general law is rated at $30 per month. The same degree of disability entitles to $12 per month under the act of June 27, 1890.

Under the general law (disability of service origin) 46,583 soldiers receive $12 per month, 21,970 receive $24 per month, and 15,498 receive $30 per month.

Under the act of June 27, 1890 (disability not of service origin), 160,406 soldiers receive the maximum rate ($12 per month), 26,540 receive $10 per month, 128,143 receive $8 per month, and 105,787 receive $6 per month.

This shows that there are more persons pensioned at the maximum rate than any other rate under the act of 1890, and that the number receiving the rate for total disability under that act is more than ten times the number receiving pension for total disability of service origin. These figures show that the ratings of the Pension Bureau in claims allowed under the act of 1890 are very liberal indeed.

Let us for a moment consider what this generous nation has done and is doing for its defenders:

First. The most liberal pension system that the world ever saw for those who were wounded or otherwise disabled in the service, and their widows and children and dependent parents and sisters and brothers.

Second. If the soldier lost a limb in the service, or, as the result of his service, in line of duty, the law provides that he shall be furnished, in addition to his pension, an artificial limb free of cost (every three years), or commutation therefor, and transportation from his home to such place as he shall select the artificial limb and return.

Third. A pension for all who served ninety days and who are now incapacitated for earning a support, and suitable provision for the widows and children and dependent parents.

Fourth. Preference in appointments to places of trust and profit, and preferences for retention in all civil-service positions.

Fifth. National Homes, located at convenient and healthy points in different parts of the country, where all the comforts of a home are provided free of all expense, including comfortable quarters, clothing, medical attendance, free library and amusements of different kinds, the Government providing free transportation to the Homes, and continuing payments of pension while a member of the Home, and increasing same as disabilities increase.

Sixth. State Homes (29 in number) kept up by the different States, and similar in their purpose to the National Homes, the sum of $100 being annually paid by the General Government to such Homes for each inmate. Many of these State Homes also provide for the wives and families of the inmates, so that they need not be separated while they are members of the Home.

Seventh. Soldiers' orphan schools, established by the different States, providing for the maintenance and education of soldiers' orphans until they attain the age of 16 years.

Eighth. There has been, in addition to all this, granted for various military services, as provided by law, over 70,000,000 acres of land, known as bounty land.

When we add to the $144,000,000 annual appropriation for the payment of pensions the amounts expended in other benefits to the soldiers, who can truthfully say of this Government that it is ungrateful to its defenders?

I find it interesting to compare what this generous nation is doing for its defenders with that which other great nations do for their military establishments.

Russia maintains a standing army of 1,000,000 soldiers in times of peace; of 2,125,000 soldiers in war, with a reserve of 6,950,000 men. Her total annual expenditures are $715,000,000, and of this amount $155,000,000 (or 22 per cent) goes to the support of her great army.

France maintains a standing army of 589,000 soldiers in times of peace, with a reserve army of 2,500,000 men. Her total annual expenditures are $680,000,000; of this amount $145,000,000 (or 22 per cent) is appropriated to the support of her standing army.

Germany has a standing army of 585,000 soldiers in times of peace; in war, 2,320,000, with a reserve army of 4,300,000 men. Her annual expenditures for the support of her army amount to $135,000,000.

It will be seen by these figures that this generous nation pays, and rightly pays, about as much each year in the way of pensions, the support of its Homes, and other sources, to its patriotic defenders of 1861 to 1865, as does either of these great nations for the support of its mighty standing army in the field.

I have before me a pamphlet published "by authority"—"The advantages of the army; conditions on which young men are invited to join Her Majesty's regular forces"—and on page 11, section 37, I find:

The amount now paid in pensions annually to officers who have risen from the ranks, and to discharged soldiers, is as follows: Officers, warrant officers, sergeants, corporals, privates, etc. Number in receipt of pensions, total, 80,070; amount paid in pensions, £1,847,047.

Or, in our money, $8,922,237. Great Britain is a mighty nation in war and is always prepared and ready for war.

I have taken pains to make a careful examination of the several counts contained in the "indictment against Evans," presented in the National Tribune on August 31, 1899.

These counts comprise substantially the complaints which had been published from time to time in that paper and have been brought before the nation again by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], and it will be found from an unbiased standpoint that there is nothing in these charges that constitutes a valid ground for complaint against the administration of the Pension Bureau.

First count.—Henry Clay Evans became Commissioner of Pensions at the close of an administration which was notorious for the narrowness, unfairness, injustice, not to say illegality, of its construction and administration of the pension laws. On him devolved the duty of formulating and putting into effect the policy of the new Administration, which there were the best of reasons for believing would be fair and just to the beneficiaries of the pension laws. But we found him soon devising means to obstruct and delay the ends of justice—to create new obstacles to the speedy adjudication and payment of claims.

Among his first official acts of importance was one which in effect required that all completed increase claims under the general law, based on disability not covered by the pension certificate, be sent to the special examination division for investigation, a course which was equivalent to burying these claims for from one to three years. (Instructions to Chiefs of Adjudicating Divisions, 1897.)

This count evidently refers to claims for increase on account of disabilities alleged years after filing the original claim for pension, and which are not sustained by the records of the War Department or by medical evidence of treatment in the service. It was uniformly held by the Department that where a claimant years after his discharge alleges a new disease or other disability of which his hospital record contains no mention and of which also there was no evidence at discharge, the presumption is that the disease or disability was not incurred in the service, but subsequently to his discharge, and it is not therefore pensionable.

It will be seen that under this rule most of this class of claims must be rejected. In order to avoid the necessity for this action, Commissioner Evans instructed the chiefs of the adjudicating divisions to exercise great care in the consideration of these claims, and, instead of rejecting those in which the evidence was general and vague as to origin in service of the alleged disabilities, to refer them for special examination in order to aid the claimants in establishing their claims. This action was entirely in the interests of claimants, for in the absence of facilities for obtaining additional information most of this class of claims would have to be rejected.

Second count.—He instituted a practice of refusing to consider any claim for increase of pension until a year had elapsed since the previous adjudication. (Order No. 352, dated December 24, 1897.) This he did without consultation with his superior officers of the Interior Department, and by a decision rendered March 30, 1898, he was required to abrogate this practice and reinstate the former practice dating from 1882. (P. D., 9, page 285.)

When the present Administration came into power many thousands of pensioners who were dissatisfied with the action of the prior Administration in rejecting their claims for increase of pension filed new claims for increase, amounting the first year to 109,479. It was simply impossible to handle this enormous amount of work except to the detriment of the thousands of original claims of persons who had never received any pension, and therefore a rule was adopted to the effect that claims for increase of pension would not be considered within twelve months from the date of the last action of the Bureau. This course was deemed necessary for the time being, as it enabled the Bureau to give more time and attention to those claimants who were not yet in receipt of a pension, and for the further reason that it was found in many cases so filed that the new claims for increase were filed within a week or a month of the last adjudication by the Bureau.

As it was believed by the Department that this rule might result in injustice to some meritorious applicants, it was deemed best to abrogate the rule after it had been in operation but a few months, and the former practice making the time six months was reestablished.

Third count.—In disregard of the law and taking upon himself the right to administer the laws or not as he saw fit, he refused to consider lawful pensions claims because the applicants were apparently residing beyond the limits of the United States. (Act of March 2, 1895; order dated November 23, 1897.) He was required to abandon this practice and subordinate himself to law. (P. D., 9, page 437.)

No orders were ever issued by the Commissioner in connection with the matters referred to in this count. Verbal instructions were given to return to the files some cases of claimants residing in foreign countries, in which orders for medical examination were to be issued, until the Commissioner could find time to consider them, he believing that claimants who resided in the United States and who pay taxes in this country should have preference in the consideration of their claims over claimants residing in foreign countries, most of them not citizens of this country and had never even been in this country.

Fourth count.—He prohibited any evidence obtained on special examination being made known to and permitted to be examined by claimant or attorney after the receipt of same in the Pension Bureau, alleging that the claimant had the right to follow the special examination in person or by attorney, but knowing that it is the exception rather than the rule where a claimant is able to himself follow or employ another to follow a special examination, often extending over several States. This he did in disregard of a rule and the settled practice of the Interior Department (December 19, 1891), and was required to return to the former practice. (P. D., 9, page 471.)

Under the rules and practice of the Bureau every pensioner or claimant whose case had been sent to the field for special examination is duly advised by the special examiner as to the time of commencement of the examination, and is also informed in every instance that he or she has the right to be present at such examination, either in person or by attorney, to introduce testimony, cross-examine witnesses, etc., and it is his privilege if he can not be present during the progress of the examination, to have read over to him by the special examiner all the testimony taken in his absence. There is, therefore, no bar to a claimant obtaining full knowledge of the testimony taken in such examination.

The facilities for obtaining full information by claimants being deemed ample, it was believed that no good purpose would be subserved by exhibiting the reports of special examiners to other persons, it having been found that such exhibition in many cases resulted in attempts to impeach the testimony of reliable witnesses who had testified before the special examiner.

In August, 1898, the Department, in the interest of harmony, established a rule permitting attorneys, under certain conditions, to examine the evidence obtained by special examiners.

Fifth count.—He adopted measures to defeat the act of July 18, 1894, relative to the right of claimant or attorney to inspect reports of examining surgeons. The enactment was in consequence of the action of the Lochren administration taking away the privilege of inspection of such reports, and though Mr. Evans professed to believe that his action was strictly in accordance with the law, it was clear that he desired to restore so far as possible the Lochren practice, with the evident incidental purpose of "getting even" with attorneys whom he claims were instrumental in the passage of the law. (Order dated October 21, 1897.)

He was required to abrogate this practice and restore that in full accordance with the spirit of the law. (P. D., 9, page 478.)

Commissioner Evans never adopted measures to defeat the act of July 18, 1894, which provides that the reports of examining surgeons when filed in the Bureau should be open to the examination and inspection of claimant or his attorney. On the contrary, he complied fully with the law and exhibited such certificates to those who had authority to examine them, but he declined to show them to persons not named in the law. The departmental decision of August 27, 1898, extended the privilege of seeing these papers to the representatives of recognized attorneys when they have written authority from their employer.

Sixth count.—To retard and obstruct the settlement of claims which he does not wish to allow, save at his pleasure, he adopted rules making it a disbarring offense for any attorney to seek, or to even suggest to a claimant to seek, information through a member of Congress as to the official status of a pension claim; and through evidently misleading representations as to the status of the work of the Bureau and the character of claims in which inquiry is made through members of Congress, he secured formal approval of said rules. (Rules 22 and 23, approved March 10, 1898.)

The requirements necessary to the proper adjudication of a claim are always plainly stated to the attorney, and in common justice to all claimants it is proper that their cases should be taken up for action in their regular order. To take them out of their order is a manifest injustice to other claimants. Congressional calls and letters of inquiry come to the Bureau at the rate of over a million annually.

The order of the Commissioner does not in any way abridge the rights of a claimant of his own volition to solicit the aid of his Representative in Congress if he so desires, but it does prohibit attorneys from annoying members of Congress with requests that the claims which they represent be called up for action out of their turn, and Representatives in Congress should feel grateful to the Commissioner for relieving them of this annoyance.

Seventh count.—In disregard of a decision construing the law relative to the pension title of remarried dependent mothers under the act of June 27, 1890 (P. D., 6, page 30), he instituted a practice of rejecting the claims of all such, having covertly secured the formal approval of such practice by embodying the rule therefor in an alleged codification of existing practice in April, 1898. He was required to amend his self-instituted rule and regard the law and the decision of the Department. (P. D., 10, dated June 21, 1899.)

However, it is the truth that none of the claims rejected under his infamous ruling set aside by the decision (P. D., 10, dated June 21, 1899) have ever been reopened and allowed, he claiming that the decision is not "res adjudicata." Yet common sense, or a desire to be reasonably honest in his endeavor to do right, should have readily pointed his plain duty to recall from the rejected files all such claims and adjudicate them in accordance with the construction of the law promulgated by his immediate superior.

Section 4708 of the Revised Statutes provides that the remarriage of a dependent mother after the death of her son shall be a bar to pension, and there is nothing contained in the terms of the first section of the act of June 27, 1890, repealing, by implication or otherwise, section 4708.

When the Pension Bureau prepared its treatise on the practice, it held that the remarriage of a mother after the death of the soldier was a bar to pension. This treatise, instead of as charged in this count, was before the Department for a considerable time for review, and under date of April 9, 1898, received the approval of the then Secretary of the Interior, Hon. C. N. Bliss.

The charge that the approval to such treatise was covertly secured is wholly false and is entitled to no further comment. All claims rejected under that practice upon the ground of remarriage have been and are now being adjudicated under the departmental decision of June 21, 1899, which decision reverses the practice formerly sanctioned and approved by the Department, as fast as they come up for action.

Eighth count.—He continues to reject the just claims under the act of June 27, 1890, of those denied by the last Administration, and to cut off from the pension roll those who escaped the merciless "revision" perpetrated by his immediate predecessors; and the city of Chicago and elsewhere has inaugurated experimentally an iniquitous and unwarranted inquisition to discover possible fraud and to complete the work of Lochren and Hoke Smith and cut off those pensioners held entitled under the Harrison Administration and who have heretofore by some chance escaped the blights of the Hoke Smithism and Lochrenism. No one desires to shield the malefactor, but there is no warrant in law for the indiscriminate and insulting investigation put upon the innocent many by the present Commissioner to seek out the possible guilty few, that he may win anew the plaudits of the press that finds special satisfaction in all that puts upon the pensioners the stigma of dishonor and dishonesty.

This count is so general and indefinite in its terms and so manifestly untrue that it hardly warrants any consideration. Whenever title to pension is shown under the law, a certificate issues in favor of such claimant; but where there is no legal title shown, the claim must necessarily be rejected.

With reference to the investigations instituted by the Bureau in Chicago and elsewhere, it will be recalled that time and again it has been stated by prominent members of the Grand Army of the Republic that if the pension rolls contained the names of persons who were not entitled to pension by law, but who had obtained such pension by fraud, the Grand Army of the Republic was ever ready and desirous of having such names dropped and the rolls purged.

The efforts of the Commissioner to expose fraud fearlessly when found should, instead of causing condemnation, merit commendation.

When complaints as to fraud are made to the Commissioner or he has good reason to believe that the law has been violated, it is his duty to ferret out the same and to punish the guilty.

Examination of the agency rolls in several cities in 1898 revealed 189 cases in which pension was being paid in violation of law. Will any fair-minded man say that the names of these parties should have remained upon the rolls, or that the 157 convictions by the courts of offenders against the pension laws during the year 1899 should be set aside, and that the Commissioner should be condemned for instituting the inquiries which developed these frauds?

Ninth count.—He continues to nullify the act of March 6, 1896, passed by Congress to correct an abuse and misinterpretation of the act of June 27, 1890, by the Cleveland Administration; and until required by the direction of his superior officer, refused to apply the law, even to the extent permissible under the interpretation of the former administration, unless specifically requested by claimants. (P. D., 10, dated December 21, 1898.)

An examination of the Treatise on the Practice of the Pension Bureau, approved by the Secretary of the Interior April 9, 1898, fully disproves the charges in this count as to the act of March 6, 1896. The instructions contained on page 97 of that treatise provide fully for carrying out the provisions of said act, and further comment is unnecessary as to the charges in this count.

Tenth count.—Contrary to the law and the rights of claimants to choose, he has rejected thousands of claims on the alleged ground of "no benefit," whereas the claims should have been granted and the claimants permitted to elect which of two pensions they would prefer to receive. He was required to discontinue this practice. (P. D., 10, dated December 7, 1898.)

Ever since the passage of the act of June 27, 1890, and with the approval of the Department, the Pension Bureau, in order not to delay the payment of pension to those adjudged entitled thereto and who were often in immediate need of relief, elected for the claimant, if he had a claim pending under both laws, that one which would give him the greater benefit. This practice was a beneficent one to claimants, as it avoided the delay that now must necessarily occur by awaiting their replies to correspondence as to which of the two pensions they prefer to take.

Eleventh count.—For nearly two years he has unlawfully withheld from settlement all general law claims of children over 16 years of age, in disregard of the law and decision of the Department (P. D., 7, page 433); meanwhile using every effort to secure such a construction of the law as will enable him to reject and deny these lawful claims, the matter being now pending on his renewed request for reconsideration of the questions of law.

The proviso to the act of March 3, 1879, exempting from the limitation therein imposed all claims by or in behalf of children under sixteen years of age, has been the subject of many different constructions, and Commissioner Evans, being desirous of executing the law justly, determined to refer the matter at issue to the Secretary of the Interior for his decision. The only cases held up pending such decision were those in which applications for pension were filed after a child had reached the pensionable age.

The pension to minor children was intended by Congress to aid, assist, and comfort the children during the period of their minority and not after they had grown up to mature manhood or womanhood.

The decision of the Secretary of the Interior recently handed down, shows the wisdom of the Commissioner in withholding action in this class of cases, as such action has undoubtedly saved the Government from paying a large amount of money to persons whose pensionable status must be determined by judicial process.

Twelfth count.—He has for the past year unlawfully withheld from official consideration in ordinary course of business the just claims of soldiers and sailors of the Spanish war, many of them sons and other relatives of soldiers and sailors of the rebellion, on the misrepresentation that the War Department has been unprepared or unwilling or unable to furnish required information from the official military records, whereas the War Department has been ready and willing to furnish desired reports on twenty-four hours' notice. (National Tribune, June 29, 1899.) The unlawful and unjustifiable action of the Commissioner of Pensions in this class of claims furnishes striking evidence of his personal feelings and disposition toward all beneficiaries of the pension laws, there being with respect to this class of claims no room for the slanderous objection or suggestion that the claimants have for many years slept on their alleged rights and the claims are therefore presumably of doubtful or fraudulent character.

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, shows that there had been filed 17,560 Army and Navy claims, and 303 allowed, on account of service in the war with Spain, the latter being claims of widows and invalids, by reason of gunshot wounds and for the more severe disabilities, and that claims for minor disabilities or disabilities of a temporary character are being taken up for action in the order of their filing.

The charge that this class of cases is not being considered in their regular order is as ridiculous as the charge made in some newspapers that the cases of soldiers of the civil war were being side-tracked and delayed in order that the cases of soldiers of the Spanish war might have preference. All these cases are receiving careful attention just as fast as they can be reached in the order of their filing.

Thirteenth count.—It is notorious that claims filed under the general law before July 1, 1880, and therefore involving arrears to date of discharge, are rejected by his direction unless supported by record evidence, and if supported by record evidence are buried in the special examination division, the evident purpose being to reject if not to delay indefinitely all claims requiring a large first payment.

The charges in this count are general and indefinite, and not a single case is cited to show that the practice complained of has ever been instituted.

Claims for pension carrying arrears are allowed without any record evidence whatever of the disabilities alleged whenever the proof required by the law to establish a claim has been furnished.

To refute this charge it is only necessary to state that within the past year nearly 300 claims have been allowed, carrying from $1,000 to $3,800 on the first payment.

Fourteenth count.—He has rejected thousands of claims for invalid pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, the applicants in which are 62 years of age and over, notwithstanding that under the Mexican war pension act of January 29, 1887, claimants 62 years of age are regarded as pensionably disabled and entitled to the rating of $8 per month, and notwithstanding that 62 years is the compulsory retirement age of the Regular Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

The act of January 29, 1887, pensions soldiers of the Mexican war when they become 62 years of age. It is also true that officers in the Army and Navy are being retired upon attaining that age, but the Commissioner of Pensions has no power to make laws, and the act of June 27, 1890, does not contain a word to the effect that a survivor of the civil war is entitled to pension by reason of his having reached the age of 62 years.

It is manifestly absurd to charge the Commissioner with the violation of a law which has no existence, and this charge is a fair specimen of the recklessness which has obtained in formulating the different counts in this indictment.

Fifteenth count.—Upon manifestly misleading representations as to the status of the official business of the Pension Bureau he procured the reduction of the office force of the Pension Bureau by 100 (July 1, 1898), notwithstanding that the delays in action and settlement were then great, and have continued notoriously so to the present time, being as great as if not greater than for many years past, thousands of claimants being unable to secure any action on their claims, or learn what, if any, additional evidence is necessary, weeks and months growing into years without any information of any character being elicited as to the official status of the claim. It is worthy of note that a discrimination appears to be made against claims on file many years, and therefore involving considerable sums as arrears, the official reports as to the average amounts of first payments bearing out what has become noticeable in this regard. (Annual Report, 1898, page 23.)

The charge that 100 clerks were dropped from the rolls June 30, 1898, is true. It is also true that the efficiency of the service was in no way impaired by this reduction.

There were just that number of employees in the Bureau who had become inefficient for the work of the Bureau by reason of age and physical disabilities, and the only question was whether they should be carried on the pay roll as pensioners or be dropped. They retarded rather than helped the work of the Bureau, and it is not proposed to made a defense with regard to this reduction of force.

Sixteenth count.—Notwithstanding the great number of just and valid claims awaiting settlement for many years, he has diligently avoided their consideration in order that he may be able to turn back unexpended into the Treasury large amounts of the appropriations for pensions. (Annual Reports, 1897, 1898, 1899.)

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the year ended June 30, 1898, shows that the board of review examined during that year 233,065 cases which were submitted by the adjudicating divisions, and for the year ended June 30, 1899, 245,355 were examined by the board.

This showing certainly refutes any charges of avoidance of consideration of claims.

With reference to the charge that the Commissioner is anxious to turn back unexpended into the Treasury large amounts of the appropriations for pensions, it is only necessary to state that for the fiscal year of 1898, when the appropriation of $140,000,000 was in danger of becoming exhausted, the Commissioner asked for and received a deficiency appropriation of over $8,000,000 to pay the pensions for that year, and he expended the greater part of this amount in addition to the regular appropriation of $140,000,000.

Seventeenth count.—He has sought to deprive claimants of the benefit of advice of counsel by forwarding to them direct the orders for medical examination, expecting and desiring that claimants, without knowledge of their rights and privileges and without due regard for their interests, will place themselves at a disadvantage and afford a greater opportunity for the rejection or delay of their claims. (Order 361, dated April 14, 1898.)

Order 361, dated April 14, 1898, simply directed that all orders for medical examination shall be sent direct to the claimant, and that the attorney be notified by card on the same day that an examination has been ordered.

The charge does not point out nor can it be understood how under this arrangement any rights of a claimant have been abridged or how a claimant is thereby deprived of the benefit of advice of counsel, if any such were needed, or how the mere fact of transmittal of an order for medical examination direct to the claimant would afford opportunity for the rejection or for delay in the claim. This charge is simply ridiculous. The order was issued in order to avoid delay on the part of the attorney in forwarding it to the claimant and to give the claimant an opportunity of presenting himself before a board of surgeons without waiting for the attorney to send him the necessary authority.

Eighteenth count.—While criticising, both in the public press and in official reports, the work of the examining surgeons appointed and retained by him on grounds of fitness, and showing the fallibility of the examinations made by them under his direction, he nevertheless habitually regards their reports as absolutely correct when unfavorable to the claimants, and, as the personal knowledge and experience of thousands of claimants attest, wholly disregards favorable reports on slight pretext or no pretext whatever. (See Associated Press reports and annual report for 1898.)

The charges in this count are so completely without foundation and so devoid of truth that it would be absurd to attempt to answer them, especially as no particular cases are cited and no facts are stated to substantiate them.

Nineteenth count.—Before he had been in office a year he entered upon a course of tirade against alleged pension frauds, his pratings in the public press in the form of inspired articles and statements purporting to be "interviews" rivaling and eclipsing in misrepresentation and maliciousness anything of similar character published during the preceding Administration. (Associated Press reports.)

The Commissioner has used every effort to discover frauds, and when he has found that certain attorneys have been guilty of wholesale fabrications of declarations and affidavits, or, rather, papers purporting to be such, by causing them to be signed in blank, by deceiving witnesses as to the contents of their affidavits, by forging jurats, altering of records, etc., and wholesale frauds, such as men drawing two and three pensions, and false personations of soldiers and pensioners, he has deemed it his duty to state these facts in his annual reports, and he should not be condemned either for uncovering the frauds or for letting the public know that such frauds have been committed. Would it not be reprehensible for a public officer to conceal the existence of fraud? Knowing the Commissioner of Pensions as well as I do, I do not think he is built that way, and it is my opinion that he will continue to prosecute fraudulent claimants and attorneys as long as he remains Commissioner of Pensions, the National Tribune and the advisers of the honorable gentleman from New York to the contrary notwithstanding.

Twentieth count.—He has studiously invited and obtained the approval, to a large degree, of the same portion of the public press that applauded the "revision" and alleged "reforms" instituted by Lochren and Hoke Smith, and has claimed personal credit for the detection and suppression of alleged frauds and for reducing the pension roll or permitting a minimum increase. The same press that acclaimed Lochren and Hoke Smith as wise and just finds joy and satisfaction in Henry Clay Evans. At the same time he has cunningly sought and obtained credit with the press friendly to the Union survivors of the war of the rebellion and their interests, by an apparently considerable number of allowances, a large percentage of which, however, have represented little or nothing of substantial benefit to the alleged beneficiaries, being reissues, duplicates, renewals, supplementals, and the like.

The allowance during the fiscal year of 1898 of 52,648 new claims and of 26,760 claims for increase, of 37,077 new claims and 24,497 increase claims during the year of 1899, the allowance of over 100,000 claims of all classes for the year of 1900, the increase of the average annual value of the roll for the year 1899 over that of 1898, show of itself whether a little or nothing of substantial benefit has accrued from the allowances of claims during the period stated.

Twenty-first count.—He has vilified the wives of survivors of the war of the rebellion, wickedly attributing to them unworthy, mercenary motives in their marriages, not only in the public press, but in official reports (Annual Report, 1898), and has sought in Congress to obtain legislation to cut off the helpmates of the declining years of invalid pensioners.

When Congress passed the act of June 27, 1890, it saw fit to grant pension under its provisions only to those who had married the soldier or sailor prior to the passage of said act.

The Commissioner believed that there should be no discrimination between the wife of a soldier who applied for pension under the general law and the one who applied under the act of 1890. He therefore recommended certain legislation to that effect, but he did not in any way vilify the wives of survivors of the civil war, only pointing out the apparent discrimination in the law and citing some cases in which late marriages were evidently contracted by reason of mercenary motives.

Twenty-second count.—He has vilified in the public press the claimants whose just claims have been unjustly rejected by him, insinuating that they are rejected because fraudulent, and that every honest, lawful claim is granted promptly and freely by him. (Associated Press reports.)

If so many claims have been unjustly rejected by the Commissioner, as charged in this count, is it not very strange that the Bureau of Pensions has been overruled by the Department in so few cases? It can not be denied that cases have been rejected because they are fraudulent, and certainly no one can hold that a fraudulent claim is a just one. The reports of the Commissioner freely discuss the various grounds upon which claims had to be rejected, and I commend these reports to your careful consideration.

Twenty-third count.—He has vilified in the public press all survivors of the war and others acting as the authorized representatives of pension claimants, characterizing them as "buzzards," and alleging that they are regularly engaged in the prosecution of known fraudulent claims, and that through his thwarting of such attempted frauds he has incurred the ill will of the attorneys and thereby of the order of the Grand Army. This he has done notwithstanding that attorneys admitted to practice before the Department are obliged by law and the official regulations to furnish satisfactory evidence that they are of "good moral character and in good repute" (act of July 4, 1884, section 5), and are subject to disbarment for offenses far less grave than wittingly prosecuting fraudulent claims. After broadly characterizing the attorneys admitted and continued in good standing by his official superiors of the Department, he proposes no reform or remedy for the alleged corruption and disregard of law but the absolute prohibiting of the employment or recognition of attorneys, agents, or counsel whatever in behalf of pension claimants and the vesting of the prosecution as well as the adjudication of pension claims in the Commissioner of Pensions. (P. D., 10, dated December 7, 1898.)

That there are many attorneys practicing before the Pension Bureau who are in every way honorable, and that there are others who do not hesitate to resort to fraudulent and questionable ways, can not be denied, and no abuse showered upon Commissioner Evans by the last-named attorneys or by their newspaper organs will for one moment receive the sanction of an impartial public.

Twenty-fourth count.—Instead of desiring and suggesting, as was his privilege and right, the abrogation of rules and practice instituted under the late Administration, and working great wrong and injustice and disregard of the letter and spirit of the law, especially with regard to the act of June 27, 1890, he prefers and seeks the continuance of odious measures and practice, particularly Order 225, of June 9, 1898. The alleged Treatise on the Practice of the Pension Bureau, prepared and published under his direction in April, 1898, instead of being the vehicle, or even the means of suggestion, of the obviation of harsh measures and a liberalizing of the practice, was used as a means to covertly introduce new obstructions and limitations with regard to increase claims (page 117) and dependent mothers' claims (page 116), as already shown, the whole codification being approved en bloc upon his evident misrepresentation as to the character of the publication.

Twenty-fifth count.—He resolves all doubts against the claimant, as the experience and observation of thousands attest, and has not originated nor instituted a single practice looking to a greater liberality in dealing with claimants.

Since the incumbency of Commissioner Evans not one case previously allowed has been revised under Order 225.

The practice, instead, has been liberalized. Certain disabilities for which, under the prior Administration, no rating was allowed under the act of June 27, 1890, have been held to be ratable.

Those who have known the Commissioner in and out of the office, can truthfully testify that it has been his desire, expressed through his direction to the officers of the Bureau, that all reasonable doubts in pension cases should be resolved in favor of the claimant, and he has also repeatedly advised the medical officers of the Bureau to act liberally within the law in all cases. The fact must not be lost sight of that he is only an executive officer and is charged simply with the execution and not with the enactment of the law.

Twenty-sixth count.—His every official recommendation has been looking to restriction and limitation upon existing rights under the pension laws (Annual Reports, 1897, 1898), in glaring contrast with those of most of his predecessors. (Annual Reports, 1887, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1896, and others.)

It has been conceded by very eminent lawyers that the third section of the act of June 27, 1890, if literally construed, would debar from pension any widow of a soldier who has any means whatever aside from her daily labor, but the Department has held that the income of a widow, if below the amount which the act bestows ($96 per year), should not be a bar to title.

It is well known that Commissioner Evans has always held a different opinion from that held by the Department. He has uniformly held that an income up to $250 per year should not defeat the title of a widow for pension under said act, and by the act of May 9, 1900, Congress has indorsed his opinion by fixing that amount as the allowable income of a widow claimant.

If necessary to show the liberality of the Commissioner in his ideas of construction of the pension laws, I could cite numbers of cases in which he recommends more liberal legislation from Congress and a more liberal construction of existing laws, but enough has already been said to show the unreliable character of the charges contained in this indictment.

Not a discreditable feature has ever been disclosed in any of the publications from the National Tribune that has in any way affected the character of the Commissioner of Pensions or his loyalty to the country or to the soldiers and their dependents.

His aim has been to mete out justice to the defenders of the Union, and no better friend of the good soldier has ever filled the office of Commissioner of Pensions than Henry Clay Evans, of Tennessee.

Much has been said about the extravagance or expense of the maintenance of our great pension system. I find from official figures that the pension agencies are now paying over 1,000,000 pensioners (covering the names that are each year added to the rolls, and those being dropped for death and other causes), doing all the work, including salaries, rent, fuel, lights, and other expenses of supplies incident, in making four quarterly payments for the thirty-four years (beginning with the year 1866 and ending with the fiscal year 1899), for one-half of 1 per cent, or, in round numbers, $12,000,000 for disbursing $2,389,310,864.

During the thirty-four years ending with the year 1899 there has been paid for pensions alone $2,389,910,874.74, and covering all salaries and all other expenses of the Bureau for the same period there has been disbursed the sum of $52,237,226.42. This sum includes salaries to all employees, including special examiners and their traveling expenses, and all the other expenses incident to the adjudication and payment of pensions.

This sum is a little in excess of 2 per cent of the amount disbursed for pensions.

Gossips have had much to say about the methods of the Bureau in investigating claimants for widows' pensions. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] has taken occasion to quote that often-told falsehood. It is true that the printed instructions to special examiners in the field prior to this Administration were a little too plain in their requirements. The present Commissioner of Pensions issued a new book of instructions and placed in the hands of each special examiner in 1897 (a copy of which I have), forbidding the asking of the widow if she has violated the act of August 7, 1882 (page 8), and if any examiner does this, he violates his instructions on original applications; and it is only done when it is reported that the widow, already pensioned, is living in marriage or adultery. "In such cases the examiner will make his investigation carefully and discreetly, so as not to cause unnecessary neighborhood gossip or scandal."

If an examiner does more or does less, he violates the law and instructions. Congress made the law; if it is an unjust law, let us repeal it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] makes use of a letter addressed to the editor of the National Tribune by Charles L. De Weale, referring to the case of Mrs. Mary M. Elliott, of Roscommon, Mich. I have investigated this case. Mr. Carpenter and Mrs. Elliott were not so old when they commenced living under the same roof; they were not then, thirty-three years ago, so decrepit. Some of the neighbors thought it at least suspicious, and if not suspicious, it must be a sporadic case of thirty-three years of virtue. However, why did not the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] tell the whole truth and say that full justice was done; that the benefit of the doubt was given, and that Mrs. Elliott was continued on the pension roll?

One more item, and I am done. The whole parade of figures and alleged facts presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] are wholly unreliable and unworthy of consideration. He gives the amounts appropriated each year to pay special examiners, and credits the year 1897 to the "Evans" administration. It must be remembered that 1897 $500,000 was for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, ending soon after the "Evans" administration came in. This appropriation was reduced for 1898 to $450,000, and not all expended. In 1899 it was again reduced to $400,000, and was not all expended. For the current year the appropriation is $400,000, and I know a considerable per cent will not be expended. Let us be truthful; let us not misrepresent our own generous Government. I know of many just claimants who never could have established their claims without the aid of the special examiner, and the just and generous system of the Government in sending these claims to the different parts of the country, and these same special examiners affording the claimant full opportunity to prove his or her claim. They are not spies, but they are sworn officers of the Government.

The fact remains that this generous Government pays over $140,000,000 annually to pensioners. No other government in the world, in all time, dealt so generously with its defenders as does this great Republic of ours.

The course of the United States, Mr. Speaker, in regard to its military and military needs is unique. While European nations are spending vast sums for the maintenance of standing armies, our nation contents itself with a small army in times of peace, relying with perfect confidence on the patriotism of her citizens to come to her support in time of war. And in this she is never disappointed. No army ever made a better record than did our volunteer soldiers in the war with Spain or in the civil war, and we are thus fully justified in devoting to an unprecedentedly liberal pension system the money which we would otherwise expend upon a standing army. In this way we keep our entire population employed in peaceful pursuits, which add to the prosperity and wealth of the nation and at the same time insure to future generations the same prompt and patriotic response from the people should occasion require their services in defense of the country's honor.

THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—ITS SPLENDID WORK IN BEHALF OF THE FARMERS OF THE COUNTRY UNDER THE ADMINISTRATION OF PRESIDENT M'KINLEY.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to take this opportunity to point out some features of the splendid work which the Department of Agriculture has performed in behalf of that most important and largest class of our citizens, the farmers and those engaged in agricultural pursuits of all kinds. The selection of the President for this important duty as a member of his Cabinet was a most happy one. Hon. James Wilson, of the great agricultural State of Iowa, had been for many years one of its most successful farmers, and at the same time a careful student of agriculture in those lines which enable an intelligent combination of science and practical experience. A thorough student of soils and their various products and of all matters pertaining to farm life and production, he brought to the Department a rare combination of practical experience and high intelligence. Adding to these his long experience as a member of the State legislature, member of Congress, director of the State agricultural experiment station, and professor of agriculture at the Iowa State University, he was especially fitted to give to the farmers of the country the best results by far that they have ever obtained from the work of that great Department, established by Republican legislation in 1862, in their special interest—the only Department of the Government which devotes its attention to the interests of a single class of our population.

STUDYING THE DISEASES OF FARM ANIMALS.

During the past three years several important problems concerning the suppression and eradication of contagious and infectious diseases of domestic animals have been carefully studied. The diseases selected for investigation have been those which experience and recorded observations have proven to be most injurious from an economic point of view. Especial attention has been given to the cattle disease known as blackleg, a disease which, although it occurs more or less throughout the United States, was not recognized as a cause of very serious losses until about four years ago, when this investigation was begun. It has been proved that blackleg is the most destructive disease known among young cattle in this country, and the annual loss caused by it must be counted in millions of dollars. As it seemed to be on the increase in many of the principal cattle-raising States, and as it was known from investigations made in Europe that blackleg may be prevented through vaccination, it was decided to try the same remedy in this country. Experiments made in the field with the so-called double vaccine soon proved that the method could not be employed where the question was to treat thousands of half-wild cattle, and it was therefore decided to try the method known as single vaccination, which had not been previously used in this country. Experiments covering more than a year resulted in the preparation of a vaccine which, through a single inoculation, would render all treated animals practically immune against this disease.

During the past three years there have been prepared nearly 2,000,000 doses of blackleg vaccine, which have been distributed among the farmers and cattle owners in the infected districts, with the result that the mortality among the young cattle in the infected districts has been reduced from 10 to 15 per cent annually to one-half of 1 per cent. At the present rate of distribution more than 2,000,000 calves annually will be vaccinated, which means a saving to the country of five or six millions of dollars every year.

The animal parasites of sheep have been given much attention, and comparative tests have been made of the most promising methods of treatment. The gasoline treatment has given extremely satisfactory results, not only destroying the parasites of the stomach and intestines, but apparently also those in the lungs and air passages, including the larvæ of the œstrus (grubs) in the nasal chambers. If on further trial this remedy continues to yield the results which have apparently been obtained by its use up to this time, it will be of very great assistance to the sheep industry. In all sections of the country, but particularly in the South, stomach worms, intestinal worms, lung worms, and grubs in the head have made sheep raising a difficult and precarious industry. But this treatment, which is very cheap and easily administered, seems to solve the problem, and makes it possible to raise sheep safely and successfully where heretofore the animals have been destroyed or rendered valueless through the rapid invasion of these parasites.

A serious and somewhat fatal disease of sheep, known as facial dermatitis, has been partially studied. This disease, which causes much suffering by invading the mouth to such an extent that the affected animals can not eat, is found to yield readily to appropriate treatment, and any sheep owner will be able hereafter to conduct the treatment and eradicate it.

Another disease of sheep, called provisionally pseudo-tuberculosis, affects the lymphatic glands and appears to be quite common in some sections of the country. The bacillus causing the disease has been discovered, but the conditions under which the disease is communicated have not yet been determined.

The preparation of antitoxic serums for hog cholera and swine plague has been conducted on a large experimental and practical scale. During the past two years extensive field experiments have been conducted in several counties in the State of Iowa with altogether satisfactory results, from 70 to 80 per cent of the treated animals being saved. There have been two or three herds out of some 23,000 to 24,000 animals that were treated in Iowa that have not shown good results. The disease in these herds, however, was found to be of a very virulent character, more virulent than other outbreaks with which the Department had previously had to contend.

The method of serum treatment at present is not perfect, but it has given uniformly very much better results than any other method of treating these diseases in swine than has heretofore been suggested. The experiments are being continued with a view of perfecting the details.

Experimental exports of selected creamery butter were made to England for the purpose of attracting attention to the fine butter produced in this country and of gaining information beneficial to all persons desiring to sell in British markets. Shipments were made periodically during the greatest butter-producing months of the year 1897. In this experiment every feature of the shipment of butter was considered—the characters of butters in demand in English markets, the kinds of packages most desirable, the best methods of packing and transportation, as well as original cost, transportation charges, and selling prices. All considered, the operations of the first year were regarded as reasonably satisfactory in a business way as well as otherwise, while at the same time a number of points were developed showing where greater economy could be practiced in the experiments which were to follow. A full report of this work appeared in the Fifteenth Annual Report of the Bureau of Animal Industry. Experiments along the same line were conducted in 1898 and in 1899 in shipments to Asiatic countries with like satisfactory results, and a report will soon appear in the Sixteenth Annual Report of the Bureau.

In addition to the above, some interesting and satisfactory experiments in the shipment of eggs, with the same objects in view as in the butter shipments have been conducted. A report of this work will also appear in the Sixteenth Annual Report of the Bureau.

The inspection of live stock and their products (meat inspection) has been extended to 60 additional abattoirs and packing houses in 16 cities and is now carried on at 148 abattoirs in 45 cities.

Inspection has been established at one abattoir where horses are slaughtered and the flesh prepared for exportation. A regular inspection of horses exported to foreign countries has been established and this has also been extended to the examination of horses which are imported from foreign countries into the United States.

Measures have recently been adopted for preventing the interstate traffic of sheep affected with scab and efforts made for cooperation with State authorities for the eradication of this disease. Sheep which are infected with scab or have been exposed to the infection are prohibited from shipment from one State or Territory into another unless dipped in a preparation approved by this Department. In pursuance of this order 1,781,468 sheep have been dipped which were either infected with or exposed to the contagion of this disease. The effect of this order has been extremely satisfactory. The indications are that it will soon be possible to make stock cars, the principal stock yards, and other channels of interstate commerce safe and free from infection, in which case store sheep may be purchased in the market without danger of infection.

The antemortem inspections of animals numbered 42,310,107 in 1897, 51,335,398 in 1898, and 53,223,176 in 1899; and the post-mortem inspections numbered 26,580,689 in 1897, 31,116,833 in 1898, and 34,163,155 in 1899.

A remarkable advancement in the microscopic inspection of pork is shown. The total amount thus inspected in 1896 was 22,900,880; in 1897, 43,572,355; in 1898, 120,271,659; in 1899, 108,928,195. In 1896 it cost the Government 0.264 cent per pound to inspect this pork and in 1899 0.182 cent.

DEVELOPMENT OF NEW AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES.

One of the first enterprises taken up under Secretary Wilson was the investigation of the growing in this country of those agricultural products for which we have heretofore depended on foreign countries. The first one taken up was chicory cultivation. Our imports of this product in the fiscal year 1896 had a value of $225,229.31; our imports for the years 1898 and 1899 had a value of $14,677 and $13,470, respectively. As thus indicated, the chicory consumed in the United States is now produced almost entirely by our own farmers. This is a striking illustration of the application of the best American methods of farming to a foreign agricultural industry.

Several other crops of foreign countries are now under investigation, and reports on them will be published as the experiments are completed.

FIBER PLANTS.

The special appropriation for fiber investigations which had been made for some years having been discontinued on June 30, 1898, this line of work was incorporated with that of the Division of Botany, and, while no funds have been provided, experimentation has been begun in a small way, directed toward the establishment of a fine hemp industry in the United States, as well as toward the growing of Egyptian cotton. While the experiments on these crops have not yet been completed, the present indications give promise that the Department will ultimately be in a position to indorse them as worthy of commercial trial.

SEED TESTING.

The movement against the sale of impure or nongerminable seed by unscrupulous dealers resulted in the enactment of a provision in the agricultural appropriation act of 1898 authorizing the Department to test seed purchased in the open market and publish the results of the tests, when not up to the standard, together with the names of the seedsmen by whom the seeds were sold. Many tests have been made under this law, but the Department, after careful investigation of the commercial questions involved, has preferred up to the present time to notify seedsmen privately, in case the tests showed an inferior article, rather than to publish the information. It has come to be more and more evident, as this work has progressed, that one of the best means of preventing the sale of inferior seed is to demonstrate to farmers and other seed-purchasing classes that the only sure way to secure high-grade seed is to test it themselves or to get some reliable organization to test it. The wide extension and appreciation of information of this sort will, it is believed, be a good foundation for the ultimate adoption of vigorous measures for protecting the public against unscrupulous dealers.

The action of the Department in conducting an educational campaign against the sale of inferior seed has been heartily seconded by the agricultural experiment stations, and the officers of the seed-testing laboratory in the Department have been largely instrumental in devising a special apparatus and a system of rules for seed testing which have been officially adopted by the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations.

SEED AND PLANT INTRODUCTION.

The determination on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture to use a portion of the seed-distribution funds in introducing new and valuable products from other countries resulted in sending a special agent to Russia in 1897 to procure a stock of cereals, forage plants, and other things promising to be worthy of introduction into this country. At the same time, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Division of Forestry was endeavoring to make provision for securing from the arid regions of the world any trees giving promise of successful introduction into the arid parts of the United States. This work, together with the distribution of the importations made by the Russian agent, led to the establishment in the Division of Forestry of an agency for carrying out these two objects. In the succeeding year a special provision was inserted in the seed-purchase law authorizing the expenditure of $20,000 for the purpose of carrying on work of this character, and this was afterwards organized as a branch of the Division of Botany, devoted to seed and plant introduction. The organization consists, first, of a group of agricultural explorers, who are sent to investigate particular agricultural industries and secure a stock of new varieties or new kinds of plants suitable for introduction into American agriculture; and, secondly, of an office force which receives and distributes the importations and keeps records of the experimental work done on them. The writing of reports on the plants thus introduced is intrusted either to the explorers after they return, or to members of the permanent experimental force of the Department, or to outside investigators, as may seem most appropriate and most conducive to effective results.

A large number of improved products have been added to American agriculture, and while most of them are still in the experimental stage it is already assured that certain of them will add millions of dollars annually to American products. Notable among these are a highly productive and otherwise superior rice from Japan, a drought and cold resistant alfalfa from Turkestan, a drought-resistant grass from southern Russia, and several cereals particularly adapted to the conditions of our arid regions.

TROPICAL AGRICULTURE.

Recent political changes having brought the United States into new relations with tropical lands, the question of tropical agriculture has been brought conspicuously to the attention of the American people, and the large number of requests for information on the subject has shown how widespread this interest is. The Division of Botany has already published an account of vanilla culture as practiced in the Seychelles Islands, and has made an investigation of the plant products and agricultural crops of Porto Rico, devoting particular attention to the coffee problem, and is engaged also in investigating, so far as can be done without additional funds, the subject of India-rubber cultivation.

In addition to the lines of work undertaken by the Division of Botany since 1896, enumerated in the above statement, several other lines of investigation established earlier have been carried on, and other new ones of less importance have been taken up. In the brief period that has elapsed since these new investigations were initiated it has, of course, been possible to prepare reports on only a comparatively few, but the new investigations have proceeded in such a manner that reports are constantly coming to completion, and the next few years will indicate in the publications of the Division, even better than has already been indicated, the results of these new lines of work.

A STUDY OF THE SOILS OF THE VARIOUS SECTIONS AND THEIR ADAPTABILITY TO VARIOUS BRANCHES OF AGRICULTURE.

The most important work of the Division has been the survey and mapping of the soils in a number of the important agricultural districts of the United States. The most important work of this kind has been in the arid portions of the United States, where irrigation is practiced. About 450,000 acres have been surveyed and mapped in some of the principal irrigated districts of Montana, Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona, the maps so prepared having a very practical value, as they show the distribution of the different types of soil, which lands can be irrigated with safety, those which require special care in the application of water on account of alkali, and those which have too much alkali for cultivation without special efforts for reclamation. Practical methods for removing the salts have been and are being worked out. In the vicinity of Billings, Mont., thousands of dollars are being invested now as a result of our investigations, and it is likely that this investment will be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars to the immediate vicinity.

In the vicinity of Salt Lake, Utah, there is a large area of 80,000 acres of land at present lying idle on account of the accumulation of alkali, which it has been estimated could be reclaimed for a comparatively small sum, when it would be worth in the neighborhood of $5,000,000.

In the Pecos Valley, New Mexico, plans were devised for the reclamation of a large area in the immediate vicinity of Roswell which has lately been ruined by alkali and seepage water. It is estimated that at Roswell alone the damage to the land has amounted to at least $500,000. This land can all be reclaimed, and steps have been taken since our investigations to reclaim this land and to protect the rest of this area by methods pointed out by this Division.

At Carlsbad the water itself contains so high a percentage of alkali salts that special methods will have to be adopted for the use of this water to prevent further injury, as the lands have already been somewhat injured in the valley. The proper method of using this water has been pointed out by this Division. The results of this work will be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Pecos Valley.

Over 1,000,000 acres of land have been surveyed and mapped in the States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maryland, and Louisiana, besides reconnoissance over a much larger area.

In the Connecticut Valley the tobacco lands were classified and mapped, and the influence of the soil on the character of the tobacco was studied. In addition to this the cause of the fermentation of the cigar-leaf tobacco has been worked out, and an improved method of fermenting the Connecticut tobacco has been introduced, which it is believed will revolutionize the practice in that State. This method gives a much more uniform product, and thus improves the value of the leaf. It shortens the time required to ferment the tobacco about eight months, and so reduces the insurance and the loss of interest on the money invested. It is estimated that the value of this work will amount to at least $500,000 per annum to the farmers of the Connecticut Valley. The investigations are being carried still further in order to see whether the quality of the tobacco can be further improved. There is reason to believe it can be.

In addition to these practical results, improvements have been made in the methods of soil investigation, both in the laboratory and in the field. Some very important problems connected with the physical and chemical constitution of soils are being worked out, which give promise of being of great value in economic lines.

CORDIAL COOPERATION WITH STATE EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Under the present Administration the work of the Office of Experiment Stations has been more than doubled. This is due in part to the development of old enterprises and in part to the establishment of new ones.

The keynote of the present policy is cooperation. Through the Department and the stations thousands of practical experiments are now annually carried on in cooperation with farmers in all sections of the Union. Cordial relations are maintained with officers of the stations, and in many ways the Department helps to make their work more efficient. At the same time it has not hesitated to point out the weaknesses of the stations in confidential communications and in reports to Congress. In such criticism the aim has been not to tear down, but to build up. The Department and the stations are now working together more thoroughly and harmoniously than ever before, and the operations of these two great agencies touch every interest of American agriculture.

TO AID AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

Under the liberal policy of the past three years this office has largely increased its efforts to aid enterprises for the practical education of the farmer. It has joined actively in the movement to improve the methods of teaching agriculture in the colleges and to introduce agricultural subjects and nature study into the public schools. It has shown what is being done in these lines in other lands, and how we need to more thoroughly develop our system of agricultural education in order to keep pace with the strenuous efforts of our industrial rivals. It has collated and published information regarding the farmers' institutes, showing that now these institutes are held in 43 States, and are annually attended by half a million farmers. It has promoted the establishment of reading courses for farmers and published lists of useful books and bulletins, so that now any farmer in the United States can find out, by sending a postal card to the Department, what are the best books and public documents for him to read to keep abreast of the times in his business.

PUBLICATIONS FOR FARMERS.

In accordance with the general policy announced by Secretary Wilson at the outset of his administration, this office has given much attention to the preparation of farmers' bulletins. Twenty-three of these bulletins have been prepared in this office during the past three years, of which 14 have constituted the new series entitled "Experiment Station Work." In this series the office has summarized the practical results of investigations at the agricultural experiment stations and kindred institutions in this and other countries. In this way our farmers in every State are now being made acquainted with the practical results of experiments made by all our experiment stations, and thus the money given by Congress for the maintenance of experiment stations in the several States is made of benefit to the agriculture of the whole country. Besides these popular bulletins, the office has issued during this period three volumes (36 numbers) of the Experiment Station Record and 40 technical bulletins. During the past three years an average of somewhat over a million copies of documents of this office have been issued each year, of which about 800,000 copies have been in the farmers' bulletin series.

NUTRITION INVESTIGATIONS.

The investigations on the nutritive value of human foods, which are carried on in cooperation with agricultural colleges and experiment stations in different parts of the country, have been materially developed and strengthened. Twenty reports have been published during the past three years, and the results of these investigations are now largely taught in colleges and schools of different grades throughout the country. During this period the Atwater-Rosa respiration calorimeter has been completed, and experiments have been made with it regarding the utilization of food in the maintenance of the human body and the production of heat and energy therein, which have attracted very wide attention, as they have marked in some respects the highest point which science has yet reached in such investigations.

IRRIGATION INVESTIGATIONS.

The first appropriation for these investigations became available July 1, 1898. The work has been organized along two general lines: (1) The collation and publication of information regarding the laws and institutions of the irrigated regions in their relation to agriculture; and (2) the determination of the actual volume of water (duty of water) used by practical irrigators on different crops and soils. These investigations have already been carried on in fifteen States and Territories, largely in cooperation with the agricultural experiment stations and State irrigation engineers. While the headquarters of these investigations have been established in the arid region (at Cheyenne, Wyo.), and the investigations have largely been carried on there, the usefulness of irrigation in the East has also received attention, valuable experiments in this line being now in progress in New Jersey and South Carolina. So great has been the need of accurate information regarding the real conditions prevailing in the irrigated region and the actual requirements of crops of water that the demands for the extension of this work have been greater than the Department could meet, though the appropriation for this purpose was increased from $10,000 to $35,000 during the present year. In this enterprise the Department is working along lines which are new in this country, and it is believed that an organization for this work has been effected which is thoroughly efficient; so that shortly there will be developed a trained force of experts, whose services will be of incalculable benefit to a region which embraces over a third of the area of the United States.

PROGRESS IN SUGAR-BEET INVESTIGATIONS.

An attempt has been made to define with greater certainty the areas in the United States suited to the growth of high-grade sugar beets. To this end, seeds of the sugar beet have been distributed in the most promising localities and grown under identical conditions of culture, according to instructions prepared by the Division. The only variance, therefore, has been the soil and climate. The beets thus grown have been analyzed, either in the Division of Chemistry or at the agricultural experiment stations, and their saccharine qualities ascertained. As a result of the experiments which have been conducted in this manner, the areas in the original map constructed by the Division, showing the probable areas suited to beet culture, have been more definitely pointed out. This work is still in progress, and if continued for a few years longer will result in obtaining the data whereby the sugar-beet areas of the country can be mapped with a considerable degree of accuracy.

SECTION OF FOREIGN MARKETS.

Of the work accomplished by the section of foreign markets during the past three years one of the most important features was the study of trade possibilities growing out of the Spanish-American war. The islands that were brought into closer relationship to the United States by the war naturally became the subject of great commercial interest, and numerous inquiries were received regarding the trade opportunities that might be expected to result.

As the war progressed the requests for information relative to Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines increased to such an extent that the section was obliged to devote its attention almost entirely to the subject of these new dependencies. To meet the active demand for information along this line, several special reports were prepared for publication embodying such data as could be obtained regarding the commerce that was beginning to attract so much interest.

Just before the breaking out of the war, when the prevailing conditions seemed to point to probable hostilities, a report was published on the subject of our trade with Cuba, presenting detailed information as to the nature and value of the products imported and exported, and suggesting the commercial possibilities that could be looked for with a fuller development of Cuban resources.

As soon as Porto Rico began to be of special interest, owing to the shifting of the war campaign in its direction, an exhaustive report was prepared on the commerce of that island, setting forth in the fullest possible manner the character of the trade carried on with the several foreign countries, and especially with the United States.

Later a report of 160 pages was published regarding the trade of the Philippines, embracing practically all of the available statistics on the subject that could be collated from the official import and export returns of the various countries enjoying commercial intercourse with the islands.

The report on the trade of the Philippines was supplemented by a circular dealing with the agricultural resources of the islands and describing the most important plant products.

Owing to the scarcity of reliable data relative to Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, the preparation of the reports on these former Spanish possessions required a vast amount of research. It was profitable work, however, for the reports proved to be exceedingly useful as a means of answering the frequent requests that were received for information about the new dependencies.

EXPERIMENTS WITH GRASSES AND FORAGE PLANTS.

Experiments with grasses and forage plants have been vigorously prosecuted during the past three years. These experiments are necessary in order that ranchers and farmers may be informed of the kinds suitable for their respective districts. After these preliminary facts are determined the promising varieties can be recommended and adopted without further and useless expenditure of time and money. Many of the vast cattle ranges of the West have been practically destroyed by overstocking or mismanagement, and it has become a serious question as to what are the best grasses with which to reseed them. The division has spent much time and energy in this line of investigation, and, through its work in the field and experiments, is prepared to meet many of the more important forage problems of the various parts of the United States. During the past three years the agrostologist has distributed 5,565 packages of seeds of grasses and forage plants, embracing 251 varieties. These seeds were largely procured through foreign importations and by special collections in the field made by agents or employees of the division.

In the distribution made it has been necessary to consider the adaptation of varieties for special purposes, such as the renewing of worn-out prairies, holding of embankments subject to wash, binding of drifting sands, restoring fertility to the soil, soiling crops, cover crops, grasses for lands subject to overflow, for dry lands, for semiarid districts, for alkali soils, for lawns, for parks and pleasure grounds; in fact, for every purpose to which grasses and forage plants are applied and under every condition of soil and climate which our country presents. About 2,000 reports have been received from those to whom seeds have been sent. The information thus acquired is of great value and is presented in Bulletin No. 22 of the Division, now in press. One of the most important introductions is that of Turkestan alfalfa, seed of which was widely distributed in 1898. It is too early to make positive assertions respecting this variety, but the indications are that it is more hardy, and especially more resistant to drought, than the common variety. The reports from experimenters which have already been received will soon be published as a circular of the Division. The material has been compiled for this purpose.

Another very important importation is the smooth brome-grass from Russia. Large quantities of seed of this grass have been distributed, and the reports as to its hardiness and its adaptability to trying conditions of drought are most favorable. Other recent introductions of value are oasis alfalfa, broom-corn millets, Japanese barnyard millets, and saltbushes, the latter for alkali soils. The Division has spent much time in the study of forage plants for alkali soils, and made this the subject of a paper in the Yearbook for 1898, and more recently a farmer's bulletin under the title of "Saltbushes."

Aside from the cooperative work with experiment stations implied by the distribution of trial samples of seed, the Division has carried on cooperative work with the Iowa Experiment Station, through its botanist, the results of which were published in Bulletin No. 9.

RURAL FREE DELIVERY OF MAIL—THE OFFSPRING OF THE M'KINLEY ADMINISTRATION—SOME FACTS WHICH WILL INTEREST THE FARMERS AND ALL THOSE DESIRING THEIR WELFARE.

Rural free delivery of mail is the offspring of the McKinley Administration of the Post-Office Department. Its development from the insignificant beginning of 44 routes and an appropriation of $40,000 for the fiscal year which closed in 1897 to its present magnificent proportions, with the rural routes numbered by the thousands and an appropriation of $1,750,000 voted for its further extension during the present fiscal year, has all been brought about by the McKinley Government.

A movement to broaden the free delivery of the mails was started by Postmaster-General Wanamaker, under the Republican Administration of General Harrison. It took the form of village free delivery, and was more an extension of city delivery to smaller communities than a free delivery to farmers. But, limited as was its scope and successful though it was in increasing postal receipts and postal facilities, it encountered Democratic opposition; and when Mr. Cleveland came in, his Postmaster-General, fearing its effect in popularizing Republican principles and disseminating Republican literature, ordered it dropped.

It was a Republican Administration that conceived and executed the idea of brightening the home of the farmer, educating his children, increasing the value of his land, compelling the improvement of the roads, and bringing him news of the markets and of the weather, so as to secure him a better price for his crops by delivering his daily mail to him on his farm. Every Democratic House of Representatives since the idea was first broached of carrying the mails into the rural districts has declared against it. The Forty-third Congress, with a Democrat from North Carolina as chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, proclaimed the plan impossible and turned it down. Postmaster-General Bissell, Postmaster-General Wilson, and First Assistant Postmaster-General Jones, in the Cleveland Aministration, all took up the cry of extravagance and impossibility of execution. Consequently, little or nothing was done to give the farmers access to the mails till Cleveland went out of office.

When First Assistant Postmaster-General Perry S. Heath took up the rural service under the direction of the President and the Postmaster-General, in March, 1897, it was languishing to the point of extinguishment, and in a few months more would have been starved to death, like Mr. Wanamaker's village delivery. The official reports of the Post-Office Department record that it was almost with surprise that President McKinley and those to whom he intrusted the administration of postal affairs learned that there was such a thing as an experimental rural free-delivery mail service in progress.

They at once grasped its possibilities and advocated its immediate development, and a Republican Congress generously seconded their efforts. Under their vivifying touch it has grown until there is now not a State in the Union that has not felt the civilizing and educational influence of rural free mail delivery, and not one that does not desire a further expansion of the service. On the 1st of June, 1900, there were 1,200 rural services in actual operation and 2,000 applications for an extension of the system in process of establishment by special agents detailed for that purpose.

The appropriations for the rural free-delivery service have been increased from $50,000 in the fiscal year 1897-98 to $150,000 in 1898-99, then to $450,000 in 1899-1900, and lastly to $1,750,000 for the present fiscal year, 1900-1901.

Three years' experience has shown that in well-selected rural districts the mails can be distributed to the domiciles of the addressees or in boxes placed within reasonable distance of the farmer's home, at some crossroad or other convenient spot, at a cost per piece not exceeding that of the free delivery in many of the cities of the United States. In the vast majority of communities where it has been tested the rural free-delivery service has obtained so strong a hold that public sentiment would not permit its discontinuance. It has been a revolution, and revolutions do not move backward.

It costs very little more than the old colonial style of postal service which it supersedes, and it invariably brings a large and compensating increase in the amount of postal receipts turned into the Treasury. But even if it does cost more than the obsolete old plan, are not the farmers entitled to some of the benefits of the Government which they help so liberally to support by their taxation? The country can well afford to continue and extend a system which makes better citizens and happier homes and contributes largely to the mental, moral, and material advancement of the plain people.

Rural free delivery of mail has come to stay, and the Republican Administration, which brought it into being, will stay with it.

THE NEW CURRENCY LAW—IT IS ALREADY PROVING ITS VALUE BY AN INCREASE IN OUR CURRENCY AND IN THE NUMBER OF BANKS FOR CONVENIENCE OF THE MASSES.

Mr. Speaker, among the numerous acts of the two Congresses since President McKinley's election, the one next in importance after that which restored protection to our industries is the currency act. It has done for our currency what the Dingley Act did for our industries and commerce—given stability, confidence, activity, and prosperity. Already there have been nearly 300 applications for permission to establish national banks with capital of less than $50,000 each, showing that many communities where no national banks existed will now be given the advantages of this service, and the increase in national-bank currency already amounts to many millions of dollars.

This act is so important and its effect upon our currency and financial system so important that I desire to present a simple and concise statement of its provisions, made by that eminent authority, the present Secretary of the Treasury, on the day on which it went into operation.

SECRETARY GAGE'S STATEMENT.

The financial bill has for its first object what its title indicates—the fixing of the standard of value and the maintaining of a parity with that standard of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States. It reaffirms that the unit of value is the dollar, consisting of 25.8 grains of gold of nine-tenths fine, but from that point it goes on to make it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain all forms of money issued or coined at a parity with this standard. It puts into the hands of the Secretary ample power to do that. For that purpose the bill provides in the Treasury bureaus of issue and redemption, and transfers from the general fund of the Treasury's cash $150,000,000 in gold coin and bullion to the redemption fund, that gold to be used for the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes. That fund is henceforth absolutely cut out of and separated from the cash balance in the Treasury, and the available cash balance will hereafter show a reduction of $150,000,000 from the figures that have heretofore prevailed. This $150,000,000 redemption fund is to be used for no other purpose than the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes, and those notes so redeemed may be exchanged for gold in the general fund or with the public, so that the reserve fund is kept full with gold to the $150,000,000 limit.

POWER GIVEN THE SECRETARY.

The Secretary is given further power. If redemptions go on so that the gold in this reserve is reduced below $100,000,000, and he is unable to build it up to the $150,000,000 mark by exchange for gold in the general fund or otherwise, he is given power to sell bonds, and it is made his duty to replenish the gold to the $150,000,000 mark by such means.

ENDLESS CHAIN BROKEN.

The "endless chain" is broken by a provision which prohibits the use of notes so redeemed to meet deficiencies in the current revenues. The act provides for the ultimate retirement of all the Treasury notes issued in payment for silver bullion under the Sherman Act. As fast as that bullion is coined into silver dollars Treasury notes are to be retired and replaced with an equal amount of silver certificates.

The measure authorizes the issue of gold certificates in exchange for deposits of gold coin, the same as at present, but suspends that authority whenever and so long as the gold in the redemption fund is below $100,000,000, and gives to the Secretary the option to suspend the issue of such certificates whenever the silver certificates and United States notes in the general fund of the Treasury exceed $60,000,000.

SILVER CERTIFICATES.

The bill provides for a larger issue of silver certificates, by declaring that hereafter silver certificates shall be issued only in denominations of $10 and under, except as to 10 per cent of the total volume. Room is made for this larger use of silver certificates in the way of small bills by another provision which makes it necessary as fast as the present silver certificates of high denominations are broken up into small denominations, and replace them with notes of denominations of $10 and upward. Further room is made for the circulation of small silver certificates by a clause which permits national banks to have only one-third of their capital in denomination under $10.

COINING SILVER.

One clause of the bill which the public will greatly appreciate is the right that it gives to the Secretary to coin any of the 1890 bullion into subsidiary silver coins up to a limit of $100,000,000. There has for years been a scarcity of subsidiary silver during periods of active retail trade, but this provision will give the Treasury ample opportunity to supply all the subsidiary silver that is needed. Another provision that the public will greatly appreciate is the authority given to the Secretary to recoin worn and uncurrent subsidiary silver now in the Treasury or hereafter received. The bill makes a continuing appropriation for paying the difference between the face value of such coin and the amount the same will produce in the new coin.

REFUNDING THE DEBT.

A distinct feature of the bill is in reference to refunding the 3 per cent Spanish war loan, the 2 per cent bonds maturing in 1907, and the 5 per cent bonds maturing in 1904, a total of $839,000,000, into new 2 per cent bonds. These new 2 per cent bonds will not be offered for sale, but will only be issued in exchange for an equal amount, face value, of old bonds. The holders of old bonds will receive a premium in cash to compensate them in a measure for the sacrifice of interest which they make. That cash premium will be computed on a basis of the present worth of the old bonds at 2½ per cent, and will be on April 1, the date that the new 2 per cent bonds will bear $105.6851 for the threes, $111.6765 for the fours, and $110.0751 for each $100 of the fives. This exchange will save the Government, after deducting the premium paid, nearly $23,000,000, if all the holders of the old bonds exchange them for the new ones. National banks that take out circulation based on the new bonds are to be taxed only one-half of 1 per cent on the average amount of circulation outstanding, while those who have circulation based on a deposit of old bonds will be taxed, as at present, 1 per cent.

OTHER NATIONAL-BANK PROVISIONS.

There are some other changes in the national-banking act. The law permits national banks with $25,000 capital to be organized in places of 3,000 inhabitants or less, whereas heretofore the minimum capital has been $50,000. It also permits banks to issue circulation on all classes of bonds deposited up to the par value of the bonds, instead of 90 per cent of their face, as heretofore. This ought to make an immediate increase in national-bank circulation of something like $24,000,000, as the amount of bonds now deposited to secure circulation is about $242,000,000. If the price of the new twos is not forced so high in the market that there is no profit left to national banks in taking out circulation, we may also look for a material increase in national-bank circulation based on additional deposits of bonds.

National banks are permitted under the law to issue circulation up to an amount equal to their capital. The total capital of all national banks is $616,000,000. The total circulation outstanding is $253,000,000. There is, therefore, a possibility of an increase in circulation of $363,000,000, although the price of the new 2 per cent bonds, as already foreshadowed by market quotations in advance of their issue, promises to be so high that the profit to the banks in taking out circulation will not be enough to make the increase anything like such a possible total.

FREE COINAGE AT AN "APPROXIMATE RATIO"—ALL ATTEMPTS TO FIX A LEGAL RATIO AT ANY RATE DIFFERING FROM THE COMMERCIAL RATIO HAVE PROVED DISASTROUS WHEN COUPLED WITH FREE AND UNLIMITED COINAGE OF THE INFERIOR METAL—SOME INTERESTING VIEWS BY EMINENT DEMOCRATS.

Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that if the legal ratio of silver to gold should be so changed as to approximate the commercial ratio, the objection to the free and unlimited coinage of silver would disappear.

This is not true. It is a well-known historical fact that a very small variation of the commercial ratio from the coinage ratio is sufficient to expel one of the metals from the country and disturb all business calculations and relations.

When the first United States coinage act was passed, by careful calculation and inquiry it was assumed that the true commercial ratio was 15 to 1, and that was made the legal ratio. The mints were opened to the coinage of both metals on that basis. In a short time it became apparent that either an error had been made or the market ratio had changed. The two metals would not circulate together. Our gold coins were slightly more valuable as bullion than as money and were melted down or exported.

This situation was maintained until the act of 1834 changed the ratio to 16 to 1, and that act, which was designed to correct it, actually reversed it. It brought back gold, but drove out silver. The true commercial ratio was somewhere between 15 to 1 and 16 to 1. Fifteen to one drove out gold, and 16 to 1 drove out silver. After the act of 1834 went into effect silver dollars would not circulate in the United States unless they were light weight. From 1835 down to the opening of the year 1862, when paper became the currency of the United States, although the mints were opened to the unrestricted coinage of silver, the total number of silver dollars coined was $2,700,553.

JEFFERSON'S SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ON THE "APPROXIMATE RATIO."

In 1820, when the change in ratio was under consideration, Albert Gallatin, who had been Secretary of the Treasury under Jefferson, was asked his opinion concerning the failure of gold to circulate, and, in a letter dated December 31, wrote:

> The present rate was the result of information, clearly incorrect, respecting the then relative value of gold and silver in Europe, which was represented as being at the rate of less than 15 to 1, when it was in fact 15.5 to 15.6 to 1. It would be better at all events to discontinue altogether the coining of gold than to continue the present system.

JACKSON'S SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ON THE "APPROXIMATE RATIO" AND FREE COINAGE.

The Hon. S. D. Ingham, who was at that time Secretary of the Treasury under President Andrew Jackson, was asked his opinion, and advised the committee that any attempt to make the two metals circulate together under free coinage would be fruitless. He wrote:

> The fluctuations in the value of gold and silver can not be controlled; and even the attempt to conform the mint to the market values must produce a change in the latter. But if, after adjusting the ratio at the mint by raising the value of the gold coins, it should happen that silver should rise in the market above the mint value, the silver coins—exchange with foreign countries being unfavorable—would be withdrawn from circulation, and the only remedy within the power of the Government would be to reduce their weight, as it is now proposed in respect to the gold coins.

The committee of the House of Representatives having the matter under investigation reported—

> That there are inherent and incurable defects in the system which regulates the standard of value in both gold and silver; its instability as a measure of contracts and mutability as the practical currency of a particular nation are serious imperfections, whilst the impossibility of maintaining both metals in concurrent, simultaneous, or promiscuous circulation appears to be clearly ascertained; that the standard being fixed in one metal is the nearest approach to invariableness, and precludes the necessity of further legislative interference.

The report was dated February 22, 1831.

THOMAS H. BENTON ON THE "APPROXIMATE RATIO" AND FREE COINAGE.

The change in rates continued, however, to be agitated, and was advocated with great energy by Thomas H. Benton. His argument is summed up as follows in Benton's Thirty Years' View, volume 1, page 443:

> Mr. Benton said this was not the time to discuss the relative value of gold and silver, nor to urge the particular proportion which ought to be established between them. That would be proper work of a committee. At present it might be sufficient, and not irrelevant, to say that this question was one of commerce, that it was purely and simply a mercantile problem, as much so as is acquisition of any ordinary merchandise from foreign countries could be. Gold goes where it finds its value, and that value is what the laws of great nations give it. In Mexico and South America, the countries which produce gold and from which the United States must derive their chief supply, the value of gold is 16 to 1; in the West Indies, generally, it is the same. It is not to be supposed that gold will come from those countries to the United States if the importer is to lose one dollar in every sixteen that he brings, or that our own gold will remain with us when the exporter can give one dollar in every fifteen that he carries out. Such results would be contrary to the rules of trade, and therefore we must place the same value upon gold that other nations do if we wish to gain any part of their trade or to retain any part of our own.

Benton's statement that gold would not come to this country if the importer must lose one dollar in every sixteen, or stay if an exporter could make one dollar in sixteen, would have been equally true if he had said on one dollar in thirty-two. Indeed, the gain by exporting silver after the act of 1834 was passed was not more than one dollar in thirty-two. The ratio in the United States was 16 to 1 and in France 15½ to 1, and that difference was sufficient to take our silver to France.

FREE COINAGE OF A SILVER DOLLAR WORTH 1 CENT LESS THAN THE GOLD DOLLAR WOULD DRIVE OUT THE GOLD MONEY.

In these days of the cable and steamships and intimate banking relations, a rise in foreign exchange of less than 1 cent on the dollar will start gold to moving out of this country. Under such conditions a double standard of value is wholly impracticable. The free coinage of a silver dollar worth 1 cent less than our gold dollar would expel or lock up the entire gold stock of the country. The uncertainty of the situation would alone paralyze our industrial and commercial interests. A new ratio would have to be adopted every month, and all former issues recoined every time a new ratio was adopted.

OUR CURRENCY MUST CONFORM TO THAT OF THE COMMERCIAL WORLD.

Mr. Speaker, we can not afford experiments which would either drive the gold out of our country or put our currency on a basis differing from that of the countries with which we do business. Ninety-five per cent of the world's commerce is between the gold-standard countries of the world. Of our total exports, less than 5 per cent go to the silver-standard countries, and over 95 per cent goes to the gold-standard countries. The countries having the gold standard have the wealth, the sound currency, the sound finances, the healthful commerce, and the consuming and purchasing power. Their commerce in 1898 was over eighteen billion dollars; that of the silver-standard countries one billion.

I append a table showing the commerce, finance, currency, and general business condition of the gold and silver standard countries, respectively. It is prepared with great care by the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, and may be accepted as absolutely reliable.

Commerce, finances, and circulating medium of the gold-standard and silver-standard countries of the world, respectively, and the per capita of the revenue, expenditure, national debt, and currency in each.

[The figures on commerce are in most cases for 1898; those on circulation, 1899.]

Countries.	Population.	Total commerce.	Commerce with United States.		Money in circulation.
			Total.	Imports from United States.	Gold.	Silver.	Uncovered paper.	Total.
Algeria	4,429,000	$108,417,000	a $811,000	a $147,000
Austria-Hungary	41,359,000	b 833,606,000	14,413,000	6,359,000	$221,400,000	$147,300,000	$103,000,000	$471,700,000
Belgium	6,587,000	659,197,000	57,549,000	45,816,000	30,000,000	45,000,000	82,500,000	157,500,000
British Africa	35,160,000	263,282,000	16,800,000	15,406,600
British Australasia	4,794,000	556,587,000	27,670,000	24,140,000	132,100,000	7,000,000	22,500,000	161,600,000
British Honduras	34,000	2,826,000	771,000	367,000
British North America	5,031,000	305,714,000	124,164,000	88,285,000	20,000,000	5,000,000	40,500,000	65,500,000
British West Indies	1,501,000	53,345,000	25,247,000	10,382,000
Bulgaria	3,311,000	27,967,000	No data.	No data.	1,000,000	6,800,000		7,800,000
Costa Rica	295,000	10,088,000	4,832,000	1,283,000
Cuba	1,632,000	135,120,000	54,481,000	24,861,000	2,000,000	1,500,000		3,500,000
Denmark	2,185,000	201,398,000	19,125,000	18,474,000	10,000,000	5,400,000	5,900,000	28,300,000
Dutch East Indies	34,000,000	146,539,000	33,961,000	1,053,000
Egypt	9,734,000	113,318,000	9,109,000	525,000	30,000,000	6,400,000		36,400,000
France	38,518,000	b 1,564,518,000	140,512,000	70,107,000	810,600,000	420,100,000	161,100,000	1,391,800,000
Germany	52,280,000	b 2,186,918,000	250,985,000	161,406,000	672,800,000	208,200,000	156,700,000	1,037,700,000
Great Britain	40,189,000	b 3,962,876,000	652,280,000	509,958,000	402,300,000	111,900,000	111,000,000	685,800,000
Hawaii	109,000	27,577,000	33,494,000	11,806,000	4,000,000	1,000,000		5,000,000
India and Ceylon	290,514,000	495,717,000	42,896,000	4,510,000	(o)	o 568,400,000	o 47,400,000	o 615,800,000
Japan	42,708,000	186,114,000	54,808,000	20,605,000	54,000,000	25,300,000		79,300,000
Netherlands	5,004,000	1,292,128,000	98,879,000	83,601,000	30,200,000	56,400,000	47,200,000	133,000,000
Peru	2,622,000	23,249,000	3,493,000	1,695,000
Roumania	5,800,000	113,000,000	145,000	145,000	13,100,000	7,100,000	20,300,000	40,400,000
Russia	108,721,000	469,093,000	14,463,000	9,172,000	740,400,000	81,900,000		822,300,000
Servia	2,315,000	19,734,000			1,000,000	1,800,000	3,600,000	6,400,000
South African Republic	1,096,000	158,234,000	No data.	No data.	29,200,000	1,200,000		30,400,000
Sweden and Norway	7,011,000	305,509,000	14,904,000	11,817,000	21,600,000	8,800,000	34,600,000	65,000,000
Switzerland	3,063,000	302,418,000	16,505,000	216,000	24,000,000	10,700,000	17,400,000	52,100,000

Commerce, finances, and circulating medium of the gold-standard and silver-standard countries of the world, etc.—Continued.

Countries.	Population.	Total commerce.	Commerce with United States.		Money in circulation.
			Total.	Imports from United States.	Gold.	Silver.	Uncovered paper.	Total.
Uruguay	828,000	$56,492,000	$3,215,000	$1,702,000
United States	75,000,000	b 2,074,345,000			$945,800,000	$639,000,000	$329,700,000	$1,914,500,000
On a paper basis.
Argentina	3,955,000	192,477,000	17,322,000	11,335,000	k 30,600,000	k 2,700,000	k 178,400,000	211,700,000
Brazil	14,334,000	235,149,000	11,035,000	11,454,000			n 130,000,000	130,000,000
Chile	3,049,000	47,445,000	7,474,000	2,240,000
Greece	2,434,000	38,051,000	1,220,000	227,000	500,000	1,500,000	29,100,000	31,100,000
Haiti	960,000	18,232,000	3,220,000	2,358,000	1,200,000	3,500,000	3,700,000	8,400,000
Italy	31,668,000	444,709,000	52,222,000	25,763,000	98,000,000	43,900,000	174,900,000	316,800,000
Portugal	5,050,000	76,856,000	8,888,000	5,113,000	5,200,000	9,600,000	75,200,000	90,000,000
Spain	17,566,000	384,480,000	16,871,000	11,529,000	53,400,000	37,800,000	187,500,000	278,700,000
Turkey	22,534,000	165,685,000	7,257,000	563,000	50,000,000	40,000,000		90,000,000
Venezuela	2,444,000	34,751,000	8,311,000	2,641,000
Total gold-standard countries	929,934,000	18,295,410,000	1,909,339,000	1,197, 67,000	4,501,300,000	2,505,200,000	1,962,200,000	8,969,200,000
China	402,680,000	285,738,000	39,421,000	15,225,000		750,000,000		750,000,000
Guatemala	1,535,000	16,971,000	3,041,000	843,000
Honduras	400,000	5,908,000	1,919,000	1,039,000
Hongkong	222,000	90,000,000	10,128,000	7,788,000	(r)	(r)	(r)	(r)
Korea	10,529,000	19,011,000	129,000	128,000
Mexico	12,620,000	102,673,000	53,935,000	29,310,000	8,600,000	106,000,000	4,000,000	118,600,000
Nicaragua	420,000	5,547,000	3,031,000	1,486,000
Persia	9,000,000	43,798,000	No data.	No data.
Salvador	804,000	10,833,000	1,118,000	635,000
Straits Settlements	512,000	413,947,000	No data.	No data.		r 242,000,000	(r)	r 242,000,000
Siam	5,000,000	27,681,000	No data.	No data.	20,000,000	193,400,000		213,400,000
On a paper basis.
Bolivia	2,020,000	22,557,000	27,000	27,000
Colombia	4,000,000	26,617,000	8,448,000	2,986,000		1,473,000	7,527,000	9,000,000
Ecuador	1,272,000	11,008,000	2,278,000	1,180,000
Paraguay	600,000	7,883,000	11,000	11,000			1,165,000	1,165,000
Total silver-standard countries	451,614,000	1,029,302,000	124,136,000	60,658,000	28,600,000	1,292,873,000	12,692,000	1,334,165,000

Countries.	Circulation per capita.				Debt.		Revenue and expenditure.				Railway mileage.
							Revenue.		Expenditure.		Miles.	Mileage per 100,000 inhabitants.
	Gold.	Silver.	Paper.	Total.	Total.	Per capita.	Total.	Per capita.	Total.	Per capita.
Algeria							$10,451,000	$2.35	$14,160,000	$3.19	2,146	48.5
Austria-Hungary	$5.35	$3.56	$2.49	11.40	c $2,821,706,000	$68.22	f 633,692,000	15.32	644,688,000	15.59	21,805	52.7
Belgium	4.45	6.83	12.52	23.90	508,853,000	76.95	97,255,000	14.76	99,549,000	15.11	3,783	57.4
British Africa					c 185,189,000	37.55	c 51,703,000	c 10.48	c 57,594,000	c 11.68	c 3,010	c 61.0
British Australasia	27.61	1.46	4.70	33.77	1,110,465,000	231.64	154,163,000	32.16	151,298,000	31.56	14,773	308.2
British Honduras					199,000	4.97	275,000	8.09	302,000	8.88
British North America	3.97	.99	8.05	13.01	72,017,000	14.49	42,396,000	8.41	41,026,000	8.15	17,508	348.0
British West Indies					20,459,000	13.63	9,189,000	6.12	9,267,000	6.17	s 330	s 22.0
Bulgaria	.80	2.05		2.35	50,612,000	15.28	16,370,000	4.94	16,356,000	4.94	835	25.2
Costa Rica					11,125,000	37.71	3,753,000	13.03	3,599,000	12.20	131	44.4
Cuba	1.23	.08		2.15	341,726,000	209.39	10,430,000	6.39	8,950,000	5.42	1,135	69.5
Denmark	7.73	2.47	2.70	12.90	56,287,099	25.76	h 19,080,000	8.73	h 20,437,000	9.35	1,618	74.1
Dutch East Indies							53,569,000	1.57	58,311,000	1.78	1,200	3.5
Egypt	3.08	.66		3.74	481,359,000	49.45	56,424,000	5.80	50,686,000	5.21	1,238	12.7
France	21.05	10.91	4.18	36.14	5,829,742,000	151.12	686,776,000	17.83	685,888,000	17.81	25,914	67.3
Germany	12.87	3.96	3.00	19.85	m 2,573,585,000	60.00	g 363,233,000	6.95	g 369,307,000	7.06	30,777	58.9
Great Britain	11.50	2.78	2.77	17.05	3,060,427,000	76.89	527,218,000	13.12	526,313,000	13.09	21,659	53.9
Hawaii	36.70	9.17		45.87	4,489,000	41.18	2,508,000	23.56	2,186,000	20.06	100	91.7
India and Ceylon	(o)	o 1.98	o .17	o 2.15	1,200,448,000	4.13	476,798,000	1.64	502,275,000	1.73	22,788	7.8
Japan	1.26	.59		1.85	201,110,000	4.71	106,998,000	2.55	106,797,000	2.50	3,481	8.2
Netherlands	6.04	11.27	9.43	26.74	470,528,000	94.03	58,447,000	11.68	61,036,000	12.19	1,696	33.9
Peru					23,796,000	9.08	i 4,825,000	1.84	i 4,451,000	1.70	911	34.7
Roumania	2.26	1.22	3.48	6.96	249,305,000	42.98	43,242,000	7.45	40,108,000	6.92	1,895	32.7
Russia	6.81	.75		7.56	3,837,156,000	35.29	665,619,000	6.12	717,346,000	6.60	26,431	24.3
Servia	.43	.78	1.50	2.76	72,075,000	31.13	12,410,000	5.36	12,410,000	5.36	354	15.3
South African Republic	26.64	1.09		27.73	13,278,000	12.12	19,386,000	17.69	19,327,000	17.63	774	70.6
Sweden and Norway	3.08	1.25	4.93	9.26	125,668,000	17.92	53,665,000	7.65	54,467,000	7.77	7,594	108.3
Switzerland	7.78	3.47	5.64	16.89	16,428,000	5.33	18,547,000	6.01	18,319,000	5.94	2,304	74.7
Uruguay					128,850,000	155.62	15,750,000	19.02	15,750,000	19.02	1,080	130.4
United States	12.60	5.52	4.40	25.52	d 2,104,875,000	28.06	610,982,000	8.15	700,094,000	9.83	186,398	248.5
On a paper basis.
Argentina	7.74	.68	45.11	53.52	445,000,000	112.52	k 58,594,000	14.80	k 58,554,000	14.80	9,885	252.2
Brazil			9.07	9.07	566,400,000	39.51	48,123,000	3.36	60,854,000	4.25	8,718	60.8
Chile					121,670,000	39.00	32,238,000	10.59	32,020,000	10.50	2,662	87.3
Greece	.21	.62	11.95	12.78	157,563,000	13.80	10,409,000	4.27	11,354,000	4.66	591	24.3
Haiti	1.25	3.65	3.85	8.75	23,756,000	24.74	l 7,406,000	7.71	l 8,043,000	8.38
Italy	3.09	1.39	5.52	10.00	2,388,662,000	75.43	324,830,000	10.26	324,967,000	10.26	9,765	30.8
Portugal	1.03	1.90	14.89	.82	622,895,000	123.34	57,254,000	11.34	61,654,000	12.21	1,467	29.0
Spain	3.04	2.15	10.67	15.86	1,742,857,000	99.23	164,007,000	9.34	176,594,000	10.06	8,108	46.2
Turkey	2.22	1.78		4.00	729,011,000	32.22	82,901,000	3.68	86,704,000	3.85	2,953	13.1
Venezuela					37,658,000	15.41	6,452,000	2.64	8,790,000	3.60	529	21.6
Total gold-standard countries	4.84	2.69	2.11	9.64	32,433,003,000	34.89	5,617,014,000	6.04	5,851,811,000	6.29	448,604	48.2
China		1.81		1.81	p 200,000,000	.49	q 121,663,000	.30	q 72,998,000	.18	416	.1
Guatemala					16,734,000	10.90	4,032,000	2.63	4,126,000	2.69	280	18.2
Honduras					32,430,000	81.08	1,132,000	2.83	1,138,000	2.85	60	15.0
Hongkong	(r)	(r)	(r)		1,709,000	5.31	2,958,000	9.19	2,881,000	8.95
Korea							3,224,000	.30	3,223,000	.30
Mexico	.68	8.40	.32	9.40	83,500,000	6.62	28,205,000	2.23	25,092,000	1.99	8,040	63.7
Nicaragua					3,000,000	7.14	2,222,000	5.29	1,826,000	4.35	91	21.7
Persia					11,588,000	1.29	c 7,500,000	.83	c 3,908,000	.43
Salvador					37,605,000	46.77	1,909,000	2.37	2,181,000	2.71	72	9.0
Straits Settlements	(r)	r 53.82	(r)	r 53.82	(r)	(r)	r 2,365,000	r 4.62	r 2,130,000	r 4.18
Siam	4.00	38.66		42.66			pc 8,731,000	1.75	pc 8,731,000	1.75	126	2.5

Commerce, finances, and circulating medium of the gold-standard and silver-standard countries of the world, etc.—Continued.

Countries.	Circulation per capita.				Debt.		Revenue and expenditure.				Railway mileage.
							Revenue.		Expenditure.
	Gold.	Silver.	Paper.	Total.	Total.	Per capita.	Total.	Per capita.	Total.	Per capita.	Miles.	Mileage per 100,000 inhabitants.
On a paper basis.
Bolivia					$4,153,000	$2.06	p $2,203,000	$1.09	p $2,423,000	$1.20	500	24.8
Columbia		$0.37	$1.88	$2.25	18,361,000	4.59	4,568,000	1.14	5,052,000	1.26	389	9.7
Ecuador					12,500,000	9.83	3,205,000	2.52	2,697,000	2.12	58	4.6
Paraguay			1.94	1.94	42,941,000	7.01	2,727,000	4.55	3,956,000	6.59	156	26.0
Total silver standard countries	$1.62	3.05	.74	3.11	463,621,000	1.03	196,644,000	.44	142,371,000	.32	10,188	2.3

Commerce of the gold-standard countries		$18,295,410,000
Commerce of the silver-standard countries		$1,029,302,000
Commerce of United States with per cent, silver-standard countries	per cent..	5.33
Commerce of United States with gold-standard countries		$1,909,339,000
Commerce of United States with silver-standard countries		$124,136,000
Per cent of commerce with silver-standard countries	per cent..	6.15
Exports of United States to gold-standard countries		$1,197,037,000
Exports of United States to silver-standard countries		$60,058,000
Per cent of exports to silver-standard countries	per cent..	4.83

NOTE.—The above includes 97 per cent of the world's commerce at the latest available date.

a 1897.
b 1899.
c Ascension, Basuto Land, Cape Colony, Mauritius, Natal, St. Helena, Gambia, Gold Coast, Sierra Leone (population, 4,932,000).
d December 31, 1899, net debt (less cash in the Treasury) on that date, $1,056,669,000, which would make the per capita debt, $14.09.
e Including the separate debts of Austria and Hungary.
f Including the separate revenue and expenditure of Austria and Hungary.
g Imperial budget only (German official figures), whole Government. Revenue of the German States and Empire, $1,000,257,000; without State railways, $629,236,000.
h Danish official figures.
i For 1896, ended May 31.
k Argentina official figures.
l 1895.
m For 1899-1900 (see British Consular Report No. 2400, April, 1900).
n Estimated, 712,355,000 milreis, at 9d.
o Exclusive of Ceylon (see Straits Settlements). p Estimated.
q Report of the Director of the Mint, 188,979,000 taels, according to British consular report.
r Including Aden, Perim, Ceylon, Hongkong, Labuan, with a total population of 4,500,000.
s Including British Guiana.

O. P. AUSTIN, Chief of Bureau.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, June 1, 1900.

COST OF COLONIZATION—ARE COLONIES A BURDEN TO THE COUNTRY ESTABLISHING THEM—SOME PRACTICAL FACTS FROM THE PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE OF THE MOST SUCCESSFUL COLONIZING COUNTRY OF THE WORLD.

Mr. Speaker, there have been expressions of doubt as to the direct advantages or disadvantages of colonial control—whether the countries establishing colonies find the cost greater than the net results. This is a secondary consideration, especially under the peculiar circumstances in which Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines came to us. Yet it is proper that this should be considered, especially as there have been statements made to the effect that England's colonies are a heavy burden to her.

COST OF COLONIAL CONTROL.

The fact that large sums of money are expended in the physical and educational development of the countries and people controlled by the colonial systems of the British Government suggests the important question of whether or not colonies are a burden financially. It has been already shown that they are advantageous to the country controlling them in the increased market which they make for exports of that country, and the opportunity given of supplying its home market with the products of its own people. It is interesting, and indeed important, to know whether in the development of the colonies, the construction of highways, railways, telegraphs, harbors, and the establishment of postal systems, schools, and educational facilities generally, the expenses are borne by the home government. This subject is discussed in detail in a letter recently written by Mr. S. G. Hobson, editor of The Hardwareman and Hardware Exporter, of London, in response to specific inquiries regarding the experiences of the British Government along these lines. It is as follows:

In reply to your question concerning the relations of the mother country to the colonies you ask:

"1. Whether the home Government expended any considerable sums of money in the earlier history of the colonies.

"2. Whether such expenditures, if made, have been refunded by the colonies.

"3. Whether the large sums which have been expended in permanent improvements, such as railways, telegraph lines, public highways, harbors, etc., have been supplied in part by the home Government, and if so, in about what proportion?

"4. Whether the troops in the colonies are supported by the home Government or by the revenues of the colonies themselves; and

"5. Whether the colonial system is generally looked upon by the people of the home Government as advantageous or otherwise."

In reply to the first question: No; the Government has not spent any considerable sum of money in the earlier history of the colonies, so that secondly there has been no return of initial outlay by the colonies. It is necessary here to carefully discriminate between colonial expenditure, pure and simple, and home Government expenditure for defense. Wherever public works have been of strategic value, either from a military or naval point of view, the home Government always expends a fair share. For example, the harbor of St. Lucie, in the West Indies, was recently put into condition at a cost of 75,000 pounds sterling, to which the Government contributed 25,000 pounds sterling; and in like manner many of the harbors throughout our colonies, and particularly in South Australian waters, have been partially subsidized by the home Government.

But so far as colonization is concerned it has been a natural process, the home Government only taking cognizance of the colony when it has grown sufficiently to warrant self-government.

Then, again, there are occasionally grants in aid in times of colonial distress. For example, the West Indian sugar plantations having proved unremunerative, a grant in aid is made to them, and it may or may not be repaid, but sometimes the colonies have been unable to meet their liability and the Government wipes out the debt.

3. With regard to this question no governmental money is expended on railways, telegraph lines, or public highways, excepting so far as they are covered in my answer to No. 1. But the Government will often meet the case by giving a guarantee. But if the Government guarantee be given in colonial projects of this description capital is always forthcoming, and there is hardly any case on record where the Government has been called upon to make good its guarantee. The only case in my memory is that of the Turkish bonds, but as a general rule it is perfectly accurate to assume that the Government guarantee always meets the financial difficulty. For example, there is an agitation in South Africa for a railway from Cape Colony to Cairo. Mr. Rhodes has been interviewing the home Government, asking, not for capital, but for a guarantee. The Government will only guarantee the railway so far as it considers it of commercial value, and has given its guarantee for one section of this project. Mr. Rhodes will now have no difficulty in obtaining money from the nation, for it is covered by the guarantee.

The troops in the colonies are paid directly by the Home Government, but the leading colonies pay the Government a proportion. The amount, however, is proportionately very small and by no means regular; some colonies pay and some do not.

Cape Colony has recently offered the Home Government the price of a first-class battle ship. But the payments on the part of the colonies are entirely voluntary, the general principle being no taxation without representation. There is a movement here calling for imperial federation, and doubtless in the future this question will be put upon a proper foundation.

In reply to question 5, the opinion here fluctuates as to the value or otherwise of colonial expansion. Roughly speaking, the average Britisher is ready to accept responsibility, but he is not particularly enthusiastic about it.

The fact is, we are a colonizing nation, and among the well-to-do classes it is quite the usual thing for the younger sons to try the colonies for a few years. The law of primogeniture is partly responsible for this, while our industrial system is continually throwing out large bodies of men who at once emigrate.

Of course the emancipation of the slaves was a capital investment of £33,000,000, which the colonies have never repaid and never will.

IS COLONIZATION BENEFICIAL TO THE PEOPLE OF THE COLONIZED TERRITORY?

In matters of this kind prospective effects can be only determined by a study of the effect of similar conditions with similar peoples. Great Britain, an English-speaking nation, has in former years assumed toward certain people in tropical climates relations somewhat similar to those now proposed temporarily or otherwise by the United States with reference to the islands under consideration. A study of conditions in India, Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, and the British West Indies will suggest whether or not the conditions of the people in the matter of intelligence, earnings, accumulations, conveniences of civilized life, and the like, have been improved under the management and direction which the English Government and the representatives it has sent to assist in the government of these countries have undertaken. Let us take India as the largest and most important of the communities to be considered. At the head of the national system of education in India there are now five universities—at Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Alahbad, and the Punjab—which, while merely examining bodies, have numerous affiliated colleges in which a prescribed education is given.

Normal schools have also been established in every province for training teachers, and a staff of inspecting officers visit all schools. Medical colleges furnish a limited number of graduates and a larger number of certified practitioners, who do duty at hospitals and dispensaries. At Calcutta alone 1,695 students matriculated in 1892 and 2,899 in 1897, and at the five universities the number of students matriculated in 1897 was over 7,000. The number of colleges in India in 1897 was 160, with 18,783 scholars, while the schools for general education numbered, according to the Statesman's Year-Book for 1899, 109,287, with an attendance of 3,790,000 scholars. The total number of institutions of all kinds in India in 1897 was 152,025, with a total attendance of 4,356,870. Since the appointment of a commission in 1883 to investigate the system of education in India, public instruction has been placed on a broader and more popular basis and private enterprises for teaching encouraged, with a general advancement in education and intelligence made plainly perceptible, so that in 1896 there were 598 newspapers published regularly in the languages of the people of India. The total expenditure for public instruction in the fiscal year 1896–97 was 35,244,900 rupees, against 671,000 rupees in 1865 and 894,000 in 1868. This enormous expenditure for education, it must be understood, is not contributed by the British Government, but is simply collected through proper organization and taxation, and the money applied for educational purposes.

Of the 35,000,000 rupees expended on public instruction in India in 1896–'97, the Statesman's Year-Book for 1899 says that 5,747,150 came from local rates and cesses, 1,496,720 from municipal funds, 7,867,110 from subscriptions, endowments, etc., 10,610,930 from fees, and 9,522,990 from provincial revenues.

In the matter of railways, roads, telegraphs, irrigation, and other physical advancements of this character, the advance has been equally rapid. In 1882 the number of miles of railway opened in India was 10,145; in 1892 it was 17,571, and in 1898 it was 21,157. The Statesman's Year-Book gives the total length of public roads maintained by the Indian government in 1886–'87 at 140,000 miles. In 1878 the number of letters, newspapers, etc., carried in the mails of India was 128,826,080; in 1887, 259,570,861, and in 1897, 449,726,298, having thus considerably more than trebled in twenty years. In 1878 the number of miles of telegraph wire in India was 42,011; in 1887 it was 86,930, and in 1897 it was 148,186, with 1,573 telegraph offices, and 50,774,584 paid messages against 1,357,014 paid messages in 1878. In 1883 the number of depositors in the savings banks of India was 203,901; in 1896, 742,215, or nearly four times as many in 1896 as in 1883, while the money standing to their credit at the end of the year 1898 was 40,059,300 rupees against 108,867,920 rupees in 1896. The Statesman's Year-Book in 1899 says that the number of accounts by individual depositors in the various savings banks of India in the year 1896–'97 was 663,157, with a balance to the credit of the depositors at the end of the year amounting to 89,798,620 rupees, while the number of European or Eurasian depositors was but 79,078 with a balance at the end of the year of 19,059,290 rupees.

In other communities located in tropical climates under British management developments have been equally rapid and advantageous to the population. In Ceylon the development has been remarkable. In the Straits Settlements, in the Bahamas, in Jamaica, in Barbados, and in the Bermudas the deposits in savings institutions have shown the same rapid increase, while in education, railways, highways, and other matters of this character the development has been equally rapid and satisfactory.

All of the above discussion of conditions and developments has been confined to communities located in tropical countries controlled and directed by an English-speaking nation situated in the temperate zone, the purpose being to find as nearly as practicable conditions parallel with those under consideration with reference to the islands which the events of the year have brought into closer relationship with the people of the United States. The statements given are in all cases taken from standard publications wherever practicable, from the official publications of the British Government, and in other cases from the Statesman's Year-Book, published in London and a generally accepted authority.

COLONIES AS A MARKET FOR THE PRODUCTS AND MANUFACTURES OF THE GOVERNING COUNTRY—ENGLAND'S COLONIES INCREASE HER MARKET THREE HUNDRED MILLIONS A YEAR IN EXCESS OF WHAT SHE WOULD SELL TO THE SAME TERRITORY WITHOUT THE COLONIAL RELATIONSHIP.

The non-British world buys 15 per cent of its total foreign merchandise from the United Kingdom; the British colonial world buys 43 per cent of its foreign merchandise from the United Kingdom. The total imports of the British colonies amount to $1,075,000,000 annually, and Great Britain, by supplying 43 per cent of this instead of 15 per cent, which she averages in the commerce of other countries, makes an additional market for $300,000,000 annually of her products. Her total exports to foreign countries (omitting the colonies) are $1,030,000,000, or 15 per cent of their total imports, and if to this were added a like percentage of the imports of the colonies her total sales would be $1,190,000,000, instead of the grand total of $1,480,000,000 which she enjoyed in 1896, the year to which these figures relate. It is thus apparent that her sales are enlarged through her colonial system in the sum of about $300,000,000 in round figures per annum, thus increasing by 25 per cent her total exports, and creating by her colonial system a market for $300,000,000 worth of her products and manufactures.

These are some of the facts shown in a recent publication of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics on the Colonies, Protectorates, and Dependencies of the World. French colonies buy quite as largely from the home country as do those of Great Britain, and even the Netherlands colonies purchase largely from the mother country, although located on the opposite side of the earth.

Not only has Great Britain added to her market by bringing the 350,000,000 people of her colonies into the colonial relationship, but there has evidently been, through the material development which has followed this relationship, a great increase in the purchasing power. The construction of highways, harbors, railways, and telegraphs has evidently quickened the general business conditions and, with the increased activity and prosperity, enlarged the consuming power.

That the construction of roads, harbors, railways, and telegraphs and the establishment of postal and banking facilities must increase the activity, productiveness, and consequent consuming power goes without saying. The railways now in the British colonies alone are more than 55,000 miles in length, the telegraph lines nearly 150,000 miles, and the highways far in excess of that. A large proportion of the railway lines is under the control and in many cases operated by the Government, and it is an interesting fact that the lines operated by the Government expend a smaller proportion of their total receipts in running expenses than those operated by private corporations. In nearly all the colonies there are savings banks in conjunction with the post-offices, and the deposits in the savings banks of the colonies amount to more than $300,000,000.

In the import trade of Great Britain the colonies also prove advantageous from the British standpoint. Over one-fifth of the more than two billion dollars which Great Britain sends outside of her immediate limits in purchase of supplies is spent among the people of her colonies, and thus largely contributes to the prosperity of either British colonists or British capital. That the industries of the colonies are to a considerable extent controlled by British capital goes without saying, and that the expenditure of nearly $500,000,000 of British money in British colonies each year for the products of those colonies must benefit the capital thus employed and so reflect to the business advantage of the home country whence that capital is drawn is equally apparent. The total imports into Great Britain from the colonies in 1896 were over £93,000,000, and in 1891 were over £99,000,000, or in round terms, $500,000,000, forming more than one-fifth of the total imports into the United Kingdom.

The following table shows the exports and imports of the United Kingdom to and from its colonies in 1897:

	Exports.	Imports.
British India	£28,000,385	£24,813,000
Australasia	23,895,970	29,362,129
North American colonies	6,464,880	19,538,908
Cape of Good Hope	10,766,168	4,195,741
Straits Settlements	2,538,916	3,643,224
Hongkong	2,079,951	600,314
Natal	3,621,373	752,254
Ceylon	1,070,932	4,688,278
West India Islands	2,709,497	1,970,685
Channel Islands	1,303,259	1,327,111
Lagos	521,204	1,100,943
Malta	856,094	74,903
Gibraltar	677,781	59,365
Niger Protectorate	608,193	351,617
Gold Coast	482,378	460,131
Sierra Leone	347,728	240,721
Mauritius	593,487	94,543
Aden	173,357	173,319
British Honduras	92,830	227,808
Other British possessions	630,386	331,745
Total to and from colonies	86,934,369	94,018,933

It will be seen by the above figures that the exports from England to her colonies amounts to $430,000,000 annually, or one-third as much as the total exports of the United States, the value of the pound sterling in which the exports are stated being $4.86.

A NEW MARKET OPENED—SALES TO CUBA, PORTO RICO, HAWAII, AND THE PHILIPPINES—A RAPID GROWTH IN OUR EXPORTS TO THOSE ISLANDS—A LIST OF THE ARTICLES FOR WHICH A NEW MARKET IS FOUND.

The constant demand upon the Treasury Bureau of Statistics for information as to the recent exportations to Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands has caused the preparation of a list of the principal exports to those islands during ten months ending April, 1900. It is as follows:

Articles exported from United States.	Cuba.	Porto Rico.	Hawaii.	Philippines.
Total	$22,006,973	$3,052,971	$11,601,720	$2,132,944
Provisions, total	4,422,686	588,571	389,286	34,403
Iron and steel, total	3,079,276	412,928	4,320,208	317,085
Animals, total	2,621,844	1,175	211,520	441,550
Breadstuffs, total	2,410,144	672,344	917,781	142,071
Cattle	1,820,382		3,295
Lard	1,743,360	211,265	39,827	5,275
Wood and manufactures	1,605,680	304,198	1,131,370	63,144
Boards, deals, and planks	850,638	130,393	664,165	50,862
Flour	746,102	588,721	327,564	8,880
Bacon	672,230	54,707	20,941	340
Malt liquors	585,339	17,018	104,721	309,074
Hams	575,281	80,636	47,219	5,577
Coal	558,459	34,906	91,545	126,183
Eggs	479,263	31	8,158
Pipes and fittings	476,984	38,907	576,138	5,845
Corn	431,044	4,129	16,216
Furniture	377,767	28,672	182,682	6,721
Potatoes	372,115	14,388	27,945	35,015
Chemicals, total	357,763	45,823	108,492	39,537
Mineral oils, crude	332,842	19,519
Pork	351,851	184,709	7,423	134
Beans and peas	336,185	44,359	20,944	577
Fresh beef	258,259	40,844	42,909
Hogs	249,519		15,927
Cotton cloth, colored	244,354	34,068	122,300	5,033
Steel rails	238,521	8,374	294,146
Mules	229,751		109,993	220,400
Boots and shoes	209,075	19,223	144,067	4,890
Saws and tools	195,742	12,957	66,078	5,459
Boilers and parts of engines	193,015	25,433	107,106	19,639
Cotton cloth, uncolored	159,210	25,521	32,816	6,928
Tobacco, plug	149,967	142	173,719	538
Horses	153,712	975	67,912	211,550
Agricultural implements	149,418	5,153	11,997	225
Wrapping paper	148,211	18,043	46,212	9,151
Cycles, and parts of	142,616	2,376	43,532	20,109
Patent medicines	132,007	24,080	9,248	3,461
Wire	130,064	13,649	1,768
Glass and glassware	125,740	10,632	47,214	4,644
Structural iron and steel	124,295	12,950	142,825
Copper, and manufactures of	108,446	5,855	18,300	57
Electrical apparatus	132,612	11,914	100,335	10,083
Carriages, and parts of	99,897	12,092	104,992	29,213
Builders' hardware	99,616	11,378	27,457	3,220
Articles exported during ten months ending Apr. 30, 1900.
Fish, total	83,380	23,640	199,656	2,236
Oats	82,893	1,773	66,305	103,107
Shooks	77,619	63,335	69,442	2,183
Furniture, of metal	66,124	1,361	5,758
Sewing machines	61,772	1,988	37,997	130
Cotton wearing apparel	59,343	18,046	50,258	2,214
Bran and mill feed	58,400		146,508	4,822
Bread and biscuit	58,316	28,282	73,321	3,389
Books, maps, etc	56,877	10,900	39,530	14,820
Cars for steam railways	56,868	8,763	15,100
Pumps and pumping machinery	55,157	12,915	201,837	12,242
Codfish	54,393	14,615	12,890	924
Locomotives	54,180	4,500	7,625
Electric machinery	52,112	1,608	5,230	85,433
Cut nails	49,286	2,323	53,370
Writing paper	48,238	5,525	11,176	4,875
Oleomargarine	48,020	16,461	10,780
Steel sheets and plates	47,162	1,089	40,386	2,916
Lamps, chandeliers, etc	46,657	4,581	22,496	3,163
Cement	42,943	1,663	5,953	1,625
Lubricating oil	41,480	3,535	31,244	4,762
Soap	40,472	8,002	43,395	1,620
Coal, anthracite	39,206	5,248	1,176	3,450
Turpentine	38,319	2,873	4,038	393
Belting, hose, etc., india rubber	34,731	2,423	15,624	377
Iron sheets and plates	31,725	25	44,610	1,000
Vegetable oil	31,106	1,672	12,712
Stationary engines	29,460	19,625	12,247
Bricks, for building	29,325		47,564
Bar iron	29,174	4,343	55,427	1,865
Leather	29,096	2,624	42,550
Typewriters	29,008	2,551	8,095	9,165
Printing paper	27,570	7,116	17,698	21,390
Sugar, refined	27,502	3,404	73,841
Hay	27,122	180	146,235	128,999
Apples	27,007	3,794	18,329	1,554
Candy and confectionery	26,891	1,159	11,084	3,093
Logs	24,645	28,725	5,562	39
Wooden ware	25,855	720	931	142
Brass, and manufactures of	23,675	2,600	1,505	1,519
Poultry and game	23,346	661	3,602
Cutlery	22,140	673	7,383	2,721
Lead manufactures	19,973	3,351	5,225
Illuminating oil	19,575	20,621	147,171	12
Spirits, distilled	19,488	7,120	35,068	97,224
Timber, sawed	20,940	270	36,671	859
Jewelry	18,883	747	5,080	2,875
Harness and saddles	18,654	3,048	51,387	20,824
Varnish	17,838	1,346	769	3,313
Cordage	16,048	8,094	95,771
Clocks and watches	15,620	552	15,859	14,503
Joists and scantlings	58,789	23,000

GROWING EXPORTS TO CUBA, PORTO RICO, HAWAII, AND THE PHILIPPINES.

The following table shows our exports to Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines in each year since 1896, and indicates the enormous growth since the new relationship with those islands began:

Exports from the United States to the islands named below.

Year.	To Cuba.	To Porto Rico.	To Hawaiian Islands.	To Philippines.
1896	$7,530,880	$2,102,294	$3,985,707	$162,446
1897	8,250,776	1,988,888	4,690,075	94,597
1898	9,561,656	1,505,946	5,907,155	127,804
1899	18,616,377	2,685,848	9,305,470	404,193
1900*	27,000,000	3,750,000	14,000,000	2,500,000

* May and June estimated.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS A DAY—THAT IS THE PRICE WE ARE PAYING FOR OUR TROPICAL PRODUCTS FROM ABROAD—WHY NOT PAY IT TO PEOPLE UNDER THE AMERICAN FLAG AND TO INDUSTRIES SUPPORTED AND DIRECTED BY AMERICAN CAPITAL?

Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States are paying a million dollars a day for tropical products used in manufacturing or food and drink, and most of which are produced in greater or less degree or can be readily produced in the islands which have come into closer relationship with the United States through the events of the past two years. The April Summary of Commerce and Finance, which has just been issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, shows that in the ten months ending with April our imports of tropical products have been over $300,000,000 in value, thus averaging fully a million dollars a day and indicating that for the full year they will reach $365,000,000.

India rubber, fibers, raw silk, cotton, gums, cabinet woods, indigo, ivory, dyewoods, and certain lines of chemicals make up the share of this vast sum which the manufacturers of the United States take and require in constantly increasing quantities. The importation of raw materials for use in manufacturing has increased steadily and now forms more than one-third of our total imports, and the large proportion of this comes from the Tropics. Of india rubber alone the imports of the ten months amount to more than $27,000,000; of fibers, to $20,000,000; of unmanufactured silk, $40,000,000; of cotton, over $7,000,000; of gums, more than $5,000,000, while cabinet woods, dyewoods, indigo, and ivory also aggregate several millions.

Of the constantly increasing proportion of imports of foodstuffs, sugar, of course, is first, and of that the proportion which comes from the Tropics is vastly greater in the past year than in immediately preceding years, the Dutch East Indies, which lie just alongside of the Philippines, being now our largest single source of supply for sugar. For the ten months the importations of sugar are more than $80,000,000; those of coffee nearly $50,000,000; tea, nearly $10,000,000; tobacco, $16,000,000; tropical fruits and nuts, $15,000,000; cacao and chocolate, $5,000,000, and such other articles as spices, rice, olive oil, etc., add several millions to the total.

The following table shows the imports of tropical products into the United States during the ten months ending with April, 1900:

Principal articles of tropical production imported into the United States during the ten months ending April 30, 1900.

Sugar	$81,090,535
Coffee	46,927,393
Silk	40,248,662
India rubber	27,722,010
Fibers	20,468,746
Fruits and nuts	15,674,965
Tobacco	16,078,744
Tea	9,819,906
Cotton	7,304,674
Gums	5,554,494
Cacao and chocolate	4,935,560
Spices	2,929,323
Rice	1,906,425
Cabinet woods	1,895,694
Licorice root	1,391,684
Indigo	1,266,501
Cork wood	1,219,405
Olive oil	898,698
Dyewoods	781,074
Ivory	632,504
Sponges	428,904
Miscellaneous	11,700,000
Total	300,035,901

WHY PRICES OF MANUFACTURES HAVE ADVANCED—COST OF RAW MATERIAL FROM ABROAD HAS INCREASED FROM 50 TO 100 PER CENT.

How far are the manufacturers of the United States responsible for the recent increase in the prices of manufactured goods? This is an especially interesting question in view of the disposition to charge every advance in price to those who produce the finished article offered to the consumer. While most thinking people probably expected to see some increase in cost of manufactures in view of the advance in wages, which has been from 10 to 50 per cent, and in some cases much more, the assertion is frequently made that the advance in the price of the finished article is more than is justified by the advance in wages.

But there is another and very important factor which is probably not taken into account. This is the even greater advance which has occurred in the cost of the raw material entering into the manufacture of the articles used in everyday life. Iron and steel have advanced in price; but how many people know that the iron ore from which they are made has more than doubled in price? But this is the fact.

The following table, furnished by the editor of the Iron Trade Review, an accepted authority, shows the prices of iron ore in 1898, 1899, and 1900. It will be seen that the advances have been nearly, and in some cases more than, 100 per cent in the raw material:

[These prices have been furnished by Mr. A. I. Findley, editor of the Iron Trade Review, of Cleveland.]

Grades.	1898.	1899.	1900.
Mesabi Bessemer	$2.15 to $2.25	$2.25 to $2.40	$4.40 to $4.90
Mesabi non-Bessemer	1.70 to 1.85	1.90 to 2.10	4.00 to 4.25
Marquette specular:
No. 1 Bessemer	3.10 to 3.35	3.21 to 3.50	5.93 to 6.48
No. 1 non-Bessemer	2.35 to 2.45	2.50	5.00
Chapin	2.56	2.73½	4.95
Soft hematites, No. 1 non-Bessemer	1.80 to 2.00	2.00 to 2.15	4.15 to 4.25
Gogebic, Marquette, and Menominee No. 1 Bessemer hematites	2.75 to 2.95	2.80 to 3.25	5.50 to 5.75
Vermilion No. 1 hard non-Bessemer	2.50	2.65	5.10
Chandler No. 1 Bessemer	3.13	3.35	6.00
Marquette extra low-phosphoric Bessemer	3.65	3.85 to 3.90	6.80 to 6.90

The base price for 1900 of "old range" Bessemer ores, those from the Marquette, Menominee, Gogebic, and Vermilion ranges, have been fixed at $5.50, against $2.95 in 1899.

In tin plate the advance in pig tin and steel, the chief constituents, has been over 100 per cent each, while the increase in tin plate in the New York markets has been about 50 per cent, as shown by reports to the Bureau of Statistics on the prices of all the articles mentioned.

Crude petroleum, which is supplied from hundreds of wells owned by individuals in many different sections of the country, advanced from 65 cents per barrel in January, 1898, to $1.68 per barrel in February, 1900, an increase of 158 per cent, while the price of refined oil in cases increased in the same time from 5.95 cents per gallon to 11.1 cents, or 87 per cent.

Possibly the reply to the above facts relative to the advance in the raw materials produced at home may be that their prices have been put up in some mysterious way by a combination which could control the hundreds of iron mines and oil wells.

But will it be claimed that "trusts" are controlling the prices of the raw materials which come to us from the forests of Brazil, the wilds of Central America, the jute fields of India, the tin mines of Malacca, the sisal-growing fields of Mexico, the silk-producing areas of Japan and China and Italy and France, and the cinchona growers of South America and India?

In all these articles of foreign production, which our manufacturers must have for use in their industries, the advance in the cost of the article abroad, where its price can not be affected by the American tariff, has been from 50 to 150 per cent. The Bureau of Statistics has for many years presented in its monthly and annual publications statements of the prices in foreign markets of the leading articles of manufacturers' materials and food stuffs imported. The prices of those articles are determined by the statement of the importer, who in his invoice names under oath the actual cost of the article at the foreign port whence it is shipped to the United States. The statements thus obtained indicate, therefore, the actual price in the foreign market unaffected by tariff charges at United States ports.

A study of the latest figures of the Bureau shows a remarkable increase in the foreign price of many of the articles imported for use in manufacturing. In sisal, which comes chiefly from Mexico, the increase is more than 150 per cent within the last two years; in Manila hemp, 100 per cent; in jute, over 50 per cent; in raw silk, 33 per cent; in india rubber, more than 25 per cent; in clothing wool, 33 per cent; in tin, 50 per cent; and in raw sugar, 25 per cent. During the nine months ending with March, 1900, the importation of Manila hemp amounted to 29,107 tons, valued at $4,266,580, while in the corresponding months ending with March, 1898, 39,599 tons were valued at but $2,449,468, the average price per ton in the nine months just ended being $146.50, against $61.85 in the corresponding months of 1898.

In sisal grass, which is imported from Mexico, the increase has been even more strongly marked, the 52,875 tons imported in the nine months ending with March, 1900, being valued at $8,007,961, or $151.30 per ton, against an average of $62.42 per ton in the corresponding months of 1898. Jute, which averaged $23.65 per ton in the nine months ending with March, 1898, averaged $36.80 in the nine months ending with March, 1900. Raw silk also shows a marked increase, the average price per pound in the fiscal year 1897 being $2.94; in 1899, $3.19, and in the nine months ending with March, 1900, $3.94, while during the month of March alone the average price was $4.60, as against an average of $2.84 in the fiscal year 1897. Raw sugar, "not above No. 16, Dutch standard," whose average cost in the foreign markets during the fiscal year 1897 was 2 cents per pound, was, during the nine months ending with March, 1900, 2.42 cents per pound, and in the month of March over 2½ cents per pound, an increase of 25 per cent in the cost in the foreign markets.

The following table shows the average value in foreign countries of the articles named during the fiscal years 1897, 1898, 1899, and the nine months ending with March 31, 1900, as shown by the figures of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, which are based, as above indicated, on the statements of importers of the cost of the goods in question at the foreign ports from which they are shipped to the United States:

Prices of articles in country of origin.

Articles.	Fiscal year.			Nine months, 1900.
	1897.	1898.	1899.
Manila hemp, per ton	$73.68	$64.44	$116.63	$146.50
Sisal, do	60.00	74.59	128.12	151.30
India rubber, per pound	.491	.551	.62	.65
Silk, raw, do	2.84	3.05	3.19	3.94
Sugar, raw, do	.0201	.0224	.0228	.0242
Tin in bars, do	.129	.1373	.1595	.230

The following table, prepared by the Bureau of Statistics, shows the average import prices of the articles named in March, 1897, 1898, 1899, and 1900:

IMPORT PRICES.

[Represents prices in foreign countries.]

Articles.	March—
	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.
Chemicals, drugs, etc.:
Barks, cinchona, etc., per pound	$0.043	$0.006	$0.122	$0.193
Gums: Camphor, crude, do	.139	.171	.203	.294
Potash, nitrate of, do	.020	.022	.025	.027
Quinia, sulphate of, etc., per ounce	.152	.236	.249	.328
Sumac, ground, per pound	.015	.016	.015	.023
Cotton, raw	.112	.092	.104	.136
Manufactures of: Cloth, not bleached, per square yard	.089	.076	.081	.094
Fertilizers: Phosphates, crude, per ton	.....	2.98	5.08	5.08
Fibers, vegetable, etc.:
Flax, do	219.54	205.66	229.53	296.18
Hemp, do	126.00	138.41	121.50	133.65
Istle or tampico fiber, do	.....	49.71	64.85	70.91
Jute, do	29.83	24.98	32.49	35.59
Manila, do	79.74	60.64	120.10	135.84
Sisal grass, do	59.85	84.47	130.33	166.23
Manufactures of *—
Cables, cordage, etc., per pound	.189	.205	.305	.317
Hides and skins, other than fur skins:
Goatskins, do	.220	.231	.266	.272
All other, except hides of cattle, do	.108	.153	.143	.174
Hides of cattle, do	.....	.117	.101	.130
India rubber, do	.504	.588	.603	.660
Iron and steel, and manufactures of:
Pig iron, per ton	22.90	25.80	31.87	36.21
Tin plates, terneplates, etc., per pound	.029	.022	.024	.035
Wire, and articles made from, do	.051	.075	.071	.091
Silk, raw, do	2.97	3.26	3.43	4.63
Sugar:
Not above No. 16—
Beet, do	.017	.....	.021	.021
Cane and other, do	.020	.022	.025	.027
Above No. 16, do	.024	.024	.028	.037
Tin in bars, blocks, pigs, etc., do	.128	.135	.192	.254
Wood: Boards, planks, etc., per M feet	10.27	9.99	9.80	12.04
Wool:
Class 1—clothing, per pound	.171	.160	.171	.239
Class 2—combing, do	.200	.234	.314	.212
Class 3—carpet, do	.111	.093	.096	.097
Manufactures of: Cloths, do	.567	.869	1.02	1.22
Zinc or spelter: In blocks, pigs, and old, do	.033	.039	.049	.053

* Includes thread and twine.

DEMOCRATIC CONTROL OF NEWLY ADDED TERRITORY—THE USE OF TROOPS TO SUPPRESS INSURRECTION IS NOT A NEW THING IN OUR HISTORY—DEMOCRATIC RECORD OF SUPPRESSION OF AN INSURRECTION IN NEW MEXICO IN 1847 BY USE OF THE MILITARY FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. Speaker, little by little it becomes apparent that the Democratic criticism of the methods of the present Administration in regard to newly acquired territory is a criticism of the methods followed by its own leaders and Presidents. It has been already shown that all of the vast territory added to the area of the original thirteen States was added under Democratic control, also that the leaders of the party in and out of office planned and plotted and schemed to add the islands of Cuba and Hawaii as long as a desire for more slave territory stimulated them to activity.

Driven from their former positions by these developments, they now undertake to criticise the fact that the President is using the Army to put down the insurrection in the Philippines, notwithstanding the fact that the treaty with Spain was ratified by Democratic votes after that insurrection had been begun. It seems hardly credible that men could attack the President for carrying to a finish a war that was in existence when the purchase of the islands was authorized by their own party leaders. Yet such is the fact. The attack of the Filipino forces upon our troops in the Philippines began on February 4, 1899, and on that same night Aguinaldo issued his proclamation declaring war against the United States. Yet it was not until February 6, two days after, that the treaty was ratified, and that by 10 Democratic and 3 Populist votes, if the published statements of the detailed vote are to be relied upon, and I have not seen them denied. The statement has also been repeatedly made that some of these votes were cast for the treaty by the "advice and consent" of William Jennings Bryan.

By this action the leaders of the Democratic and Populist parties deliberately bought a fight already going on, agreeing that the United States should pay $20,000,000 for it, and in so doing placed upon the shoulders of President McKinley the duty of carrying it on. He could not do otherwise. Yet they are criticising his course, though of course it is well understood that the criticism is for political effect only.

I want to show, now, that the leaders of the Democratic party did in another similar case just what President McKinley is now doing, and did it by the direction of a Democratic President. Some papers just compiled by the War Department show that after the conquest of New Mexico by the military forces of the United States was accomplished by the campaign of 1846, General Kearny, the officer in command, organized a civil government for the occupied territory, and filled the executive and judicial offices by appointment. These civil functionaries entered upon the discharge of their duties in apparent unconsciousness of exposure to more than ordinary peril. In December, 1846, the native inhabitants organized a conspiracy to overthrow the United States authority in New Mexico. On the night of January 15, 1847, the governor, the sheriff, the circuit attorney, the prefect, and a number of others, citizens and officials of the United States, and Mexican supporters of United States authority, were assassinated in the town of San Fernando de Tayos. On the same night seven other Americans were killed at Arroya Hondo and two at Rio Colorado. It was then apparent that the insurrection was general, and the purpose was to kill all the Americans and those Mexicans who had accepted office under the American Government.

COLONEL PRICE ATTACKS THE INSURGENTS.

Col. Sterling Price was then commander of the army of New Mexico, with headquarters at Santa Fe. He learned of the uprising and attendant atrocities January 20, 1847, and that the army of insurrection was marching against Santa Fe. He took prompt and vigorous action and marched out to meet the insurgents with a force of about 400 men. There were many serious and sanguinary engagements, but the enemy was no sooner dislodged from one position than it took refuge in another, and maintained a determined resistance throughout. The losses were heavy on both sides. Owing to the mountainous character of the country, and the fact that the campaign took place in the winter time, the American forces suffered many hardships before reaching the town of San Fernando de Tayos, where the governor and party had been foully assassinated. A particularly severe engagement occurred at the near-by town of Pueblo de Tayos, which had been strongly fortified. The insurgents took position in a large church which they had pierced with embrasures for rifles. The Americans battered the church and walls for two hours without effect, and were compelled to retreat to Fernando.

The following day they returned and renewed the assault, but the artillery fire seemed to have no effect upon the church walls. Ladders were then made and holes cut in the walls with axes, through which the soldiers with their hands threw fire and lighted shells into the interior. Another assault was made on the church door, which again failed, with loss. The artillery was then brought up to within 60 yards, and after 10 rounds had been fired one of the holes which had been cut with the axes was widened to a practicable breach, through which a storming party entered, dislodged the enemy, and took possession of the church. The next morning the enemy surrendered. The loss sustained by them was about 150 killed. The number of wounded was not known. The American loss in killed and wounded was 52.

THE INSURRECTION GENERAL.

Under date of January 23, Captain Hendley, commanding at Vegas, N. Mex., reported to Colonel Price that every town and village, except Vegas and Tucoloti, had declared in favor of insurrection, and that the entire population seemed ripe for it. The insurrection in eastern New Mexico was inaugurated by the murder of eight Americans at Mora January 20, 1847, and was continued in force until the following July, having been marked with many atrocities on the part of the insurgents. Thereafter the insurrection dwindled into depredations committed by various bands of Indians instigated and led by Mexicans.

Hardly a party, large or small, traders or soldiers, crossed the plains of New Mexico without being attacked. Many men were killed and large numbers of horses, mules, and cattle driven off. In the latter part of 1847 comparative safety was secured by stationing the troops at various points. Of the insurgent prisoners, fifteen or twenty were executed by sentence of court-martial. The others were turned over to the civil authorities.

INQUIRY BY CONGRESS.

The events resulting from the insurrection did not escape the attention of Congress. That body on July 10, 1848, passed a resolution calling upon the President for information in regard to the existence of civil government in New Mexico and California, their form and character, by whom instituted and by what authority and how they were maintained and supported; also whether any persons had been tried and condemned for "treason against the United States" in New Mexico. President Polk replied to said resolution in a message dated July 24, 1848, in which he discussed the character of military government, taking the broad position that such a government may exercise "the fullest rights of sovereignty," thereby explaining the action of the military authorities in suppressing the insurrections.

The records show that a similar course of action was followed in suppressing the insurrection in California in 1848, and reestablishing the sovereignty of the United States.

THE GERMAN VOTE.

Mr. Speaker, our friends, the Democrats, are trying to make everybody believe that the German vote this year will go to the Democratic party, but there is not the slightest likelihood of this being the case.

In 1896 the Germans voted for President McKinley. They are strong believers in the advantages of a gold standard of currency. This the Republican party has given them. They know that should the Democratic candidate for President be elected, which of course would mean Democratic control of Congress, then the gold standard law would be repealed and free coinage of silver will be foisted upon the country. The Germans do not want this. They are probably the most level-headed European people who come to live here. They know that they fare better here, can make and save more money than they did in the Fatherland, and they are not a people who are led away by flights of the imagination.

An effort is being made to bring the Germans into the Democratic line by scaring them with the bugaboo of imperialism, which it is claimed would compel a large increase in our military forces. Many of them have come here to escape the strict military laws that are in force in Germany, and naturally they would not favor anything tending in the same direction in this country. I am glad this subject has developed thus early in the campaign, because the Germans will have time to read and study what the actual conditions are as to our military forces, comparing them with their Fatherland.

Germany has over 52,000,000 people. Its standing army is 600,000 men, an average of 11½ soldiers to every 1,000 people. The United States is 76,000,000, and a standing army of 65,000 men, which is equivalent to 1.86 of 1 soldier to every 1,000 of our population. While Germany has nearly 11 soldiers more per 1,000 of her people than we have, there can not be the slightest chance of the effect of imperialism being experienced in this country.

The following table shows the leading countries of the world, with their population, their standing army, and the number of soldiers each country has per 1,000 of its people:

Country.	Population.	Army.	Soldiers per 1,000 population.
France	38,500,000	560,000	14.05
Germany	52,300,000	600,000	11.05
Austria-Hungary	41,800,000	280,000	6.07
Russian Empire	129,300,000	700,000	6.01
Turkey	33,600,000	240,000	7.01
Great Britain	38,000,000	210,000	5.06
Italy	29,700,000	*210,000	7.01
United States	76,000,000	†65,000	.86

*Peace footing. †War footing.

France has 14 soldiers to every 1,000 of its population. Germany more than 11; Austria-Hungary and Russia more than 6 each; Turkey and Italy each more than 7; Great Britain more than 5½, while the United States has less than 1 soldier per 1,000 of its population. There can be no chance of the military strength of the United States ever being increased to the proportion that exists in European countries.

As a city grows in size and extends its area, the first thing for which the citizens living there ask is more police protection. Our country is like a large city and the bigger it grows the better it should be protected. But the United States has been growing and growing year after year, and its population has doubled since the civil war, while our standing army has been kept nominally at 25,000 men, year after year. Even our present increase above 25,000 men is but temporary, as the law authorizing it expires on July 1, 1901, just a year from now.

As a matter of fact, this country has not been affording sufficient protection to its citizens in proportion to their increase. If our German friends will study the matter in this light, they will see that we are as far removed from militarism and imperialism as we were fifty years ago.

Nicaraguan Canal.

SPEECH
OF
HON. WILLIAM P. HEPBURN, OF IOWA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, May 1, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans—

Mr. HEPBURN said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The subject that we are to consider now is one that has engaged the attention of the American people for fifty-four years. In a few days it will be just fifty-four years since the first project for an interoceanic canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic with those of the Pacific was brought to the attention of the American people. From that time down to the present, almost every year, the subject has received attention and has been a matter of infinite talk; but, notwithstanding all the volumes that have been written and the thousands of speeches that have been made, this is the first day that the proposition to secure the building of such a canal has ever received the attention of the House of Representatives for a direct vote.

While it has received the attention of many committees and been the subject of voluminous reports, there has always been some way by which definite action could be defeated. There was always some party in interest that did not want the particular project, or did not want it at that particular time, that has been enabled to interpose conclusive objection. Five years ago, after receiving the attention of the proper committee of this House for weeks and months, a report was made. A plan was devised, embodied in a bill. It came to this House. Three hundred and seven of the Representatives sitting here petitioned that there might be a rule whereby the members of the House could discuss and express themselves by vote upon the subject. That three hundred and seven were insufficient. Another committee, rather than the one charged with the duty of investigating and reporting, without consultation, took the matter into their hands and succeeded in postponing it by placing an amendment on an appropriation bill creating a commission for still further investigation. The next Congress the committee having charge of the matter again evolved a scheme and brought it into the House; but the committee——

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a question of privilege. We are unable to hear.

Mr. HEPBURN. The Committee on Appropriations, who had never given one moment of attention to this matter, again sidetracked it by an appropriation of $200,000, creating another commission for still further investigation. Again, last year, after the Senate had adopted substantially the bill that is now before the House, another committee, that had never examined the question, that was not charged with the duty, that knew nothing about what had been done and what should be done, brought in a provision for an appropriation of a million dollars for the appointment of another committee; and again it was sidetracked. There has always been somebody in some way trenched behind authority that was able to postpone this great measure; and now, to-day, I find gentlemen, notably the gentleman who has twice prevented action, again insisting that while he is in favor of a canal, now is not the auspicious moment.

Mr. Chairman, in 1850 Congress authorized a survey of this proposed route. It was made by a capable engineer—carefully made. He made a report favoring the Nicaragua route. That report was submitted to a commission of officers taken from the Engineer Corps of the Army. They approved of the surveys and of the report. That was then sent to the foreign office in England for the purpose of being submitted to their engineers. That was done. All of their data was carefully scanned and considered, and a body of engineers from the army of Great Britain approved the report and declared it to be feasible.

Mr. GRAFF. In what year?

Mr. HEPBURN. In 1852 and 1853.

Again, in 1872, Congress authorized another survey; that was made by a distinguished officer of the Engineer Corps. He consumed two years, and with an efficient staff made an elaborate report, again confirming the feasibility of the route. Still later certain engineers and officers of the Navy were intrusted with the duty of again examining this route. They did so, and declared it to be feasible.

Then, Mr. Chairman, a company chartered by Congress and to a certain extent under the auspices of Congress, by their engineers, Mr. Menocal being at the head, made a most careful survey, occupying years of time, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars. Every feature of the route was investigated; every engineering difficulty was solved. That officer reported that the canal was feasible. But this was a commercial enterprise; they were business men engaged in this, men who were asked to put their money into it. With care that was wise they summoned a body of engineers, the most distinguished that there are in the United States. The plans of Menocal were submitted to them. After careful examination these gentlemen reported that the route was feasible and within the limits of proper cost.

That was the condition when this commission that I first called attention to was inaugurated. Mind you, every portion of this route has been investigated. They had almost, I might be justified, perhaps, in saying, a photograph of every grasshopper and bug that could be found in all that 179 miles of tropical country. Then we had the Ludlow commission. General Ludlow of the Engineers, Mr. Endicott from the Navy, and Mr. Noble, known to all the people of this country as one of the most distinguished of our civil engineers, made surveys, comparing the route with the Panama route and with others. They reported that the surveys of Menocal, with slight amendments and changes were entirely practicable and within the limits of reasonable cost. That was not sufficient. Two years later another commission, with Admiral Walker at the head, were charged with the duty of again investigating this much investigated subject. They went over the whole route. They spent $200,000 in verifying the surveys heretofore made. They made additional ones. Where there was a doubtful foundation, they extended their borings. They verified the whole engineering scheme of the Maritime Canal Company.

They became satisfied that the route was entirely practicable. Now, we have the third commission—one not ready to report, and for which report we are told we must wait. But, Mr. Chairman, these difficulties thrown in the way of this enterprise by members of this House who have doubts in regard to the engineering features—and doubts are all they have upon these matters of engineering—these gentlemen are not the only opponents. We are met by another class of gentlemen who say that while this route is practicable, while the canal is needed, while it should be an object of solicitude and fostering care and speedy completion by the Government, yet there are certain difficulties of a diplomatic nature that absolutely prevent us from doing anything.

They say truthfully that in 1850 a treaty was negotiated between Great Britain and our country, popularly known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and that one of its provisions declares that neither party alone, except in conjunction with the other, will secure this water route, or will attempt in any way to defend it without the consent of the other, and they say these provisions are a barrier, and until that is removed the Government of the United States can not in good faith undertake this work.

I would not be an authority upon a grave question like this, but I want to call your attention to names of a long list of statesmen who have declared that that instrument—the Clayton-Bulwer treaty—is not now of operative force against us; that it either had been violated by Great Britain in such degree as to justify us in no longer recognizing its potency or that it had become obsolete because of the object stated by that treaty having been abandoned by both parties, or that both parties had themselves abandoned it by making no effort to carry out its provisions.

In that list of statesmen that have taken one or the other of those positions all insist that at most or at the worst we had the right to declare it void and no longer binding. All of them have gone to that extent. I name Secretary Marcy and President Pierce, Secretary Cass, and every President from Pierce down to the present incumbent, excepting Presidents Lincoln and Johnson. Douglas, Marcy, Frelinghuysen, Blaine, and others, all of them have united in saying that we stood to-day in the position, from the acts of other parties, that entitle us to declare that we would no longer be bound by its provisions.

But, Mr. Chairman, if this is not true, I insist that we occupy that position now before the world that justifies us in caring for our own; in the pursuit of our own supreme interests, to say that that obligation undertaken fifty years ago will no longer bind us. I want to call attention to this fact that while writers upon the subject of international law tell us that in the letter of the law treaties, without there is a limitation as to time stated within them, or without they are carried out and completed, they are irrepealable and are to exist forever. That is the letter of the law, but never its spirit.

Look where you can in all the diplomacy of the world, and how many treaties do you find to-day which are fifty years old. All writers say that the rights of a nation to determine a treaty is always dependent upon the circumstances and environment; that no general law or rule can be established, and that it becomes a question of morals rather than of law, a question of whether the circumstances are such as justify the nation in saying it will no longer be bound by the long-time agreement made under other conditions, and made desirable by other surroundings or made by other generations of men.

Look at this case in 1850, and what is the situation? We were then a weak nation of 23,000,000 people. Only two years before we had acquired our Pacific coast, or the California portion of it. We owned nothing beyond. There was no Alaska for us; we had no coastwise trade. Now our coastwise traffic is measured by millions of tonnage. Then 10,000 families would have been all that could be found in all that Pacific region. Now we have three great States. Then there was poverty there; now their wealth is enumerated by billions of dollars. Then there was no commerce except the trader in hides and furs; now the commerce of that coast reaches hundreds of millions of dollars annually. I say that the conditions have so changed, I say that our necessities have so changed, I say that our interests are so great as to demand that the people of this generation will not longer be bound by the barrier that was interposed by another generation half a century ago. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, a nation of Yankees in entering into an enterprise of this kind will always want some estimate of the cost that he is to be at, and of the resources or revenues that will follow his expenditure. I make the statement that in all the estimates that have ever been made—by any engineer that gave attention to this subject who was in a position to be informed and who knew from accurate data that of which he spoke—no man has ever fixed the possible cost at more than $145,000,000. And the gentleman that fixed that high price gave it as his opinion that $135,000,000 would be the cost, but that possibly, as he says, it may reach $145,000,000.

The commission that last reported, furnishing us with their report within the last few months, tell us that the total cost will be one hundred and eighteen millions and a fraction. Another of the three, however, says that, in his judgment, making larger allowance for possible exigencies, it may reach $131,000,000. But those gentleman who say one hundred and eighteen millions, in arriving at those figures take for their unit price the prices paid in the great work at Chicago, and then for that work that lies west of the lake they add 50 per cent and for that portion lying east of the lake they add 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. TALBERT. Has the gentleman any informatiom from the last commission appointed to look into this matter? Have they laid any facts before your committee at all?

Mr. HEPBURN. None at all.

In addition to these sums they have added five millions for a hundred miles of railway; two millions for sanitary and police; one million for the maintenance of harbors during construction of canal and for buoys, beacons, and light; five million and a half dollars for engineering and administration, being 6 per cent; and then to all of these—to this aggregate—they add for general contingencies 20 per cent, making nearly $20,000,000 more. Now, to the unit of the work done in Chicago they add 33⅓ per cent. Then to that they add an additional 20 per cent for extraordinary contingencies; and they think that certainly would be sufficient.

Among the difficulties that have come in the way of this canal and of the completion of the project are the enterprising gentlemen who have something else to offer—always for sale. There has been a wonderful traffic in franchises to build canals in Nicaragua. I am told that in the last fifty-four years there have been granted 23 franchises to 23 different corporations or individuals. Whenever the treasury is low they sell a franchise if there happens to be a Yankee about who thinks that he can sell it to somebody or hold up somebody who may have some enterprise in view and make him disgorge. Before the committee of which I am a member we have had visitations from no less than eight of these corporations or individuals who had something to sell in the shape of a franchise. For a long time it was the Maritime Canal Company; now the successors of that; now the old Atlas Company, that was organized long prior to the completion of the Panama route and that at one time ran a steamboat and stage line from the town of Greytown on the Caribbean Sea to Brito on the Pacific Ocean, accommodating the California travel.

But there is another route upon which there have been vast expenditures and which I have been told strikes the minds of some of our people as more favorable to the interests of the United States than the route I have been describing. That is the Panama route. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that in my judgment, that route can never be made feasible for our purposes. We are told that $256,000,000 already has been spent or squandered in the construction of that route; and we are told that but two-fifths of it is completed, and that two-fifths is two-fifths of the linear extent, not two-fifths of the work; but that in the alluvial lands—the low-lying lands, those on the sea level—11 or 12 or 13 miles on the east side and 5 or 6 on the west side, that there the canal is partially completed, but that the great work of cutting through the divide, that stupendous work involving a cut of two or three hundred feet in depth and 8 miles in extent, that other wonderful feat in the engineering world, the control of the Chagres River, a torrential stream draining hundreds of square miles of mountain surface, that rises sometimes 70 feet in twenty-four hours, and that other engineering feat of supplying the summit level of the Panama Canal, these have never been touched. They are simply known as they appear to the mind of the engineer. This Herculean task, involving millions that are to be expended in subduing nature and overcoming its forces, has not yet passed the stage of engineering speculation and debate.

But aside from that there is no assurance that we could ever control that canal. I challenge any of the friends of the enterprise to show how we could do it. Two hundred and fifty-six million dollars of its stock is scattered all over the face of France. It was a favorite investment twenty years ago. The poor were induced to yield up their hoardings and take stock certificates in exchange. They hold them to-day. They are the dream of future competency. This stock which they will hold on to is represented in the new company to-day in such a manner that they can not dispose of it.

I am speaking now by the card. I recall, as many of my colleagues will, the testimony of the half dozen gentlemen representing the new Panama Canal, who came before our committee a year ago. They told us of their arrangements; and they told us that after paying the expenses of operation, after paying their interest account, the surplus of revenue was to be divided in proportions of 40 to 60—60 per cent going to the existing stockholders of the old company and 40 per cent to the new.

Mr. GRAFF. Is it not true that there has been a foreclosure in court of the property of the old company, which has been purchased by the new company?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; not a purchase. There has been no foreclosure. The property of the old company was placed in the hands of an officer whom we would call a receiver, who has made an arrangement with the new company whereby they were to put $13,000,000 of new money into the enterprise. They were to have the power to control it; they were to have the power to raise other funds and secure them. They were charged with the duty of appropriating the revenues in the manner of which I speak, so that every dollar of the old stock is represented.

Mr. GRAFF. But was that not in pursuance of some decree of the court, or an arrangement with the company itself?

Mr. HEPBURN. It was made with the knowledge, as I understand it, or the consent of the court. Whether it was a decree of the court or not I am not prepared to say; but this was the testimony before the Committee of Commerce a year ago when the matter was before that committee.

Mr. GRAFF. I only asked the question for information.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is my information on the subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I am correct I do not see how it is possible that the Panama Canal can ever subserve our purposes. I want, and I think the American people want, an American canal to be built and controlled by our own people absolutely and exclusively. [Prolonged applause.] We want a canal that will discriminate, if discrimination is to be made, in favor of our own people. [Renewed applause.] In other words, we want to control the enterprise ourselves absolutely and entirely. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment.

I wish to call the attention of the House to the immense advantage that this construction and ownership would be to us as a people. We are now entering upon the most important of all of the conditions that the nations of the world have ever had in their efforts to control the commerce of the world. It is the purpose and the wish, as I understand it, of the American people that we shall have our full share of that commerce, and every factor in securing that commerce is of immense importance and interest to them.

Mr. Chairman, for years past we have been spending $200,000,000 annually in payment to the owners of foreign ships to carry on the commerce of the United States to foreign ports. A gentleman on yesterday on this floor spoke of the loss of three billions of money in a single decade that occurred to us in our commercial transactions by reason of this condition. In that estimate let me say that he lost sight entirely of the colossal sum of $2,000,000,000 that we have expended, or, in other words, placed in the pockets of foreign shipowners, for carrying that traffic which ought to be carried in American ships. Hundreds of gentlemen have expressed themselves in my hearing as utterly opposed to the doctrine of American subsidies for ships. And yet the whole country, without opposition, will unite with me, I know, in saying that this great canal as a means of stimulating shipbuilding in the shipyards in the United States is going to be, and must necessarily be, the most important item of legislation that this country has undertaken to enact in the last thirty years. [Applause.]

Suppose that we should give to the shipyards of the country the ability to build our American fast vessels from American materials by American woringkmen—ships to be loaded with American products and which would be a part and a parcel of the great invading army of commerce that we propose to launch in all quarters of the world. Is there a man on the floor of the House or elsewhere who would not willingly and gladly extend a helping hand to such an enterprise? Such a ship might have the use of the canal here proposed without the payment of a dollar for that character of traffic. The London merchants who trade with Hongkong—employing, we will say, a 6,000-ton ship—for the passage through the Suez Canal pays $18,600 for the round trip. What a privilege then, I repeat, the merchants of New York would enjoy who, engaged in the same trade, can use this canal without payment of toll!

Mr. Chairman, I want the canal, when it is completed, to be under our control, so that the advantages which it must bring will be reaped alike by all of our people. [Applause.] I do not want our hands tied by allowing a part of the control of this great enterprise to be under some other power.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman now yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree with most of what the gentleman has said——

Mr. HEPBURN. You ought to agree with all of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman to see whether I can agree entirely with him. I wish to ask him, in the first place, if the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is in force and has been placed upon our statute books?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, now, the gentleman from Missouri ought not to ask me that question. He has just as much information as I have on that subject.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I take it for granted that it has not been enacted or is not in force——

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, the gentleman may assume that position——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The point I want to get at is simply this: If we pass this bill, and if that treaty is in force, is there not a conflict at once aroused? Do not the sections of that treaty take precedence over your bill by the operation of the time limit, if in no other way?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know that I quite catch the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I mean is, does not the treaty take precedence of the proposition embodied in the bill you are now seeking to enact?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I do not hold myself out as competent now to answer that question without consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask you one more, and I will stop.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Your bill contemplates that we shall protect this canal. That is my understanding. My own version is that we have the right to fortify; to do as we please with it; that it is ours. Now, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty comes along and says that England shall have the same rights in that canal as we have. So where would that provision in your bill go to?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am afraid it would be unfortunate for the provision of my bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So am I.

Mr. HEPBURN. But I understand this, that if this House of Representatives, by an almost unanimous vote, declares that it ought to be the policy of the American people to own that canal, untrammeled by entangling alliances with any nation or nations, there is no official in the United States that will dare to say nay to that. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not certain about that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In other words, we can repeal the treaty beforehand.

Mr. HEPBURN. No one will want to say nay to that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask you one more question.

Mr. HEPBURN. And I want to say that there is no power of administration here that wants to thwart the will of the American people if it is fairly expressed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, now, does not the very fact that they persist in urging that treaty in the Senate demonstrate that there is an official somewhere that does not care what the House of Representatives does?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have never known that there is. I do not know that there is a party anywhere persisting in that. I remember that some weeks ago the matter came up—at least, I have been told so in the newspapers, and I am quoting newspapers—that in another body a provision, I suppose like that which the gentleman is talking about, came up for action and that the expression was of that character—so unanimous and vigorous against affirmative action that the gentleman who had it in charge was glad to withdraw it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that the same body of legislators would ratify the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and pass this bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think that answers the question of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did not hear that.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman suggests that the body that would pass this bill would not probably ratify the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, if they do not intend to press that treaty, why do they not withdraw it from the attention of the Senate and be through with it?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, well, now, that is a question which the gentleman ought not to ask. You know that nobody can answer that. What particular reason there may be for withdrawing it or withholding the withdrawal nobody knows excepting those that have charge of the subject.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire. We ought to do our duty, anyway.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman think the passage of this bill would go a very long way in persuading gentlemen in some other body to withdraw that treaty?

Mr. HEPBURN. I should certainly hope that that would be so. But, gentlemen, are we going to stop now because of the fear that something may lie in the future?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No——

Mr. HEPBURN. That is what we have been doing for fifty years. Are you going to continue it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will make one suggestion, if you will permit. If you will put back that word "fortify" into this bill and pass it here almost unanimously, and then if the conferees of this House will stand up to it, we do not care about the treaty.

A MEMBER. That word "fortify" is not out of the bill yet.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am glad the gentleman has reminded me of that branch of the matter. The changes that the committee have consented to in the interest of harmony, as they supposed, thinking that they had done all that any opponent of the bill required—being misled in that direction; and I do not mean to say improperly misled, for perhaps we misled ourselves—I would say that I do not think those changes make any radical difference in the bill. If the gentleman will allow me, in the eighth line the proposition of the committee was to strike out the word "defend" and insert the word "protect." Can the gentleman find any difference?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes, I can find a difference. One of them is just a hazy proposition, and the other is a direct concrete proposition in very many instances.

Mr. HEPBURN. Which is the "concrete" and which is the "hazy?"

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why, the word "protect" is hazy, and the word "fortify" is a definite word.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why, it seems to me that the word "protect" has the broader meaning. It means authorizing to defend; that is, in the sense of protection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know. It might not.

Mr. HEPBURN. And again——

Mr. TERRY. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to one fact there: In place of "fortification" you substitute the word "provisions," and in place of "defend" you use the word "protect." That word "protect" is the very word that is used in the Clayton and Bulwer treaty. If we put in that word "protect" in place of the word "defend," may it not virtually, to that extent, be considered as yielding to the contention of England?

Mr. HEPBURN. That word "protect" would bind the United States to defend, make safe, make secure the canal. In the treaty that is the word. Using the word "protect" compels our Government to make safe and secure the canal. What is the difference?

Mr. TERRY. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this fact, that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty specially prohibited any fortification; but after striking out the word "defend" and the word "fortifications" you then use the very word used in that treaty, and you are proposing to use that word now.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, the treaty did; and yet you will remember that within ten years of that time Great Britain, in violation of that treaty, made a treaty with Nicaragua in which she reserved and secured the power, at her pleasure, to move her forces into Nicaraguan territory for the purpose of protecting and defending the canal.

And again, our Government in 1867, seventeen years after the treaty, while certain gentlemen say it was still a subsisting, binding, and controlling obligation upon us, we negotiated for building this canal ourselves and securing it and protecting it alone, without the aid of Great Britain, and had the right to enter upon the territory with our armies and use our fleet for the purposes of protection.

Mr. TERRY. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman in his idea that England violated the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; that being so, we are absolved from that, and therefore we ought not to return to the use of language that is employed in that treaty, by striking out "fortify" and "defend" and putting in the place of those strong, plain words this word "protect" or "protection." That was in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and if you put it in here we may be considered to that extent as yielding to their contention.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is the gentleman from Arkansas or myself making this speech?

Mr. TERRY. I understood the gentleman to yield to me. I know the gentleman will make it better than I, and shall not interrupt him any further.

Mr. HEPBURN. It was only a matter of idle curiosity that I had. [Laughter.]

Mr. TERRY. I will be satisfied if I have aroused the gentleman's curiosity sufficient to direct his attention to this use of a word from the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. HEPBURN. The other recommendation of the committee is to substitute the word "provisions" for the word "fortifications," in the fourteenth line of the second page, and to substitute "as may be necessary" instead of the words "will be required." And these words, you will remember, are addressed to the Secretary of War, who is charged with the construction.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of other topics that I would like to discuss, but in view of the demands made upon me for time, and the demands that will be made upon you, I think I should not occupy the attention of the House longer.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will my colleague permit me? I was interested in his speech, to the effect that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty might be abrogated by the Government. Do I understand the gentleman to claim that it might be abrogated by an act of Congress proceeding with the work, or does it require diplomatic negotiations?

Mr. HEPBURN. I suppose the orderly way would be to abrogate it through the State Department; but I have no doubt about our ability and our right by legislative enactment to abrogate it, or by doing publicly and above board that which would be diametrically inconsistent with its provisions.

Mr. GILBERT. Did not the building of the Suez Canal on the part of Great Britain virtually abrogate the treaty itself?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know that. I never heard it discussed, and have not given attention to that subject; but I want to call attention to the fact that the condition of the commerce of the whole world, especially of this country, with reference to the western coast, has so changed since that time that it would be inequitable and unjust to hold us to a treaty fifty years old, if there was no other reason than simply the fact that necessity demands its abrogation.

Mr. TALBERT. Speaking of the last commission that was appointed, I would like to ask the gentleman why that commission has not made a report.

Mr. HEPBURN. They have not got through their work yet. They have several hundred men at work now.

Mr. TALBERT. It seems that they could have reported something.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know; I am not informed about that.

Mr. MANN. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that four of the members of the present commission have already been on a commission and made a report favorable to the Nicaraguan Canal?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is a correct statement.

Mr. SNODGRASS. The gentleman speaks of a treaty having been made which authorizes us to go there. It is under that treaty that this bill is introduced.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is a subsisting treaty, and we would have the right under that treaty to-day to construct the canal if we desired to do it. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEVY. Let me ask the gentleman one question. What commerce of the world will derive the largest benefit from this canal?

Mr. HEPBURN. The United States.

Mr. LEVY. Has it the largest amount of shipping?

The Questions of the Hour.

Are Trusts the Offsprings of Protection—They Have Long Flourished in Free-trade England.

A Review of Three Years of President McKinley's Administration.

Prosperity for all Classes, and Especially for the Workingman and the Farmer—The Increase of Currency and the Gold Standard—Expansion—Colonies and Colonization—The Sugar Question.

SPEECH

OF

HON. CHARLES DICK,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 2, 1900.

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—

Mr. DICK said:

Mr. SPEAKER: Within the last year or two we have heard and read much on the subject of the formation of large combinations of capital which are commonly called trusts. Our friends on the other side of the House, and the Democratic papers which represent them, are in the habit of claiming that trusts are simply the outcome of a protective tariff. I claim, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the case. As far back in the history of the world as the time of the ancient Greeks and Romans corporations and combinations of capital were plentiful. Under the early Roman law corporations could be formed at the will of the promoter without any special state authorization. There is record of a combination in the iron trade which was established more than 2,000 years ago. Our friends on the other side of the House must concede that this was before the days of protective tariff had developed in any part of the then known world.

Aristotle tells us that "there was a man in Syracuse, in the days of Dionysius, the tyrant, who bought all the iron in the island of Sicily, and was able to sell it at such prices as he pleased, and thereby made much profit. When Dionysius, the tryant, heard of this he was pleased with the ingenuity of the man, and told him that he might keep his money, but had better leave Syracuse."

More than a century ago Blackstone said: "When it is for the advantage of the public to have a particular right kept on foot or continued, to construct artificial presence, who may maintain a perpetual succession and enjoy a kind of legal immortality," the law authorizing corporation seems certain and proper. He predicated the need of this form of organization "for the advantage of the public."

England's industrial conditions were the precursor of those in the United States. Originally every individual worked and did business independently for himself. Gradually, however, as the demands of industry increased and broadened productive enterprise was compelled to concentrate. Capital appeared and gave employment to workers, and so the employing and employed classes were developed. Larger enterprises of manufacture, mining, and commerce called for the association of capital in order to carry on business to the best advantage. Partnerships became common and to some extent corporations succeeded the partnership form of doing business. This was the condition of affairs in England down to the beginning of the eighteenth century.

In the United States industrial development began slowly. It was retarded by the conditions relating to the settlement and subjugation of a new country, and by adverse English legislation that, until the beginning of their national existence, aimed to repress all colonial manufacture. When, however, national independence gave a stimulus to national enterprise, all forms of industry went forward with giant strides. In less than one-half a century we were rivaling the mother country in the diversity and importance of our manufacturing activities.

The United States has been notably a nation of wealth producers and distributers. Our history is a record of masterly effort to wring from the strongholds of nature the material gains that have enriched us. Inventive genius has lightened the labor of hands, and at the same time increased production and consumption to almost fabulous figures. Business sagacity and enterprise have developed commercial organization into a powerful machine, cooperating with labor and invention for the general good.

The factory system, that was to revolutionize the labor activity of mankind, began to exercise its influence in England as early as 1730, when Watts's roller spinning was introduced.

Fifty years ago the mother of the household took a week to knit a pair of stockings, and labor cost put into them was not more than a few cents. Fifty years ago hand looms were used to weave cloth in every farmhouse throughout the country. Wool was carded at home; rag carpets, homemade, covered the floors; farmers mowed their fields with scythes; the blacksmith forged the horseshoes for the village; the seamstress made the clothes that the girls and boys wore, and everybody depended upon the shoemaker for footwear.

All that is changed now. Machinery and factories have superseded individual labor. Our knit goods, our shirts, indeed everything that we wear, are made within the factory, because they can be made better and cheaper there than they ever could be by individual workers. The mowing machine, the reaper, the raker, and binder enable one or two men to do the work of twenty.

Out of these inevitable conditions arose the corporation. With the factory came the foundry and the great manufacturing establishments, ever growing bigger and bigger in response to the ever-increasing demand of the consuming public. It was no longer possible for the individual worker to meet the situation. The formation of industrial armies followed as a matter of course—larger capital was required than any one man could control. Partnerships were for a time effective to a certain extent.

The corporation in its early days was not in favor in England, and the feeling against it found frequent expression in the common law. In the United States similar hostility to corporations was exhibited even down to the middle of the nineteenth century. Nevertheless, the corporation had to come whether the people fancied it or not, and whether the laws of the country gave free trade or protection to industry. The small corporation has had its day. It will always remain, but for large enterprises it has been superseded by those great aggregations of capital that, for want of a better term, are called trusts. These combinations are, after all, only corporations on a large scale. They are changed in size but not in form. It is the highest development of the centralization idea, manifested in capital and industry. It is the evolution of modern commerce and trade.

Mr. Speaker, what I want to show now is that these large combinations of capital, or trusts, are not the outgrowth of a protective tariff; that they are not peculiar to the United States. On the contrary, they had their existence in England long before the Dingley tariff was framed or became a law, and long before the enactment of the McKinley tariff of 1890. In order to do this, Mr. Speaker, I want to place on record before the House some facts regarding the organization and combination of some of the largest trusts in the United Kingdom. The facts given are authentic and official, and they clearly show that the trusts of to-day are as much a creature of free trade and a tariff for revenue only as they are of a protective tariff.

A surface examination of the commercial methods of the United Kingdom does not reveal such a great change when contrasted with those of ten years ago, but if we examine into the subject more minutely we see how deep a root the same principle of amalgamation has struck into the businesses of the United Kingdom as well as those of the United States. In view of the importance, both commercial and financial, of the inauguration of this new era in company promotion, I think it well to bring vividly before the House the extent to which the new movement has already gone, and the following table shows at a glance a list of some of the large combines recently formed in the United Kingdom:

Date.	Name.	Number of business.	Capital.
Oct. 6, 1888	Salt Union, Limited	.....	£2,000,000
Nov. 1, 1890	United Alkali Co., Limited	48	6,000,000
July 1, 1896	J. & P. Coats, Limited	4	5,500,000
Nov. 25, 1897	English Sewing Cotton Co., Limited	15	2,750,000
May 6, 1898	Fine Cotton Spinners and Doublers', Limited	31	6,000,000
Dec. 14, 1898	Bradford Dyers	22	4,500,000
July 4, 1898	Yorkshire Indigo, Scarler, and Colour Dyers	11	600,000
July 6, 1898	Bradford Coal Merchants and Consumers	8	250,000
Oct. 9, 1898	Yorkshire Wool Combers	38	2,500,000
Nov. 1, 1898	United Indigo and Chemical	8	250,000
Nov. 15, 1898	Textile Machinery Association	.....	170,000
Dec. 8, 1898	Calico Printers	60	9,200,000
Feb. 22, 1900	Wall Paper Manufacturers	28	4,200,000
Mar. 1, 1900	United Velvet Cutters	4	300,000
Apr. 4, 1900	British Cotton and Wool Dyers	46	2,750,000
	Total	328	46,970,000

Here is a list, and it embraces only some of the largest trusts in free-trade England, in which there are 328 different business concerns amalgamated, with a capital of £46,970,000, or $230,000,000. And there is not the shadow of an excuse to be found for their formation in the shape of a protective tariff. They are solely, thoroughly, and absolutely the product of the English system of Cobdenite free trade, or a tariff for revenue only.

With the object of giving a brief history of the above trusts, as well as setting forth their principal features and characteristics, I give the following facts acquired from the records and papers of their incorporation in England:

SALT UNION, LIMITED.

This trust was registered on October 6, 1888, to consolidate the undertakings of salt businesses in the United Kingdom, and is the oldest modern combine in that country. The salt works and properties of numerous firms and companies were acquired, including freehold and leasehold rock salt, brine, and other lands, etc. The authorized capital is £2,000,000 in ordinary shares of £10, and £1,000,000 in 7 per cent noncumulative preference shares of £10, and the whole amount has been subscribed and paid up. There are also £1,000,000 first mortgage 4½ per cent perpetual debenture stock ranking on the properties agreed to be taken over by the company, with interest payable January 1 and July 1; and £200,000 4½ per cent B mortgage debenture stock (part of £250,000 authorized), with interest payable January 1 and July 1, and the principal redeemable at the option of the company at 105 per cent, on or at any time after June 30, 1902, on six months' notice, while the company has reserved the rights to redeem the stock earlier by purchase in the market or privately, and it is secured by a first charge on properties acquired subsequently to October 8, 1888, and a second charge on the rest of the undertaking.

The stock was issued in March, 1895, through Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Curie & Co., at 104 per cent. The issue of this second debenture stock clearly proves that the company has been all along in "back water." The accounts are made up annually to December 31 and submitted in February. For the period to December 31, 1899, the ordinary capital got 10 per cent; for the year 1890, 7 per cent; for 1891 and 1892, 5 per cent; for 1893, 3 per cent; for 1894, 2½ per cent; for 1895, 2 per cent, and for 1896, 1 per cent. For 1897 the preference dividend was only paid to the extent of 1¼ per cent and for 1898 nothing was paid on either class of shares. In the accounts for 1898, including £12,531 brought forward, there was an available balance for the latter year of £45,323, and in order to pay debenture stock interest the sum of £8,676 was taken from the reserve, reducing that fund to £108,823. There are no returns for 1899. Registered office 45 Tower Buildings, Water street, Liverpool.

UNITED ALKALI COMPANY, LIMITED.

This company was formed for the purpose of purchasing and consolidating into one undertaking various chemical works in the United Kingdom, in which some or all of the following chemicals are manufactured by what is known as the Leblanc process, viz: A bleaching powder, soda ash, caustic soda, white alkali, sulphate of soda, crystals of soda, chlorate of potash, sulphuric acid, hydrochloric acid, sulphur, etc. In addition to the chemical works, the company made arrangements whereby they have power, which they have exercised, to acquire valuable salt mines and works throughout England. The Leblanc process, by which bleaching powder and other chlorine products, in conjunction with caustic soda, are economically manufactured. Carbonates of soda are produced more cheaply by the ammonia process. The following are the names of the businesses forming the trust when first established:

Names and address of venders.

Henry Baxter	St. Helens.
Globe Alkali Company, Limited	St. Helens.
Greenback Alkali Works Company, Limited	St. Helens.
A. G. Kurtz & Co	St. Helens.
James McBryde & Co, Limited	St. Helens.
St. Helens Chemical Company	St. Helens.
Sutton Lodge Chemical Company, Limited	St. Helens.
Thomas Walker	St. Helens.
The Atlas Chemical Company, Limited	Widnes.
Gaskell, Deacon & Co	Widnes.
Golding, Davis & Co., Limited	Widnes.
Hall Bros. & Shaw	Widnes.
The Liver Alkali Company, Limited	Widnes.
Niel, Mathieson & Co., Limited	Widnes.
Mort, Liddell & Co	Widnes.
Muspratt Bros. & Huntleu, Limited	Flint.
James Muspratt & Sons	Widnes.
W. Pilkington & Son	Widnes.
The Runcorn Soap and Alkali Company, Limited	Runcorn.
Thomas Snape	Widnes.
Sulivan & Co., Limited	Widnes.
The Widnes Alkali Company, Limited	Widnes.
Wigg Bros. & Steel	Runcorn.
The Netham Chemical Company, Limited	Bristol.
Hazlehurst & Sons	Runcorn.
Heworth Alkali Company	Heworth-on-Tyne.
The Jarrow Chemical Company, Limited	Jarrow.
The Newcastle Chemical Works Company, Limited	Gateshead.
J. G. & W. H. Richardson	Jarrow-on-Tyne.
The Seaham Chemical Works Company, Limited	Seaham Harbor.
The St. Bede Chemical Company, Limited	Jarrow-on-Tyne.
Charles Tenant & Partners, Limited	Hebburn-on-Tyne.
Walsend Chemical Company, Limited	Walsend-on-Tyne.
The Eglington Chemical Company, Limited	Irvine, Scotland.
The Irvine Chemical Company, Limited	Irvine, Scotland.
The North British Chemical Company, Limited	Dalmuir, Scotland.
Charles Tenant & Co	Glasgow, Scotland.
Boyd Son & Co., Limited	Fleetwood.

Arrangements of a satisfactory character were also made at the time to obtain control of the Leblanc departments of the following businesses: E. Bramwell & Sons, St. Helens; Morgan Mooney, Dublin; Dublin and Wicklow Manure Company, Limited, Dublin; P. A. Mawdlesley, Flint, and the Tyneside Chemical Company, Limited, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Since the above was floated the following works have been taken over and now form part of the trust: Messrs. McKechina, St. Helens; Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Company, Widnes, and I. C. Gamble & Sons, St. Helens.

The authorized capital is £6,000,000, in shares of £10, half in ordinary and half in 7 per cent cumulative preference, ranking also for a priority as to capital, and power was taken to issue debenture stock for £2,500,000. A very considerable portion of the purchase money for the various works was taken in ordinary and preference shares and debenture stock, and the total capital issued is £2,893,430 ordinary shares, £2,825,240 preference shares, and all the debenture stock, the whole amount having been called up. The debenture stock carried 5 per cent interest, payable January 1 and July 1, and is redeemable at 110 per cent at the option of the company after ten years from 1891, on six months' notice.

The object of the company by its formation was the avoidance of undue competition which had prevailed between the various manufacturers mentioned; the reduction of cost of transit by supplying goods from the district nearest the consumer; the economies which would necessarily result from unity and concentration of management, and the increased efficiency of all the manufactories from applying to each the highest standard of working which the best experience and technical ability of the trade will show to be possible.

The question of arriving at the value of the properties, together with a schedule of the profits made by each firm in the trust, was at the time not even stated in the prospectus, and the public was left in complete ignorance of whether or not the businesses were being run at a profit or otherwise. All that was stated in the prospectus was that "the price to be paid for the whole of the properties and privileges, including patent and other rights and royalties, but exclusive of stock in trade materials (raw, and in the process of manufacture) and stores, is £6,851,500." The amount had been arrived at by a subcommittee of eight, acting under the direction of a committee of thirteen, appointed by the manufacturers, and after careful consideration by such subcommittee of the producing power and position of the works, and of the reports made by two or more members of the committee or directors, who in each case had examined the works.

The accounts are made up annually to December 31, and submitted in the following March. It can not be said that this company has been a success from the start, or that even to-day, as shown by its latest returns, that it is a paying concern to the investors. The following yearly payments of dividends are specially interesting:

For the period to December 31, 1891, 5 per cent was paid on the ordinary shares; for 1892, 6 per cent; for 1893, 5 per cent; for 1894, nil; for 1895, 1 per cent; for 1896, 2 per cent; and for 1897, 1898, and 1899 only the full preference dividend was paid, there being no distribution to the ordinary shareholders.

The gross profit for 1899 amounted to £380,215, and the net profit after providing £120,833, for debenture interest was £198,765. The full dividend on the preference shares absorbed £191,175, and the carry forward is raised from £29,277 to £36,868. Naturally the £2,893,430 of ordinary capital gets nothing except the glory of being in such a magnificently inflated concern. The works, property, plant, etc., are valued, for balance-sheet purposes, at £7,196,915, and stock in trade is put down at £812,376, no less. Another item to be regarded with respectful adoration is the £349,703 of investments, of which £239,95 is "in subsidiary companies." With such handsome assets it is, of course, quite unnecessary to have more than £58,000 cash in hand to pay debenture interest, £60,417; and dividends, £95,587, not to mention the £305,257 of debts owing by the company. A distribution of a beggarly 3 per cent on the ordinary capital for the past six years can only be described as bitterly disappointing and unbusinesslike, and altogether unsatisfactory.

The best critics affirm that even a spell of excellent trade, such as is being done to-day, might serve only to enable this concern to put its house temporarily in order. It is clear on the surface that the company was formed upon an artificial basis, that it is ridiculously overcapitalized, and that while it may possibly pay small dividends from time to time in a spasmodic fashion, anything like settled prosperity is quite out of the question. If the assets, including "patent and other rights," were written down to their actual value, the capital reduced accordingly, and further provision made for the requirements of the business the shareholders would find their real position improved. The operation would not be pleasant, but its results would not fail to be salutary. The registered office is 30 James street, Liverpool.

In conclusion, it may be well to mention that the English Alkali Trust, unable to sell its products in this country under the Dingley tariff, has erected a branch factory—or is about to do so—in one of our Western States.

J. & P. COATS, LIMITED, AN INTERNATIONAL TRUST.

This compony was registered originally on August 6, 1890, to take over the business of the firm of the same name, cotton thread manufacturers. This, however, included only the business of Messrs. Coats as then carried on at Paisley and in Rhode Island (United States) and elsewhere. Six years later an amalgamation was effected with the competing firms of Clark & Co., Jonas Brook & Brothers, and James Chadwick & Brother, limited. The authorized capital was then raised to £5,500,000—£3,000,000 in ordinary stock and £2,500,000 in 6 per cent cumulative preference shares of £10, the latter ranking also for a priority as to capital, and all the ordinary and £2,498,680 of the preference have been issued and paid up. The ordinary capital was formerly in shares of £10, but in 1899 it was converted into stock. There is also £2,000,000 mortgage debenture stock with 4½ per cent interest, payable January 1 and July 1, and the company may pay off the whole or part of the issue at 110 per cent at any time after January 1, 1901—if only a portion, such portion to be ascertained by drawings.

Included in the statement of capital, as above, are £500,000 of preference shares and £1,250,000 of ordinary shares (now stock), issued in 1896 in connection with the taking over of businesses, as stated above; all of these preference shares were issued to the vendors, as also many of the ordinary, partly at £50 per share, and 52,500 new ordinary shares were issued to the existing holders of ordinary at the price of £50, all the new shares carrying dividends as from July 1, 1896. So successful has been the Coats enterprise, and so large the dividends annually paid that these £10-shares are selling to-day at over £80 each. The original market value, as seen above, is £5,500,000, but the value to-day is about £28,500,000.

The accounts are made up annually to June 30 and submitted in November, an interim dividend (in 1899 of 10 per cent) being paid in May. For the year ended December 31, 1890, both preference and ordinary shareholders received interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum in lieu of dividends. For the next half year, to June, 1891, and each of the years 1891–92, 1892–93, and 1893–94, the ordinary shareholders received 8 per cent per annum; for 1894–95, 10 per cent; for 1895–96 and 1896–97, 20 per cent; for 1897–98, 30 per cent; and for 1898–99, 30 per cent and a further bonus of 10 per cent. The reserve fund to-day stands at £1,500,000. Ordinary share premium account, £3,353,560; and there is carried forward £82,238. The dividend on the preference shares is payable half-yearly.

By the combination with the Clarks, Brooks, and Chadwicks the Coats company obtained the dominating interest in the cotton-thread trade in both hemispheres, for the old Clark firm had, like the old Coats firm, factories in the United States and elsewhere abroad. One of the secrets of the success of this thread enterprise has lain in the dexterity with which foreign markets have been secured and retained, in spite of the most prohibitive tariff walls, by the erection of factories in countries in which it was not profitable to ship thread manufactured in the mills in England and Scotland. At the last general meeting of the shareholders of J. & P. Coats, Limited, the chairman (Mr. Archibald Coats), made a significant statement and explained that the company, besides owning mills abroad, held shares in 12 manufacturing companies abroad, and he said that the major portion of the company's profits last year was derived from manufacturing outside of the United Kingdom. Time and again the selling prices of thread have been raised until, practically speaking, the price of the article is to-day something like 15 to 20 per cent higher than it originally was. Directors' qualification, £1,000 of ordinary or preference share capital. Registered office, Fergus-lie Thread Works, Paisley Scotland.

ENGLISH SEWING COTTON COMPANY, LIMITED.

This company was registered on July 16, 1897, to take over 14 businesses. The authorized capital is £2,000,000, in shares of £1, half being 5 per cent cumulative preference, having also a priority as to capital, and half ordinary; and all the preference and £875,080 ordinary have been subscribed and called up, including 125,000 ordinary shares issued in 1899 at a premium of 16s. per share. There is also £875,000 first mortgage 4 per cent debenture stock, with interest payable January 1 and July 1, while the principal is repayable at the option of the company on or after January 1, 1908, at par, or before that date at 4 per cent premium, six months' notice being required in either case. The stock is secured by a first mortgage of the freehold and leasehold properties and real estate.

The combination of the four great thread firms referred to in the Coats Company gave that trust the leading interest. But to strengthen the position it was necessary to obtain some control over the several smaller competing concerns in England. The object in view has always been to prevent makers from "cutting" against each other in oversupplied markets, and to keep prices just at a level to return a fair manufacturing profit. The more effective control of the trade that was desiderated became possible on the formation of the English Sewing Cotton Company, Limited. This company was formed nearly three years ago for the purchase and amalgamation of the sewing cotton and thread businesses of Sir Rd.

Arkwright & Co., Limited, Cromford; Lawrence Ardern, Limited, Hazel Grove Mills, near Stockport; E. Ashworth & Sons, Limited, Egerton Mills, near Bolton; Bagley & Wright, Limited, Oldham; Crawford Brothers, Limited, Beith, N. B.; John Dewhurst & Sons, Limited, Skipton; Ermen & Roby, Limited, Pendlebury; S. Manlove & Sons, Limited, Belper; J. T. Raworth, Limited, Leicester; C. A. Rickards, Limited, Bell Busk; W. G. & J. Strutt, Limited, Milford; William Waller & Co., Limited, Manchester; J. & E. Waters & Co., Limited, Manchester; Geo. Wigley & Co., Limited, Derby; Waters & Rigg, Cumberland; and R. F. & J. Alexander & Co., Limited, joined the combination last year.

The amalgamation is rather a peculiar one, inasmuch as each concern has to be carried on as a separate business, preserving its own individual characteristics, by a separate company, all the shares of which are held by the parent company. A controlling interest was also acquired by the English Sewing Cotton in the American Thread Company. The relations are no doubt somewhat complicated, for the Coats Company also is a large shareholder in the American Thread Company. It is also very significant, but J. & P. Coats, Limited, in order to obtain an effective voice in the management of the English Sewing Cotton Company, took up a large block of the shares.

When the English company was formed an agreement was concluded with the Coats Company whereby the proportions of the trade to be done by each in certain foreign markets were broadly defined. Some of the firms in the English combination are spinners of silk and linen thread, and these, of course, do not affect the Coats combination, which is interested only in cotton thread, and the arrangement as to cotton thread was something like this: Certain markets were allotted exclusively to each combination. One of these markets was Spain, which was allotted exclusively to the Coats Company. But in Spain the English combination has a mill which was erected for the supply of the Cuban market, and under the agreement was strictly confined to that market. Since Spain lost Cuba the relations between the two combinations have, until a few weeks ago, been somewhat strained by the English Sewing Cotton Company endeavoring to sell in Spain the product of the Spanish mill, for which a profitable market could no longer be found in Cuba. At one time this threatened to bring about a serious rupture between the companies, but during March, when the English Sewing Cotton, Limited, issued the balance of the authorized capital to the extent of £249,920, the chairman put at the foot of the circular an official notice that the difficulty had been successfully removed.

The accounts are made up annually to March 31 and submitted in August. For the period to March 31, 1898, only the preference dividend was paid, and for 1898–99, 1s. 9d. per share was paid on the ordinary shares, and after writing off the whole of the preliminary expenses, etc., amounting to £45,314, a balance of £40,873 was carried forward. Reserve fund (premium on new shares and debenture stock), £102,500. On account of 1899–1900 a dividend of 9d. per share has been declared, payable on January 25. Director's qualification, £1,000 of ordinary shares. Registered office, 30 Spring Gardens, Manchester.

FINE COTTON SPINNERS AND DOUBLERS' ASSOCIATION, LIMITED.

This association was registered on March 31, 1898, and was formed for the purpose of amalgamating into one concern all the companies and firms engaged in spinning fine (sea island) cotton, or in doubling yarns made from this and other staples of cotton, and of carrying on the business of fine spinners and doublers hitherto carried on by them separately. The authorized capital is £4,000,000 in shares of £1, half being 5 per cent cumulative preference, having a priority also as to capital, and half ordinary, and power was taken to issue debenture stock for £2,000,000. All the preference and debenture capital, and £1,648,000 of the ordinary, have been subscribed and called up. The debenture stock was issued at par, carried 4 per cent interest, payable March 31 and September 30, is redeemable at the option of the company on or after September 30, 1918, at par, or before that date at 10 per cent premium on six months' notice, and is secured by a first mortgage upon the freehold, leasehold, and copyhold properties.

The basis upon which the various undertakings have been united is that of profit-earning capacity, computed on a three years' average, taken in each case up to the date of the last balance prior to the signature of the contract, as ascertained by investigation of the books by a leading firm of accountants. The total purchase consideration for the land, mills, buildings, engines, and all mill equipments, including good will, was, at the time of the flotation, £3,352,804 16s. 1d., this being for 31 businesses at first amalgamated.

The objects of the formation of the company are the stereotyped ones, namely, that of centralization of office work and of buying, selling, and distributing arrangements, which it was anticipated would lead to considerable economy.

The following is a list of the firms that form the trust to-day, no less than 10 having entered since the flotation of the combine:

Names and addresses of venders.
Balfe & Co., Limited	West Gorton.
Bazley Brothers, Limited	Ancoats.
Bellhouse, James & W., Limited	Manchester.
Bennett, C. E., & Co., Limited	Ancoats.
Bolton Spinning and Doubling Company, Limited	Bolton.
Bouth, F. W., & Co., Limited	Leigh, Lancashire.
Bradley, M. G., & A., Limited	Nottingham.
Brown, J. Henderson, Limited	Ancoats.
Brown & Fallows, Limited	Bolton.
Cash, John, & Sons, Limited	Mansfield.
Christie, Hectors, Limited	Settle.
Froggatt, John, & Co., Limited	Nottingham.
Gorsey Bank Doubling Company, Limited	Stockport.
Houldsworth, T., & Co., Limited	Bollington, Manchester.
Jackson Street Spinning Company, Limited	Manchester.
Knott, John, & Sons, Limited	Ashton-under-Lyne.
Lee, H. W., & Co., Limited	Salford.
Lee Spinning Company, Limited	Atherton.
Marsden, James, & Sons, Limited	Bolton.
Marsland, Robert, & Co., Limited	Manchester.
McConnel & Co., Limited	Ancoats.
Moorhouse, Samuel, Limited	Stockport.
Musgrave Spinning Company, Limited	Bolton.
Murray, A. & G., Limited	Ancoats.
Oliver, T., & Sons, Limited	Bollington, near Macclesfield.
Ormrod, Hardcastle & Co., Limited	Bolton.
Pearson, Isaac, Limited	Stockport.
Reddish Spinning Company, Limited	Stockport.
Rivett, Thomas, Limited	Stockport.
Rostron, John, Limited	Bolton.
Shaw, Jardine & Co., Limited	Ancoats.
Swindells, G., & Sons, Limited	Bollington, near Macclesfield.
Taylor, T., & Sons, Limited	Bolton.
Thackeray, J. L., & Sons, Limited	Nottingham.
Towle, J., & Co., Limited	Borrowash, near Derby.
Towlson, J., & Co., Limited	Derby.
Wolfenden & Son, Limited	Bolton.
Woodeaves Company, Limited	Derby.
Wright, Caleb, & Co., Limited	Tyldesley.
Société Cotonnière d'Hellemmes, Limited, care of W. H. Ingram, 15 Cross street, Manchester	Lille, France.

It is very significant that, again, J. & P. Coats, Limited, subscribed for a large number of shares in order to protect their interests as consumers. The reason for the Coats Company doing this may be seen from the fact that they buy a very large proportion, if not the greater portion, of the spun cotton they use from the Fine Spinners' combination. Only last fall, when the Fine Spinners issued the remaining balance of capital in order to further take in two more outside firms, Messrs. Coats were allotted a further sum of £100,000 in the Fine Spinners' trust.

The accounts are made up annually to March 31 and submitted in May. For the year to March, 1899, 8 per cent was paid, which for the first year's working was certainly not bad. The gross profits made was £362,927, which, after deducting interest and debenture stock and a proportion of the formation expenses, left a net profit for distribution of £299,015, out of which the ordinary shareholder received the above distribution, while £80,000 was placed to a reserve fund, and a balance carried forward of £20,879. The preference dividend is paid half yearly. Directors' qualification, £5,000, ordinary shares.

The association earned last year a net profit of no less than £459,422, after charging £102,981 for depreciation. Adding the amount brought in, there is a total disposable balance of £472,540. After deducting debenture interest amounting to £80,000, and paying off the remainder of the formation expenses (£21,401), there remains £370,139. Out of this the directors propose to appropriate a sum of £100,000 to reserve, as against £80,000 a year ago, making a total reserve of £180,000 accumulated within the two years. In addition to this reserve built up out of profits on trading, there is a special reserve of £231,175, consisting of the premium on shares issued during the financial year. After placing £100,000 to the reserve fund and providing for the preference dividend, the directors recommend a balance dividend on the ordinary shares at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, making a total distribution of 8 per cent for the year, or the same as for 1898–99. Even then the fairly substantial balance of £36,565, subject to bonuses to management and to auditor's remuneration, remains to be carried forward. Registered office, Temple Chambers, St. James's square, Manchester.

BRADFORD DYERS ASSOCIATION, LIMITED.

This company was registered on the 3d of December, 1898, and was formed primarily for acquiring the businesses of the various companies and firms engaged in what is commonly known as the Bradford Piece Dyeing Trade. From the very start it met with success. How complete is this trust will be seen from the fact that the businesses syndicated comprise about 90 per cent of the Bradford Piece Dyeing Trade; two of the firms in the trust having also extensive warp dyeing departments. Some idea of the gigantic trade done by these firms may be seen again by the fact that goods are dyed annually by the associated firms amounting in value to something like twelve to fifteen millions pound sterling ($60,000,000 to $75,000,000). The industry is one of great importance and magnitude, the number of persons (mostly men) employed by the association being about 7,500, and the consumption of coal alone about a quarter of a million tons per annum.

The goods treated are in use in almost every household in the United Kingdom, and a large per cent also of the United States as well as other foreign countries. The authorized capital is £3,000,000 in shares of £1, half being 5 per cent cumulative preference, having a priority also as to capital, and half ordinary, and power was taken to issue debenture stock for £1,500,000. The first issue of capital was for £1,000,000 of each of the three classes, and the whole amount has been subscribed and called up, the vendors having taken £333,333 of ordinary, and a similar amount of preference shares and debenture stock. The debenture stock was issued at par, and is secured by a first deed constituting a specific first mortgage upon all the properties of the country, carries 4 per cent interest, payable January 1 and July 1, and is perpetual; although in the event of winding up at any time for the purpose of reconstruction, amalgamation or otherwise, the debenture stock is redeemable at £110 per £100 stock. The following businesses comprise the association:

Names and addresses of venders.

George Armitage, Limited	Bradford
William Aykroyd & Sons	Bradford.
Bradford and District Dyeing Company, Limited	Halifax.
George Briggs & Sons	Brighouse.
Craven Pearson & Co., Limited	Brighouse.
Fountain Finishing Company, Limited	Bradford.
W. Grandage & Co., Limited	Bradford.
Harry H. Hall & Co	Guiseley.
Hunsworth Dyeing Company, Limited	Cleckheaton.
Samuel Kirk & Sons	Leeds.
John Mitchell & Co	Keighley.
James Reffitt & Sons	Leeds.
Edward Ripley & Son	Bradford.
James and M. S. Sharp & Co., Limited	Heckmondwike.
Shaw & Co	Shipley.
John Shaw & Co., Limited	Bradford.
Sam Shepherd & Co	Yeadon.
Samuel Smith & Co., Limited	Bradford.
John H. Stott & Co	Bradford.
Thornton, Hannam & Marshall	Brighouse.
Ward & Sons, Limited	Halifax.
Whitaker Bros. & Co., Dyers, Limited	Newlay.
Frederick Cawley & Co	Manchester.
H. Kershaw & Son, Limited	Salford.
The Standish Company, Limited	Wigan.
R. W. Walker	Rochdale.

Amongst the advantages to be gained by this amalgamation of interests the following were enumerated by the promoters:

First, the avoidance of loss through undue competition and cutting of prices below cost.

Second, the economies and improvements in production arising from the combined practical knowledge of the members forming the board of directors (who are all men of great experience in the dyeing trade) as a consulting and advisory body available for each branch.

Third, the economies due to centralization of office work and of buying, distributing, and financial arrangements.

One special feature of the Dyers' Association is that, as far as possible, the control of each firm shall remain in the hands of those who have been responsible for its conduct in the past; and in order that such management may have an inducement to continue to give their best efforts to that particular business, the directors are empowered under the articles of the association to pay commissions on the profits of each individual branch, thus safeguarding the principle of individual effort, to which so much success in the past has been due.

Here again, as in most cases in arriving at the combined average profits earned by the various firms when amalgamated, figures for a period of three years have been taken, and a balance struck. When first floated only 22 firms comprised the association, and the aggregate average profit showed the annual average sum of £225,656 16s. 6d. The purchase price of the firms (22), including £681,388 of good will, amounted to the sum of £2,870,640.

The accounts are made up annually to December 31. Quite recently the first annual meeting was held and some interesting facts were brought out in the association report. The promises held out in the prospectus have been more than borne out. The gross profits estimated at the time, as set forth in the prospectus, were at the rate of £225,656 per annum. The company, when the year's accounts were made up, had been working fifteen months, and the gross profits made for that period amounted to £405,396, an excess practically of £100,000 over twelve months' accounts. The prospectus profit was arrived at after charging £50,000 per annum for maintenance and keeping the property in a thorough working order. During the period under review upward of £80,000 had been so charged. Other expenses in connection with the flotation had been met out of the profits, while £62,500 was also put down for depreciation. But after all deductions, debenture interest, and interim dividends on the preference and the ordinary shares there was an available net balance of £150,271.

This it was proposed to appropriate in paying a dividend for the six months to December 31 last of 5 per cent per annum on the preference shares, absorbing £25,000; in establishing a reserve fund with £60,000; in paying a dividend for the six months to December 31 last at the rate of 10 per cent per annum on the ordinary shares, requiring £49,328; and in carrying forward the balance of £26,033, which is equal to 2½ per cent on the ordinary shares. Calculating the dividend from the dates on which the installments of the share money fell due, the rate worked out to £8 13s. 11d. per cent per annum. A larger dividend could have been paid, but for the first year the board deemed it wiser to create a substantial reserve fund and to carry forward a good balance, which the first general meeting heartily approved. Registered office, 39 Well street, Bradford.

YORKSHIRE INDIGO, SCARLET, AND COLOR DYERS, LIMITED.

This company was registered on June 29, 1899. The company is formed for the purpose of acquiring and carrying on the businesses of several firms engaged in the Yorkshire indigo, scarlet, and color dyeing trade. The firms representing the trust comprise nearly all the Yorkshire dyeing businesses which are engaged in dyeing cloth and wool manufactured for uniforms, liveries, etc., and used by the British, Indian, colonial, and foreign governments in the army, navy, post-office, and civil-service department, and by the constabulary, railway, and other institutions. Several of the above firms have long held a wide reputation as the principal dyers in their particular trade, and are seldom in want of work; in fact, the Leeds firms especially are of excellent standing and repute.

The advantages claimed by the trust are that the indigo wool and piece dyeing is almost exclusively carried on in this part of Yorkshire. The several dyehouses taken over are conveniently situated in the centers where the goods treated are manufactured, and they possess many facilities which it would be difficult to reproduce. The dyes used in the processes of indigo and scarlet dyeing are of a very expensive character, and exceptional skill and technical knowledge are required to manipulate them profitably. Although the company thus monopolizes to a large extent the business of indigo and scarlet dyeing and is in a position to avoid cutting prices below the standard rates, the circumstances of the trade are such that very important benefits are derived from the amalgamation without interfering with the existing scale of charges. This trust, with ample capital, can buy dye wares in large quantities, and this will add materially to the aggregate profit. Some of the businesses are especially equipped for treating particular classes of material, and considerable saving is effected by distributing the work to the dyehouses best adapted for dealing with it, and which can deal with larger quantities without adding materially to their standing charges. The following is the list of firm names which comprise the trust:

William Kitchen & Co	Leeds	Established about 1700.
Croysdale Brothers	Leeds	Established 1831.
William Walker & Co	Leeds	Established 1831.
Samuel Bennett & Son	Horbury	Established 1840.
Kirkburton Dyeing Company	Kirkburton	Established 1861.
Pickles, Smithson & Pickles, Limited	Dewsbury	Established 1864.
Edwin Turner	Halifax	Established 1868.
Smith & Horsfall	Heckmondwike	Established 1870.
J. Longbottom & Co	Luddenden Foot	Established 1876.
J. & J. Longbottom	Birstal	Established 1880.
Francis Davis	Elland	Established 1881.

The several businesses, which all through the British combines are a particular feature, will, as far as practicable, retain their individuality and be continued as distinct branches under the same control as heretofore.

The authorized capital is £400,000, in shares of £1, half being 5½ per cent cumulative preference, having a priority also as to capital, and half ordinary, and £150,000 of each class of capital has been subscribed and called up. There is also 4½ per cent first mortgage debenture stock for £150,000, part of a total authorized of £200,000. The stock is secured by a mortgage on the property and fixed machinery, has interest payable January 1 and July 1, and is redeemable at the company's option at 105 per cent on or at any time after January 1, 1909, on six months' notice, while in the event of liquidation the stock is to be redeemed at 105 per cent, and the preference shares are also to participate equally with the ordinary in any surplus after repayment of the amount paid up on both classes until the preference shares shall have received a sum equal to 25 per cent. It is proposed to pay the preference dividend half yearly. The accounts are to be made up annually to June 30, the first account not yet being presented.

The present directors, who are the heads of the various dyeing businesses, have agreed to remain in management for a period of five years at an aggregate salary of £1,575 per annum and a commission equal to 10 per cent of the profits available for dividends on the ordinary shares. The assets taken over by the company from the several firms, including land, dyeworks, ware mills, warehouses, reservoirs, water rights, mill plant, good will, etc., amounted to £433,478 4s. 10d. Taken altogether, although no returns of the first year's workings are yet available, there is every evidence that this will be a paying concern. Registered office, 23 John William street, Huddersfield.

BRADFORD COAL MERCHANTS AND CONSUMERS' ASSOCIATION.

This association was registered on May 31, 1899. There can be no doubt that when this trust was mooted it was rightly considered a big venture, such a thing as a coal combine never being thought of. But when firms of such order and magnitude were disposed to combine together, a success from the beginning was already guaranteed. The businesses combined annually turn over upward of 90 per cent of the steam coal trade done in the city of Bradford, and a very large proportion of the household coal trade. The authorized capital is £250,000 in shares of £1, £100,000 being cumulative 5½ per cent preference, having a priority also as to capital, and £150,000 ordinary, and £80,000 preference and £119,797 ordinary have been subscribed and called up, all the ordinary shares having been allotted to the vendors. The following are the names of the businesses forming the trust:

Established.	Names and addresses of venders.
1869	Jabez Cole & Co., Bradford.
1863	William Parkinson, Bradford.
1850	Edward Parkinson, Bradford.
1855	Joshua Smith, Bradford.
1858	Joseph Carnelley, Bradford.
1858	Edward Pye, Bradford.
1883	Henry Thacker, Bradford.
1884	John Triffitt, Bradford.

Among the advantages of the amalgamation it is claimed that considerable economy will be effected in connection with the cost of administration, and the placing of orders with the collieries. It is a very common thing for Yorkshire owners to sell very large quantities of coal at lower prices than small quantities of a few hundred tons, hence it comes about that those firms that can place the biggest contract can always obtain the best terms as to price of the article. Then, this combination of interests will bring about a diminution of intermediate charges, the board of directors being able in every part of the business to make one buying suffice. All the managers have agreed to serve in the capacity of directors for a period not less than five years, and they also have agreed not to engage in any competing business for a period of twenty years.

The value of the various businesses, together with the good will thereof, was stated in the prospectus as being £199,650, of which £79,860 was payable in cash and the balance by allotment to the vendors at par of 119,790 ordinary shares of £1, each fully paid.

This trust has just accomplished a year's working, the first report having been issued, the accounts being made up annually to March 31 and submitted about May. The report of the directors states that, during the past year, business in the city and district of Bradford has been generally active and satisfactory, and the directors report an increased trading turnover, together with substantial profits thereon, considerably in excess of those certified in the company's prospectus issued in July, 1899. At the latter part of last year an important agreement was entered into between this trust and the Bradford Dyers' Association, Limited, whereby it was arranged to transfer to this company the coal merchanting branch of their business, together with the right to supply the whole of the coal consumed by the numerous dyeing firms composing their association. This was a very important move and will materially affect the coal-consuming association.

The consideration for the transfer was agreed at the sum of £50,000, payable by the allotment to the vendors of 20,000 cumulative 5½ per cent preference shares of £1 each, and 30,000 ordinary shares of £1 each. To make sure of the bargain and to consolidate the agreement, the preference shares were allotted on January 1, 1900, and the ordinary shares will be allotted at the convenience of the coal people at different dates after March 31 last. It was further agreed that the directors of the Dyers' Association should have the right to nominate two directors to serve on the board of the coal merchants' directorate, in order to see that their interests did not suffer by using such a tremendous quantity in their various businesses. The benefit of this amalgamation of interests has not so far been very materially felt, as many of the contracts for the supply of coal to the Dyers' Association do not expire until late this year. The directors are, however, fully satisfied that when the full benefit of the whole of the Dyers' Association coal contracts are obtained, considerable profit will result.

The net profits for the first year's working, after providing for bad and doubtful debts, depreciation, maintenance and repairs to wagons, plant, and real estate, managers' salaries, directors' fees, etc., amount to £18,158. From this amount there has been paid the sum of £3,241 for dividend on 5½ per cent preference shares for the year, and £3,593 for dividend on ordinary shares at 3 per cent for six months, and vendors' interests, £646, together with £7,482, leaving a balance of undivided profit which the directors propose to be dealt with as follows, and which has since been carried out: To pay a dividend of 5 per cent for six months ending March 31, 1900 (making 8 per cent for the year), £5,989 17s.; to carry to a reserve fund, £3,000; to reserve for income tax, £372 5s.; and to carry forward to next accounts, £1,313 15s. 3d., making a total of £10,675 17s. 3d. Registered office, 19 Sunbridge Road, Bradford.

YORKSHIRE WOOL COMBERS.

This company was registered on August 25, 1899, to take over numerous wool-combing businesses of private companies and firms. Wool combing is the trade of Bradford, it being an initial process of worsted manufacture, an indispensable part of the woolen industry, which is national in importance, Bradford being the chief center of the trade. There is no question of a doubt that the success of the Dyers' Association was the chief incentive in the formation of this trust. For some years prior to 1895 a working arrangement as to the prices to be charged for combing existed between the principal firms engaged in the business, and during that period satisfactory profits resulted therefrom, but the worsted industry received such a staggering blow as the result of the McKinley and Dingley tariffs that competition and a desire to keep machinery going resulted in wool combers breaking that list in their endeavors to obtain trade, being content to run their factories on "machine profits" alone.

The authorized capital is £2,500,000 in £1 shares, £1,100,000 being preferred ordinary and £900,000 deferred ordinary; the preferred ordinary ranking first for noncumulative dividends of 5 per cent per annum, and are to share ratably in all surplus profits after payment of a similar dividend on the deferred ordinary. Of the preferred ordinary, £650,000, and of the deferred ordinary £531,800, have been subscribed and called up. There is also 4 per cent first mortgage debenture stock for £750,000 (part of £1,000,000 authorized); the stock was issued at par, with interest payable June 30 and December 31, is redeemable at the option of the company on or after June 30, 1919, at par, or before that date at 10 per cent premium on six months' notice, while the stock is secured by first mortgage on the freehold and leasehold properties, and in the event of liquidation the stock is to be repaid at 10 per cent premium. The vendors took all the deferred ordinary (£700,000), £216,666 of the preferred ordinary, and £250,000 of the debenture stock.

The total number of businesses forming the trust is 38, of which the following are the names:

Names and addresses of venders.
Ackroyd & Ambler	Bradford.
James Alderson & Co.	Bradford.
Alerton Combing Company	Bradford.
Ayrton & Co.	Bradford.
Jonathan Barker & Sons	Bradford.
Bradford Combing Company	Bradford.
Browroyd Combing Company	Bradford.
Campbell & Harrison, Limited	Bradford.
S. Ackroyd & Co.	Rodley.
J. & C. Crabtree	Bradford.
John Cure & Co.	Bradford.
W. C. Dixon & Sons	Bradford.
J. W. Firth	Bradford.
Halifax Wool Combing Company, Limited	Bradford.
J. L. Halliday	Bradford.
Joseph Heaton	Bradford.
T. Howarth & Co	Bradford.
F. Illingworth & Co.	Bradford.
Walter R. Kay	Bradford.
S. & S. Musgrave	Bradford.
Thomas Park	Bradford.
G. H. Pontefract	Bradford.
John Priestman & Co., Limited	Bradford.
John Pickles & Son	Bradford.
H. R. Ramsbottom & Co., Limited	Bradford.
Robinson & Alderson	Bradford.
G. Root & Co.	Bradford.
Thomas H. Shaw	Bradford.
David Smith & Co., Limited	Bradford.
Daniel Smith & Co., Limited	Bradford.
John Smith & Sons, Limited	Bradford.
Shipley Wool Combing Company, Limited	Shipley.
Thomas Speight	Bradford.
Jonathan Taylor	Bradford.
Terry & Co	Bradford.
John Todd & Sons	Bradford.
Wharton & Monies	Bradford.
D. & A. Wilson	Shipley.

The amalgamation of the above firms forms an epoch in connection with the Bradford wool trade proper, and at the time being it was not looked upon with much favor by the trade, though to-day it is recognized as being of considerable benefit to the trade, there now being a uniform list of charges for everybody. But there is one source of weakness in connection with this trust which must ever be a source of danger so long as it exists. Three big firms in Bradford at the time of the flotation saw fit to stand out, the firms being W. H. Greenwood & Co., Isaac Holden & Sons, Limited, and Holden, Burnley & Co., the two latter being of large dimensions and leading houses in the trade. A big effort was made at the time to induce the two last firms to join in the combine, but without success. However, they gave this pledge, that whatever the association charged for combing, they, too, would adopt the same scale and thus prevent undercutting.

Since the flotation, measures have been taken to still induce the above firms to join the trust, and any day it may be announced that they have seen fit to throw in their lot and thus consolidate the whole fabric. When this is done a big combine will have been accomplished, and although prices for combing have not yet been advanced, yet there is no doubt that they will be as soon as a favorable opportunity presents itself.

The principal advantage to be gained by the trust is that prices henceforth will not be cut down to a profitless basis, and all the accounts, both selling and buying, being conducted from one central office, much saving will be effected.

Here again we are not told what profit has been made by each individual firm, but the basis upon which the various undertakings has been united and payment for the good will of the business has been based upon profits computed upon an average of the last four years' working. The total purchase consideration for the land, mills, buildings, and all equipment, including the good will of the 38 amalgamating firms and companies was £1,795,356. Needless to say the trust was floated with a flourish of trumpets and subscribed for many times over. Up to the present the association has not been working a full year, but the audited trading accounts for the six months from June 30, 1899, when the various businesses were taken over to December 31, have been completed and published. The profits shown, subject to depreciation, are £58,887 5s. 11d. After deducting interest to the venders and interest on the debenture stock there remains a surplus of £32,573. This amount has been carried forward to the current half year, the directors not deeming it advisable to make any distribution of dividends until the full year is completed. Registered office, 45 Well street, Bradford.

UNITED INDIGO AND CHEMICAL COMPANY, LIMITED.

This company was registered on September 26, 1899; was formed for the purpose of acquiring, amalgamating, and carrying on, as a going concern, eight businesses comprising some of the leading indigo manufacturers in the United Kingdom, and other important chemicals manufactured by the same firms. It can not be said that this trust stands very high in the opinion of financial and commercial experts, simply because some of the largest manufacturing firms, especially in Huddersfield and Leeds, are not included, this being a source of great weakness. A considerable business is done in exporting indigo extracts from England to America, where there is a very large consumption, despite a duty on the import of this article into the United States. It is the intention of this company to establish a manufacturing branch in the United States, sending some of its skilled staff to prepare and sell in this country, thus saving our duty. The following are the names of the businesses forming the trust:

Established.	Names and address of venders.
1869	G. & J. Boyd, Glasgow.
1882	Clayton, Holdroyd & Co., Huddersfield.
1881	Collinslee Chemical Company, Paisley.
1865	J. Haworth & Co., Lancashire.
1877	William Heywood, Manchester.
1848	J. R. Haas & Co., Leeds.
1879	Ellis Barlow, Huddersfield.
1874	James Emmett, Leeds.

The authorized capital, £250,000 in shares of £1, half being 6 per cent cumulative preference, having a priority also as to capital, and half ordinary, and £120,000 preference and £120,000 ordinary, have been subscribed and called up, the venders having taken £40,000 preference and £40,000 ordinary.

The particular advantages which are expected to accrue from this amalgamation are stated to be:

1. Reduction of travelling and working expenses.
2. Saving carriage and time.
3. Advantage in purchasing raw materials.
4. The combined practical knowledge of the directors and the general adoption by the managers of each works of the most approved system of manufacture, insuring thereby not only regularity of quality but the best results at the least cost.
5. The managers and travelers of each works will have the opportunity of selling the whole list of products of each allied firm, whereas until the time of the flotation one or two firms alone had sold the specialty they manufactured.

The various venders who are the managers of their own works have executed an agreement not to enter into or engage in any competing business for a period of twenty years. The several businesses will be conducted as branches, and where practicable at least one partner or director of each of the undertakings will continue as manager, so as to maintain the continuity of the business together with the individual experience of those now controlling the various concerns.

The books and accounts of the various firms have been gone through by a chartered accountant, and for three years they show the average aggregate profits of £20,110 10s. 6d. per annum. The purchase price of the various businesses, including good will and all equipment, cost £242,399. Registered office, 1 Cooper street, Manchester.

CALICO PRINTERS' ASSOCIATION, LIMITED.

This, the largest trust yet formed in England, commands attention even on the ground of its greatness, no less than 60 businesses being syndicated. The business of calico printing, from its magnitude and its capacity for indefinite variety of development, is one of the most important of the textile industries.

The businesses acquired comprise about 85 per cent of the calico-printing industry in Great Britain. The strength of this association is shown by the fact that it includes nearly every leading house in the trade, and that these supply goods not only to all branches of the home trade, but practically to every open market of the world. It can not be said that the industry for the past few years has been very successful, but the trust is confident that it can remove the principal source of mischief, i. e., internal competition and cutting of prices.

TEXTILE MACHINERY ASSOCIATION, LIMITED.

This company was registered November 15, 1899, to take over certain business of makers of wool washing, carding, combing, and spinning machinery in the West Riding of Yorkshire. The authorized capital is £170,000, in shares of £1, £80,000 being cumulative 5½ per cent preference, having a priority also as to capital, and £90,000 ordinary, and the whole amount has been subscribed and called up, the ordinary shares having been allotted to the vendors. There is also £120,000 4 per cent debenture stock, issued at par; it is secured by a first mortgage on the freehold properties, has interest payable January 1 and July 1, and is redeemable after January 1, 1915, at the company's option, at 105 per cent, on six months' notice, while in the event of voluntary winding up it is to be paid off at the same rate. This combine is a very full and compact one, comprising all the makers of this special line of wool-manufacturing machinery, with the exception of one noted firm, namely, that of Prince Smith & Sons, of Keighley. Registered office, Water Lane, Leeds.

The advantages expected to accrue are summed up as follows: First, the avoidance of undue or excessive competition and of selling of goods below cost. Second, large economies to be effected by the centralization of buying and finance and concentration of production. Third, the prevention of overlapping upon the part of the firms constituting the association.

It will in the future be possible to carry on works in foreign countries under the most favorable conditions as regards design, engraved rollers, etc., and in a way which was not practicable when such action depended solely upon the initiative of individual firms. The association already owns a large factory in France.

The share capital of the company is £6,000,000, divided into 6,000,000 shares of £1 each, 5,000,000 of which have been issued as ordinary shares and the remainder may be issued hereafter, either as 5 per cent cumulative preference shares or as ordinary shares, as the directors think fit. There is also issued 4 per cent perpetual first-mortgage debenture stock to the extent of £3,200,000. Power is also reserved in the trust deed to create further debenture stock in addition to the above to a total not exceeding three-fourths of the nominal amount of the share capital of the company for the time being, but no further amount of the stock beyond the present issue of £3,200,000 can be issued unless additional businesses are acquired. In case the company is at any time wound up the stock is repayable at 120 per cent.

The following are the names of the businesses forming the trust:

Names and addresses of venders.

PRINTERS.

Andrew & Sons, George	Near Manchester.
Ashton & Co., Limited, F. W.	Near Manchester.
Bayley & Craven	Near Manchester.
Black & Co., Limited, Jas	Near Glasgow.
Bradshaw, Hammond & Co., Limited	Near Manchester.
Bennett & Sons, Limited, John	Near Manchester.
Bingswood Printing Company, Limited	Near Manchester.
Birkacre Company, Limited	Near Manchester.
Buckley, Limited, Ed. and Jos	Near Manchester.
Boyd & Co., Thomas	Near Manchester.
Calvert & Bros., Limited, J. H	Near Manchester.
Dalglish, Falconer & Co., Limited	Near Glasgow.
Dalmuir Printing Company, Limited	Near Glasgow.
Gartside & Co., Limited	Near Manchester.
Gateside Printing Company	Near Glasgow.
Grafton, F. W., & Co	Near Manchester.
Gibson & Costobadie	Near Manchester.
Hayfield Printing Company, Limited	Near Manchester.
Hardie, Starkie & Co	Near Glasgow.
Hoyo, E., & Sons	Near Glasgow.
Higginbottom, S., & Co., Limited	Near Glasgow.
Inglis & Wakefield, Limited	Near Glasgow.
Kay, Robert, & Sons, Limited	Near Manchester.
Kennedy, J. L., & Co., Limited	Near Manchester.

Names and addresses of venders—Continued.

Kinder Printing Company, Limited	Near Manchester.
Knowles, S., & Co., Limited	Near Manchester.
Laxton, F., & Co., Limited	Near Manchester.
Low Mill Bleaching and Printing Company, Limited	Near Manchester.
MacNab & Co	Near Glasgow.
MacGregor A. R., & Co	Near Glasgow.
Mill Field Printing Company	Near Glasgow.
Murray, Adam, & Co	Near Glasgow.
Potter Edmund, & Co., Limited	Near Manchester.
Robindale Printing Company	Near Manchester.
Rumney, E. B	Near Manchester.
Rumney, W., & Co., Limited	Near Manchester.
Saxby, Charles	Near Manchester.
Schwabe, S., & Co., Limited	Near Manchester.
Springfield Printing Company	Near Glasgow.
Strines Printing Company	Near Manchester.
Thornliebank Company, Limited	Near Glasgow.
Walker, Robert, & Sons	Near Manchester.
Watson, Wm., & Co., Limited	Near Manchester.
Whalley Abbey Printing Company, Limited	Near Manchester.
Wood, Christopher, Limited	Near Manchester.

MERCHANTS.

Allan Arthur Fletcher & Co	Glasgow.
Black & Wingate, Limited	Glasgow.
Bryce Smith & Co	Manchester.
Gemmell & Harter	Manchester.
Gray, James, & Sons	Glasgow.
Gourlie, William, & Sons	Glasgow.
Hewit & Wingate	Glasgow.
Hoyle's Prints Company, Limited	Manchester.
Mills, J., & Co	Manchester.
Moir & Co., Limited	Glasgow.
Shaw, J., & Co., Limited	Glasgow.
Waters, J., & Co	Glasgow.
Wright & Whittaker	Manchester.

The valuation of all the properties, plant, machinery, debts, and stock in trade, taken over by the association, was £7,693,504. The purchase price for the properties and assets acquired amount in the aggregate to £8,047,031, of which £1,066,606 was payable in fully paid debenture stock and £1,595,170 in fully paid ordinary shares, and the balance in cash.

In a recent issue of the London Investors' Review (a very outspoken paper) was an interesting article on the position of the trust. The writer asserted that a salesman who wishes to put through an indent, however trifling, has to go to the general bureau of the association and fill up 27 "spaces" for every transaction. Then the salesmen of the individual print works are competing with the representative of the general bureau for orders! He goes on to assert that the association is generally detested and the "outside" print works are doing a roaring trade, to the detriment of the "associated" firms. Schemes for establishing new "outside" works are in contemplation, while the chief market, India, is nonexistent by reason of the famine, and the Persian trade is stagnant owing to apprehensions of trouble with Russia. In short, to quote one of the best English financial critics, "when the normal tendency of this particular trade is resumed it is difficult to see how reasonable dividends will be possible."

Registered office, 2 Charlotte street, Manchester.

WALL PAPER MANUFACTURERS, LIMITED.

This company, or trust, has been formed for the purpose of amalgamating amongst others the businesses of the various undermentioned firms and companies engaged in the manufacture of wall papers and raised decorative materials, such as Anaglypta, Cordelova, Lignomur, and Salamander decorations. Here again the object of the trust is to shut off at one stroke all competition and prevent underselling. How far this will be accomplished may be seen from the fact that the trust comprises about 98 per cent of the wall-paper-manufacturing trade of the United Kingdom, and amongst the properties purchased are two paper-making mills, one factory for enameled and chromo-lithographic paper, and the works for the manufacture of Anaglypta, etc.

The share capital of the trust is £3,200,000, including first mortgage debenture stock to the extent of £1,000,000; total, £4,200,000. The debenture stock is redeemable at the option of the company on or after the 1st of September, 1919, at 110 per cent, by giving six months' notice. The company also reserves power to further issue debenture stock if necessary.

The following are the names of the businesses comprising the trust:

Names and addresses of venders.

C. & J. G. Potter	Darwen.
Darwen Paper Staining Company	Darwen.
Potter & Co	Darwen.
Huntington Frères	Darwen.
Almond & Co	Darwen.
The Anaglypta Company, Limited	Darwen.
Lightbrown, Aspinall & Co	Pendleton.
Allan Cockshut & Co	London.
The Lignomur Company	London.
Carlisle & Clegg	London.
Arthur Sanderson & Sons	Chiswick.
Osborne & Shearman	Fulham.
John Trumble & Sons	Leeds.

Names and addresses of venders—Continued.

Willie & Lockhead, Limited	Glasgow.
Walker, Carver & Co., Limited	Pendleton.
W. G. Wilkingson & Co., Limited	Derby.
Mitchell Arnott & Co., Limited	Golborne.
Heywood Paper Staining Company	Heywood.
Barnes, Davidson, Holden & Co., Limited	Ramsbottom.
Yates, Dauncye & Dawson	Ratcliffe.
David Walker	Middleton.
Claremont Paper Staining Company	Pendleton.
Lewis & Co	Lees, Oldham.
Fincham & Co	Wortley, Leeds.
John Dunn & Son	Newcastle-on-Tyne.
Essex & Co	London.
United Cordelova Company, Limited	Edinburgh.
Asbestus Company, Limited	High Wycombe.

The certified aggregate profits, as set forth in most cases for one single year only, and in one instance as far back as 1896, amount to £173,116. No good will is said to be paid to any firm that could not show profits exceeding 5 per cent per annum on their capital.

The valuations of all the businesses, including stock in trade and everything, amounted to £545,735 7s. 11d., and the book debts which were guaranteed by the venders amounted to £393,873 14s. 11d. The total purchase consideration for the whole of the undertaking amounted to £4,216,045 17s. 1d., of which £74,577 17s. 1d. was paid in cash, and the balance, £4,141,468, payable in debenture stock, preference shares, and ordinary and deferred shares of the company on the terms of agreement.

At the time of the flotation it called forth a good deal of criticism, the general feeling being that if ever a business would in the future be monopolized this will be the one. There seems little doubt as to it being a success, as competition is practically killed, and prices have been materially advanced. Registered office, Belgrave Mills, Darwen. London offices (pro tempore), 142 Queen Victoria street, London, E. C.

BRITISH COTTON AND WOOL DYERS' ASSOCIATION, LIMITED.

This association is one of the most recently formed in the United Kingdom, and comprises 46 businesses engaged in dyeing, bleaching, printing, and sizing cotton yarns in warps and hanks, and wool in the loose state, and slubbing and all kinds of worsted yarns. Commonly speaking, this is known in the wool and cotton trades as the "slubbing" dyers. The associated firms, with the two branches of Bradford Dyers' Association engaged in warp and hank dyeing, represent about 85 per cent of the volume of both branches of the trade.

What American is there that has not heard of that new process called mercerizing? This industry, to the city of Bradford, England, has been, the last two years, a veritable godsend, and has kept Bradford looms busy, which were stopped by the enactment of the Dingley tariff. Several firms in this trust have built up this important industry, and it bids fair to maintain a standard of excellence and success that was never dreamed of until the thing became an accomplished fact.

The advantages to be gained by the trust is that of sectionalizing the trade and generally reducing the variety of colors handled in the various works, which will affect a saving in the quantity used of dyestuffs, and by the purchase of these articles by a central authority on a wholesale scale, a reduction in the cost of output will be secured. Other economies will be gained by the centralization of bookkeeping and finance, and by organization of the selling departments.

An important item is that an agreement has been entered into with the Bradford Dyers' Association, under the seal of the respective associations, whereby provision is made for the cooperation of the two associations in matters affecting their mutual interests, and arrangements are made for the acquisition by each of the associations of a considerable holding in the share capital of the other.

The share capital of the trust is £2,000,000, together with £750,000 first-mortgage debenture stock, total £2,750,000. The present issue consists of £620,000 4 per cent first-mortgage debenture stock, part of the £750,000 mentioned above, and 1,200,000 ordinary shares of £1 each. The vendors took £130,000 of the present issue of the debenture stock, and 370,000 ordinary shares as part payment of the purchase consideration. The debenture stock is redeemable at the option of the association on or after the 1st of January, 1920, at a premium of 5 per cent, or before that date at a premium of 10 per cent, six months' notice being required in either case. The unissued balance of the debenture stock can only be issued against the acquisition of additional property.

The following are the names of the businesses comprising the trust:

Names and addresses of venders.

1.	Joseph Balme	Bradford.
2.	Joseph Barlow & Sons
3.	Bradford Patent Dyeing Company, Limited	Bradford.
4.	David Brown & Co	Dunfermline.
5.	Brownlee & Fyfe	Tillicoultry.
6.	John Buckle & Co	Bradford.
7.	Birton & Slingsby	Radcliffe.

Names and addresses of vendors—Continued.

8. Caldwell & Co	Paisley.
9. Cochrane, Smith & Co	Selkirk.
10. William Cunningham & Co	Paisley.
11. John F. Dawson	Radcliffe.
12. W. Eckersell & Co	Birtle, Bury.
13. Fletcher Bros., Limited	Halifax.
14. Alfred Goodall & Co., Limited
15. Oliver Greenwood	Bradford.
16. Heppenstall Bros	Huddersfield.
17. W. & J. Hilton	Radcliffe.
18. Holmes & Holdsworth	Bradford.
19. Benjamin Ingham
20. Jopson, Ashworth & Edmunds	Middleton.
21. Kearns, Allen & Co
22. Kerr & Hoegger, Limited	Manchester.
23. Edward Lee	Burnley.
24. The Marland Dyeing Company, Limited	Bury.
25. The Marshfield Dyeing Company	Bradford.
26. D. MacFarley & Sons	Paisley.
27. J. & J. McCallum	Paisley.
28. W. McConnell & Co	Glasgow.
29. R. Moir & Co	Accrington.
30. Murgatroyd & Lister	Bradford.
31. Henry North & Sons	Bradford.
32. William North & Co	Bradford.
33. Abraam Peel Brothers, Limited	Bradford.
34. Adam Robinson & Son	Bradford.
35. Robinson Brothers	Bradford.
36. Isaac Robson & Sons	Huddersfield.
37. Rule & Leyden	Hawick.
38. James Scoon	Hawick.
39. John Siddall	Radcliffe.
40. Joshua Siddall & Son	Radcliffe.
41. Thomas Simpson & Co
42. S. Smethurst & Sons	Bury.
43. Spencer & Exley	Halifax.
44. Matthew Stuttard & Bros., Limited
45. John Turnbull & Sons	Hawick.
46. W. Woodcock & Co

The total purchase price payable to the vendors for the works, land, water rights, stock in trade, and good will is £1,779,092, and is payable in debenture stock to the extent of £191,131, and £370,000 in ordinary shares and the balance in cash. Accounts will be made up yearly on December 31.

Registered office, 2 Charlotte street, Manchester.

UNITED VELVET CUTTERS' ASSOCIATION, LIMITED.

This trust was formed for the purpose of combining together four old and well-known firms of good standing, each of them having been established upward of fifty years. Cutting is a process by which the pile is produced in the manufacture of velvets and cords, and the amalgamating firms are the principal ones engaged in this branch of the trade, though what per cent of the firms engaged in this industry who are outside the trust is not stated. The following are the names of the businesses amalgamated:

(1) The business of Nathan Meanock, as carried on at Royton, Rochdale, Small Bridge, and Crewe.

(2) The business of Ernest Platt, as carried on at Wilmslow, Royton, Bradley Green, Mow Cop, and Butt Lane.

(3) The business of Platt, Wilkinson & Co., Limited, as carried on at Patricroft and Warrington.

(4) The business of Robert Shepherd, as carried on at Manchester, Congleton, Bradley Green, Winsford, Royton, and Crewe.

The objects before the trust are to reduce unnecessary competition besides economizing working arrangements, which will enable one staff to obtain orders instead of employing separate ones for each firm, and will effect considerable saving in the collection and redelivery of goods. It is quite unusual to hear it stated that there will be any reduction in the cost of production, but the directors anticipate this under the new arrangement.

The total purchase consideration for the above-mentioned businesses and properties, inclusive of stock of materials, is £126,705 9s. 4d., and is payable as to £14,075 in debenture stock, £14,075 in preference shares, and £13,333 in ordinary shares, and as to the balance either in cash or in shares or debenture stock at par. What the results will be remains to be seen. Registered office, Lythgoes Lane, Warrington.

OTHER TRUSTS FORMING.

Recently there was an unsuccessful attempt made to float what was called the Yorkshire Soapmakers' Association. The capital of the company was £300,000, but the prospectus was full of unattractive features, and the response by the British public was such as not to warrant the directors in going to allotment.

There are arrangements proceeding for the amalgamation of the undermentioned businesses under the name of the Yorkshire Dye Ware and Chemical Company, Limited, which was registered at the end of May. Messrs. Clemons, Marshall, and Carbat, Leeds; Wood & Bedford, Leeds; D. Taylor & Sons, Golcar; B. Crowther, Gomersal; M. Bedforth & Sons, Huddersfield; J. Sugden, Huddersfield; Hawroyd & Holroyd, Dewsbury; Pickles, Smithson & Pickles, branch of the Yorkshire Indigo, Scarlet and Colour Dyers, Limited, Ravensthorpe; Thomas Crossley & Co., Limited, Leeds, and H. K. Beaumont & Co., Huddersfield. The present issue of capital will consist of $120,000 4½ per cent debenture stock, £100,000 of preference shares, and £80,000 of ordinary shares. The preference shares will have a 6 per cent cumulative preferential dividend, and will have a further participation in profits after the ordinary shares have received a similar dividend.

It is the intention of the several firms comprised in the amalgamation to retain as far as possible their respective interests, and the whole of the ordinary shares will be held by the vendors, as well as one-third of the debenture stock and one-third of the preference shares. It is stated that the stock, book debts, and cash are more than sufficient to cover the debentures, without recourse to the land, buildings, plant, machinery, and other assets, which also are stated at a value more than the amount of the debenture stock.

Further trusts are freely talked of, and several are certain to see the prospectus stage. Trusts already projected are the bleachers of the Lancashire cotton trade, Bradford worsted spinners, woolen and worsted card manufacturers, and the shoddy manufacturers of Dewsbury.

In a word, free-trade England has completely gone over to and become intoxicated with the trust mania. That such combinations of capital in that country are not the creation of a protective tariff is self-evident. English laws compel the giving of information to stockholders in a corporation. Upon the payment of a fee of one shilling (25 cents) they can learn at any time the accurate financial condition of the companies in which they are interested. There is no such law in the United States, but, in my opinion, there should be.

Another point, Mr. Speaker, that is worth consideration is this. We are now compelled, in striving for a share of the world's commerce, to make our goods of such a quality and at such a price that we can compete with the manufactures made by these English trusts. And this competition will increase, not decrease. In order, then, to keep our factories busy and to employ our labor, which is the greatest consumer of the products of our mines, forests, and factories, should we not regulate rather than destroy such combinations of capital as are necessary to enable us to compete in the world's markets?

Assuming that we must do this, I believe in and will advocate the proper regulation of all of our large combinations of capital by law. We must preserve in them whatever is good and advantageous to the people at large; but at the same time we must eliminate all that is bad and evil, or which is in any way calculated to interfere with the rights of our citizens.

THE PROSPERITY OF LABOR—PROTECTION AND SOUND CURRENCY HAVE BROUGHT INCREASED EMPLOYMENT, INCREASED EARNINGS, AND INCREASED ACTIVITY AMONG OUR WORKINGMEN AND THEIR ORGANIZATIONS.

Mr. Speaker, I feel quite sure that none of my colleagues in this House will deny this proposition—that the prosperity of a nation is illustrated by the condition of its wage-earners. If the laborer in any country is receiving good wages with steady employment, that country can not be anything but prosperous. That the United States has been prosperous during the past three years is shown by the growth of the labor organizations in this country.

While discussing the growth of corporations, it is in place to point out that the American Federation of Labor has also grown at a surprising rate during the last three years. While capital has been concentrating its power, labor has been doing the same. This means that labor is amply protected and is flourishing under this Republican Administration. Founded in 1886, the American Federation of Labor has conducted its business publicly, with dignity and with success. To-day it employs 12 paid organizers, besides 470 volunteer organizers, who work in Canada, as well as in the United States. I present the following tabulated statement of the membership of the different organizations named on the 1st day of January, 1900.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Enrollment reported January 1, 1900	1,004,000
Gained since January 1, 1900	304,000
Local charters issued in 1900	1,500
International and national unions now enrolled	73
With State unions, 11; city trades councils, 134	145

Record of 1899.

Membership gained	225,000
International and national unions added	9
Union labels authorized	29
Strikes won	425
Strikes lost	48
Strikes compromised	39
Charters issued in 1899 (reported)	2,264
Charters issued in 1899 (not reported)	600

BROTHERHOOD RAILWAY ORGANIZATIONS.

Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers	34,000
Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen	26,000
Brotherhood of Railway Conductors	27,000
Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen	25,000

Not only has this big American consolidation, or federation, of labor issued a large number of charters, but its affiliated organizations have been equally prosperous, as will be seen from the following table, giving the number of charters issued by the different crafts for the year ending April 1, 1900:

Craft.	Charters issued.	Craft.	Charters issued.
Miners	308	Wood workers	40
Butchers	23	Wood carvers	15
Brewers	25	Coopers	20
Cigar makers	20	Trunk makers	3
Tobacco workers	17	Carriage and wagon makers	10
Tailors	37	Broom makers	28
Garment workers	22	Musicians	12
Shoe workers	24	Bottle blowers	17
Leather workers	20	Window-glass flatteners	12
Granite cutters	12	Textile workers	12
Tile layers	7	Printers	61
Painters	60	Printing pressmen	40
Steam fitters	3	Telegraphers	14
Blacksmiths	32	Steam engineers	9
Machinists	59	Coal-hoisting engineers	4
Iron molders	50	Stationary firemen	24
Iron, steel, and tin workers	80	Street-railway employees	25
Boiler makers	40	Team drivers	78
Electrical workers	20	Longshoremen	49
Sheet metal workers	31	Commercial agents	11
Turners	27	Retail clerks	63
Bicycle makers	10	Stage employees	18
Metal polishers	42	Barbers	52
Stove mounters	12	Hotel and restaurant employees	13
Pattern makers	15

Nearly every national or international organization of labor has been increasing its membership, and the past three years have been those of greatest success for the consolidation of labor interests. That this is the case will be seen from the following table, showing the relative percentage of increase in membership in the years 1897, 1898, and 1899. These figures of increase are correct, as they are compiled from reports received direct from the various national unions on May 1 of this year.

Craft.	Membership increase.
	1897.	1898.	1899.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Agents	10		40
Bricklayers and stone masons	20	40	50
Broom makers			700
Barbers	10	10	60
Bicycle makers	10	10	50
Boilermakers and iron shipbuilders			75
Brickmakers		10	25
Blacksmiths	Decrease.	5	700
Brewery workers	30	40	45
Bakers and confectioners		8	35
Bookbinders		20	75
Boot and shoe workers		15	40
Conductors (railroad)	10	15	25
Coopers	75	75	80
Curtain operatives (lace)		38	12
Core makers	6	14	27
Carriage and wagon makers			40
Clerks (retail)		100	200
Carpenters	10	25	50
Cigar makers	10	20	40
Engineers (locomotive)	10	15	30
Engineers (coal-hoisting)			300
Electrical workers			40
Engineers (stationary)		20	30
Firemen (stationary)		New.	200
Firemen (locomotive)	11	18	13
Glass-bottle blowers	3	5	3
Glass workers			19
Garment workers	5	10	25
Gold beaters		New.	Doubled.
Horseshoers	10	10	25
Hatters			25
Iron molders	10	15	25
Iron, steel, and tin workers	10	20	60
Longshoremen	30	30	50
Leather workers	30	75	100
Meat cutters and butcher workmen	New.	100	200
Musicians	80	4	16
Metal workers		30	100
Machinists	10	25	80
Miners	40	100	300
Potters	20	30	200
Steel and copper plate printers	10	7	10
Plumbers, gas and steam fitters	5	10	40
Paper makers	15	25	30
Printers	15	20	40
Pattern makers		40	300
Stonecutters			10
Spinners (cotton mule)			8
Stone mounters		25	25
Stage employees	50	25	25
Street-railway employees	5	10	18
Seamen	20	25	60
Tailors		6	15
Tin-plate workers			70
Telegraphers		10	25
Tile layers			25
Trackmen (railroad)	10	15	25
Textile workers		10	25
Tobacco workers	15	40	60
Upholsterers		12	30
Waiters, cooks, bartenders		New.	200
Wood carvers	5	15	50
Wood workers	15	40	70

Records and reports of the American Federation of Labor show no such progress of consolidation under our last Democratic Administration of President Cleveland. Quite the contrary, and I can not do better than quote from the pen of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. His remarks I place side by side:

THE DEADLY PARALLEL!

1898.

Since August of this year we have been in the greatest industrial depression this country has ever experienced. It is no exaggeration to say that more than 3,000,000 of our fellow-toilers throughout the country are without employment and have been so since the time named. This lamentable industrial condition is attributed by many to various causes, and it seems to me that the accurate statement of them here is both requisite and appropriate, so that we may be better enabled to so frame our legislation that it may tend to a proper solution of the problem dependent upon the wage-workers for solution.

Never in the history of the world has so large a number of people vainly sought for an opportunity to earn a livelihood and contribute to the support of their fellows. In a society where such abnormal conditions prevail there must of necessity be something wrong at the basic foundation.

1897.

That terrible period for the wage-earners of this country which began in 1893 and which has left behind it such a record of horror, hunger, and misery practically ended with the dawn of the year 1897. Wages had been steadily forced down from 1893 till toward the end of 1895, and it was variously estimated that between two million and two and a half million wage-earners were unemployed.

It is agreed by all that the wage-earners are the principal consumers of American products, and it necessarily follows that a reduction in wages involves a diminution in the power of consumption, and consequently a proportionate decrease in production, and, naturally, also in the force of labor required for the production. A reduction of wages, therefore, results in an increase in the army of the unemployed, and any circumstance or combination of circumstances that will check reductions in wages, and hence the diminution of consumption by the masses, is a humane act, based on the soundest laws of economics and of progress.

1899.

The revival of industry which we have witnessed within the past year is one for general congratulation, and it should be our purpose to endeavor to prolong this era of more general employment and industrial activity. In this effort no power is so potent as organized labor, if we but follow a right and practical course.

It is beyond question that the wages of the organized workers have been increased, and in many instances the hours of labor either reduced or at least maintained.

The report which your officers are enabled to submit to this convention, so far as the growth and progress of our movement during the past year are concerned, is of a most gratifying character. At last we are realizing some of the fruits of the years of unceasing sacrifice, devotion, and uninterrupted work of our fellow-unionists.

The first of these quotations by Samuel Gompers is taken from page 11 of the Proceedings of the American Federation of Labor Convention, held on December 11, 1893, during the last Democratic administration of our national affairs.

The second statement, that of 1897, is taken from a signed article by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, published in New York on January 1, 1898. I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the difference noticed by the president of the American Federation of Labor within less than a year of the inauguration of President McKinley and the present Republican Administration.

The third quotation is from the report of President Gompers at the convention of the American Federation of Labor held at Detroit on December 11, 1899. It is a standing memorial to the benefits derived by American labor under a Republican Administration and Republican laws that are designed to protect our wage-earners and enable them to secure the highest possible rate of wages in return for the labor which they have to sell.

One word more. It is but right to state here that Mr. Samuel Gompers, the president of the American Federation of Labor, is now, and always has been, an uncompromising Democrat. His frank and unsolicited testimony to the better conditions of labor under a Republican Administration should, therefore, have some influence with our friends on the other side of the House. His words speak volumes for Republican policy and for Republican Administration. They show clearly, and without the possibility of a doubt, that this Administration has made hives of industry out of the Democratic haunts of idleness that were created under the Democratic Administration of President Cleveland, when both this House and the United States Senate were under control of the Democratic party.

LABOR AND PROSPERITY.

Mr. Speaker, how different are the conditions to-day among our wage-earning population from those that existed during the last Democratic Administration of President Cleveland. Contrast the earnings of our people now under the Republican protective tariff with those paid during the operation of the Wilson free-trade bill of the Democratic party. Wages have steadily advanced under the present Republican Administration. Organized labor has seen its opportunity to increase its share in the distribution of the general prosperity by the circulation of a larger amount of wages.

The workingman of to-day who does his own thinking has had the proof presented to him that it is to his best interests to stand by the platform and principles of the Republican party. The fact that there have been strikes during this period of prosperity no doubt affords a great opportunity for calamity howling to our Democratic friends, but they always fail to point out that strikes during a Republican Administration are for more wages, and that strikes during a Democratic Administration are against lower wages, and that labor then invariably loses. The American wage-earner wants the present good times and prosperity to continue indefinitely, and he will not vote this good thing away for any bubble of promises, which only means a disturbance of their industrial conditions, with less work, lower wages, idleness, soup-houses, free bread, and the poorhouse.

Wages paid in the United States are from two to four times greater than the wages paid to the corresponding class of labor in the free-trade countries of the world. The purchasing power of a dollar in America is also correspondingly greater. Admitted that rents and the price of native products may be cheaper in foreign countries than they are here, this difference is nothing like the wide disparity in the amount of wages earned. Moreover, the conditions of living must be considered, as well as the nominal cost. Cheap rents and cheap prices mean inferior accommodations and poorer living. To the average worker in foreign countries, most of the comforts and conveniences that are in common use by the American wage-earner are positive luxuries. The American workman and his family are the best-educated, the best-dressed, the best-housed, and in every way the best-situated workers in the world. The American wage-earner is always the most skillful workman. His duties and reponsibilities are privileges possessed by no other laborers, and to his intelligence and achievements are largely due the fact that these United States are to-day the envy of the civilized world.

In order to learn from the executive officers of the national and international labor unions of the United States the exact condition of business in this country, they were asked: "In your opinion, are the prospects favorable for continued and steady employment?" Some of their replies received within the last thirty days are as follows:

REPORTS FROM LABOR UNIONS ON EMPLOYMENT OF THEIR MEMBERS AND PROSPECT OF CONTINUED EMPLOYMENT.

Chas. Sidener, president American Agents' Association: Yes. Our members are all employed. The only question is how much they can sell.

Thos. O'Den, secretary Bricklayers and Stonemasons' International Union: Yes. At no time in the history of this country has so much building been done.

W. J. Gilthorpe, secretary Boiler Makers and Iron Ship Builders: Yes. Our increase in employment is 150 per cent over 1897.

Charles Hank, secretary National Brick Makers' Alliance: Yes. Everybody working who wants to work.

Robert Kerr, secretary International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths: Yes. Demand at present is greater than the supply.

F. H. Harsbecker, secretary Bakers and Confectioners' International Union: Yes. In our trade the slightest change is noticeable. Nearly the full membership now employed.

International Brotherhood of Book Binders: Can not supply the demand for competent workers.

Horace Eaton, secretary Boot and Shoe Makers' Union: Never so prosperous as now.

W. J. Maxwell, secretary Order of Railway Conductors: There is a very small percentage, as far as we know of, who are not employed if it is their desire to work. We further feel that the prospects are very favorable for continued steady employment.

John Paulson, secretary Lace Curtain Operatives: Yes. Very favorable indeed.

Max Morris, secretary Retail Clerks' International Protective Association: Yes. Our efforts are directed now toward shortening the hours of labor, and also to abolish Sunday labor.

Wm. Launer, secretary Glass Bottle Blowers: Yes. The outlook for the future in the glass blowing trade is very bright.

John Kunzler, president Glass Workers: We have no reason to believe that our members will not be steadily employed for another year at least.

E. J. Denney, secretary Iron Molders' National Union of America: Within the last twelve months have secured an increase in wages and many concessions favorable to our members, all of whom have been generally employed.

Chas. L. Conine, secretary Leather Workers on Horse Goods: Yes. Our organization is increasing in membership and all members working.

T. J. Duffy, secretary Potters' National Union: Yes, judging from present conditions.

W. J. Spencer, secretary United Association of Plumbers, Gas Fitters, Steam Fitters and Steam Fitters' Helpers: Yes. If we can enforce our conditions concerning apprentices, we will have steady employment.

George Godsoe, secretary Paper Makers' International Union: They are. Indications point very favorably toward steady employment.

Jas. F. McHugh, secretary Stone Cutters' National Union: Yes, for a few years.

Thos. O'Donnell, secretary Cotton Mule Spinners' National Union: Yes. Prospects are good for this year, as our manufactures are contracted for several months ahead.

H. B. Perham, secretary Order of Railway Telegraphers: As far as I know, there are very few telegraphers out of employment. Prospects are favorable for continued and steady employment for the telegraphers.

Barbers, Cigar makers, Coopers, Hoisting engineers, Brewery workers, Electrical workers, Steam engineers (stationary), Firemen (stationary), Locomotive engineers, Locomotive firemen, Iron, steel, and tin workers, Oil and gas well workers, Longshoremen, Machinists,	Yes.	Mine workers, Steel and copper plate workers, Printers of all languages, Pattern makers, Stove mounters, Theatrical stage employees, Seamen, Tailors, Trunk makers, Railroad laborers, Textile workers, Waiters, cooks, and bartenders, Woodworkers,	Yes.

Within a couple of short years, by the wise administration of the Republican party, the Democratic haunts of idleness have been turned into hives of industry. Owing to the density of the smoke that is pouring from the chimney tops of their factory furnaces it is impossible to see the gloom that is predicted by the Democratic party. I predict, Mr. Speaker, that the eclipse of the sun, visible here on the 28th day of last month, will be followed by another eclipse of a political nature on the 6th day of November next. Then the Democratic party will emerge from the penumbra belittled and depressed by the votes of the American people.

Thanks to the enactment of the Dingley protective tariff, and the wise administration of public affairs by President McKinley, the entire effect of the Democratic free-trade policy has passed away. Millions of persons employed in the thousands of establishments which resumed work within the last three years show only too plainly how far the influence of a business administration has been felt. Side by side with this record of the resumption of work is that of the increase of wages, ranging from 5 to 40 per cent, and the most gratifying fact in this matter of higher wages is that it has been voluntary to a large extent on the part of the employers. High wages encourage the increase of a high class of labor and a high standard of living. I now present to this House a table compiled from the reports of national and international unions, made last month, showing the per cent of increase in wages of 59 different trades or crafts in the years 1897, 1898, and 1899:

Increase of wages in 1897, 1898, and 1899, as reported by labor organizations.

Crafts.	Wage increase.
	1897.	1898.	1899.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Agents	5	10	20
Bricklayers and stone masons	10	12	25
Broom makers	.....	.....	10
Bicycle workers	.....	10	20
Boiler makers and iron shipbuilders	.....	10	25
Brickmakers	.....	.....	10
Blacksmiths	.....	.....	10
Brewery workmen	.....	10	15
Bakers	.....	.....	15
Bookbinders	5	10	25
Boot and shoe workers	.....	5	15
Conductors (railroad)	Very substantial increase.
Coopers	3	4	10
Curtain (lace) operators	.....	.....	15
Core makers	8	12	25
Carpenters	5	8	15
Cigar makers	.....	6	10
Engineers (locomotive)	Small...	12	30
Engineers (coal-hoisting)	.....	10	50
Electrical workers	.....	25	25
Engineers (stationary)	.....	20	30
Firemen (stationary)	.....	.....	15
Firemen (locomotive)	.....	.....	10
Glass-bottle blowers	.....	.....	8
Glass workers	.....	.....	3
Horseshoers	10	10	10
Iron molders	.....	.....	10
Iron, steel, and tin workers	5	8	17
Longshoremen	10	5	15
Leather workers	15	15	15
Meat cutters and butcher workmen	.....	.....	25
Metal workers	.....	.....	10
Machinists	10	15	40
Mine workers	12	26	40
Potters	12½	.....	.....
Plumbers, gas and steam fitters	.....	.....	5
Paper makers	.....	.....	10
Printers	.....	10	30
Pattern makers	5	15	30
Stonecutters	.....	.....	5
Spinners (cotton mule)	.....	.....	22
Stove mounters	.....	5	10
Stage employees	25	200	300
Street railway employees	.....	5–10	12
Seamen	5	12	33
Tailors	.....	.....	10
Tin plate workers	.....	.....	15
Trunk makers	.....	10	15
Tile layers	.....	.....	10
Railroad laborers	5	7	10
Textile workers	.....	.....	12½
Tobacco workers	.....	8	15
Upholsterers	3	10	20
Waiters and cooks	5	10	10
Wood carvers	.....	5	7½
Wood workers	5	8	15

With this remarkable exhibit of the higher wages paid to American labor the Democratic party will appeal to the wage earners to place the administration of this country in Democratic hands, the sole result of which would be to restore the era of low wages, to extinguish the fires of hope in the workingman's ambition, and to extinguish the fires in the furnaces of their factories.

That the outlook for labor was never brighter in this country is attested by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, and a Democrat, who frankly acknowledged a year ago that "The demand for labor in some special lines has tended to increase wages." Not alone have wages been increased in the past few years, but there has also been an exceedingly large increase in the number of men employed through the resumption of thousands of factories that were closed down during the Democratic administration. This increase in the number employed is clearly shown in the following table, which has been compiled from reports received on the 1st day of May, 1900, direct from the organizations named:

Membership of labor organizations employed in 1897, 1898, and 1899, from official reports of the unions.

Crafts.	Employment of total membership.
	1897.	1898.	1899.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Agents	100	100	100
Bricklayers and stone masons	70	75	95
Broom makers		80	95
Barbers	70	80	90
Bicycle workers	90	90	95
Boiler makers and iron-ship builders	50	65	95
Brickmakers	50	75	100
Blacksmiths	80	80	98
Brewery workers	90	92	95
Bakers	80	80	90
Bookbinders	70	75	100
Boot and shoe workers	50	75	95
Conductors (railroad)	90	95	98
Coopers	95	95	95
Curtain (lace) operators	90	95	98
Core makers	40	65	97
Carpenters	70	75	90
Cigar makers	80	85	95
Engineers (locomotive)	75	88	95
Engineers (coal-hoisting)		75	96
Electrical workers	100	100	100
Engineers (stationary)		90	95
Firemen (stationary)			96
Firemen (locomotive)	90	95	98
Glass-bottle blowers	100	100	100
Glass workers		90	90
Garment workers	50	60	85
Gold beaters			100
Horseshoers	75	75	75
Hatters	75	75	75
Iron molders	70	80	90
Iron, steel, and tin workers	80	85	100
Longshoremen	100	100	100
Leather workers	100	100	100
Meat cutters and butchers			50
Musicians			30
Metal workers			90
Machinists	70	75	100
Mine workers	60	80	98
Oil and gas well workers			99
Potters			100
Steel and copper plate printers	95	95	98
Paper makers	80	90	100
Printers	70	80	98
Pattern makers	70	85	100
Stonecutters	80	66	95
Spinners (cotton mule)	90	100	100
Stove mounters			75
Stage employees	75	85	100
Street railway employees	75	75	90
Seamen	70	80	100
Tailors	60	75	95
Tin-plate workers		80	90
Telegraphers	90	95	98
Tile layers			75
Railroad laborers	70	80	95
Textile workers	85	Strike.	100
Tobacco workers	60	75	95
Upholsterers	50	70	90
Weavers (elastic gore)		97	98
Wood carvers	55	70	85
Wood workers	80	80	98

That the conditions, wages, and employment of the wage-earning classes in the United States are better to-day than at any period since 1893 can not be doubted by any reasoning mind, after a careful examination of the two statistical exhibits which I have presented, and which have been furnished by labor organizations themselves. The industrial situation in this closing year of President McKinley's first Administration is exceedingly satisfactory to the entire people; and, Mr. Speaker, this prosperity will remain here for another term of four years, provided the American people reelect as their President Mr. McKinley, an honor that is due him for his constant and determined efforts as a public man to improve the condition of labor in this country of his birth.

LABOR AND THE TRUSTS.

"Down with the trusts," is one of the slogans of the Democratic party this year, and its agents will endeavor to capture the laboring man's vote because they say that trusts lower the wages of the workers.

But what is the truth? Not one single instance can be cited where a large industrial institution, employing hundreds or thousands of people, has attempted to reduce their wages. Neither can it be shown that a single one of the hundred national and international trade and labor unions of this country is fighting the large combinations. Instead of fighting them, they are getting closer together every day. The growing tendency between labor and capital has been toward annual conferences to determine wage scales, hours of work, and conditions of employment. The tendency is to employ arbitration and conciliation in the settlement of differences. This method has long been in vogue between the railways and their employees, with the steel-rail makers, with the wire-nail makers, with tin-plate manufacturers, with the steel-beam producers, with the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers, with the newspaper publishers, with the employing book and job printers, and with the International Typographical Union. The more that labor and capital concentrate their interests individually, so much the more are they endeavoring to concentrate their interests collectively. Large and small labor unions, instead of fighting industrial combination, find it to their interest to join hand in hand with them. There is no better combination in the United States to-day than the American Federation of Labor.

Speaking for the vast army of wage-earners employed in the iron, steel, and tin industry, Theodore Schaffer, president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers, before the Federal Industrial Commission, has declared that the effect of trusts had been beneficial to them. "As a general rule," he said, he believed that the members of his organization "would prefer to deal with combinations and large corporations rather than with smaller independent mills." His experience was that he always received fair treatment in negotiating with these combinations, and he was certain "they did not prevent competition."

Democratic politicians "point with pride" to the fact that there have been more labor disturbances and strikes in the past year or so than in the four years of Democratic administration. Why all these strikes then?

The average wage-worker never thinks of going on strike on a falling market, and certainly not on a falling market under Democratic rule. When business is stagnant and factories are silent and the land is full of unemployed labor, the voice of the agitator is lost in the general murmur of distress and there are no strikes, because there is little employment.

Every labor organization in the country, be it large or small, for the past two years reports steady employment for its full membership, increased pay, shorter working hours, and a general improvement in all its conditions. At the eve of President McKinley's reelection the whole world is engaged in paying tribute to the wonderful productivity of our farms and factories—telling a marvelous tale of American prosperity, proving conclusively the general distribution of the flood of wealth being poured into this favored land.

It is scarcely four years since labor in the United States was crying out for work at any price. Its pockets were empty and its children went hungry to bed.

These events are significant because, by their unprecedented intensity, they have called public attention as never before to what is known as "the labor movement." The problem of the relations between employer and employed is not of easy or quick solution. The promises for this country, inaugurated by the protective policy of the Republican party when it came into power in 1896, were for a restoration of prosperity. This we have had, and now it is to be hoped that good sense and prudence will, through the votes of the people, direct its continuance.

"LEST WE FORGET"—A FEW FACTS ABOUT 1893–1896 WHICH WORKINGMEN SHOULD REMEMBER IN 1900.

Mr. Speaker, the voters of the United States are about to be called upon to determine which party shall control the affairs of the Government during the next four years. It seems scarcely possible that the terrible experiences of free trade coupled with a threat of free silver could be so soon forgotten, but as this seems to be the only assumption upon which their votes can again be asked for those dangerous propositions I propose to put on record a few extracts from that generally accepted and always accurate authority, the American Cyclopedia, on conditions which existed during the Democratic period, 1893–1896, in which the actual experiment of free trade was made, and coupled with its closing years the threat of free silver.

[From Appleton's Annual Cyclopedia, 1893, 1894, and 1895.]

July 13, 1893: Denver, Colo; four banks close their doors and there are runs on other financial institutions.

July 19: More banks close their doors.

July 20: Kansas; fight between strikers and nonunion miners at Weir City.
July 22: Two bank failures in Milwaukee and runs on banks in many other places.
July 24: More bank failures in the West.
July 26: New York; two stock exchange firms fail.
July 27: Ten banks suspend, most of them Northwestern. Other business failures reported.
July 28: More failures and suspensions, including nine banks in the West and one in Kentucky.
August 1: Collapse of the Chicago provision deal. Many failures of commission houses. Great excitement in the board of trade.
August 8: The Chemical Bank, one of the strongest in the country, is unable to fill its weekly orders for small currency.
August: Madison Square Bank suspends.
August 17: Much excitement on east side New York among Hebrew laborers. Police called out.
August 22: Encounter between anarchists and socialists averted by police in New York.
August 23: Meeting of anarchists broken up by police.
August 30: Kansas coal miners strike ended with nothing gained.
January 15, 1894: Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle announces his intention to issue bonds.
January 17: The Secretary of the Treasury offers a $50,000,000 loan for public subscription, according to his announced intentions.
January 24: Strike in Ohio of 10,000 miners.
January 27: A mob of foreign miners destroy property at Brantville, Pa., and elsewhere.
February 16: Many New York silk factories close on account of strike.
February 18: In Ohio all the mines of the Massillon district closed by strike.
February 20: In Boston a riotous assemblage of unemployed workmen dispersed by police.
March 2: Six thousand miners in Jackson County, Ohio, out of employment.
Paterson, N. J.: General strike among the silk weavers.
March 3: In West Virginia striking miners burn the railroad bridge and commit other lawless acts.
March 13: At Paterson, N. J., riotous proceeding on the part of the striking silk weavers.
March 17: In Colorado Governor Waite orders State troops to Cripple Creek to suppress mining troubles.
March 20: In Boston a large body of unemployed workingmen march to the State House and demand employment.
March 24: A movement inaugurated in various parts of the Northern States, known as the Army of the Commonweal, Coxeyites, etc., proposing marching to Washington and demanding help at the hands of Congress.
March 31: Coxeyites are a source of terror to certain Western towns upon which they quarter themselves.
April 1: In South Carolina a large force of State militia is dispatched to the scene of the whisky war in Darlington and Florence.
In Ohio a mob of strikers at East Liverpool becomes riotous and several persons are injured.
April 2: In Chicago 5,000 plumbers, painters, etc., go on a strike.
At Connellsville, Pa., 5,000 coke workers strike.
April 3: In South Carolina the governor assumes control of the police and declares martial law in all the cities of the State.
April 4: In Pennsylvania 6 men killed and 1 wounded in coke riots.
April 13: General strike for higher wages on Great Northern Railway.
In Alabama: The general council of United Mine Workers orders a strike affecting 8,000 men.
April 16: Strike on the Great Northern spreads to the Northern Pacific.
April 20: In Omaha a mob sieges a train of box cars and attempts to deport Kelly's industrial army, but the army refuses to go.
April 21: About 150,000 miners stop work in sympathy with the coke strikers of Pennsylvania.
April 28: Arrival of a division of the Coxey army at Washington.
A division of the Coxeyites arrested at Mount Sterling for holding up a railway train.
United States troops ordered to assist the civil authorities in the far West.
On the Great Northern Railroad system the Knights of Labor are called out on strike.
April 29: Kelly's army, 1,200 strong at Des Moines.
April 30: Strike of 2,000 painters in Chicago.
May 1: Attempted demonstration of Coxey's army on the steps of the Capitol. Leaders arrested.
May 2: In Ohio a mob of Italians and Poles attack the iron mills, but the riot is subdued by the police.
May 4: Further bloodshed in the coke regions of Pennsylvania; killed and wounded on both sides.
May 9: Kelly's army sails from Des Moines on flatboats.
May 10: Several deputy marshals and citizens shot in a conflict with Coxeyites.
May 11: Two thousand Pullman car employees strike at Chicago for last year's wages.
May 12: The captured Coxey army is removed to Leavenworth, where there is a strong garrison of regulars.
May 13: Arrest of a commonweal army by United States marshal at Greenriver, Wyoming.
May 19: Several hundred employees of the Government Printing Office dismissed.
May 19: Considerable detachments of commonweal armies are suffering from cold and hunger in the neighborhood of Cincinnati.
May 25: In Ohio more conflict between striking miners and deputy sheriffs.
May 26: In Pennsylvania the governor goes to the coke regions to use his personal influence toward allaying the disturbances.
In Colorado the governor orders out militia to suppress riotous miners at Cripplecreek.
May 27: In Illinois the governor orders troops to Minonk, where a mob has taken possession of a railway train.
May 30: In Pennsylvania the governor issues a warning to coke rioters.
In Ohio: Governor McKinley orders out the militia to prevent interference with coal trains.
At Washington: The commonweal armies hold a public parade in the streets.
June 1: At St. Louis 1,000 carpenters strike.
General Kelly and his industrial army leave the city.
June 4: At Washington destitution among the commonwealers.
June 5: Militia ordered out to quell striking miners.
In Idaho a number of commonwealers sentenced to imprisonment for train stealing.
June 7: In Ohio trains move under the protection of the militia.
Kelly and his commonwealers abandon their boats at Cairo and resume their march on Washington.
June 9: Nineteen commonwealers sentenced to jail for various offenses.
June 10: Coal strikers in Pennsylvania killed and wounded in an encounter with sheriffs at Lamont.
State troops on both sides of the Ohio River harassed by strikers.
June 11: Continued destruction of railroad property in Ohio and Alabama.
June 17: The Indiana miners continue to strike. Striking miners in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia decide to return to work.
Twenty-three commonwealers in Illinois sent to jail for train stealing.
June 18: In Wisconsin General Cantwell's industrial army captures a train and rides 200 miles.
At Leavenworth 121 commonwealers sentenced and sent to various county jails.
June 20: On the Gogebic range, Mich., 2,000 miners go on a strike.
June 21: Governor of Pennsylvania orders out troops to suppress disorders in Jefferson County.
In Illinois: Twenty-five strikers indicted by grand jury.
June 25: In St. Louis and Ludlow, Ky., about 500 employees strike work from Pullman Car Company.
June 26: Boycott against Pullman cars goes into effect.
June 27: The Pullman boycott extends to all roads that run to Chicago.
Industrial army disturbances are thus far reported in 14 States and 2 Territories.
June 28. The railway strike spreads so as to include nearly all the great railroads between the Mississippi and the Pacific.
July 30: The month closes with a most threatening state of affairs in the West and the Northwest; violence continues to increase at all the strike centers.
July 1: The Federal Government takes active steps to protect mails in transit through the region of disturbance.
July 2: United States courts at Chicago issue a general order against strikers, and United States troops are called out.
July 3: Strikers block the operations of all railways from Chicago westward. Regulars and State troops in strong force ordered to the scene of action.
July 5: Great destruction of property by rioters at Chicago.
Encounters with militia at Sioux City, Iowa, and Asbury Park, N. J.
July 6: Hundreds of cars burned by rioters in Chicago Governor Altgeld protests against the intervention of United States troops.
July 7: State troops fire on mob at Chicago.
United States regulars assume control of the Northern Pacific and Union Pacific railroads.
July 8: Regulars disperse mob at Hammond, Ind., 1 killed and 4 wounded.
July 10: Debs and other labor leaders arrested at Chicago, but released on bail.
General call upon all Knights of Labor to strike.
Regulars start for Sacramento, Cal., which has been for several days under mob rule.
July 11: About 15,000 workingmen strike at Chicago.
Strikers wreck a train at Sacramento, Cal., killing the engineer and 3 soldiers and injuring others.
July 13: Regulars fire upon a mob at Sacramento.
A detachment of Kelly's industrial army captures a train in Ohio.
July 15: Strikers wreck a freight train at Indianapolis.
July 17: Debs and other leaders sent to jail by Federal court.
August 10: Two companies of State militia ordered to South Omaha to restrain packing-house strikers.
August 11: An industrial army at Roslyn, Va., dispersed by State troops.
August 13: Adoption of the amended Wilson tariff bill by both houses of Congress.
August 23: Lockout of 25,000 mill operatives at Fall River, Mass.
September 15: Strike of 38,000 mill operatives at Fall River, Mass.
September 20: A general strike of garment workers in Boston ordered.
September 24: Strike of 3,000 shirt makers in New York.
October 23: Residents of Indian Territory ask the Government to detail troops for the protection of private property.
Resumption of strike among the textile workers at Fall River, Mass.
November 13: Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle issues a call for another loan of $50,000,000 on five-per-cent ten-year bonds.
January 19: Brooklyn troops disperse mob at bayonet's point.
January 20: Many conflicts, some of them fatal, between troops and riotous strikers.
January 25: The Nebraska legislature appropriates $50,000 for seed for distressed farmers.
January 27: In Ohio an encounter takes place between glassworkers and troops called out to preserve order.
February 21: A strike of the building trades of New York begins.
February 24: Strike among New York electrical workers becomes serious.
March 12: A labor and race riot occurs on the levees at New Orleans, with six negroes killed and an officer of a British steamship wounded.
April 9: Extended strike of coat makers in Cincinnati and vicinity.
April 10: A number of rioters arrested during the trolley strike are sent to the penitentiary.
April 19: Strike of St. Louis garment makers.
April 30: Strike of Baltimore garment-makers' union.
May 1: Strike of 10,000 West Virginia coal miners.
May 3: West Virginia Federal court issues an injunction against striking miners for interference with United States mails.
May 4: Joint conference of Ohio miners and operators at Columbus; about 24,000 miners now on strike.
May 19: The Pennsylvania miners decide to continue their strike.
May 22: General strike in the Chicago brickyards.
May 25: Two men taken from jail at Danville, Ill., and lynched because mob determined that Governor Altgeld should never have a chance to pardon them.

THE TARIFFS OF EUROPE—THE FREE-TRADE EXPERIMENT BEING ABANDONED BY THE LEADING COUNTRIES OF CONTINENTAL EUROPE AND THE PROTECTIVE SYSTEM SUBSTITUTED.

Mr. Speaker, the tariff experiences of the great nations of Europe should interest every voter of the United States. For, however silent the Democracy may be upon that subject, its real attitude and intentions in favor of free trade are so well known that there can be no doubt as to what its course would be in case it should again obtain control of the Government. It is interesting, therefore, at this time, when the Democratic party is asking to be again placed in power in Congress and in the White House, to determine what has been the experience of the nations of Europe which have, within a comparatively short time, tested free trade as well as protection. It is by the experiences of others as well as of ourselves that we learn. True, the experience of the low-tariff period through which the country passed but a few years ago would seem to be sufficient warning against a return to that experiment, but it may be interesting and profitable to review briefly the experiences of the great nations from whose population the United States has drawn so large and valuable an element of its present citizenship.

Nearly every European nation has, within the last half century, following the example of Great Britain and yielding to the various plans set on foot by the free traders of that country and elsewhere, tested the low-tariff or free-trade proposition; and practically all, save England, have, after experiments as disastrous in many cases as those of the United States, within the past few years, abandoned free trade and returned to protection. Germany, France, Russia, Sweden, Austria-Hungary, and Belgium have, within the lifetime of a generation, adopted tariffs intended to protect and foster manufactures, some of them with rates of protection strongly marked and clearly defined for this specific purpose. The facts which are here presented are drawn chiefly from the work of Mr. George B. Curtiss, entitled Protection and Prosperity, of which President McKinley said:

We try nations as they appear on the balance sheet of the world. We try systems by results; we are too practical a people for theory. Those of us who believe the American policy of protection is best adapted to our citizenship and civilization are naturally glad to claim the experiences of other nations, when they sustain, beyond the question of doubt, the judgment of our own people, though our own belief is sustained by the highest American authorities from Washington down and by a hundred years of experience.

GERMANY.

The German Empire was organized in 1871 by a political union of Prussia and the German States of central Europe. Prior to that time they had been drawn into closer relationship by a zollverein or customs union based upon the tariff law of Prussia, in which the schedule of duties was fixed by a congress of representatives appointed from the various States. This zollverein parliament continued in charge of the tariff regulations of the union until the adoption of the constitution for the Empire in 1871, and between 1843 and 1850 advanced duties very materially. After the abandonment of the policy of protection in England, however, a campaign against protection on the Continent was begun, headed by Mr. Cobden, and by cooperation with the free traders of Germany. The first step in the reduction of tariff schedules of the zollverein was accomplished in 1865, when many of the duties were reduced and others repealed. Further reductions were made in 1868, 1869, 1870, and 1873, and by 1877 the entire protective system had been swept away and the German Empire passed to a free-trade policy.

The experiment, however, was of comparatively short duration. Immediately after the establishment of the Empire in 1871 a protectionist party was organized to combat the theories of free trade and soon found a strong supporter in Prince Bismarck. By 1875 the strength of the protection policy had greatly increased. There was the usual cry of "robber barons," "monopolists," and "plutocrats," but such arguments did not deceive Bismarck.

He knew well—

Says Mr. Curtiss—

that the cry was raised as a sham; that any undue and improper encroachments of capital, as well as combinations of all sorts detrimental to the common people, could be stamped out or controlled only through State action, while under the individualism of free trade the hand of the Government would be kept off, and there would be no delay as to the law of the survival of the fittest or check to the aggression of improper combinations. With a well-directed government, Bismarck did not fear the wealth of the people, but saw the great benefit of capital when directed to the development of the resources of a country and the employment of labor.

In a speech in the Reichstag Bismarck said:

I wish we could immediately create a few hundred millionaires. They would spend their money in the country, and this expenditure would give fruit to labor all around. They could not eat their money themselves; they would have to spend the interest of it. Be glad, then, when people become rich with us. The community at large, and not only the tax authority, is sure to benefit.

A conference was held at Heidelberg to consider financial conditions, and an increase in duties was recommended. An address from the throne shortly after (February 12, 1879) said:

I am of the opinion that the country's entire economic activity has a right to claim all the support which right adjustment of duties and taxes can afford, and which in the lands with which we trade is perhaps afforded beyond actual requirement. I regard it as my own duty to adopt measures to preserve the German market to national production so far as is consistent with the general interest, and our customs legislation must gradually revert to the true principles on which the prosperous career of the zollverein rested for nearly half a century, but which have in important particulars been deserted in our economic policy since 1865. I can not deem that actual success has attended this change in our customs policy.

On May 28 of the same year Prince Bismarck, in a speech in the Reichstag which lasted for more than an hour, said that the German market had become the mere storage space for the overproduction of other countries. Countries which were inclosed, he said, had become great, and those which had remained open had fallen behind.

Were the perils of protectionist rule so great as sometimes painted France would long ago have been ruined, instead of which it is more prosperous, after paying the five millions, than Germany to-day. And protectionist Russia, too—look at her marvelous prosperity. Manufacturers there have lately been able to save from 30 to 35 per cent, and all at the cost of the German market. Let us close our doors and erect somewhat higher barriers—and let us take care to preserve again at least the German market and German industry.

Said the chancellor—

Speaking of the depression in agriculture as a result of free trade, he said:

Not only agriculture, but the present state and the German Empire itself would go to ruin.

He regarded the German farmers, however, as wise enough to take care of their own interests, and added:

Twenty million farmers will not allow themselves to be ruined. It is only necessary that they should become conscious of what is before them and they will try to defend themselves by legal and constitutional methods.

On another occasion, Prince Bismarck recommending still higher protection, said:

The success of the United States in material development is the most illustrious of modern times. The American nation has not only successfully borne and experienced the most gigantic and expensive war of all history, but immediately afterwards disbanded its army, found work for all its soldiers and marines, paid off most of its debt, given labor and homes to all the unemployed of Europe as fast as they could arrive within the territory—and still by a system of taxation so indirect as not to be oppressive, much less felt. Hence it is my deliberate judgment that the prosperity of America is due mainly to its system of protective laws. I read that Germany has now reached that point where it is necessary to imitate the tariff of the United States.

His advice was accepted. Germany became a thoroughly protective country, and the world knows the result in the fact that Germany is now one of the most prosperous—perhaps the most prosperous—of the industrial and exporting countries of all Europe, pushing her commerce to every part of the world, competing keenly and successfully with that of her older and long-experienced neighbor, Great Britain, while within the Empire busy workshops and prosperous and contented people are everywhere found. Of its prosperity a British official representative at Berlin, Mr. Gastrell, the commercial attaché to the British embassy at that capital, in a communication to the British Government on January 29, 1899, said:

After completing his famous political work, Prince Bismarck directed himself to directing the energies of the people to peaceful and commercial aims, and he achieved a success beyond his most sanguine hopes. When it is realized that in 1897 the value of German exports of domestic produce was only 58,000,000 pounds less than similar exports of British origin, and that the proportion thereof per head of population has tended to rise in Germany and fall in England, perhaps the British public will begin to devote closer attention to commercial and industrial development on the continent.

Aided by the state and protected by a moderate tariff from severe foreign competition, German industries and commercial enterprises of all kinds came into existence, developed, and flourished. This took place much more rapidly than in most other countries, particularly because the Germans benefited by the knowledge and experience of older industrial States. After a period of so-called free-trade principles, protection was again adopted in Germany with the introduction of a tariff which effected many sweeping changes at the instance of both the agricultural and industrial parties. In manufactured articles the value of imports fell from 49,000,000 pounds in 1889 to 46,000,000 pounds in 1896, while that of exports rose from 104,000,000 pounds to 115,000,000 pounds in the same period. There is in the above two comparisons ample demonstration of the satisfactory state of manufacturing industries, which have not only developed an increased export value of about 10,000,000 pounds ($50,000,000) during that time when prices for manufactures generally have been falling, but they have also to an enormous extent replaced the formerly imported manufactured goods.

The above tribute to German prosperity under protection, coming from a British official representative at the German capital, fully sustains the reports which come through other sources of the phenomenal prosperity of Germany under protection.

RUSSIA.

Russia, after a series of experiments with free trade, has recently adopted a thoroughly protective tariff system. The Russian tariff at the beginning of the century was moderately protective, but this feature was abandoned in 1819, but after a comparatively short experiment protective duties were again adopted until 1849, from which time until 1876 more moderate duties prevailed, while from 1877 to the present time duties have been levied with a view to protecting Russian productions and Russian industries. That the protective system has been successful there can be no doubt. The wonderful prosperity of Russian manufacturing and industrial interests in the last few years is well known, and an official testimonial to that fact is found in the report of M. Witte, the Russian minister of finance in his report of 1897, commenting on the new tariff rates adopted from time to time since 1880. In that report he said:

All these measures which have exerted such a favorable influence on the development of Russia's productive forces were taken by three of my predecessors. During a period of twenty years the Government has remained firm in its protection of national production, and the results obtained during this period by Russian industry fully justify such a policy. From the recent extensive labors of the committee of experts, in which several hundreds of scientists and practical specialists took part, the Government obtained a plentiful supply of materials for forming an opinion of the present condition of our industries. The experts' verdict showed that almost every branch of industries has progressed greatly in quantity and quality; many new branches of industry have sprung up and expanded, while those which already existed have developed and grown stronger. It is enough to speak of the vast progress in metallurgy, manufacture of machinery, coal mining, and the petroleum, chemical, and cotton industries, in the cultivation of cotton, in wine making, and in many other branches. Such cheering results are the consequence of the protective policy recently adopted by the Government.

FRANCE.

The industrial development of France from the close of the Napoleonic wars to 1860, says Mr. Curtiss, is without parallel in any continental country. Under the protection which then existed the growth of manufactures was rapid and successful in every particular.

In 1860, however, a commercial treaty was entered into between England and France, by which France removed all prohibitions from imports and substituted duties ranging from 20 to 30 per cent on competing manufactures. The experiment of this duty, which continued until 1882, was unsatisfactory, and the French Government refused to renew it in that year and a more vigorous protective policy was restored. In 1885 the duties on foreign products were raised, and in 1891 a thoroughly protective tariff was enacted, under which the great prosperity and industrial activity which now exist have come to that country.

OTHER EUROPEAN COUNTRIES.

The tariffs of several other of the continental countries of Europe, except Netherlands, are now protective in their character. In Austria-Hungary, where duties were lowered after the war of 1866, the protective system was resumed in 1882 and was supplemented in 1887 by higher rates, of which Mr. Curtiss says:

Three hundred and fifty-seven articles are enumerated, of which 56 are free of duty. The decrease of imports has been regular; new establishments are being founded by Austrian firms and Austrian money; the rate of wages is on the increase, and skilled labor is in great demand.

Belgium, prior to 1844, was a free-trade country. In that year, as the result of an investigation and report made in 1842 upon the state of industry and commerce, Belgium adopted a protective tariff, of the effect of which a Belgian writer said: "If anyone had left the country in 1835, after having visited our principal manufacturing centers, and were to come back to it now, he would be struck with the transformation they have undergone, the advance they have achieved. He would find a numerous, intelligent population of working people, where a quarter of a century ago he would have seen nothing but a few houses scattered at wide intervals over extensive plains. As a consequence, production—except of articles of food—has outrun the needs of population, and we are obliged to seek for foreign outlets." The British secretary of legation at Brussels, speaking of the "astounding productiveness of industry and the purchasing power of the people," says:

Wages have risen absolutely and in a proportion quite remarkable; and he quoted authorities to the effect that while in 1840 they amounted to 500,000,000 francs, they now exceed 1,625,000,000 francs.

The tariff of Denmark is similar to that of Belgium, and that of Sweden and Norway is described by the British consul at Copenhagen, who says:

The chief characteristic of the producing and commercial conditions of Sweden and Norway are the marked development of native industries, shielded by protective duties; the development of direct communications by sea between Sweden and other countries thus greatly diminishing the importation or transit of goods from England.

Sweden and Norway—

Says Mr. Curtiss—

are now enjoying a thoroughly protective tariff—perhaps on the whole more protective than that of any other European country. The protection of years gave way to lower duties in both countries for several years preceding 1890, but duties were gradually increased until, in 1892, was enacted what has been termed the "McKinley bill of Sweden." To Sweden and Norway, least of all, can the United States look for a market, because the people of that country are practicing our own methods of protecting and promoting home industries with great success.

Numerous other instances might be given of the steady growth of the protective system in all parts of the world. The tariff of many of the British colonies is now thoroughly protective. This is true not only of Canada, but of several of the colonies of Australia, while recent changes in the rates of duty in India have been protective in their tendency. This example is extended still farther to the East, until Japan, in the new tariff which was recently adopted as an accompaniment to the gold standard, advanced her rates of duties materially, making some of them protective in character, and finding as an immediate result a reduction of imports and, according to the latest reports, renewed activity in manufacturing and domestic industries.

This review of the tariff situation in European countries indicates that the long period of low tariffs produced low wages and depressed labor; but this extremely unsatisfactory condition was followed by a reaction in favor of the protective system, and it is the result of the bitter experiences with free trade that the people of those countries are now building up their own industries and establishing the improved conditions for labor which are beginning to make themselves apparent in increased wages and increased commercial activity with other parts of the world.

SOME FACTS ABOUT SUGAR—AMERICAN FARMERS NEED NOT FEAR COMPETITION OF THE TROPICS.

Mr. Speaker, no subject interests the farmers of the United States more than that of the possibility of their being able to supply the $100,000,000 worth of sugar which our people consume annually, and some facts which have recently been presented showing the rapid growth in the percentage which beets are now supplying of the world's sugar shows that they are fully justified in their ambition.

I desire to present herewith a series of tables showing the production of cane and beet sugar in the world for a term of years and the production and consumption of sugar in the United States. They present a series of important facts with reference to sugar, of which the United States is the world's largest consumer as to quantity, and in which the people are largely interested, both because of the large amount of money now expended abroad for that article, the possibility of its production at home, and the relative prices of raw and refined sugar at the present time and in earlier years. The table shows the per capita consumption in the United States, the imports, the home consumption of cane and beet sugar, the per cent which home consumption forms of the total consumption, the world's production of beet sugar, the per cent produced from beet and cane respectively, and the price per pound of raw and refined sugar respectively in each year from 1879 to 1899. It will be seen that the imports of sugar during the twenty-year period have doubled in quantity and that the home production has but to keep pace with the increased consumption, the percentage of the total consumption which is supplied by the home producers differing little in 1898 and 1899 from that of the beginning of the period under consideration.

Some interesting facts regarding the beet-sugar production of the United States and in the world are shown by this and a subsequent table. It will be seen by an examination of the statement regarding the world's production of sugar that beets produced, in 1879, 45 per cent of the world's sugar, and in 1899–1900, 66 per cent. An examination of another smaller table which follows will show that in 1840, when slave labor produced nearly all the cane sugar of the world, beets, which were grown in the temperate zone and chiefly by free labor, were only able to produce 4.35 per cent of the world's sugar, although the world had then known for a hundred years that sugar could be produced from beets. Between 1840 and 1870 slavery ceased to exist, and cane-sugar production was necessarily carried on by free labor, placing it in that particular on a level with beet sugar.

Simultaneously with this development of the withdrawal of slave labor from the production of cane sugar, beets increased their percentage of the world's sugar supply from 4.35, in 1840, to 14 per cent, in 1850; 20 per cent, in 1860; 34 per cent, in 1870, and, as above indicated, they now produce 66 per cent, or two-thirds of the world's sugar. This fact shows that the farmers of the Temperate Zone need no longer fear the competition of the Tropics in the production of sugar, and especially if a reasonable protection is granted them, as is the case in the United States, as is indicated by the rapid growth of beet-sugar production in the United States shown in the accompanying table. The farmers of the country have been encouraged by the Republican party in their ambition to produce the sugar of the country. The experience of other nations and of other parts of the Temperate Zone has shown that sugar can be produced from beets in great quantities and at very small cost and can successfully compete with cane sugar under the most favorable circumstances. Under the stimulus given to the beet-sugar production by Republican legislation, beet-sugar factories sprang up all over the United States, and the production of beet sugar has already reached large proportions and is increasing with wonderful rapidity.

The first thought which came to the minds of the farmers when the events following the war for the liberation of Cuba brought under our control certain tropical areas was whether or not the possession or control of tropical territory by the United States would injure, or perhaps destroy, the opportunities which they believed they had almost within their grasp for supplying the $100,000,000 worth of sugar which the people of the United States annually consume. This fear—if it reached the stage in which it could be called by that name—was answered in the negative by the Republican party when it passed the Porto Rican bill. The Democratic party fought with all of its power to prevent the enactment of that measure which placed a duty upon articles coming into the United States from Porto Rico. That duty was small, but it was an explicit declaration by the Republican party that it would not concede the power to fix such tariff as it might deem judicious against the products of cheap tropical labor wherever located and under whatever conditions. In other words, it was a distinct promise to the farmer that he need not fear that the Republican party would permit the cheap labor and cheap sugar of any tropical territory to be brought in in a manner which would destroy the infant industry of beet-sugar production which the farmers of the United States have, under the fostering care of the Republican party, been building up during the last few years.

The farmers of the Temperate Zone can produce beet sugar successfully in competition with the sugar cane of the Tropics when both are handled by free labor, and this advantage which the farmer of the Temperate Zone has will be strengthened in the United States so long as the Republican party retains its control and is enabled to apply the protective principle in the interests of its farmers as it did in the case of the Porto Rican bill, but against which the Democrats turned their every energy. With a few years of moderate protection against the cheap labor of the Tropics, the beet-sugar industry in the United States will be placed fairly and squarely upon its feet and will be fully able to contend with the cane-sugar industry of the Tropics, while meantime the improved condition of labor in the Tropics and the opportunities for better earnings which the guidance of the United States will give them will more nearly equalize the two systems of production.

One further fact in regard to the world's production and producing capacity is worthy of consideration in this connection, and that is that nearly two-thirds of the sugar now being imported into the United States comes from the islands of the Pacific. The total importation of sugar into the United States in the ten months ending with April, 1899, amounted to 3,303,026,763 pounds, and of this amount 1,180,442,362 pounds were from the East Indies, the Hawaiian Islands, and the Philippine Islands, thus indicating the possibilities of our Pacific territory to supply that portion of our consumption which it will be necessary to import until the farmers of the country are able to supply the home demand; and thus, instead of sending to other countries and other peoples the $100,000,000 per year which we have been annually expending for foreign-grown sugar, it may be expended under the American flag and in a manner which will benefit the people of those islands, and incidentally those of our own people who may enter upon business enterprises in them.

The final columns of the accompanying table, which show the average prices in New York of raw and refined sugar, are especially interesting in view of the current belief that the people of the United States are required to pay an excessive price for refined sugar as compared with the cost of the raw material imported. A comparison of the prices of raw and refined in each year from 1879, prior to the organization of the sugar trust, with those of recent years shows that the margin between raw and refined has been steadily reduced, and averaged in 1899 just one-half cent per pound against nearly 2 cents per pound in 1879 and 1880 and more than 2 cents per pound in 1881 and 1882.

The table which follows shows the production of cane and beet sugar in the principal producing countries of the world in the sugar year 1899–1900. It will be seen that Java, which lies just alongside the Philippines, is by far the largest cane-sugar producer of the world, but that Germany, Austria, France, and Russia produce greater quantities from beets than the most successful of the cane-growing countries of the world, thus suggesting our own possibilities in this line.

The following table shows the production of cane and beet sugar in the principal producing countries of the world in the sugar years 1898–1900:

Countries.	Cane-sugar production.	Countries.	Beet-sugar production.
	Tons.		Tons.
Java	*722,000	Germany	1,780,000
Cuba	400,000	Austria	1,120,000
Hawaiian Islands	275,000	France	960,000
Brazil	175,000	Russia	885,000
Mauritius	150,000	Belgium	290,000
Australia	140,000	Holland	170,000
Louisiana	132,000	All other	275,000
All other	868,000
Total	2,862,000	Total	5,480,000

*Exports.

The following table shows the world's production of beet and cane sugar, respectively, and the grand total in each year from 1872 to 1899, also the average price of sugar in foreign markets, the figures of cane-sugar production being those of Willett & Gray, of New York; beet sugar, those of Licht, of Europe, and those relating to price being obtained from statements supplied by importers into the United States of the cost in foreign countries of the sugars which they import. The figures relating to production are the crop years; those of price, fiscal years. The statements of quantity in each case are in thousands of tons:

World's production of beet and cane sugar and average price per pound, 1871–1899.

Years.	Beet, 1,000 tons.	Cane, 1,000 tons.	Total, 1,000 tons.	Price, cents.
1871–72	1,020	1,599	2,619	5.37
1872–73	1,210	1,793	3,003	5.35
1873–74	1,288	1,840	3,128	4.95
1874–75	1,219	1,712	2,931	4.35
1875–76	1,343	1,590	2,933	4.04
1876–77	1,045	1,673	2,718	4.91
1877–78	1,419	1,825	3,244	5.06
1878–79	1,571	2,019	3,581	4.16
1879–80	1,402	1,852	3,244	4.18
1880–81	1,748	1,911	3,659	4.41
1881–82	1,782	2,060	3,842	4.41
1882–83	2,147	2,107	4,254	4.37
1883–84	2,361	2,323	4,684	3.61
1884–85	2,545	2,351	4,896	2.67

World's production of beet and cane sugar and average price per pound, 1871–1899—Continued.

Years.	Beet, 1,000 tons.	Cane, 1,000 tons.	Total, 1,000 tons.	Price, cents.
1885–86	2,223	2,339	4,562	2.84
1886–87	2,733	2,345	5,078	2.50
1887–88	2,451	2,465	4,916	2.75
1888–89	2,725	2,263	4,988	3.21
1889–90	3,633	2,069	5,702	3.28
1890–91	3,710	2,555	6,265	3.03
1891–92	3,501	2,852	6,353	2.93
1892–93	3,428	3,045	6,473	3.09
1893–94	3,890	3,490	7,380	2.92
1894–95	4,792	3,530	8,322	2.15
1895–96	4,315	2,830	7,155	2.29
1896–97	4,954	2,864	8,818	2.01
1897–98	4,872	2,898	7,770	2.55
1898–99	4,977	2,995	7,973	2.39
1899–1900	5,510	2,904	8,414	.....

RESULTS ACCOMPLISHED BY WAR DEPARTMENT INCIDENT TO SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

Mr. Speaker, I want now to speak briefly of the work which has been accomplished under the various Departments of the Government during the past three years.

Prior to the outbreak of the Spanish-American war the strength of the Regular Army was 2,143 officers and 26,040 enlisted men. Under the President's first and second calls, April 23 and May 25, respectively, and the recruitment of the Regular Army to the maximum allowed by law, the strength of the Army, Regular and Volunteer, in August, 1898, was 11,108 officers and 203,609 enlisted men.

In the meantime a vast amount of work, which words fail to describe, was performed by the various staff departments, after day and night conferences with the chiefs thereof, in organizing, equipping, arming, disciplining, and advancing the volunteers to a state of efficiency for active field service, and later transporting the various organizations to the camps or rendezvous to which they had been assigned.

On May 30, 1898, instructions were issued by the Department directing an expedition, under command of Maj. Gen. Wm. R. Shafter, to proceed to Cuba to "capture the garrison at Santiago and assist in capturing the harbor and fleet of the enemy." This expedition sailed on June 14, 1898, from Tampa, Fla., with 815 officers and 16,072 enlisted men on 33 transports, which had been collected with extraordinary dispatch and energy by the Quartermaster's Department, and arrived at Daiquiri on June 21 and proceeded to disembark the next day. The troops immediately advanced and captured Siboney, the only resistance being a few scattering shots, thus establishing a base of supplies 8 miles nearer Santiago.

On the morning of June 24, 1898, a dismounted cavalry brigade advanced on and attacked the enemy at La Guasima, and, after a stubborn resistance, carried their intrenchments.

On July 1 an attack was made on El Caney, and, after a battle of varying intensity during most of the day, the place was carried by assault about 4 p. m. In the meantime preparations for an attack on San Juan Hill were completed, and, after a fierce encounter, the American forces drove the enemy from his intrenchments and blockhouses, thus gaining a position that sealed the fate of Santiago.

On July 8 the commander of the Spanish forces offered to march out of the city of Santiago with arms and baggage provided he would not be molested before reaching Holguin, and to surrender to the American forces the territory then occupied by him. This proposition was rejected. On the morning of July 11 the surrender of the city was again demanded and reply made that the demand had been communicated to the general in chief of the Spanish forces. On the morning of the 14th General Toral agreed to surrender upon the basis of his army, the Fourth Army Corps, being returned to Spain. The terms of surrender finally agreed upon included 22,789 Spanish troops; of these 22,137 were repatriated at the expense of the United States.

The formal surrender took place on the 17th of July, 1898, and at noon of that date the American flag was raised over the governor's palace with appropriate ceremonies.

The total number of Spanish troops on the island of Cuba, as shown by September, 1898, rolls, was 10,956 officers and 215,134 enlisted men, classed as follows: Regulars, 5,093 officers, 115,355 enlisted men; volunteers, 5,258 officers, 80,504 enlisted men; irregular volunteer troops, 605 officers, 19,275 enlisted men.

On August 4, 1898, orders were issued for the repatriation of the troops in General Shafter's command, and after arrival in the United States they went into camp at Montauk Point, Long Island, N. Y., which, in the meantime, had been fitted up for their reception.

On July 7, 1898, Congress ratified and confirmed the cession of the Hawaiian Islands, made by the government of that republic, and on July 29, 1898, a force of 57 officers and 1,464 enlisted men, commanded by Col. Thos. Barber, First New York Volunteer Infantry, sailed for Honolulu to garrison that place.

The first expeditionary force sailed for Manila, P. I., on May 25

and arrived June 30, 1898; the second sailed June 15 and arrived July 17, and the third left on June 29 and arrived July 25. The total number of officers and men in these three expeditions was 10,920, and they were under the command of Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt. The city of Manila was captured, with the assistance of the Navy, August 13, 1898, and the American flag raised the same date. Subsequently, between this date and February 19, 1899, 17 other expeditions were sent to the Philippine Islands, making a total of 1,054 officers and 28,340 enlisted men on those islands in March, 1899. This force, comprised mostly of volunteers, has since been repatriated, and Regular Army organizations and United States volunteers to the number of 63,000 comprise the force at present in the Philippines.

On July 21, 1898, an expedition sailed for Porto Rico, Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, Commanding General United States Army, in command, with 3,554 officers and enlisted men, for the purpose of attacking that island, which was garrisoned by 17,340 Spanish soldiers, regular and volunteer. This expedition arrived at Guanica July 25, and after a short skirmish the American flag was raised at that place. Subsequently five other expeditions sailed for Porto Rico, making a total of 641 officers and 16,332 enlisted men of the United States Army, regular and volunteer, on that island in August, 1898. Porto Rico was practically subjugated when the peace protocol was signed, and instructions issued for the cessation of hostilities August 13, 1898.

Between August 14, 1899, and April 2, 1900, 11,292 tons of food stuffs, the value of which was $737,397.26, have been sent to Porto Rico for indigent Porto Ricans by the Commissary Department, and an additional $1,000 worth distributed to them from the subsistence depot on that island. Hundreds of tons have also been contributed by the general public and distributed under the supervision of the military authorities on the island.

The signing of the peace protocol, August 12, 1898, inaugurated the work of discharge of about 30,000 war enlistments of the Regular Army and the muster-out and distribution throughout the country of State volunteer organizations, involving the repatriation, exclusive of regular troops, of 63,198 officers and enlisted men from Porto Rico, Cuba, Philippine Islands, and Hawaii, causing the recruitment, mobilization, and movement to those islands of fresh regular troops and the organization of 25 regiments of United States volunteers and the Porto Rican battalion, all under command of officers of the Regular Army.

In Cuba the military government has reorganized the insular police (rural guards) and placed that of each muncipality upon a new basis; it has cleaned the cities, and by the introduction of modern sanitation has secured a most satisfactory decrease in the mortality. The customs and insular taxation system have been placed upon such a basis that the island is not only self-supporting, but is enabled to make important improvements. Much progress has recently been made in establishing a modern school system, while the United States postal system has superseded the former inefficient service.

In Porto Rico boards of health have been appointed in municipalities and sanitation has made great strides; the building of good roads has been conducted on an extensive scale. The schools have been reorganized, modern methods and text-books being introduced. The burdens of taxation upon the people have been greatly reduced, while the efficiency of the governmental service has been greatly argumented. An up-to-date postal service is now enjoyed by the people, while the judiciary and police systems are in much more satisfactory condition than formerly.

In the Philippines, in addition to the former ports of Manila, Iloilo, Cebu, and Zamboango, there are now open to the commerce of the world twenty-five other ports. Initial steps have been taken, under Army officers, for the civil reorganization of municipalities. The United States postal service has closely followed the troops. Public schools are being opened, in which the most approved American text-books are in use.

The Signal Corps has performed its work with unequaled promptness, ability, and success. The telephone, telegraph, and flag have kept the President in touch, through commanding generals, not only with every Army corps and their advanced skirmish lines, but with cooperating squadrons of the Navy.

In constructive work the corps has built nearly seven thousand miles of telegraph, and is to-day operating these lines in Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines with an efficiency and economy hitherto unknown in those countries.

Immediately preceding the outbreak of the war with Spain there were available for the defense of the seacoast 63 heavy guns and 88 mortars. The work was pushed rapidly by the Engineer Department, with the result that by August 1, 1898, there were mounted for defense a total of 121 heavy guns, 144 mortars, and 26 rapid-fire guns. In addition, 25 of the principal harbors of the United States had been effectively defended by submarine mines. On June 30, 1899, there had been mounted 169 heavy guns, 176 mortars and 46 rapid-fire guns, and a large number of additional batteries were under construction, and the principal harbors of the United States rendered fairly secure against a naval attack.

Notwithstanding the additional exacting duties necessitated by this war, the numerous river and harbor improvements and other public engineering works in the charge of the Corps of Engineers, representing an annual expenditures of over $25,000,000, were administered without the slightest interruption or sacrifice of the public interests.

The sudden expansion of the Army imposed a most difficult task upon the Medical Department—a task which was worked out with the greatest success and the highest credit. War inevitably entails disease, suffering, and death, but, it can be safely said, in no war have the sick and wounded received so many comforts and been so tenderly nursed.

The health of our troops serving in the newly acquired territory has been guarded by every provision that modern science can provide, and the sickness and mortality from disease has been kept far below what was to be expected. The ratio of deaths per thousand of mean strength for the first year of the war was but 25.73, while that for the first year of the war of 1861–65 was 45.87.

It is a fact well worthy of consideration to state that the Quartermaster-General's Office, which at the outbreak of the war did not have a transport that was fitted for the transportation of troops, has to-day the finest transport service in the world, and has transported about 300,000 passengers many thousands of miles at sea without the sacrifice of a single life due to any fault of the Army transport service.

This service is a revelation in the method of transporting troops, and the representatives of other nations have requested and been furnished data upon which to pattern after it.

The Ordnance Department armed and equipped the troops for the Spanish war with a rapidity which must be regarded as gratifying. The arms and equipments were ready as soon as the troops could be mustered in and organized, and the material distributed. The productive capacity of the arsenals was quickly expanded and contracts were made with private manufacturers, so that in one hundred days after the first call for troops, the Ordnance Department had made or purchased 250,000 sets of infantry equipments and 26,000 sets of horse equipments. It had also provided the cannon and complete outfit of 30 mounted batteries of 6 guns each, and could easily have provided twice that number if they had been required. It had also provided, or was in a position to furnish at once, a large variety of mountain guns and machine guns, with their ammunition and equipments, but not many of these were called for.

The work of the Pay Department, from the commencement of the Spanish-American war to its close and during the continuance of hostilities in the Philippines in suppression of insurrection, has been phenomenally laborious and exacting, but the officers of this department have met every requirement of duty and zeal and promptitude and to the satisfaction of the Army.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, this department of the military service has been charged with the care of nearly $92,000,000, about $77,000,000 of which was, up to June 30, 1899, disbursed on account of the war without loss to the Government on any account whatever and without complaint of any character from the Army.

When war with Spain became imminent great efforts by the Military Information Division of the Adjutant-General's Office were made to ascertain the strength, the composition, the location, and fortifications of the Spanish forces in Cuba. This was successfully done. Maps of Cuba and Porto Rico on a large scale were prepared, and books were compiled giving all obtainable information in regard to these islands.

Later, when it became evident that military operations in the Philippines would be carried on, a pamphlet (illustrated) giving information in regard to those islands was prepared, and maps compiled from the best sources obtainable were prepared and issued.

There have been mustered in, organized, mobilized, distributed at home and abroad, and finally repatriated and mustered out of the service, and sent to their homes, 223,235 volunteers. There have been enlisted by the general recruiting service 35,000 United States volunteers, organized into 25 regiments, 22 of which have been transported to the Philippine Islands, the remaining 3 having been organized there from the discharged volunteers and regulars.

There have been enlisted and reenlisted for the Regular Army between May 1, 1898, and January 31, 1900, 99,024 men, the present status being approximately 64,000 Regular Army and 35,000 United States volunteers.

Commissions have been issued since the beginning of the war to 632 officers of the Regular Army, 66 of which were for the various staff departments, and 3,874 United States volunteer officers.

This Department has received, carefully considered, acted upon, and sent since the beginning of the war 400,806 telegrams, and approximately 2,000,000 written communications.

WORK OF THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. Speaker, under the present Administration the Navy has shown itself worthy of its best traditions. The great victories at Manila Bay and Santiago, which shed undying fame upon this arm of the national defense, were in no sense accidents. They were the results of years of careful training of officers and men and the thorough preparation of the fleets for the crucial test of war. For this preparation, this readiness to meet the supreme moment for which a navy is constructed and maintained, those who administer the affairs of the Navy should have credit. The glory goes to our heroes who are in command afloat, and to those officers and men who seize the opportunities of war to render conspicuous service; but in remembering them, let us not forget those who labor without ceasing to secure the fleet in condition of high efficiency and to place at the disposal of the commanding officers an abundance of the supplies, without which the fleet is powerless.

As early as January 11, 1898, more than a month before the Maine was destroyed in the harbor of Havana, the Secretary of the Navy began to mobilize the ships of the Navy and to take such measures as would place at the disposal of the officers in command the full measure of our naval force.

Immediately upon the passage of the bill appropriating $50,000,000 for the national defense, a board was organized for the purchase of auxiliary ships, and after careful examination 102 ships of various types were secured at a total cost of $17,956,850. Of these vessels but two, the New Orleans and the Albany, were strictly vessels of war. The others were merchant ships, pleasure yachts, tugs, etc., which were rapidly overhauled at the different navy-yards, provided with such light-armor protection as was practical, and suitably armed.

Between March 16 and June 30 all these vessels were purchased and as rapidly as overhauled were placed in commission and put into active service. They were used not only as auxiliary war vessels, but to supply the fleets with coal and ammunition and with fresh water and fresh provisions. For the care of the sick and wounded the Solace was fitted out as a complete hospital, and to make repairs to vessels at sea the Vulcan was fitted out as a modern machine shop. In order to meet the increased demands on the navy-yards it was necessary to practically double the force between February 15 and the middle of April.

In addition to the ships which were added to the Navy by purchase, 15 revenue cutters and 4 light-house tenders were transferred from the Treasury Department to the Navy, and 4 of the great steamers of the International Navigation Company and 1 of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company were chartered. There were in all 128 ships added to the regular naval establishment, and it became at once necessary to provide officers and men to man them. For this purpose 225 officers on the retired list were ordered to active duty, 856 officers were appointed for temporary service, and the enlisted force was increased from 12,500 to over 24,000 men.

It was an enormous undertaking to make all these additional ships ready for war service, to secure the necessary guns for them, and to keep the fleets supplied with coal, ammunition, and provisions. But this was only a part of the work which the Navy Department had in hand. For the protection of the coasts of the United States an auxiliary naval force was created, which was officered and manned by the Naval Militia of the United States. A coast signal service was established, which kept practically our entire coast line from Maine to Texas under observation, to give warning of the approach of an enemy's vessel or of suspicious craft of any kind.

The operations of the fleets of the Asiatic and North Atlantic squadrons are so well known that it is hardly necessary to speak of them in any detail. Their work was so well done that the power of Spain was swept from the sea, and Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, which she had misgoverned for centuries, were taken from under her dominion.

But the claims of the administration of the Navy to the approval of the people rest not alone on its war record. The upbuilding of the new Navy has gone steadily forward, and Congress has cooperated with the Department in the desire to materially increase our naval strength.

Since the 4th of March, 1897, Congress has authorized the construction of 49 ships, with a total displacement of 155,484 tons. This includes 6 battle ships of the first class, 3 armored cruisers of the first class, 4 monitors, and 6 protected cruisers. If the present naval bill becomes a law as it passed the House we must add to this formidable list 2 battle ships of the first class, 3 armored cruisers of the first class, and 3 protected cruisers, with a total displacement of 90,000 tons. There have been completed and placed in commission in the same time a total of 32 vessels, with an aggregate displacement of 52,681 tons. It is an unexampled record.

A strong Navy not only adds to our prestige abroad, but makes the rights of our country respected wherever they may exist. The money expended does its part in lending a stimulus in many branches of trade and manufacture and in the employment of labor.

It is difficult to form an intelligent idea of the number of people who are furnished employment by the creation and maintenance of our Navy. One would have to examine the rolls of the great private establishments which make the steel and build the ships, and furnish ammunition and supplies. But some idea of the importance of the navy-yards to the laborers of the country can be formed from the fact that in 1898 over 21,000 men were certified for employment by the labor boards at the various navy-yards. This number, however, is in excess of the number usually employed, as 1898 was the year of the war with Spain. In 1899, on the other hand, over 12,000 men were certified by the boards of labor at the various yards.

To this Administration must also go the credit for the reorganization of the personnel of the Navy. For years the effort had been made to secure legislation to increase the flow of promotion of officers of the line, so that they might reach command rank at a suitable age. But the efforts had borne no fruit until the present Administration took the matter in hand. They succeeded in drawing a bill consolidating the line and the Engineer Corps. This bill met with the approval of the service and of Congress, and became a law on the 3d of March, 1899.

This bill also provided for an increase of over 50 per cent in the number of officers and enlisted men in the Marine Corps, and brought this branch of the service up to a total strength of 211 officers and 6,000 men. The enlisted force of the Navy has also been largely increased during the past three years, the quota now allowed by law being 17,500 men and 2,500 apprentices.

It has been the desire of the Administration that the Navy should grow, not alone in the number of ships, but in all its branches. Probably the most pressing need of the service when Mr. Long took charge of the Department was for additional docking facilities, and Congress, in response to his recommendations, authorized the construction of four stone and concrete docks and one steel floating dock capable of docking vessels of the largest size. (If the present naval bill becomes a law, two other docks, or six in all, will have been provided for.) Coaling stations equipped with modern appliances for the economical and rapid handling of coal have been established or are in process of establishment at Portsmouth, N. H.; Boston, Mass.; New London, Conn.; New York, N. Y.; League Island, Pa.; Port Royal, S. C.; Pensacola, Fla.; Dry Tortugas, Fla., and in San Francisco Bay.

Suitable coaling stations are also in process of erection at Honolulu, H. I.; Pago Pago, Samoan Islands; the island of Guam; at Manila, in the Philippines, and at the naval station, San Juan, Porto Rico. These coaling stations in our new possessions, especially in the Pacific, furnish greatly increased facilities to our naval vessels, and, in the event of war, would prove of inestimable advantage. It has, indeed, been the aim of the Administration to extend our naval power in every direction. The upbuilding of the navy-yard plants has been pursued with great vigor, and the Department has had the hearty cooperation of Congress in this work. The electric plants have been materially increased and modern machinery has been installed wherever the needs of the service demanded.

It is, of course, impossible to enter into the detailed work which has been done in this connection; but it is not too much to say that the efforts of the Administration will result in putting our navy-yards in a condition to meet every demand which may be made upon them. They are capable of making the most extensive repairs to ships of all classes, and with the increased docking facilities which are in process of construction, this branch of the naval establishment will be brought to a point of efficiency where it is in keeping with the fleet in being, and with such increases as may be made in the near future.

The value of the coaling and repair stations established under Secretary Long, especially at outlying points in the Pacific, must constantly increase as commerce with our new possessions grows.

At the beginning of the war with Spain Honolulu was the only port out of the United States in which we possessed coaling facilities. When we recall the great distances in the Pacific, and the fact that under the rules of international law a belligerent ship is permitted to take on board in a neutral port only sufficient coal to enable her to reach her nearest home port, we begin to realize the importance of these provisions for furnishing supplies and making the necessary repairs to our ships of war.

It is to be hoped that the efforts in this direction are but the beginning of a policy under which provision will be made for the maintenance of the fleets of this Government whenever naval operations may occur. May the coming years see this policy amplified and enlarged, so that the ships of war of the United States may find suitable depots of supplies in all quarters of the globe.

OUR NATIONAL FINANCES.

Mr. Speaker, four achievements in the management of the public finances and revenues under the Administration of President McKinley stand out with marked prominence:

First, in point of success, is the Dingley tariff; second, the reform in the currency; third, the war loan of 1898; and fourth, the settlement of the Pacific Railroad indebtedness.

Perhaps never before in the history of this country have so many important fiscal achievements been accomplished in so brief time. With the exception of the Pacific Railroad settlement, these events bear, to a considerable degree, relationship to each other. Underlying the success of the war loan of 1898 and the reform in the currency was the basis of prosperity established by prompt and effective tariff legislation. The President well understood the necessity for speedy modification in the tariff. Within forty-eight hours after his inauguration he issued a proclamation for an extra session of Congress to assemble March 15, 1897. The brief message sent to Congress when it convened on that day clearly demonstrated the urgent necessity for prompt action. Said the President:

> Congress should promptly correct the existing condition. Ample revenues must be supplied not only for the ordinary expenses of the Government, but for the prompt payment of liberal pensions and the liquidation of the principal and interest of the public debt. In raising revenue, duties should be so levied upon foreign products as to preserve the home market, so far as possible, to our own producers; to revive and increase manufactures; to relieve and encourage agriculture; to increase our domestic and foreign commerce; to aid and develop mining and building; and to render to labor in every field of useful occupation the liberal wages and adequate rewards to which skill and industry are justly entitled. The necessity of the passage of a tariff law which shall provide ample revenue need not be further urged. The imperative demand of the hour is the prompt enactment of such a measure, and to this object I earnestly recommend that Congress shall make every endeavor. Before other business is transacted let us first provide sufficient revenue to faithfully administer the Government without the contracting of further debt or the continued disturbance of our finances.

The House of Representatives promptly responded to the President's message. On the same day in which it was read in the House, the late Mr. Dingley, of Maine, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, introduced the new tariff bill. Such unusual expedition had been made possible only by the untiring work of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means for several months previous.

The bill was passed in the House of Representatives March 31, 1897, less than a month after the inauguration of President McKinley and two weeks after Congress had convened in extra session. It passed the Senate July 7, 1897, with amendments. Two days later its consideration was begun by a conference committee of the two Houses, and it finally passed the House July 19 and the Senate July 24. It became a law on the latter day when the President signed the bill. Thus, within five months (no other tariff law was ever passed in so short a time) after the inauguration of the President a new tariff law was placed on the statute books. Under its beneficent influences the United States has enjoyed a commercial and industrial revival the greatest in its history. The hopes of the President as expressed in his message have been realized; ample revenues were provided for the ordinary expenses of the Government, and in providing them duties were levied upon foreign products so as to preserve the home markets; manufactures have revived and increased; agriculture has been relieved and encouraged; domestic and foreign commerce have been increased; mining and building have been aided and developed, and more liberal wages have been paid to labor.

Under the operation of the Wilson Act, from September 1, 1894, to July 24, 1897, a period of thirty-five months, there was a total deficit of $108,003,243. This deplorable state of the revenues was largely responsible for that lack of confidence which prolonged the hard times inaugurated by the panic of 1893.

The Dingley tariff became a law July 24, 1897. Under its operation ample revenues have been provided, as urged by President McKinley. During the period of thirty-two months the law has been in force, July 24, 1897, to April 1, 1900, the receipts of the Government from all sources, exclusive of Pacific Railroad items, were $1,224,326,608. Deducting from these receipts the Treasury Department's estimate of collections under the War Revenue Act, amounting to $183,708,538, there were net receipts of $1,040,618,070. The expenditures for the same period aggregated $1,366,663,406, and deducting the Treasury Department's estimate of war expenditures of $372,000,000, the net expenditures for the period stand at $994,663,406, leaving for the thirty-two months' operation of the Dingley tariff an excess of net receipts over net expenditures of $45,954,664.

It is proper to compare this surplus under the Dingley law with the deficit of $108,003,243, which was shown at the end of thirty-five months' operation of the Wilson Act.

"In raising revenue," said the President in his message, "duties should be so levied upon foreign products as to preserve the home market, so far as possible, to our own producers." That the home market has been preserved to our own producers is shown by the great reduction in the importation of manufactured articles. In the fiscal year 1896 the imports for consumption of manufactured articles were $328,937,228, and in the fiscal year 1897, all of which elapsed prior to the enactment of the Dingley law, they were $323,324,920. In the fiscal years 1898 and 1899 they averaged about $240,000,000 per year, being in 1898, $227,467,249, and in 1899, $259,801,751. Thus, in manufactured articles the reduction in importations immediately following the enactment of the Dingley law has averaged $75,000,000 per annum, while the amounts consumed by the home market have greatly increased, as is shown by the great increase in the importation of raw material for use of manufacturers, stated in the paragraph which now follows:

The President urged that the new duties be so levied as "to revive and increase manufactures." In the fiscal year 1897 the imports for consumption of articles in a crude condition which enter into the various processes of domestic industry amounted to $207,268,155, and in the three years 1895, 1896, and 1897 averaged less than $200,000,000 annually, while in the calendar year 1899 the imports of this class amounted to $267,493,950, an increase of nearly $70,000,000 over the average for the three years of low tariff, in which many of these articles, notably wool, were upon the free list. At present the importation of manufacturers' materials is running at the rate of $28,000,000 per month, or more than 50 per cent higher than the monthly average in the year prior to the enactment of the Dingley law and to the recommendation above quoted.

The President also urged that the new duties should be so levied as "to relieve and encourage agriculture." That agriculture has been relieved and encouraged is shown by the increased prices for agricultural products, all of which have materially advanced in the home market, and by the large increase in exportation in the products of agriculture, which in the fiscal year 1899 were $100,000,000 greater than in the fiscal year 1897, and in 1898 were $200,000,000 in excess of those of 1897.

The message also recommended that the new duties should be so levied as "to aid and develop mining." That mining has been greatly encouraged is amply shown by the figures relating to the two great mining industries, coal and iron. The coal production of 1899 exceeds 200,000,000 tons, against 179,000,000 in 1897 and 171,000,000 in 1896, and has placed the United States at the head of the world's producers of this article, our product in 1899 being greater than that of any other country of the world. The pig-iron production in 1899 was 13,620,703 tons, against 9,652,680 tons in 1897 and 8,623,127 tons in 1896. In pig iron, as in coal, the United States now holds the first place in the world's production.

And, finally, the President urged that in raising revenue duties should be so levied as "to render to labor in every field of useful occupation the liberal wages and adequate rewards to which skill and industry are justly entitled." That the wages of labor have been greatly increased in every line of industry is evidenced by the frequent reports of increased wages published from time to time. In an address before the Trades League of Philadelphia, January 25, 1898, Hon. Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury, reviewed in general the increase in wages which had taken place under the administration of President McKinley, as follows:

> Only a few weeks ago worsted manufacturers in Rhode Island restored the wage scale of 1893 in their mills, thus granting an increase of 20 per cent in the pay of about 25,000 operatives. * * * In the city of Philadelphia numerous woolen mills have restored the wages of 1893, and are so active that it is difficult and sometimes impossible to secure the help required to operate them; and, in contrast to the depression in cotton textiles, woolen manufactures are booming all over the country. * * * Within a few weeks after the November election of 1896, 15,000 men, idle for a long time, were put to work in the window-glass industry. Since then, as the revival has progressed, instances of advances in wage rates and of increases in numbers employed have multiplied. The resumption of work in rolling mills during the summer in Alabama, Maryland, and Ohio gave employment to thousands of men. Indeed, in iron and steel and the industries directly dependent upon the consumption of iron as material I have it upon authority that there is an increase of at least 267,000 men employed over the preceding year. In addition to this large increase in the working forces employed in iron and steel and dependent branches, advances in wages ranging from 10 to 20 per cent have been made, and in some cases much greater, as the result of wages paid on a tonnage basis.
>
> Since the passage of the tariff bill the tin-plate industry has wonderfully revived, and wages in this line have since the summer been increased by rates varying from 8 to 12 per cent. The weekly output of coke at the end of 1897 was more than double what it was at the close of 1896, and in the Connellsville coke works there has been an increase in the number actually engaged of from 10 to 20 per cent. The voluntary advance in wages by the leading companies in the coke industry has benefited thousands of men. The advance in wages of glass workers, determined upon at the close of the year, is so recent that Mr. Bryan must know of it. The pottery industry of Trenton during recent years has been greatly depressed, with many failures, and not half the hands have been employed until recently. Wages have now been advanced more than 12 per cent, and there is a great increase in the number employed in this district, to the extent at this time of probably 5,000 or more. It was made public so recently as last September by an official report of the New York trades union that there was then an increase of 34 per cent in the number of their men employed, compared with the previous year.
>
> Near the close of November last the wage scale of the Missouri Pacific in its shops at Fort Scott was restored to what it was before the reduction of 1893. I have an accurate list of more than 250 mills, factories, and enterprises that have during the last six months resumed work, many of them having been idle since 1896, when the depression became more acute as the result of the agitation for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, "without the aid or consent of any other nation." Most of them have advanced wages over the old scale. All of them are running full time, most of them double time, and in many fires are now never drawn nor the wheels stopped, three shifts being required to meet the heavy demands. This all indicates a great increase in working forces.

Some recent reports, selected at random, covering various sections of the country, show that the movement toward higher wages has continued. The report of the Michigan Bureau of Labor and Industrial Statistics states that a canvass of the factories in that State shows that in 1,382 factories the number of employees was 24,262 greater than in the year 1898, the average increase in these factories being 17.6 per cent, while the wages paid were found to be higher than in 1898 and greatly in excess of 1897 and 1896. A canvass of several hundred shops and factories in the State of Ohio shows the number of hands employed in 1899 to be 68 per cent in excess of the number in 1896 and the total monthly pay roll 80 per cent greater than in 1896, the earnings of the workers in the shops and factories of the State of Ohio being estimated at $3,000,000 per month in excess of those received in 1896.

The twenty-first annual report of the bureau of labor statistics (1899) of Missouri shows that "the total amount of wages paid during 1898 (in the State) was $25,627,837, an increase over last year of $3,917,482, and the report, in giving the average wages earned by skilled and unskilled labor of both sexes, states that there is a slight average increase over the previous year."

The thirteenth annual report of the bureau of labor and industrial statistics (1899) of Maine shows that in average annual earnings of employees engaged in manufacturing cotton goods there was from 1890 to 1898 a decrease of $41.59, and during the past year (1899) an increase of $29.09.

CURRENCY REFORM.

The reform in the currency laws is the second great achievement in the administration of public finances under President McKinley. The act approved by the President March 14, 1900, firmly establishes the United States on a gold basis. Confidence in respect to the money standard is now at the highest, and the integrity of all our various forms of money has been declared by law. The uncertainties and misgivings of more than twenty years have been dispelled, and a broad foundation of stability and security laid, upon which may be reared the structure of enduring prosperity.

The task has been a difficult one. It was a problem which required patience and courage in its solution. The fact that three years elapsed before the measure became a law reveals the difficult road over which the workers for the reform movement passed. At the beginning of the first regular session of Congress under the Administration of President McKinley the Secretary of the Treasury submitted a plan the essential features of which are to be found in the act of March 14, 1900.

From December, 1897, until the bill became a law no opportunity was lost to advance the cause of currency reform. Notwithstanding an adverse majority in the Senate, the Committee on Banking and Currency in the House considered several measures. The work thus done in committee, while resulting in nothing definite, was yet of great value, for the long and trying discussion served to bring about a better understanding of the intricate questions to be settled. In anticipation of a Republican Senate and House in the Fifty-sixth Congress caucus committees were organized for the purpose of preparing, during the summer months of 1899, such a bill as would receive the support of the sound-money majority in both Houses. When the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress was convened the first bill introduced was that agreed upon by the House caucus committee. It took its place upon the Calendar as House bill No. 1. With all reasonable expedition the measure was then considered by both branches of the National Legislature, and so became a law March 14, 1900.

This currency law does something more than remove all doubt concerning the standard of value. It directs that all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity of value with this standard, and it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity. A reserve fund of $150,000,000 in gold coin and bullion is set apart in the Treasury for the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes of 1890, instead of $100,000,000, formerly recognized as the gold reserve. Such fund is required to be used for redemption purposes only. Ample provision is made for restoring the reserve fund in case it should fall below the $150,000,000 required to be maintained.

The act also contains provisions which give greater liberty to the organization of national banks. Under the old law no national bank could be organized with a capital less than $50,000. Under the new law the minimum capital required for organization is $25,000 in places the population of which does not exceed 3,000 inhabitants. The object of this provision is to extend better banking facilities to those smaller communities heretofore denied the privilege of organizing national banks. At the same time, the law contains a provision authorizing the banks to issue their circulating notes to the par of the United States bonds deposited as security, instead of only 90 per cent, as formerly. This illiberal requirement either resulted in meager profits to national banks issuing circulating notes, or, as was the case in some localities, in actual losses, the effect of which was to restrict the issuing of circulating notes. Such restriction was most severely felt in those communities where currency wants were greatest. Under the operation of the new law, from March 14 to April 30, 244 applications to organize national banks have been approved by the Comptroller of the Currency. The aggregate capital of these banks is $10,380,000. The total of national bank note circulation has been increased by the sum of $29,692,363.

Perhaps the most notable feature of the new currency law is that which relates to the refunding of the national debt. The 5 percents of 1904, the 4 percents of 1907, and the 3 percents of 1908, the principal of which aggregates $839,146,400, are authorized to be refunded into 2 per cent bonds, payable at the pleasure of the United States after thirty years from the date of their issue, and payable, principal and interest, in gold coin of the present standard value. The act contains a provision that the new 2 per cent bonds to be issued in exchange for the old threes, fours, and fives shall not be issued at less than par. The Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to conduct the refunding operations so that the old threes, fours, and fives should be received in exchange for the 2 percents on a basis of 2½ per cent. May 1, 1900, almost one-third of the outstanding threes, fours, and fives had been converted into 2 percents of the new issue, thus practically securing the success of the refunding plan. No other nation of the earth can boast of such an achievement as is the exchange of these old, high-rate interest bonds for bonds issued upon so low a basis as 2 per cent. Hitherto Great Britain has been regarded as the financial Gibraltar of the world, but while British consols bearing interest at the rate of 2¾ per cent per annum were selling 2 points below par, the United States was able to float a 2 per cent bond at par with ease. Such fact speaks volumes for the present financial strength of the United States. To float a 2 per cent bond at par of this kind means that the integrity of the dollar has been recognized in the law of the land, and there is faith in the honesty of our intentions and purposes for the future.

But faith in the public credit not alone supports the success of the refunding operations; that success is supplemented by the present national banking system, and without which it is doubtful if a 2 per cent bond could ever have been floated in this country. National banks are required to deposit bonds of the United States as security for circulating notes. Such bonds constitute an essential element of the national banking system. The competition which results from the necessities of the banks in this respect is, perhaps, the most potent reason why the United States can dispose of its bonds bearing so low a rate of interest.

The operations of the refunding provisions of the law from March 14 to May 1, 1900, are set forth in the following table:

	Amount refunded.	Saving in interest.	Premium paid.	Net saving.
Threes of 1908	$60,989,200	$5,080,415	$3,465,587	$1,614,828
Fours of 1907	158,791,700	22,998,909	18,522,306	4,476,603
Fives of 1904	40,239,850	4,619,841	4,046,878	572,963
Total	260,020,750	32,699,225	26,034,771	6,664,454

The "net saving" shown above represents the difference between the amount of interest the Government will pay upon the bonds refunded to the date of their respective maturities and the amount of interest the Government would have been obliged to pay had not the bonds above described been thus refunded.

It has been estimated that, should the total amount of bonds subject to the refunding provisions of the law be offered in exchange for the new 2 percents, the net savings of the Government will be in the neighborhood of $22,000,000. As noted, the net saving in refunding $260,020,750 to May 1, 1900, was $6,664,454.

FINANCES OF THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

The war with Spain served to demonstrate something more than the military and naval strength of the United States; it brought to light the vast resources in wealth of this country. In a general way it had been understood that the United States was a nation of great wealth, perhaps richer than any other country; but it needed the necessities of war to give an exhibition of our real financial strength. While it was recognized in the spring of 1898 that the Dingley tariff, under normal conditions, would produce ample revenues for the ordinary requirements of the Government, it was apparent that means must be taken at once to provide for the heavy war expenditures. April 25, 1898, two days after the declaration of war, a bill to provide additional revenues was introduced in the House of Representatives. It passed that body April 29 and the Senate June 4. The report of the conference committee was agreed to in the House June 9 and the Senate June 10. The bill became a law June 13, 1898, when it received the signature of the President. The necessities of the hour required that the Treasury should be supplied immediately with funds. The task was to raise a large sum, available for immediate use, in such a manner as to avoid injury to the rapidly reviving business of the country. The act recognized a true principle in public finance by making provision to borrow at once a sum sufficient to provide for war expenses, while at the same time additional taxes were levied in order that the loan might be supported by an increase in revenue. No better explanation of the tax features of the bill has been given than that made by the late Hon. Nelson Dingley on the occasion of its introduction in theHouse, as follows:

They [the Committee on Ways and Means] naturally have had recourse to the legislation of the period of the civil war, when so large an amount had to be raised, and they have found, after a careful consideration of the question of taxation, that on the whole it is better at the present time, and we trust that that may be all that may be necessary, that about $100,000,000 additional revenue should be raised, and that entirely through internal-revenue legislation. Hence the war-revenue bill which has been reported provides for internal-revenue taxes exclusively. These taxes have been selected, first, because we have the machinery for the collection of them now, and they can be collected with but slight additions to the force and with but slight increase of expense. We have selected them also because they were a source of revenue successfully seized upon during the civil war, and because they are taxes either upon articles of voluntary consumption or upon objects where the tax will be met by those who are ordinarily able to pay them; and we have refrained from putting a tax in a direction where it would be purely upon consumption, unless the consumption were an article of voluntary consumption, so that the consumer might regulate his own tax, following what is the accepted rule of taxation in all countries, with a view of imposing the least burden and disturbing the business of the country as little as possible.

The act authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow $400,000,000, or as much thereof as might be necessary, to defray the expenses of the war. Under this authority it was decided to borrow $200,000,000. The success which attended the floating of this loan is a memorable one. It was a popular loan in every sense of the word. The act itself directed that "the bonds authorized by this section shall be first offered at par as a popular loan under such regulations, prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, as will give opportunity to the citizens of the United States to participate in subscriptions to the loan, and in allotting said bonds the several subscriptions of individuals shall be first accepted, and the subscriptions for the lowest amounts shall be first allotted." The Secretary of the Treasury utilized every agency at his command to comply with this direction of Congress. All State and national banks were requested to cooperate with the Department; the express companies tendered their services free of cost in the handling of subscriptions; the Postmaster-General directed that all money-order post-offices be charged with the duty of receiving the orders of subscribers, and all the newspapers of the United States were invited to disseminate information concerning the loan. All these great agencies combined to place before the people the fullest information that could be given.

For a period of thirty-one days subscriptions were received, at the end of which time it was found that the total of subscriptions aggregated only a little under $1,400,000,000, or almost seven times the amount of bonds offered to the public. This was a remarkable demonstration in favor of the public credit, and it showed to other nations the tremendous resources which the people of the United States were able to command almost at a moment's notice. The success of the war loan had an effect, both at home and abroad, scarcely less important than were the naval victories at Manila and Santiago. Doubtless the purpose of the people thus expressed to give abundant support to the war was one of the factors which brought about its speedy termination.

The withdrawal of so large a sum as $200,000,000 from active employment in commerce and industry without deranging any of the vast business interests of the country was a feat successfully accomplished. By the end of the calendar year 1898 almost every dollar of this great sum had been paid into the Treasury, yet under the plan adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury such payment was made without occasioning the slightest injury to business. In fact, the entire management of the war finances was conducted with such skill that not for a moment was there any interruption to the returning tide of prosperity. Industrial and commercial expansion continued as if in fact there had been no war, and at its close the business of the country was greater in volume than at the beginning, and the national credit, both at home and abroad, had been raised to the highest point in our history. It may be said with truth that this increased faith in the public credit laid the foundation for the achievement of that currency reform which was accomplished by the act of March 14, 1900, fixing the standard of value and providing for the refunding of the national debt at the lowest rate of interest on public securities ever effected in this or any other country.

The following table, compiled in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, exhibits the collections by items under the war-revenue act from the date of its passage to April 1, 1900:

Statement showing the amount of internal revenue collected under the war-revenue act from June 13, 1898, to March 31, 1900.

Objects of taxation.	Amount collected.
Cigars	$5,202,691.00
Cigarettes	2,442,020.53
Snuff	1,641,281.51
Tobacco, chewing and smoking	27,070,113.79
Dealers in leaf tobacco	127,170.79
Dealers in manufactured tobacco	30,637.50
Manufacturers of tobacco	39,183.57
Manufacturers of cigars	446,724.89
Miscellaneous collections relating to tobacco	773,175.30
Fermented liquors	56,936,631.83
Additional collections on fermented liquors stored in warehouse	197,936.13
Mixed flour	14,154.75

Statement showing the amount of internal revenue collected, etc.—Continued.

Objects of taxation.	Amount collected.
Bankers, capital not exceeding $25,000	$712,456.19
Bankers, capital exceeding $25,000, for each additional $1,000 in excess of $25,000	6,066,155.02
Billiard rooms	583,443.08
Brokers, stocks, bonds, etc	559,356.13
Brokers, commercial	277,016.66
Brokers, custom-house	11,860.52
Brokers, pawn	71,756.33
Bowling alleys	80,626.46
Circuses	28,929.11
Exhibitions not otherwise provided for	148,759.50
Theaters, museums, and concert halls	97,729.39
Legacies	2,896,396.81
Schedule A	66,781,776.80
Schedule B	8,693,881.17
Excise tax on gross receipts	1,463,547.69
Total	183,405,292.45

NOTE.—The above statement embraces all the items it is practicable to specify.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD SETTLEMENTS.

The settlement of the Pacific Railroad indebtedness is also to be ranked as one of the great achievements of President McKinley's Administration. This indebtedness had for years been a subject of fruitless endeavor; all efforts, either by Congress or the Executive Departments, prior to 1897, were of little avail in protecting the Government's interests in these roads, in fact there were grave doubts whether the Government would succeed in being reimbursed, even in part, the vast sum expended by the United States in aid of their construction.

The discovery of gold in California, the rapid increase in wealth and population in the territory west of the Rocky Mountains, and a movement on the part of the older States to establish closer connections during the civil war with those outlying communities, led Congress in 1862 to authorize the construction of a railroad to the Pacific Ocean. The direct benefit to be derived by the Government was the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes. The act of July 1, 1862, chartering the Union Pacific Railroad Company, was not sufficiently liberal, and therefore nothing was accomplished under its provisions. The Union Pacific Company was organized as provided by the act, but no one was found who would venture money in the construction of the road.

Congress was impressed with the urgent necessity of completing such a road to the Pacific Ocean, and with the immense economic advantages which would follow the construction of a transcontinental line. It, therefore, on July 2, 1864, amended the act of 1862, by making provisions more favorable to the companies. The act of 1862 provided that the Government should have a first mortgage on the property of the company, while the act of 1864 provided substantially that for the bonds the Government should issue in aid of the construction of the road it should take a second mortgage. Two companies were organized under the provisions of the act of 1864, and entered energetically upon the work of construction. The road was built from the California end eastward by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and from the Missouri River westward to the common meeting point at Ogden by the Union Pacific Company.

Their lines were united May 10, 1869, anticipating by more than seven years the time required by Congress therefor. The Union Pacific Company constructed 1,034 miles and the Central Pacific 743 miles. The road of the latter company was subsequently extended 140 miles, and the lines of the two companies from the Missouri River to San Francisco represented a mileage of 1,917 miles.

In aid of these roads and connecting branches the United States issued bonds to the amount of $64,623,512. The United States failing to be reimbursed for the interest paid on these bonds, it became necessary, in protection of the interests of the Government, to pass the act of May 7, 1878, known as the "Thurman Act." This act provided that the whole amount of compensation which might, from time to time, be due to the several railroad companies for services rendered the Government should be retained by the Government, one-half thereof to be applied to the liquidation of the interest paid and to be paid by the United States upon the bonds issued to each of the companies, the other half to be turned into a sinking fund.

But it soon became apparent that with the approaching maturity of bonds issued in aid of the roads the provisions of the "Thurman Act" were not adequate to the protection of the Government's interests. Efforts in and out of Congress were persistently made looking to a settlement of this vast indebtedness, but without success. So recently as the Fifty-fourth Congress an effort was made to pass a bill to refund the debts of the Pacific Railroad companies, but such a bill was defeated in the House by a vote of 167 nays and 102 yeas.

On January 12, 1897, the day following the defeat of the funding bill, the Attorney-General was informed by the President that default had occured in the payment of the Union Pacific and the Kansas Pacific indebtedness to the Government, and he was directed to make such arrangements as were possible to secure, as far as practicable, the payment of their indebtedness. An agreement was entered into between the Government and the reorganization committee of the Union Pacific Railroad by which the committee guaranteed, should the Government undertake to enforce its lien by sale, a minimum bid for the Union and Kansas Pacific lines that would produce to the Government over and above any prior liens and charges upon the railroads and sinking fund the net sum of $45,754,059.99. In performance of this agreement the bid was guaranteed by a deposit of $4,500,000.

Pursuant to the agreement with the reorganization committee, bills were filed in the United States circuit courts for the foreclosure of the Government lien. The decrees entered for the sale of the roads not being satisfactory to the Government, the propriety of an appeal was considered and papers were prepared for this purpose. At this juncture the reorganization committee came forward with an offer to increase its bid, making the total $50,000,000 instead of $45,754,059.99.

Subsequently, to settle all points in dispute, the reorganization committee decided to abandon this second bid, and to increase the minimum amount to be offered for the property to the sum of $58,448,223.75, being the total amount due the Government on account of the Union Pacific road, as stated by the Secretary of the Treasury, including the sum of $4,549,368.26 cash in the sinking fund. Such an amount was bid by the reorganization committee on November 1, 1897, and the sale was confirmed by the court on November 6, 1897. After the confirmation of the sale the whole amount was paid into the Treasury of the United States in convenient installments, thus relieving the Government from any loss whatever upon its claim for principal and interest due upon its subsidy, and bringing to a final and most satisfactory termination a long-standing and troublesome question.

In the case of the Kansas Pacific indebtedness, by decree of the court an upset price on the sale of the property was fixed at a sum which would yield to the Government $2,500,000. The reorganization committee in conference with the Government declared its purpose of making no higher bid than that fixed by the decree of court, so that the Government was confronted with the danger of receiving for its total lien upon this line, amounting to nearly $13,000,000, principal and interest, only the sum of $2,500,000.

Believing the interests of the Government required that an effort should be made to obtain a larger sum, and the Government having the right to redeem the incumbrances upon the property which were prior to the lien of the Government subsidy, by paying the sums lawfully due in respect thereof out of the Treasury of the United States, so that the United States should thereupon become subrogated to all rights and securities theretofore pertaining to the liens and mortgages in respect of which such payments should be made, the President, on February 8, 1898, authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out of the Treasury, to the person or persons lawfully entitled to receive the same, the amounts lawfully due upon the prior mortgages upon the eastern and middle divisions of said road.

Steps were taken by the Government looking to the fulfillment of this direction, whereupon the reorganization committee offered to bid at the sale for said road a sum which would realize to the Government the whole amount of the principal of the debt, $6,303,000. It was believed that no better price than this could be obtained at a later date if the sale should be postponed, and it was deemed best to permit the sale to proceed upon the guaranty of a minimum bid which would realize to the Government the whole principal of its debt. The sale thereupon took place, and the property was purchased by the reorganization committee. The sum yielded to the Government was $6,303,000. It will thus be perceived that the Government secured an advance of $3,803,000 on account of its lien over and above the sum which the court had fixed as the upset price, and which the reorganization committee had declared was the maximum which they were willing to pay for the property.

The result of these proceedings against the Union Pacific system embracing the main line and the Kansas Pacific line, is that the Government has received on account of its subsidy claim the sum of $64,751,223.75, which is an increase of $18,997,163.76 over the sum which the reorganization committee first agreed to bid for the joint property, leaving due the sum of $6,588,900.19 interest on the Kansas Pacific subsidy. The prosecution of a claim for this amount against the receivers of the Union Pacific Company in 1898 resulted in securing to the Government the further sum of $821,897.70.

The indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the Government became due January 1, 1898, when default in payment was made by the company. The deficiency appropriation act of July 7, 1898, appointed the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney-General a commission with full power to settle the indebtedness to the Government growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific roads upon such terms and in such manner as might be agreed upon by them, or by a majority of them, and the owners of said railroads, subject to the approval of the President.

An agreement for the settlement of this indebtedness was entered into between the said commissioners with the railroad companies on February 1, 1899. At that date the amount due the United States for principal and interest upon its subsidy liens upon the Central Pacific and Western Pacific railroads was $58,812,715.48, more than one-half of which was accrued interest upon the principal debt.

The agreement for settlement provided for the funding of this amount into twenty promissory notes bearing date February 1, 1899, payable, respectively, on or before the expiration of each successive six months for ten years, each note being for the sum of $2,940,635.78, or one-twentieth of the total amount due, the notes to bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and having a condition attached to the effect that if default be made either in the payment of principal or interest of either of said notes or any part thereof, then all of the said notes outstanding, principal and interest, to immediately become due and payable notwithstanding any other stipulation of the agreement of settlement.

It was further agreed that the payment of principal and interest of the notes should be secured by the deposit with the United States Treasury of $57,820,000 face value of first refunding mortgage 4 per cent gold bonds, to be thereafter issued by the Central Pacific or its successor having charge of the railroads then owned by said company, such bonds to be part of an issue of not exceeding $100,000,000 in all, and to be secured by mortgage upon all railroads, equipments, and terminals owned by said Central Pacific Railroad Company, such mortgage to be a first lien upon such property, or to be secured by the deposit as collateral of certain percentages of the outstanding bonds upon such property or on the different divisional parts thereof.

The notes provided for by this agreement were duly executed and delivered to the Treasurer of the United States in conformity with the terms of the agreement. In pursuance of another provision of the agreement, the four earliest maturing notes were purchased by Speyer & Co., March 10, 1899, and the proceeds, amounting to $11,762,543.12, and accrued interest to the date of payment, $35,771.02—in all, $11,798,314.14—were received and covered into the Treasury March 27, 1899, as part payment of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroad companies. The properties of the various companies comprising the Central Pacific system were subsequently conveyed to a new corporation called the Central Pacific Railway Company, which latter company executed the mortgage and bonds provided for by the agreement of settlement.

On October 7, 1899, bonds were delivered to the Treasury Department by the Central Pacific Railway Company to secure the outstanding notes held by the Treasury in conformity to the terms of the agreement of settlement. The United States therefore holds the notes of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, guaranteed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, to the amount of $47,050,172.36, bearing interest payable semiannually at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, and secured by the deposit of an equal amount of first-mortgage bonds of the Pacific Railway Company, thus providing, beyond doubt or peradventure, for the sure and gradual payment of the whole of this subsidy debt, and providing in the meantime for the payment of interest at the rate of 3 per cent upon the unpaid balances. The United States, through the settlement agreement thus entered into, will be reimbursed the full amount of the principal and interest of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific debt, aggregating $58,812,715.48.

The amounts now remaining due the United States (March 1, 1900) from Pacific railroads on account of bonds issued in aid of their construction is shown in the following statement:

Name of road.	Principal.	Interest.	Total.
Central Branch Union Pacific	$1,600,000	$2,152,359.54	$3,752,359.54
Sioux City and Pacific	1,628,320	2,578,677.68	4,206,997.68
Total	3,228,320	4,731,037.22	7,959,357.22

Efforts are now pending looking to the collection of this indebtedness.

So that it appears out of an indebtedness of about $130,000,000, more than one-half of which consists of accrued interest, the Government has realized in cash or its equivalent the sum of $124,421,670.95 within a period of less than two years.

No other Administration in the history of the United States has ever so quickly, so thoroughly, and so satisfactorily enforced the settlement of large claims held by the Government against business corporations, nor has any similar settlement ever previously been made by the Government to such good financial advantage. The claims were due, the President insisted upon their collection, and this was done in a prompt and business-like manner.

THE GROWTH OF GOLD PRODUCTION—MORE GOLD PRODUCED SINCE MR. BRYAN WAS BORN THAN IN THE FOUR PRECEDING CENTURIES—TWICE AS MUCH GOLD MINED SINCE 1850 AS IN THREE HUNDRED AND FIFTY YEARS PRIOR TO THAT DATE.

Mr. Speaker, the currency question was so thoroughly discussed in 1896 and the assertions of the adherents of silver as a standard money metal have been so thoroughly disproven by the events since that date that a detailed discussion of the question seems now unnecessary. It is not improper, however, to call attention to some great facts which account in some degree, at least, for the course of the great nations in one by one abandoning the double, fluctuating standard and adopting the single and now almost universal standard—gold. The general movement among nations for the adoption of the single gold standard began about 1870 (except in the case of England, which took this action in 1816), and since that time all the nations of the world, excepting Mexico, China, Korea, Siam, Persia, and some of the smaller republics of Central and South America, have adopted the single gold standard. Recent statements indicate that China is pushing for the introduction of the gold standard in her customs service, which, if accomplished, will doubtless be the initial step toward similar action with reference to the currency of that country. The consular statements recently published indicate that Siam is preparing to adopt the single gold standard. Even in the short four years since the campaign of 1896 the gold standard has been adopted in Japan, with a population of 40,000,000; Russia, with a population of 125,000,000; India, with a population of 300,000,000, and several of the Central and South American republics.

The causes which have led to this almost universal change in the standard of currency in a comparatively short time are, at least, suggested by a study of the following table showing, the production of gold in the world, by half centuries and by decades, since 1492, the date of the discovery of America. The tables usually presented, showing the production of gold during that period, are misleading, in the fact that in the period prior to 1850, which was the beginning of an enormous increase in gold production, the statements cover decennial periods, while in the later years the statements are usually made in quinquennial and annual periods, and a casual examination of the table fails to indicate the enormous growth in production in the last half century, in which the periodical statements cover a less number of years than those exhibiting the earlier period. In the table which follows, the production in each decade from 1492 to 1900 is shown; and an examination of the column showing the actual production by decades will in this way be more readily noted.

In the three hundred and fifty-seven years prior to 1850 the gold production of the world averaged less than $10,000,000 per annum; in the fifty years since 1850 the gold production of the world has averaged $135,000,000 per annum, and in the year 1899 was $315,000,000. In the four closing years of the nineteenth century the gold production will be greater than that of the entire first half of the century. In the single year 1899 the gold production was as great as that of the first thirty-three years of the century.

This enormous increase in the production of gold as compared with that of previous centuries began with the discovery of gold in California in 1847, followed by similar discoveries in Australia in 1853, then by later discoveries in Colorado a few years later, then by the enormous discoveries in South Africa, which have proved the greatest gold-producing mines ever known, and within the past three years the great discoveries in Alaska; and all these have been supplemented and their results multiplied meantime by the development of new means of extraction, through which mines formerly abandoned as worthless again became valuable. These wonderful discoveries and developments account for the fact that the gold production of the world in the last fifty years has been more than twice as great as that of the preceding three hundred and fifty years.

As a consequence, the gold in existence to-day, accepting the statistics of such eminent statisticians as Tooke, Newmarch, and Mulhall, and adding to these the later statements of the Director of the Mint, is more than three times as great as in 1850. During that time the population has increased 50 per cent, being, according to equally eminent statisticians, 1,075,000,000 in 1850 and 1,500,000,000 at the present time. This would give twice as much gold for each person to-day as in 1850. In addition to this, however, Mulhall shows that two-thirds of the gold of the world to-day is coined and used as money, while in 1850 only one-third of the gold was coined. This again doubles the amount of gold money, making, therefore, more than four times as much gold currency for each individual in the world to-day as in 1850.

Of the world's silver, according to the same authority (Mulhall), 40 per cent was coined in 1850 and 53 per cent in 1890.

Gold, unlike most commodities produced, is for the most part retained permanently—not eaten, or worn out, or destroyed—and each year's addition from the mines thus increases the world's permanent stock of the money metal, excepting the small proportion which is used in the arts, the proportion thus used averaging perhaps 15 to 20 per cent of the world's product. Keeping this in mind, it will be seen that the result of the last half century of gold production in the total amount mined is more than twice as great as that in three hundred and fifty years preceding, has enormously increased the world's permanent stock of this accepted money metal, and seems of itself to offer an important, if not a complete, explanation of the fact that during that half century in which the product has so greatly increased practically all the nations of the world have abandoned the double standard and adopted this rapidly increasing and generally accepted measure of value.

A further study of the table shows that there has been also an enormous increase in the production of silver during the same period, the total of the last fifty years being, in round numbers, $5,000,000,000, against $6,000,000,000 in the three hundred and fifty years preceding. That this silver has also gone largely into use as a money metal and that the amount of silver money in circulation as a full circulating medium has greatly increased is shown by a table attached, compiled from the records of the United States Mint and presented by Hon. E. J. Hill, of Connecticut, in the House of Representatives in the discussion of the currency bill of 1900.

Stocks of money in thirteen principal countries of the world in 1873 and 1899.

Countries.	Stock of gold.		Stock of silver.		Uncovered paper.		Per capita.
							Gold.		Silver.		Paper.		Total.
	1873.	1899.	1873.	1899.	1873.	1899.	1873.	1899.	1873.	1899.	1873.	1899.	1873.	1899.
United States	$125,000,000	$945,300,000	$6,150,000	$639,000,000	$749,445,000	$329,700,000	$3.24	$12.56	$0.15	$8.48	$17.97	$4.38	$21.36	$25.42
Great Britain	160,000,000	462,300,000	95,000,000	111,900,000	59,300,000	111,600,000	5.03	11.50	2.99	2.78	1.88	2.77	9.90	17.05
France	450,000,000	810,600,000	500,000,000	420,100,000	385,300,000	161,100,000	12.47	21.05	13.85	10.92	10.67	4.18	36.99	36.15
Germany	160,200,000	672,800,000	206,235,000	208,200,000	90,800,000	156,700,000	3.91	12.86	7.47	3.98	2.21	3.00	13.59	19.84
Russia	149,100,000	740,400,000	18,600,000	81,900,000	618,400,000	.....	1.81	6.69	.23	.68	7.52	.....	9.56	6.32
Italy	20,000,000	98,000,000	23,000,000	43,900,000	87,800,000	174,900,000	.75	3.09	.86	1.38	3.27	5.52	4.88	9.99
Belgium	25,000,000	30,000,000	15,000,000	45,000,000	35,100,000	82,500,000	4.81	4.54	2.88	6.82	6.75	12.50	14.44	23.86
Netherlands	12,000,000	80,200,000	37,300,000	56,400,000	15,300,000	47,200,000	3.08	6.04	9.56	11.28	3.92	9.44	16.56	26.76
Austria-Hungary	35,000,000	221,400,000	40,000,000	147,300,000	265,800,000	103,000,000	.93	4.82	1.11	3.21	7.40	2.24	9.49	10.27
Australasia	50,000,000	132,100,000	8,000,000	7,000,000	.....	22,500,000	19.22	25.90	1.15	1.37	.....	4.41	20.38	31.68
Denmark	4,100,000	16,900,000	7,500,000	5,400,000	6,500,000	5,900,000	2.22	7.35	4.16	2.35	3.61	2.56	10.05	12.26
Sweden	1,800,000	13,000,000	4,300,000	6,500,000	6,000,000	29,500,000	.41	2.60	.98	1.30	1.36	5.90	2.75	9.80
Norway	7,600,000	8,600,000	1,600,000	2,300,000	2,300,000	5,100,000	4.22	4.10	.89	1.09	1.28	2.43	6.39	7.62
Total	1,209,800,000	4,182,100,000	1,057,685,000	1,774,900,000	2,322,545,000	1,229,700,000	3.89	9.50	3.25	4.03	7.36	2.79	14.54	16.32

Net monetary increase	$2,596,700,000
Increase of gold	2,972,300,000
Increase of silver	717,200,000

The arguments made in 1896 that there could be no sufficient addition to the currency of the United States without the free coinage of silver, and the assertion of Mr. Bryan that the Republican party had made no provision for the necessary increase of millions of currency per annum which Secretary Sherman had asserted would be necessary to correspond with the increasing population, have been more than answered by the events since that time. When Mr. Bryan was making these assertions the amount of gold and gold certificates in circulation in the United States was $498,449,242 (July 1, 1896), and on May 1, 1900, was $814,063,155; the total money in circulation on July 1, 1896, was $1,509,725,200, and on May 1, 1900, $2,060,525,463; and the money in circulation per capita, July 1, 1896, $21.15; May 1, 1900, $26.58. Thus the per capita of money in circulation has increased 25 per cent; the total money in circulation 33 per cent, and the gold in circulation 62 per cent since the supporters of the silver theory were telling the country that the only method of increasing the currency of the country and bringing about prosperity was by the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. The following table shows the amount of money in circulation at the date of Mr. Bryan's nomination and at the beginning of each month since that date:

Money in circulation in the United States on the first day of each month from July 1, 1896, to May 1, 1900.

[From official reports of the Treasury Department.]

Date.	Gold coin and gold certificates in circulation.	Total money in circulation.	Money in circulation per capita.
1896.
July	$498,449,242	$1,509,725,209	$21.15
August	484,587,423	1,514,903,142	21.18
September	502,863,608	1,539,169,634	21.48
October	517,508,129	1,582,302,189	22.05
November	564,588,288	1,627,065,614	22.63
December	554,746,631	1,646,444,746	22.86
1897.
January	555,630,058	1,650,223,400	22.87
February	558,054,758	1,665,977,688	23.05
March	553,860,515	1,675,694,963	23.14
April	554,582,096	1,669,000,694	23.01
May	554,743,505	1,666,560,383	22.98
June	557,609,702	1,659,733,895	22.80
July	556,432,594	1,646,028,246	12.57
August	556,301,181	1,646,471,139	22.53
September	558,866,352	1,665,680,098	22.76
October	564,997,312	1,678,840,538	22.89
November	576,088,062	1,706,732,904	23.23
December	581,220,157	1,721,084,537	23.39
1898.
January	584,126,049	1,721,100,640	23.34
February	588,079,683	1,729,991,228	23.42
March	590,325,671	1,726,376,659	23.33
April	618,448,941	1,756,058,645	23.69
May	652,990,509	1,806,761,442	24.33
June	685,456,090	1,839,898,256	24.73
July	696,780,519	1,843,435,749	24.74
August	680,939,733	1,809,198,344	24.23
September	666,166,175	1,792,086,545	23.96
October	658,043,721	1,816,590,392	24.24
November	685,185,636	1,866,575,782	24.87
December	694,207,162	1,886,879,504	25.09
1899.
January	702,996,888	1,897,301,412	25.19
February	730,027,389	1,918,260,567	25.42
March	735,272,108	1,928,842,612	25.51
April	727,748,591	1,927,846,942	25.45
May	733,922,471	1,933,867,892	25.49
June	757,068,366	1,955,501,009	25.73
July	734,716,728	1,932,484,239	25.38
August	732,850,173	1,931,117,204	25.31
September	741,022,181	1,942,131,141	25.41
October	745,234,744	1,948,703,186	25.45
November	762,244,252	1,963,716,148	25.60
December	778,388,803	1,978,528,733	25.85
1900.
January	779,100,627	1,980,398,170	25.73
February	801,330,065	2,008,149,355	25.98
March	793,509,830	2,002,931,791	25.93
April	785,845,649	2,021,274,506	26.12
May	814,063,153	2,060,525,463	26.58

ENORMOUS INCREASE IN THE WORLD'S GOLD PRODUCTION—TWICE AS MUCH PRODUCED SINCE 1850 AS WAS PRODUCED IN THREE HUNDRED AND FIFTY YEARS PRIOR TO THAT DATE.

The following statement showing the rapid increase in gold production, prepared by the chief of the Bureau of Statistics, Mr. O. P. Austin, shows that more gold has been produced since 1850 than in three hundred and fifty years prior to that time.

We have scarcely realized, it seems to me, the relative increase in gold production during the time in which the world has generally adopted it as the standard—namely, the half century 1850–1899.

The active gold production of the world began about the middle of the present century, and has since that time increased by leaps and bounds. And while the marvelous growth of production was in progress, the nations of the world, one by one, but in quick succession, adopted as their standard the metal generally accepted by the world as such, and which they found now becoming so plentiful that they could rely upon obtaining a sufficiency to serve as a basis for and standard of their circulating medium. The great gold production of California, which began in 1848, was quickly followed by the discoveries in Australia, then those of Colorado, then those of South Africa, then the Klondike and Cape Nome, and as a consequence the half century just ended has made a record almost past belief.

Why is the whole world abandoning silver as a standard money metal and adopting gold as the basis of its currency?

Many answers have been offered to this question, but it seems to me that a partial if not a complete explanation is found in the following statement of gold production of the world by half-century periods since 1492:

World's production of gold, 1492 to 1899, by fifty-year periods.

Period.	Coining value.
1492–1550	$256,092,000
1551–1600	245,350,000
1601–1650	281,840,000
1651–1700	324,440,000
1701–1750	587,580,000
1751–1800	675,240,000
1801–1850	787,460,000
1851–1899	6,665,632,000
Total	9,823,634,000

Look carefully at the table, which states the gold product by half-century periods, and you will see the enormous, the actually startling, increase in production in the half century just closing. One might easily believe that the production of the last fifty years was double or treble that of the preceding half century, or even a full century. But who would have said, without a close examination of the subject, that the last fifty years have produced twice as much gold as was produced in the three hundred and fifty years prior to that time? Yet it is a fact, if we are to accept the figures of Soetbeer for the earlier period and our own Mint Bureau for the later years. In adopting Soetbeer's figures to my attempt to show the production of gold by decades, in my second table I have found it necessary to divide his twenty-year periods, but in so doing have adopted the annual average which accompanies the tables usually published.

I have made no reference to the increased production of silver. Of course it has been great, though an examination of the table which follows suggests that its increase may have been given undue weight in seeking a cause for the monetary events of the past half century.

Gold and silver production of the world by fifty-year periods, 1492 to 1899.

Period.	Gold.	Silver.
1492–1550	$256,092,000	$222,400,000
1551–1600	245,350,000	726,780,000
1601–1650	281,840,000	831,060,000
1651–1700	324,440,000	716,660,000
1701–1750	587,580,000	875,720,000
1751–1800	675,240,000	1,496,080,000
1801–1850	787,460,000	1,360,240,000
1851–1899	6,665,632,000	4,958,162,000
Total	9,823,634,000	11,186,102,000

World's production of gold, 1492 to 1899, by decennial periods.

Period.	Production.	Period.	Production.
1492–1500	$30,840,000	1711–1720	$85,200,000
1501–1510	38,550,000	1721–1730	126,810,000
1511–1520	38,550,000	1731–1740	126,810,000
1521–1530	47,590,000	1741–1750	163,560,000
1531–1540	47,590,000	1751–1760	163,560,000
1541–1550	52,972,000	1761–1770	137,610,000
1551–1560	56,560,000	1771–1780	137,610,000
1561–1570	45,460,000	1781–1790	118,230,000
1571–1580	46,460,000	1791–1800	118,230,000
1581–1590	49,050,000	1801–1810	118,150,000
1591–1600	49,050,000	1811–1820	76,060,000
1601–1610	56,620,000	1821–1830	94,480,000
1611–1620	56,620,000	1831–1840	134,840,000
1621–1630	56,160,000	1841–1850	363,930,000
1631–1640	56,160,000	1851–1860	1,332,980,000
1641–1650	58,280,000	1861–1870	1,263,015,000
1651–1660	58,280,000	1871–1880	1,150,815,000
1661–1670	61,540,000	1881–1890	1,060,054,000
1671–1680	61,540,000	1891–1899	1,858,768,000
1681–1690	71,540,000
1691–1700	71,540,000	Total	9,823,634,000
1701–1710	85,200,000

A further examination of these tables will show that the entire gold production of the world from 1492 to 1850, a period of three hundred and fifty-seven years, was but $3,158,000,000, or an average of less than $9,000,000 per year, while that of the period 1850–1899 was $6,665,632,000, or an average of over $135,000,000 per annum. This makes the annual average rate of production in the last half century more than fifteen times as great as the annual average of the preceding three and a half centuries, a ratio of present to former production which is startlingly near 16 to 1.

Follow the comparison down farther. The production of the decade 1890–1899 was $1,977,616,000 (this refers to the full ten years, not the period 1891–1899 shown in the table). Now, if you contrast this with that of earlier periods you will find that the single decade 1890–1899 produced as much gold as the fifteen decades from 1700 to 1850; again a startling suggestion of 16 to 1.

One more comparison: Take the three calendar years which have made their record of gold production since the campaign of 1896. The world's production of gold in 1897 was $238,812,000; in 1898, $287,422,000, and in 1899, $315,000,000, a total of $841,240,000 in three years. Compare this with the table and you will see that the production in the three years since the nomination and defeat of Mr. Bryan on a free-silver issue has been more than that of the half century ending with 1850. The average production of the half century 1801–1850 was less than $16,000,000 per annum; that of the years since 1896 $280,000,000 per annum; this time more than 16 to 1.

I do not assert that the fact that the world is now producing gold sixteen times as fast as it did in the first half of the century means that there is no further use for silver, but it will be at least conceded that the rate at which gold is now being produced, as compared with earlier periods, is both startling and suggestive. The world's production of gold since the fateful year in which Mr. Bryan was born, 1860, has been greater than in the three hundred and sixty-seven years prior to that date, the accurate figures being: 1492 to 1860, $4,491,032,000; since 1860, $5,332,602,000. Divide the world's production since 1492 into two equal sums, and you will find that one-half of it has been produced since 1863, so that it may fairly be said that the past thirty-seven years have produced as much gold as the three hundred and seventy years which preceded them.

Production of gold per capita in the world, from 1804 to 1894.

Year.	World's population. Estimator.	Millions.	Production of gold.	Gold per capita.
1804	Malte Brun	640	$11,815,000	$0.018
1828	Balli	847	9,448,000	0.011
1845	Michelot	1,009	36,339,000	0.036
1874	Behm Wagner	1,391	90,000,000	0.062
1883	do	1,433	99,116,000	0.069
1891	Royal Geographic Society	1,488	130,000,000	0.091
1896		1,491	202,000,000	0.135
1899		1,500	315,000,000	0.210

There are several causes of this rapid increase, (1) a general fall in the cost of production and distribution, (2) greater activity and greater intelligence in the search for this metal, (3) improved mechanical devices for mining and for crushing the rock in which the ore is embedded and in methods of extracting it from the rock, (4) improvements in the science of metallurgy in the development of the cyanide and chlorination processes. These processes have made profitable the working of ores which ten years ago could not be worked without loss. At that time only such ores were available as were rich, or such ores as could be easily amalgamated, namely, the so-called free-milling ores. Much ore, although containing from $10 to $40 of gold to the ton, was not exploited, for the reason that it could not be amalgamated or did not contain enough extractable gold to permit of heavy freight charges and smelting expenses. Now, with the use of the chlorination and cyanide processes, all such ores are available. In the chlorination process the ore is roasted to free it of sulphur, and then placed in large rotating cylinders, in which it is treated with a solution of chlorine and water. The gold is precipitated out of this aqueous solution by the use of sulphurated hydrogen. The process costs from $3 to $5 a ton. The cyanide process is much cheaper and requires a plant of much smaller dimensions to operate it on a large scale. The cost of the treatment per ton of ore is about $2. Such low-grade ores as contain nothing that will decompose the solution for continuous use can be treated by cyanide. Finely divided free gold is readily extracted. The solution contains about 1 per cent of cyanide of potash, which is a potent ingredient for extracting the gold. To-day these processes are being used very extensively. About one-third of the gold produced in the Transvaal last year was extracted from the low-grade ore by the cyanide process.

COMMERCE OF THE GOLD AND SILVER STANDARD COUNTRIES OF THE WORLD, RESPECTIVELY, AND THE SHARE OF THE UNITED STATES THEREIN.

The following table, prepared by the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, shows the population and total commerce of each of the gold and silver standard countries of the world, respectively, and their commerce with the United States, and especially their imports from the United States. It shows that only 5 per cent of the world's commerce is carried on by silver-standard countries, and that the silver-standard countries take less than 5 per cent of the exports of the United States.

Commerce of the gold and silver standard countries of the world and the commerce of the United States with each country.

[Compiled from official reports of the United States.]

Gold standard countries.	Population.	Total commerce.	Commerce with United States. Total.	Imports from United States.
Algeria	4,429,000	$108,417,000	[1]$811,000	[1]$147,000
Austria-Hungary	41,359,000	[1]833,606,000	14,413,000	6,359,000
Belgium	6,567,000	659,197,000	57,549,000	45,816,000
British Africa	35,160,000	203,282,000	16,800,000	15,406,000
British Australasia	4,794,000	556,567,000	27,670,000	24,140,000
British Honduras	34,000	2,826,000	771,000	367,000
British North America	5,031,000	305,714,000	124,164,000	88,285,000
British West Indies	1,501,000	58,345,000	25,247,000	10,382,000
Bulgaria	3,311,000	27,987,000	No data.	No data.
Costa Rica	295,000	10,088,000	4,832,000	1,283,000
Cuba	1,632,000	135,120,000	54,481,000	24,861,000
Denmark	2,185,000	201,398,000	19,125,000	18,474,000
Dutch East Indies	34,090,000	146,539,000	33,961,000	1,653,000
Egypt	9,734,000	113,318,000	9,109,000	525,000
France	38,518,000	[2]1,564,518,000	140,512,000	70,107,000
Germany	52,280,000	[2]2,186,918,000	250,965,000	161,406,000
Great Britain	40,189,000	[2]3,969,876,000	652,280,000	509,958,000
Hawaii	109,000	27,577,000	33,494,000	11,306,000
India and Ceylon	290,514,000	495,717,000	42,896,000	4,510,000
Japan	42,708,000	186,114,000	54,808,000	20,605,000
Netherlands	5,004,000	1,292,138,000	98,879,000	83,601,000
Peru	2,622,000	23,240,000	3,492,000	1,395,000
Roumania	5,800,000	113,000,000	145,000	145,000
Russia	108,721,000	460,008,000	14,462,000	9,172,000
Servia	2,315,000	19,734,000
South African Republic	1,096,000	158,234,000	No data.	No data.
Sweden and Norway	7,011,000	305,509,000	14,904,000	11,817,000
Switzerland	3,083,000	362,418,000	16,505,000	216,000
Uruguay	828,000	50,492,000	3,215,000	1,702,000
United States	75,000,000	[2]2,074,345,000
On a paper basis.
Argentina	3,955,000	192,477,000	17,322,000	11,325,000
Brazil	14,334,000	235,149,000	11,055,000	11,454,000
Chile	3,049,000	47,445,000	7,474,000	2,240,000
Greece	2,434,000	38,051,000	1,229,000	227,000
Haiti	960,000	18,252,000	3,220,000	2,358,000
Italy	31,668,000	444,769,000	52,222,000	25,763,000
Portugal	5,050,000	76,856,000	8,888,000	5,113,000
Spain	17,566,000	334,480,000	16,871,000	11,529,000
Turkey	22,534,000	165,685,000	7,267,000	563,000
Venezuela	2,444,000	94,751,000	8,311,000	2,641,000
Total gold standard countries	929,934,000	18,295,410,000	1,909,339,000	1,197,067,000

Commerce of the gold and silver standard countries of the world, etc.—Continued.

Silver standard countries.	Population.	Total commerce.	Commerce with United States. Total.	Imports from United States.
China	402,680,000	$285,738,000	$39,421,000	$15,225,000
Guatemala	1,535,000	16,971,000	3,041,000	843,000
Honduras	400,000	5,908,000	1,919,000	1,039,000
Hongkong	222,000	90,000,000	10,128,000	7,788,000
Korea	10,529,000	19,041,000	129,000	128,000
Mexico	12,620,000	102,673,000	53,935,000	29,310,000
Nicaragua	420,000	5,547,000	3,081,000	1,486,000
Persia	9,000,000	43,798,000	No data.	No data.
Salvador	804,000	10,833,000	1,118,000	635,000
Straits Settlements	512,000	413,947,000	No data.	No data.
Siam	5,000,000	27,681,000	No data.	No data.
On a paper basis.
Bolivia	2,020,000	22,557,000	27,000	27,000
Colombia	4,000,000	26,617,000	8,448,000	2,986,000
Ecuador	1,272,000	11,008,000	2,278,000	1,180,000
Paraguay	600,000	7,883,000	11,000	11,000
Total silver standard countries	451,614,000	1,029,302,000	124,136,000	60,658,000

[1]1897. [2]1899.

Commerce of the gold standard countries	$18,295,410,000
Commerce of the silver standard countries	$1,029,302,000
Per cent, silver countries	5.33
Commerce of United States with gold standard countries	$1,909,339,000
Commerce of United States with silver standard countries	$124,136,000
Per cent, with silver standard countries	6.15
Exports of United States to gold standard countries	$1,197,067,000
Exports of United States to silver standard countries	$60,658,000
Per cent to silver standard countries	4.82

NOTE.—The above includes 97 per cent of the world's commerce at the latest available date.

JAPAN'S EXPERIENCE WITH THE GOLD STANDARD.

Report on the Adoption of the Gold Standard in Japan, by Count Matsukata Masayoshi, His Imperial Japanese Majesty's minister of state for finance, is the title of a volume issued by the Japanese Government, which has just reached the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. It discusses in great detail the history of the currency of Japan, and closes with a chapter entitled, "Effect of coinage reform upon the economic condition of our country." In this chapter the writer, Count Matsukata, discussing the effect of the new law which went into operation October 1, 1897, says:

Since the adoption of the gold standard our currency has been freed from constant fluctuations in its exchange rate, to which it was subject before. Owing to this latter fact, moreover, the relations between the claims of the creditor and the liabilities of the debtor became less subject to sudden and unexpected changes; business transactions were made safe; an improvement in credit took place in the community at large; prices became more constant; in a word, the way was now opened for the steady and orderly growth of our commerce and industry.

Leaving out of account in this section the questions concerning the effect of the coinage reform on the foreign trade of the country, it can be very clearly seen that since October, 1897, the prices of commodities have kept comparatively even; that while there have been some changes, yet, when compared with the sudden and great changes which used to occur formerly, we must say that the fluctuations were remarkably small. Besides, these small changes in the price of commodities can be amply explained by referring to the partial failure of rice crops, to the sudden expansion of industry and then to its as sudden depression, to a stringency in the money market, as well as to some other causes. These changes in the price of commodities were due, therefore, to the natural working of the economic law of supply and demand in the commodities themselves. If we notice the fact, moreover, that the amount of checks and bills cleared at the clearing houses in Tokyo and Osaka has remarkably increased during these recent months, notwithstanding the fact that during this very time there prevailed much business stagnation everywhere, we can not but conclude that business transactions on credit have come to prevail more widely and freely than before.

The beneficial result of the coinage reform is seen in another direction. Since now that the capitalists of the gold standard countries have become assured that they will no longer be in constant danger of suffering unexpected losses from investments made in this country, on account of fluctuations in the price of silver, they seem to show a growing tendency to make such investments at low rates of interest. This tendency, if encouraged, will doubtless bring about a closer connection between this country and the central money markets of the world—a state of things which I believe we shall be able to see realized more and more fully as years go on.

So far as our trade with gold standard countries is concerned, our adoption of the gold standard, which made us use the same standard of value as those countries, has proved to be a source of great benefit. This may be inferred from the fact that changes which have since taken place in the rate of foreign exchange have been very slight, and these all traceable to changes in the condition of the foreign trade of the country and not all traceable as formerly to sudden changes in the price of silver. For this reason there was eliminated from our foreign trade much of that speculative element which was caused by constant changes in the value of our currency, so that the way was at last opened for the steady and natural development of the foreign trade of the country. Again, concerning our commerce with silver standard countries, contrary to the gloomy prospects indulged in by some critics, our trade with those countries has not ceased to make a steady growth, and this in the face of certain events occurring in the interior of China, our greatest customer among the silver countries, events such as natural calamities and disturbances which have greatly hindered the commercial activity of that country.

Since our coinage reform enabled us to avoid all the evil effects of fluctuations in the price of silver, we stand now no longer, as formerly was the case, under the necessity of making plans for financial matters with the currency constantly changing in value, and sometimes suffering unexpected losses and evils in times when those fluctuations are unusually violent. All those fears of miscalculation and losses have now become things of the past. Most particularly in the last few years when national expenditures for things bought abroad, such as war ships, etc., have greatly increased in amount, we have doubtless been able to avoid, on account of our coinage reform, great losses on the part of the national treasury. Besides, since our adoption of the gold standard, our Government bonds have been sold in no small amount in the European market, so that their names appear regularly in the price list of the London Stock Exchange. This fact at once converted our bonds into an international commodity, and will no doubt lead to a closer relationship between our home and the foreign money markets.

The discussion also quotes a report of the higher commission on agriculture, commerce, and industry, which, after an elaborate discussion on the effect of the monetary system, closes by saying:

We believe that the beneficial effect of our coinage reform on our foreign trade has already been great, and we do not notice any material evil in connection with it. Besides, our adoption of the gold standard has made it easier for our country to enter into the economic community of the world at large, so that henceforth it will become practicable for us to invite capital from other countries where it is plentiful to be invested in our country. This will doubtless be another of the benefits conferred upon the country by our coinage reform. We conclude, therefore, that the effect of the coinage reform upon our foreign trade has been beneficial, without a trace of evil.

FOREIGN RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES MARCH 4, 1897–MAY 1, 1900—A REVIEW OF AN EVENTFUL PERIOD IN OUR NATIONAL HISTORY—THE WAR WITH SPAIN—THE SAMOAN, HAWAIIAN, AND ALASKAN INCIDENTS—THE OPEN DOOR IN CHINA—THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

Mr. Speaker, at the time of President McKinley's inauguration the most important problem confronting the new Administration in its foreign relations was the long-continued insurrection in the island of Cuba, with the inconvenience and cost imposed upon the Government of the United States by the endeavor to enforce its laws and protect the property of its citizens.

Throughout a period of extreme tension of public feeling caused by the horrors of the conflict in Cuba, the Government continued its policy of patience in dealing with the trying situation.

THE WAR WITH SPAIN AND THE PEACE OF PARIS.

The instructions given to Minister Woodford for his guidance at Madrid directed him to impress upon the Government of Spain the sincere wish of the United States to lend its aid in securing a peace honorable alike to Spain and the people of Cuba. A new administration in the Spanish Government encouraged the hope that a change of policy might be adopted which would result in the pacification of Cuba, but this hope was doomed to disappointment. After long and patient negotiation in the interest of peace, to the evils which had so long pressed upon this country in consequence of the insurrection was added a series of incidents that rendered necessary, on April 21, 1898, an armed intervention to terminate the humiliation imposed by the condition of affairs. The brief and brilliant period of war with Spain was followed by preliminaries of peace, signed on August 12, providing for the relinquishment of sovereignty over Cuba, the cession of Porto Rico and other islands belonging to Spain in the West Indies, together with an island in the Ladrones, to be selected by the United States, and the occupation of territory in the city and vicinity of Manila, pending the conclusion of a treaty of peace which should determine the control, disposition, and government of the Philippines.

When the Commissioners of the United States, sent to Paris to negotiate a treaty of peace with the representatives of Spain, confronted the problem of settlement, it became evident that the interests of the population of the Philippine Islands, the peace of the world, and the consistent completion of the task of pacification undertaken by the Government alike demanded the cession of the entire Philippine Archipelago to the United States. At the same time justice to a foreign foe and the magnanimous spirit of the American people seemed to require a recognition of the actual expenditures of Spain in the internal improvement of the islands, and the sum of $20,000,000 was agreed upon as a suitable compensation for the transfer of this great archipelago, whose extensive public lands, estimated at one-half the whole area of the islands, rich in mineral wealth and forests of valuable timber, will prove abundantly sufficient to justify this expenditure and to provide resources for a future government.

THE HAWAIIAN, SAMOAN, AND ALASKAN QUESTIONS.

The annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, the cession of Guam, and the acquisition of the Philippines extend the sovereignty of this Government across the Pacific Ocean and provide a series of valuable naval stations and entrepôts of commerce which promise to facilitate incalculably the oriental trade and secure the pathway to an opening market of increasing importance. The settlement of the Samoan question by the dissolution of the tripartite protectorate which had proved so fertile in embarrassments, and the undisputed sole occupation of the island of Tutuila, with its admirable harbor, the best in the South Pacific, by the United States, add greatly to the influence and security of this country in that ocean.

The exorbitant claims of the Canadian government with reference to the Alaskan boundary, unreasonable and unhistorical in their extent, though impeding and for the time thwarting the efforts of this Government to adjudicate in a mutually advantageous manner the differences with the Dominion, which had been referred to a joint commission, have nevertheless been firmly met by the President, who has thus far preserved our important territorial rights by the modus vivendi of October 20, 1899, and defeated the attempt to destroy the continuity of our Alaskan coast line and to divide the control of the Northern Pacific.

THE INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Thus extended and maintained in the Pacific, the territorial jurisdiction of the United States has been augmented in the Atlantic by the cession of Porto Rico, which, with the occupation of Cuba, held in trust for the future, serves to guard the Gulf of Mexico and to extend our influence in the West Indies.

The necessary link to connect our Atlantic and Pacific interests, continental as well as insular, has seemed to be an interoceanic canal, owned and controlled by the Government of the United States. An apparently irremovable barrier to the accomplishment of this object has existed in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which since 1850 has bound this Government not to undertake such a project as a national enterprise.

Through all the political administrations since the negotiations of that convention no American President or Secretary of State has ever denied the existence and the consequent obligation of that treaty during its continued recognition. Whatever may be said of its "voidability," its existence as a solemn compact binds the conscience and honor of the American Government and people until it is legally annulled. In a convention dated February 8, 1900, this Government procured the voluntary consent of Great Britain to modify essentially the terms of that agreement, thereby liberating the United States from its previous engagement not to construct or own an interoceanic canal. As the canal must of necessity lie wholly within territory foreign to the United States, it is evident that it must be of a neutral character and not be employed as an agency of war. This convention is now before the Senate of the United States awaiting its action.

THE PEACE CONFERENCE AT THE HAGUE.

Following immediately after the brilliant naval and military achievements of the Spanish-American war, the Peace Conference at The Hague afforded the Government of the United States an opportunity of expressing the pacific disposition and the love of justice which animate the American people by proposing, through its delegates, a plan for international arbitration, which, reinforced by other similar propositions, resulted in a convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes signed by the plenipotentiaries of twenty-two sovereign States, including all the great powers of Europe.

The United States, in signing this great compact, at the same time insisted on reaffirming, in the document itself, our adherence to the Monroe Doctrine, and thus gained for that vital principle of our policy the recognition of the world.

Without cherishing illusions with regard to the practicability of universal peace, it is yet possible to believe that the existence of a permanent international tribunal before which differences may be adjudicated in their incipiency and before their accumulation becomes serious will exercise a profound influence toward a better and more rational solution of disputes between nations. The numerous arrangements for the arbitration of special questions which the Department of State has recently been able to effect give evidence of a growing disposition to apply the principles of peaceful adjudication to the solution of controversies wherever practicable.

THE QUESTION OF THE "OPEN DOOR" IN CHINA.

The diplomatic history of our country affords no better example of successful endeavor to secure by mutual consent an evident right than that offered by the recent correspondence carried on under the President's direction for maintaining the "open door" of trade in China. The establishment of spheres of influence in that ancient Empire by European States, supported by the control of important seaports, has seemed to many to forebode the practical partition of that country among foreign powers and the effective appropriation of commercial privileges in China to the exclusion of all not able or willing to claim a portion for themselves. By a timely series of diplomatic notes Secretary Hay has obtained assurances from the Governments of Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, and Russia, by which they pledge themselves not to interfere with the perfect freedom of trade in those portions of China where their influence may prevail. The unobstructed enjoyment of the privileges of trade is thus secured to American manufacturers and merchants by the free consent of the powers.

Perhaps the most important fruit of this unprecedented negotiation may prove to be that all the powers, feeling the assurance of unrestricted commerce, may be disposed to accentuate to a less degree, or even to abandon, that policy of commercial annexation which has apparently been promoted by the absence of such a just and reasonable understanding. The American claim to unrestricted facilities of trade in China is not a special favor asked and granted, or demanding reciprocity. It is based on treaty rights which promise equal treatment to Americans with the citizens or subjects of the most-favored nation. The recognition of these rights have been obtained at a moment when they were apparently about to be ignored.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

Regarding the unfortunate conflict between Great Britain and the Republics of South Africa, this Government has faithfully observed the laws of neutrality and strictly followed the traditional policy of nonintervention which has always characterized the conduct of the United States with respect to foreign wars. In a declaration offered to the peace conference at The Hague by the American delegation, effectually obtaining the first recognition of the Monroe doctrine by an international body, the "traditional policy of not intruding upon, or interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions or policy * * * of any foreign State" is reaffirmed, together with a new avowal of the attitude of the United States toward purely American questions. This consistent neutrality, steadily maintained in spite of the impulses of sentiment which often endanger public interests, has rendered more available the mediatorial action of the United States upon the joint request of both belligerents in case an opportune occasion should arise.

In his message to Congress of December 5, 1899, President McKinley was able to say:

> Had circumstances suggested that the parties to the quarrel would have welcomed any kindly expression of the hope of the American people that war might be averted, good offices would have been gladly tendered.

As these circumstances did not arise, no occasion was presented for tendering good offices until a request was received from the Republics of South Africa (March 10, 1900) that the United States should intervene to procure a cessation of hostilities. A similar request was simultaneously sent to the leading European governments, but no action was taken by them. The Government of the United States, whose attitude rendered it peculiarly available for mediatorial services, immediately addressed an offer of good offices to Lord Salisbury, expressing "the earnest hope" of the President that a way to bring about peace might be found, and adding that the President—> would be glad to aid in any friendly manner to promote so happy a result.

The indisposition of Great Britain to accept the good offices of the United States shows how futile were the proposals of philanthropic persons in urging, unaware of the nature of international relations, the mandatory intervention of the United States, which would have destroyed its usefulness as a mediator and, if insisted upon by this Government, would have placed it in a belligerent attitude toward Great Britain in violation of its principle and policy of neutrality. It is not to be presumed that any patriotic person could seriously entertain the desire of involving his country in the obligations and consequences of actual war on account of circumstances entirely foreign to the interests of the United States. The discretion of the American Congress in refusing to take sides by passing resolutions of sympathy with either belligerent has rendered the United States still available as an ultimate mediator in this conflict, provided its services should ever be invoked by both combatants. Until they are thus desired interference of any kind could only give offense and render nugatory the benevolent intentions of this Government.

"THERE IS NO ALLIANCE WITH ENGLAND"—SECRETARY HAY ON THE FALSE CHARGES MADE AGAINST THE M'KINLEY ADMINISTRATION—LACK OF REAL AND ACCEPTABLE ISSUES FORCES THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY TO PRESENT FALSE ONES, BASED ON GROUNDLESS ASSERTIONS.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that there has been repeated in this House, during recent discussions, the false and unjust charge that the present Administration has entered into a secret alliance with England leads me to present and make a part of the public record a letter written to me on this subject by a man who is in position to know the truth, and the whole truth, and whose words will not be doubted by any who know him or his honorable career. I allude to Hon. John Hay, the present Secretary of State. His letter is as follows:

NEWBURY, N. H., September 11, 1899.

Hon. CHARLES DICK,
Chairman State Executive Committee, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR MR. DICK: I am sorry that my engagements are such as to render it impossible for me to accept your kind invitation to be present at the opening of the Ohio Republican State campaign at Akron on the 23d of September. I regret this the more as the occasion promises to be one of unusual interest. A stirring campaign and, I doubt not, a great victory await you.

Our opponents this year are in an unfortunate position. They have lost, for all practical purposes, their political stock in trade of recent years. Their money hobby has all collapsed under them. Their orators still shout 16 to 1 from time to time from the force of habit, but they are like wisdom crying in the streets in one respect at least, because "no man regardeth them." With our vaults full of gold; with a sufficiency of money to meet the demands of a volume of business unprecedently vast and profitable; with labor generally employed at fair wages; with our commerce overspreading the world; with every dollar the Government issues as good as any other dollar; with our finances as firm as a rock and our credit the best ever known it is no time for financial mountebanks to cry their nostrums in the market place, with any chance of being heard.

It is equally hopeless to try to resuscitate the corpse of free trade. The Dingley tariff, the legitimate successor of the McKinley bill—that name of good augury—has justified itself by its works. It is not only true that our domestic trade has reached proportions never before attained, but the American policy of protection, the policy of all our most illustrious statesmen, of Washington and Hamilton, Lincoln, Grant, and McKinley—has been triumphantly vindicated by the proof that it is as efficacious in extending our foreign commerce as in fostering and stimulating our home industries. Our exports of domestic manufactures reached in this last fiscal year the unexampled total of $360,000,000, an amount more than two hundred millions in excess of our exports ten years ago. These figures ring the knell of those specious arguments which have been the reliance of our opponents for so many years, and which are only fruitful in times of leanness and disaster.

What is left, then, in the way of a platform? The regulation of trusts, which the Republicans can themselves manage, having all the requisite experience both of legislation and business; and, finally, the war, which—it seems—was too efficiently carried on and has been too beneficial to the nation to suit the Democratic leaders. We have been able to give in our time some novel ideas to the rest of the world—and none are more novel than this—that a great party should complain that the results of a war were too advantageous. It will be hard, however, to convince the bulk of our people that we are the worse off because our flag has gained great honor, our possessions have been extended, our position in the world increased, and our opportunity for work for usefulness enormously widened through the fortunes of war and the valor of our soldiers and sailors.

Being in this desperate need of arguments, it is not strange that they should have recourse to fiction. An attempt is made in the Ohio Democratic platform to excite the prejudice of certain classes of voters against the present Administration by accusing it of an alliance with England. The people who make this charge know it to be untrue; their making it is an insult to the intelligence of those whose votes they seek by this gross misrepresentation. But as one of their favorite methods of campaign is to invent a fiction too fantastic for contradiction, and then to assume it to be true because it has not been contradicted, you may permit me to take one moment to dispose of this ghost story, as it refers to the department with which I am connected. There is no alliance with England, nor with any power under heaven, except those known and published to the world—the treaties of ordinary international friendship for purposes of business and commerce. No treaty other than these exists; none has been suggested on either side; none is in contemplation. It has never entered into the mind of the President nor of any member of the Government to forsake, under any inducement, the wise precept and example of the fathers which forbade entangling alliances with European powers.

I need not dwell upon this fact. Even the men who wrote the Ohio platform know there is no alliance. But they seek to make capital in this campaign out of the undeniable fact that our relations with England are more friendly and more satisfactory than they have ever been before. It is hard to take such a charge seriously; and if it is taken seriously, how can it be treated with patience? In the name of common sense, let me ask what is the duty of the Government, if not to cultivate, wherever possible, agreeable and profitable relations with other nations? And if with other nations, why not with that great kindred power which stands among the greatest powers of the world? What harm, what menace to other countries, is there in this natural and beneficent friendship? Only a narrow and purblind spirit could see in it anything exclusive. It is a poor starved heart that has room for only one friend. It is not with England alone that our relations are improved. We are on better terms than in the past with all nations. With Russia, our old-time friend; with the great German Empire, to which we are bound by so many ties; with our sister Republic of France; with Italy, Austria, and in short every European, every Asiatic nation, our relations are growing in intimacy and cordiality every year; and our friendship with our neighbors to the south of us, from the Rio Grande to Cape Horn, grows firmer, more genuine, day by day.

And why should it not be so? Everyone likes to be on good terms with the peaceful and the prosperous, especially if their prosperity is of that nature that other people profit by it, and this is precisely our condition. Our trade is taking that vast development for which we have been preparing through many years of wise American policy, of sturdy American industry, of thoughtful invention and experiment by trained American intelligence. We have gone far toward solving the problem which has so long vexed the economists of the world—of raising wages and at the same time lowering the cost of production—something which no other people have ever accomplished in an equal degree.

We pay the highest wages which are paid in the world; and we sell our goods to such an advantage that we are beginning to furnish them to every quarter of the globe. We are building locomotives for railways in Europe, Asia, and Africa; our bridges can be built in America, ferried across the Atlantic, transported up the Nile, and flung across a river in the Soudan in less time than any European nation, with a start of 4,000 miles, can do the work. We sell ironware in Birmingham; carpets in Kidderminster; we pipe the sewers of Scotch cities; our bicycles distance all competition on the Continent; Ohio sends watch cases to Geneva. All this is to the advantage of all parties; there is no sentiment in it; they buy our wares because we make them better and at lower cost than other people. We are enabled to do this through wise laws and the American genius for economy. Our working people prosper because we are all working people; our idle class is too meager to count. All the energies of the nation are devoted to this mighty task—to insure to labor its adequate reward and so to cheapen production as to bring the product within the reach of the greatest number for least money.

Of course, our prosperity would not bring us friends if we held an attitude of menace to other nations. But this we have never done, and I hope and believe we never shall do. We have great latent military power; we are capable at short notice of remarkable military efficiency; but the habit and spirit of the American people is essentially peaceful. The vast majority of our people would be glad to think that the era of wars was over; that not another battle anywhere in the world should ever stain the earth with carnage or break the heart of a mother. No other nation would ever have shown the long-suffering patience with which we watched for so many years the scenes of waste and disorder which make the recent history of Cuba. When the state of things at our door had become intolerable, we took up arms to redress wrongs already too long endured, without a thought in any mind of conquest or aggression. But no one can control the issues of war. Porto Rico and the Philippines are ours, and the destinies of Cuba are for the moment intrusted to our care. It is not permitted us to shirk the vast responsibilities thus imposed upon us without exhibiting a nerveless pusillanimity which would bring upon us not only the scorn of the world, but what is far worse, our own self-contempt. But as we did not seek these acquisitions—which came to us through the irresistible logic of war—we are not striving anywhere to acquire territory or extend our power by conquest. It is no secret that in more than one quarter outlying territory only awaits our acceptance; but every overture of this nature has been and, I am confident, will be declined. The whole world knows we are not covetous of land; not a chancery in Europe sees in us an interested rival in their schemes of acquisition. What is ours we shall hold; what is not ours we do not seek. But in the field of trade and commerce we shall be the keen competitors of the richest and greatest powers, and they need no warning to be assured that in that struggle we shall bring the sweat to their brows.

It was written of old that a man's foes shall be of his own household. The simple fact is that at this moment the whole world is our friend, except certain leaders of the Democratic party. All countries crowd into our markets, though our opponents say our tariff is barbarous. Our achievements in war have received the ungrudging praise of foreign nations and meet with unjust and carping criticism only at home. All other countries bid us godspeed in the work of bringing order and civilization to the Philippines, and it was left to a man in Cincinnati the other day to wish that "Otis and his army might be swept into the sea." It is hard to exterminate a rooted tendency—the Proverbs say something about braying in a mortar. The party which by unwise leadership in 1861 was made to place itself across the path of freedom and progress should take care not to follow the lead this year of men as lacking in sagacity as they are in patriotism.

But we may take comfort in the reflection that no leaders can carry all their party into courses their judgment must condemn and their hearts reject. There are, thank God, many Democrats in Ohio who do not desire the humiliation of their country or the dishonor of their flag.

Yours, faithfully, JOHN HAY.

COLONIES AND COLONIZATION—SOME LESSONS FROM THE EXPERIENCES OF OTHER PEOPLES AND OTHER NATIONS—A PLAIN STATEMENT OF THE EFFECT OF COLONIZATION UPON THE PEOPLE AFFECTED AND UPON THE GOVERNING NATION.

Mr. Speaker, an unexpected incident of the war with Spain, a war for humanity, undertaken at the demand of all classes of our people irrespective of party, brought under the control of the United States the Philippine Islands, the island of Guam, and the island of Porto Rico, while other events have also brought other islands of the Pacific under the control and care of the United States Government; and for the present we are also charged with the direction of affairs in Cuba.

It is proper, then, that we study, as far as we may, the methods by which the older nations and those of long experience in the management of noncontiguous territory govern such territory and administer that government in the manner for the best interests of the people governed, and incidentally best for the nation which governs and thus becomes responsible for that government.

With that purpose I desire to present such information as I have been able to bring together as to the methods by which colonies and noncontiguous territory is governed by other countries, the effect upon the country and people so governed, and the benefit or otherwise of this relationship to the governing country and its commerce.

THE WORLD'S COLONIES.

An official publication of the Bureau of Statistics, issued some months ago, discussed in detail the colonies of the world, and its accuracy and fairness has never been called in question. It shows that the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies of the world number 126. They occupy two-fifths of the land surface of the globe and their population is one-third of the entire people of the earth. Their total imports average $1,500,000,000 worth of goods annually, and of this vast sum more than 40 per cent is purchased from the mother country. Of their exports, which considerably exceed imports, 40 per cent goes to the mother country. Large sums are annually expended in the construction of roads, canals, railways, telegraphs, postal service, schools, etc., but in most cases the present annual expenditures are produced by local revenues or are represented by local obligations. The revenues of the British colonies in 1897 were $755,000,000 and their expenditures $745,000,000. While the public debt in the more important and active of these communities aggregates a large sum, it is represented by canals, railways, public highways, harbors, irrigation, and other public improvements intended to stimulate commerce and production, the railroads in operation in the British colonies alone aggregating 55,000 miles, and is in no instance assumed by or a charge upon the mother country.

Of the 126 colonies, protectorates, dependencies, and "spheres of influence," which make up the total list, two-fifths belong to Great Britain, their area (including the native feudatory states of India) being one-half of the grand total of colonial territory and their population considerably more than one-half the grand total of colonial population. France is next in order in number, area, and population of colonies, etc., though the area controlled by France is but about one-third that of Great Britain, and the population of her colonies less than one-sixth of those of Great Britain. Commerce between the successful colonies and their mother countries is in nearly all cases placed upon practically the same basis as that with other countries, goods from the home countries receiving in the vast majority of cases no advantages over those from other countries in import duties, and other exactions of this character.

I especially call attention to the fact that in this particular we have given to Porto Rico and Hawaii vastly better treatment than is usual with colonies, since we make the ratio of duty on commerce between Porto Rico and the United States but 15 per cent of that with other countries, and even that but temporary, while in the case of Hawaii, which voluntarily asked admission, we have continued and enlarged the freedom of interchange which already existed under reciprocity.

EFFECT OF COLONIZATION UPON THE PEOPLE OF THE COUNTRIES COLONIZED.

I want to first discuss the effect of "colonization," so called, upon the countries colonized, and the people and interests of those countries. The tendency, it seems to me, has been to look at the question first from the selfish standpoint of its effect upon our own commerce and people; but I desire first to determine the effect of judicious, proper, and humane colonial control upon the people controlled.

The effect of "colonization" or control of noncontiguous territory by an established and well-managed government of intelligent people is so carefully discussed in a recent article in the Forum by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics that I shall take the liberty of quoting it, feeling as I do that its statements, which have never been questioned as to accuracy in the months since its publication, will prove of value to all desiring to give this feature of the question a thoughtful and conscientious consideration. It is as follows:

To answer the question whether the people of the territory colonized are advantageously affected, the inquiry must be conducted along broader lines than those of mere commerce. The questions which would naturally determine the benefit or the injury which colonization brings to the people of the territory colonized are: (1) Whether a more permanent and stable form of government is given them; (2) whether control by the colonizing country brings with it improved internal conditions; (3) whether the producing capacity of the country is increased; (4) whether commercial intercourse with other parts of the world is quickened, and (5) whether enlarged intercourse with the outside world proves advantageous.

That local improvements along all these lines has followed successful colonizing enterprises, especially in the tropical and subtropical territories, is well recognized. Those who have observed the developments in the past few years in various parts of the world can not doubt that advantages have come in at least a majority of the cases. No one who has followed the course of events in Africa and witnessed the developments which, under various nations, have brought order out of disorder, peace among warring native tribes, the opening of the great rivers, the construction of roads, the building of railways and telegraphs, the introduction at initial points of educational facilities, and the development of commerce and general intercourse with the world can doubt the advantages to the people occupying the territory; while the vast supplies of tropical products, and of precious stones and metals, which Africa is now contributing to the commercial world, show that the advantages are reciprocal. The improvements now made under French rule in Indo-China—the building of roads and of railways, the introduction of modern civilization and business communication—illustrate in another part of the world the advantages to the population of the territory colonized.

Probably the most striking example, however, of the advantages accruing to a population from a government supplied by experienced people of other blood and climate is in the case of India. From the very beginning of British control there came a gradual cessation of the bloody and devastating wars—between native rulers or by foreign invaders—which had sacrificed so many lives and destroyed cities and homes from the earliest history of that great and densely populated peninsula.

With this, and especially with the direct British control of the last half century, came other improvements. One of the first improvements undertaken was the construction and maintenance of roads. "No native prince in India ever built a road," says a distinguished writer on the history and conditions of that country; and when the British Government assumed control, it found communication between the various sections almost impossible, by reason of an absence of routes of travel over which vehicles could pass. Now there are 150,000 miles of roads in India maintained by the government, of which no less than 35,000 miles are "metalled," or macadamized, as the term is used in this country. In 1854, there were in India 21 miles of railway, and in 1899, 22,000 miles—uniting province with province, city with city, penetrating the native states, bringing them into closer relationship with the territory under direct control of the British Government, carrying the native products to the seaboard, and in turn bringing to the natives the products of other parts of the world and proving especially useful in distributing supplies in famine years.

In 1897 the net earnings of the railways in India were 130,000,000 rupees, being an average return of 5.04 per cent on the capital invested. The number of passengers carried in 1898 was 159,374,114. In nearly all cases these railways are the result of investment of British capital, induced by a guaranty of interest made by the government of British India. In 1856 there were in all of India only 753 post-offices and letter boxes; in 1898 there were 27,984. In that year the postal system handled 476,683,000 pieces of mail, the revenue of the postal service being 18,823,000 rupees, and the charges 13,271,000 rupees; supplying a service of which Sir John Strachey, who has spent nearly thirty years in India, says: "There is no country where the rates of postage are so low or the offices better managed." In addition to the postal service there are over 50,000 miles of telegraph lines, which in 1898 handled 5,713,000 paid messages.

Still another of the great internal improvements which has proved of inestimable value to the people in times of great distress is the system of irrigating canals. Sir John Strachey says: "Altogether there are in India, under the management or supervision of the British Government, some 36,000 miles of canals and other works irrigating nearly 14,000,000 acres." "These canals," he adds, "yielded, in 1876, 5¼ per cent on their cost of 320,000,000 rupees, and this falls far short of the annual value of the crops they protect. In the single year of 1891–92 the estimated value of the produce of the land irrigated by works constructed by the government was more than 540,000,000 rupees."* The value of these great irrigating works can only be appreciated when it is remembered that in certain years of drought the area which they supply would be absolutely nonproductive, and that in a single year of drought the value of the crops grown far exceeds the entire cost of the canals which supply the territory.

Another equally interesting and important result of British control in India is found in the increased educational facilities now offered to the people. The system of educating the masses began in 1854, when the department of public instruction was established, the government allowance for the purpose being, in 1858, but 394,000 rupees, increased by 1897 to 15,250,000 rupees. In 1897–98 the number of schools in India was 150,000, with an attendance of 4,285,000 pupils. Of these 106,527 were public schools, with an attendance of 3,706,000.

Regarding the commercial advantages which have followed the establishment of order, the creation of highways and methods of internal transportation, the construction of irrigating canals, and the general stimulation and activity, it may be said that the exports of merchandise from British India have grown from $64,784,000, in 1848, to $346,000,000 in 1897, making India now the sixth exporting country of the world. The increased earning and consuming capacity of the people meantime is indicated, in some degree at least, by the fact that the imports have grown from $41,842,000, in 1848, to $240,000,000 in 1897.

Regarding the standing army in India of 225,000 men, of which we hear so much, when we consider the service it performs, and its relative size as compared with the area and population of the territory in which it maintains order and prevents possible invasion by other nations, it dwindles into comparative insignificance. Of its 225,000 officers and men, one-third are Europeans and two-thirds are natives of India. When this number is compared with the population of the Indian Empire and Feudatory States, it will be found that there are less than 250 Europeans and 500 natives employed in the military service for each million people. The entire expense of the army—whether natives or Europeans, privates or officers of high rank—is borne not by the Government of the United Kingdom, but by the Indian government.

On the subject of expense of the Indian colony to the home Government, it is not improper again to quote Sir John Strachey, whose lifetime of experience in India, in various branches of the public service, renders him a valuable authority. In his recent work upon India he says: "India has become one of the greatest powers of the world, and so far as her finances are concerned, she has no

*The exchange value of the rupee ranged between 47 and 50 cents prior to 1870; since that time it has steadily declined, and averaged in 1898–99, 32.4 cents, while the bullion value in 1898–99 was about 21 cents.

dependence upon Great Britain. This country (United Kingdom) does not contribute a single farthing to the maintenance of her Indian Empire. For all the work that she undertakes for India, whether it be for the British army by which India is garrisoned, the charges for the Indian office at home, or for any other service, great or small, she exacts full payment." In another chapter of the same work he shows that, though the gross revenues of India in 1857 were only 320,000,000 rupees, and are now 964,420,000 rupees, of which sum by far the largest item is derived from the land revenues, and though the land revenue has, in fifty years, more than doubled, the rates are actually lower, because of the enlarged area of cultivation and the increase in value of the product of the land. "There has never been, so far as my knowledge goes," he says, "a government in India which has taken so small a share of the profits of the soil as ourselves, and this is true of every province in British India."

ARE COLONIES ADVANTAGEOUS TO THE COMMERCE OR PEOPLE OF THE GOVERNING COUNTRY?

Having shown that colonization or control of a comparatively unorganized and badly governed country by an experienced and intelligent country and government results advantageously to the people so governed, it is proper to now consider whether it proves advantageous to the people of the governing country.

In doing this we must consider two things—first, whether they can furnish us the goods which we must import, and so enable us to spend our money among their people instead of sending it to absolutely foreign countries; and second, whether they will become a market for our surplus products, or prove a doorway through which we may find a market in other countries.

Both of these questions I think may properly be answered in the affirmative, as relates to the territory which has recently come into closer relationship to us. The people of the United States pay over $350,000,000 annually, or practically a million dollars in each day of the year, for tropical products, all of which can be produced, and most of which are now produced in some degree, in the islands under consideration. Some of these are for use in manufacturing and some as foodstuffs. A careful study of the imports into the United States during 1899 shows that the importations of tropical and subtropical products in the full years are over $350,000,000.

This compilation, it is proper to add, includes raw silk, tea, and rice, and the small proportion of our sugar importations which is manufactured from beets; but even if these be omitted the total which would be clearly entitled to be classed as tropical products would exceed $250,000,000, annually. Sugar, coffee, india rubber, fibers, tropical fruits and nuts, cacao, tobacco of the finer grades, spices, gums, indigo, dyewoods, and cabinet woods form the important features of this large importation, and all of them articles for which the United States is absolutely dependent, with the possible exception of sugar, upon other parts of the world, and for the present at least for the larger proportion of our sugar.

Curiously, all of these articles can be produced, and are now produced, to a greater or less extent, in the islands in question. Sugar, as everybody knows, is produced in large quantities in Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines. Of our sugar importations in the ten months just ended, Cuba has furnished 683,000,000 pounds, other West Indies 514,000,000 pounds, the Hawaiian Islands 534,000,000 pounds, the Philippine Islands 50,000,000 pounds, while the East Indies have, in the present year, furnished a larger share of our sugar importations than any other single part of the world, the total number of pounds from the East Indies alone being, for the ten months ending with October, 1,078,907,548 out of a total of 3,767,756,981 pounds. Coffee, of which our importations are growing constantly and rapidly, amounting to about 850,000,000 pounds annually as against an average of about 550,000,000 pounds in the earlier years of the decade, is successfully grown in all of the islands in question, and at one time was a very important crop in Cuba as well as at present in Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines. Fiber, of which the importations in the present year will amount to $20,000,000 in value, can readily be grown in all of the islands, the Philippines already supplying that most important feature of our fiber importations, manila hemp, which alone will amount to about $6,000,000 in value.

While two or three of the larger items of our tropical and subtropical imports—rubber, silk, and tea—are not produced in any considerable quantities in the islands in question at present, experiments which have been made in those islands, especially in tea and silk, indicate at least that their production is possible and may prove entirely practicable with further experiment. Even without these items the list of importations of tropical products which it is well known can be produced in these islands suggests the possibility that fully $200,000,000 which the United States has been heretofore expending outside her own territory and population for products which her people must have and do not produce can, in no distant future, be distributed in these islands in exchange for their supplies, whose production will doubtless be stimulated by the introduction of American capital and American methods.

The following table shows the imports of tropical and subtropical products into the United States in the year 1899, arranged in the order of magnitude:

Imports of tropical and subtropical products into the United States in 1899.

[Compiled from official reports of the Treasury Department.]

Sugar	$108,124,877	Spices	$2,934,850
Coffee	56,068,980	Indigo	1,816,828
Silk	43,546,872	Licorice root	1,550,106
India rubber	34,219,019	Olive oil	1,199,607
Fibers	21,308,904	Ivory	801,408
Fruits and nuts	20,553,022	Dyewoods	805,719
Tobacco	11,654,893	Sponges	519,814
Tea	10,934,061	Corkwood	481,520
Gums	6,126,343	Miscellaneous	12,000,000
Cotton	6,608,395
Cacao and chocolate	5,788,738	Total	350,438,066
Rice	3,894,110

It is thus apparent that we must expend constantly vast sums of money for tropical products; and if so, why not expend it among people under our own flag?

I do not mean, by including sugar in the above list, to indicate that we must always continue sending money abroad for sugar. On the contrary, I believe we shall soon be producing it from beets; but until this is the case why not pay the $100,000,000 a year which we send abroad for sugar to people under the American flag, and where American capital will be invested and thus benefited.

Now, to consider colonies as a market for our surplus products. It is above shown that we can expend many millions in those islands which we should otherwise have to spend elsewhere, and if so, we may reasonably expect them to in return buy from us the articles which they must import.

We do not need to merely argue that we might with propriety expect these islands to buy of us if we buy from them, for we have the experience of France, Germany, and England to show that this has been their experience.

French colonies show a rapid increase in the proportion of their importations which they take from the governing country. An elaborate report on the colonies of France, their government, finances, and commerce, has been published by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. It shows that the total value of imports into French colonies, exclusive of Algeria and Tunis, amounted in 1898 to $47,741,416, the imports from France and French colonies alone being $22,853,921.

The following table shows the value of imports of French colonies during the year 1896, by principal articles:

Textiles	$10,104,917	Live animals	$728,252
Spirits, wines, etc	4,858,154	Vegetables, fruits, and seeds	644,388
Cereals and flour	4,654,325	Arms and ammunition	606,818
Colonial products	3,144,032	Furniture and woodwork	520,754
Machinery, hardware, etc	2,977,700	Dressed skins and furs	488,985
Building stone, combustibles, etc	2,477,472	Drugs	322,814
Animal products, hides, etc	2,162,551	Coloring matters	184,518
Yarns and threads	1,812,207	Clothing	119,638
Oils and vegetable essences	1,536,537	Matting, wickerwork, etc	119,594
Metals	1,485,202	Dyes	111,375
Chemical products	1,268,507	Vegetable fibers, etc	99,174
Fish	917,754	Musical instruments	38,110
Paper, printed matter, etc	862,504	Sundry products and manufactures	3,190,283
Pottery and glassware	747,621
Timber	733,041	Total	46,917,236

Another and broader way of looking at it than the mere study of articles imported is to see the total commerce which the various nations have with their colonies, and the relation which their colonial commerce has to that with other parts of the world. A recent London letter to the Philadelphia Inquirer has the following:

The world has been very wide-awake lately to the fact that the colonies of the British Empire have been of vast service and importance to England in facing the surprise party which has been substituted for the "picnic to Pretoria" which was expected to take place in South Africa. It will, however, amaze a very large number of the mercantile public, even though they be well posted in trade statistics, to learn what an enormously valuable asset in England's trade is the colonial business. A leading journal that battles strongly for British trade and which is kept busy in pointing out to British traders what their American and German rivals are doing to best them in the race for commercial supremacy, says that it must again call attention to the great subject of union with the colonies.

"We advert to it once again," writes the editor, "because we think the present a favorable opportunity to take a long step forward. Interested in the question in its commercial aspect chiefly there seems to us two reasons, overpowering in their nature, why policy no less than patriotism demands the closest possible combination among the peoples of the Empire. In the first place, the colonies, taken as a whole, occupy the second place among the traders of the world. Without going into detail, confining ourselves to the chief participants in the traffic, and assuming for the present that the total of their interchanges may be represented by round numbers, say 2,000, the shares of the several holders stand thus:

Great Britain and Ireland	594
The British colonies	407
Germany	354
The United States	348
France	297
Total	2,000

"In these circumstances can anyone entertain a doubt where lies the chief interest of England as a mercantile community? The merest exigencies of trade call upon us to cultivate by all means the closest relations with the Empire over sea. High as is the position they have now attained, we should not forget that the British colonies are that portion of the world which is developing most rapidly in all things that make for national greatness, and that their resources, far from being exhausted, are but beginning to be exploited. Is it not patent that, if we had shown one-half the zeal in gaining the affections of the colonies and binding them to us that we have lavished on France, the United States, and Germany during the last thirty years—the Empire, vast as it is, would be to-day immeasurably richer, immeasurably more powerful?

"The colonies, I may add, most certainly are England's best customers, as is shown in Mr. Mulhall's paper on 'British Trade' in the March Contemporary. Take some figures for the last decade, 1889–1898. England's aggregate interchanges, export and import, with great industrial communities were as follows:

The British colonies	£1,788,000,000
The United States	1,399,000,000
Germany	824,000,000
France	682,000,000
Total	4,693,000,000

"Thus England's colonial trade shows an excess of £389,000,000 over her United States trade, an excess of £924,000,000 over that with Germany, and of £1,106,000,000 over the French trade in the space of ten years. The contrast is still more striking if one divides the aggregates according to exports and imports. It is well known how England's sales to European nations dwindle year by year under the operation of hostile tariffs and commercial restrictions. Take the United States for the period under review. Her account gives the following result:

Purchases from the United States	£1,019,000,000
Sales to the United States	380,000,000
Total	1,399,000,000

"The reports for the British colonies indicate much more equal conditions of trading and a freer access to their markets:

Purchases from the colonies	£949,000,000
Sales to the colonies	839,000,000
Total	1,788,000,000

TRADE OF EUROPEAN COUNTRIES WITH THEIR COLONIES.

The commercial benefits of colonization are indicated in some degree by the following tables, which show the exports of the United Kingdom, France, Netherlands, and Spain, respectively, to their colonies in recent years, and the percentage which these exports form of the total exports of the countries in question; also, the percentage of their total imports which the colonies take from the mother countries, and the share of their imports which other parts of the world take from the conntries in question.

It will be seen from an examination of these tables that the United Kingdom in 1897 exported to her colonies goods valued at $423,212,102 out of a total exportation of $1,431,598,345; thus 30 per cent of her total exports were sent to the colonies. The total imports of her colonies in the year were $1,216,284,637, and the amount which they took from Great Britain, $423,212,102, formed 34.8 per cent of their total imports. To the non-British world the United Kingdom sold in the same year goods valued at $1,008,386,243, and this amounted to only 13 per cent of the imports of the non-British world in that year. Or, to put it in other words, Great Britain was, through her relations with her colonies, able to supply them with 34.8 per cent of their imports, while to the non-British world she was only able to supply 13 per cent of its imports. Even the case of the United States, from which her purchases are enormous, whose people speak the same language and have extremely close business relations with her, she only supplied in 1899, 17 per cent of its total imports; while supplying 34.8 per cent of the imports of her colonies.

The imports of the British colonies, as already indicated, are $1,216,284,637, and had Great Britain supplied to them only the proportion—13 per cent—of the imports she was able to supply to the non-British world it would have amounted to but $158,106,000 instead of the $433,212,102 which she actually did send to them.

Thus in the year in question, upon this estimate, she made a market in her colonies for $265,000,000 worth of goods in excess of what she would have sold them had they held the same relation to her that does the non-British world generally. Even had she been able to supply them as large a proportion of their imports as she supplies of the imports of the United States her sales to them under such extremely favorable circumstances would have fallen $218,000,000 below those actually made.

In the case of the other countries the study is equally interesting, France supplied to her colonies 22.5 per cent of their total imports, while the non-French world took from France but 9.3 per cent of its imports; the Netherlands supplied to its colonies 31.7 per cent of their imports, while the non-Netherland world took from that country less than 6 per cent of its imports; Spain supplied to her colonies 84.6 per cent of their total imports, while the non-Spanish world took from that country less than 2 per cent of its imports.

It is apparent from this study of the commercial relations of Great Britain and her colonies and of the non-British world, respectively, that her sales to her colonies were more than twice as large as they would have been had the colonies not held this relation to her. Now, let us apply this general fact to Great Britain's commerce with her colonies during a term of years. The table which follows shows the exports of the United Kingdom to her colonies in each year from 1868 to 1898, a term of thirty years. It will be seen by this table that her exports to her colonies during that time have amounted to $11,580,000,000, and applying to this vast sum the estimate already made that she sells to her colonies more than double the amount which they would buy did not the colonial relationship exist, it will be apparent that she has by her colonial enterprise made for her manufacturers and producers a market during the last thirty years for more than $6,000,000,000 in clear excess of that which they would have had with this same territory had not the colonial relationship existed.

Now, to take the other side of the case: All manufacturing countries and countries of the temperate zone now find it necessary to import large quantities of tropical products, partially for manufacturing and partly for consumption of their people—coffee, sugar, cocoa, spices, hemp, jute, rubber, etc. By making these purchases in the colonies the mother country benefits those of her own citizens whose capital is invested in great producing enterprises in the colonies, and at the same time obtains a permanent and regular supply of the articles which she must have for her factories and breakfast tables. Of the total imports of the United Kingdom in the last thirty years, more than $12,000,000,000 worth, or 23 per cent, has been taken from her colonies, while of her exports in the decade 1869 to 1878, 25 per cent went to the colonies, and in the following decade 29 per cent, while in 1898 more than 30 per cent went to the colonies.

Thus in the past thirty years the United Kingdom has, through her colonial enterprises, made a market for fully six thousand million dollars worth of goods in excess of what she would have sold to the same territory had not the colonial relationship existed, while she has expended among the people of those countries $12,000,000,000 in the purchase of articles required by her population for food or manufacturing, and thus benefited to a great extent both the people of the colonies and those of her own people having business relations in the colonies.

Total exports of colonizing countries of the world, the amount and percentage exported to their colonies and to the foreign world, respectively, and the percentage of their total imports supplied.

Nationality of colonies.	Total exports.			Exports to colonies.		Exports to foreign world.
	Value.	Per cent of exports sent to colonies	Per cent sent to foreign world.	Value.	Per cent of total imports of colonies supplied by mother country.	Value.	Per cent of total imports of foreign world so supplied.
United Kingdom	$1,431,598,345	29.56	70.44	$423,212,102	34.80	$1,008,386,243	13.04
France	894,190,176	7.42	92.58	66,393,000	22.54	827,797,176	9.36
Netherlands	542,079,435	4.16	95.84	22,548,582	31.76	519,830,853	5.65
Spain	209,235,168	34.06	65.94	71,266,215	84.64	137,968,953	1.43

Statement showing the total imports of the colonies of the world, and the percentage from the mother country and the foreign world, respectively; also the percentage supplied by the United States, United Kingdom, and Spain for 1897; France and Netherlands for 1896.

Nationality of colonies.	Total imports of colonies.			Imports of colonies from the mother country.		Imports of colonies from foreign world.		Imports of colonies from United States.
	Value.	Per cent taken from mother country.	Per cent taken from foreign world.	Value.	Per cent of total imports from mother country.	Value.	Per cent of total imports from foreign world.	Value.	Per cent of total imports from the United States.
United Kingdom	$1,216,284,637	34.80	65.20	$423,212,102	34.80	$793,072,535	65.20	$111,364,396	9.16
France	294,571,646	22.54	77.46	66,393,000	22.54	228,178,646	77.46	2,918,185	.99
Netherlands	71,011,692	31.76	68.24	22,548,582	31.76	44,463,110	68.24	2,560,734	3.20
Spain	84,192,510	84.64	15.36	71,266,215	84.64	12,926,295	15.36	10,645,879	12.64

Statement showing the total imports and exports of the United Kingdom, and the amount imported from and exported to her colonies during the past thirty years—1869 to 1898.

Year.	Imports.		Exports.
	Total imports.	Imports from colonies.	Total exports.	Exports to colonies.
1869	$1,437,857,131	$342,681,854	$1,153,433,760	$252,581,187
1870	1,475,802,590	315,506,908	1,187,818,128	269,561,917
1871	1,610,886,833	334,984,010	1,380,016,278	270,389,037
1872	1,726,116,521	386,267,989	1,530,946,561	319,287,259
1873	1,806,809,906	394,235,799	1,513,504,699	346,240,316
1874	1,801,007,465	399,845,456	1,448,515,988	379,149,151
1875	1,819,776,951	410,849,255	1,370,466,370	373,041,611
1876	1,825,690,362	410,404,481	1,249,603,334	341,384,435
1877	1,919,445,383	435,814,531	1,228,041,906	368,647,838
1878	1,794,622,816	379,810,859	1,194,647,195	350,352,514
1879	1,706,499,900	384,174,348	1,210,704,241	323,665,917
1880	2,001,248,678	450,242,765	1,303,835,990	396,758,915
1881	1,932,109,943	445,477,755	1,445,758,324	421,834,021
1882	2,009,959,922	483,880,400	1,492,364,365	449,361,013
1883	2,077,467,869	480,238,544	1,496,409,501	439,983,016
1884	1,898,025,886	466,275,531	1,440,326,242	429,729,630
1885	1,805,315,558	410,741,034	1,321,129,726	416,034,710
1886	1,702,610,586	398,488,695	1,308,891,227	400,184,346
1887	1,762,780,440	407,806,203	1,368,765,830	402,367,265
1888	1,886,429,343	422,975,439	1,453,027,603	446,393,791
1889	2,061,098,356	473,345,335	1,565,831,772	442,053,886
1890	2,047,297,603	467,968,548	1,507,438,932	459,993,595
1891	2,119,074,911	484,045,000	1,504,301,909	454,229,956
1892	2,062,392,927	475,779,718	1,419,266,868	395,215,964
1893	1,909,415,018	446,506,048	1,348,695,391	382,425,688
1894	1,987,210,018	457,023,556	1,332,378,922	382,498,613
1895	2,027,820,221	464,807,767	1,391,003,409	370,205,123
1896	2,150,063,031	453,506,873	1,442,329,445	441,148,230
1897	2,194,982,434	457,543,137	1,431,598,345	423,212,102
1898	2,289,097,374	483,895,391	1,430,819,072	428,523,897
BY DECADES.
1869–1878	$17,218,074,048	$3,830,401,132	$13,256,994,194	$3,270,585,265
Per cent with colonies		22.25		24.67
1879–1888	18,842,447,660	4,350,293,774	13,921,208,062	4,124,257,024
Per cent with colonies		23.09		29.63
1889–1898	20,928,401,893	4,664,691,423	14,433,662,065	4,189,447,054
Per cent with colonies		22.29		29.02

Total exports of United Kingdom to colonies from 1869 to 1898, $11,584,289,943.

Principal articles imported into and exported from the United Kingdom in its commerce with the British colonies during the year 1898.

IMPORTS INTO UNITED KINGDOM FROM COLONIES.		EXPORTS FROM UNITED KINGDOM TO COLONIES.
Articles of food and food products:		Manufactured articles:
Breadstuffs	$48,508,173	Cotton manufactures	$132,310,290
Tea	44,871,556	Iron and steel manufactures	20,000,000
Meats of all kinds	29,036,143	Machinery	25,518,860
Dairy products	22,634,367	All other	47,795,585
Rice	7,489,407	Woolen manufactures	25,707,062
Vegetables	5,125,164	Apparel and slops	19,623,875
Fruits	5,112,801	Liquors	12,822,575
Fishes	4,957,357	Carriages, etc	8,893,689
Spices	4,344,164	Leather manufactures	8,244,279
Sugar	3,774,311	Paper and stationery	7,085,697
Coffee	3,300,821	Chemical and medicinal preparations	7,604,259
All other	4,480,426	Haberdashery and millinery	6,163,033
Total food products	184,722,782	Arms, ammunition, etc	5,062,518
Per cent of total	38.17	Linen and jute manufactures	5,491,913
Raw and partially manufactured materials:		Telegraph and electric apparatus	4,543,476
Wool	99,471,484	Pickles and sauces	4,245,978
Wood and lumber	27,791,739	Books	4,040,592
Fibers, unmanufactured	20,881,426	Painters' colors	3,610,802
Leather	14,968,162	Earthenware	3,208,634
Seeds	11,581,613	Hats of all kinds	3,211,992
Skins and furs	11,204,299	Copper manufactures	3,126,361
Dyestuffs, etc	12,694,017	Silk manufactures	2,702,907
Oils	6,659,357	Glassware	2,646,257
Caoutchouc	6,470,051	Soap	2,641,103
Tin in bars and pigs	6,329,438	Total	344,359,735
Hides	6,149,402	Per cent of total	78.59
Copper in ore and pigs	6,105,720	Total exports to colonies, 1898	438,523,897
Tallow and stearine	5,400,574	Total exports to colonies from 1869 to 1898	11,584,289,943
Feathers	3,966,032
Lead in ore and pigs	3,926,122
Gutta percha	2,868,870
Nuts and kernels for oil	2,571,233
Shells	2,217,435
Raw cotton	1,913,512
Raw silk	1,483,840
Total raw materials	254,684,956
Aggregate	439,377,738
Per cent of raw materials	52.63
Total imports from colonies	483,895,391

The class of goods which the British colonies take from the United Kingdom and supply to her is shown by the above table. It will be seen that the important articles which the colonies take from the mother country are of precisely the class which the manufacturers of the United States are now sending abroad and for which they are desiring to find or create a market—cotton goods, manufactures of iron and steel, machinery, manufactures of wool, manufactures of leather, paper and stationery, clothing, haberdashery, arms, ammunition, carriages, telegraph and electrical apparatus, books, and other articles of this character. These form the bulk of Great Britain's exports to her colonies, while her imports from them include fibers, cabinet wood, hides and skins, dyestuffs, pig tin, rubber, tropical fruits, tea, coffee, sugar, spices, and many other articles of this class.

Now, to apply these facts to the islands with which we have come into closer relations under the Administration of President McKinley: The imports of these islands under normal conditions have ranged in the vicinity of $100,000,000 a year, and it is reasonable to believe that they will, within a comparatively short time, double that purchasing power. Their imports are almost exclusively of the class of goods which the people of the United States desire to sell, and judging from Great Britain's experience with her colonies, it may be expected that the share which we have in the past supplied of their imports will be greatly increased. That our exports to them are already rapidly increasing is indicated by statements which follow, showing the value of the exports to each of the islands in question during the past few years.

COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES WITH CUBA, PORTO RICO, AND THE HAWAIIAN, PHILIPPINE, AND SAMOAN ISLANDS.

Exports from the United States to Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Hawaiian, Philippine, and Samoan islands, amounted, in round numbers, to $45,000,000 in the fiscal year 1900, and were more than three times as much as in 1896 and more than twice as much as in any year of our commerce with those islands except in the years 1892, 1893, and 1894, when reciprocity greatly increased our exports to Cuba and Porto Rico. To Cuba the total for the fiscal year was, in round figures, $25,000,000, against $7,530,000 in the fiscal year 1896 and $24,157,000 in the great reciprocity year 1893, when exports to that island were more than double those of five years earlier. To Porto Rico the exports of the year were, in round terms, $2,600,000, against an average of $2,750,000 in the reciprocity years 1892, 1893, and 1894, when exports to that island were double those of earlier years. To the Hawaiian Islands the total for the year were about $15,000,000, or five times as much as in 1893, nearly four times as much as in 1896, and more than double the total for 1898. To the Philippines the total for 1900 was about $2,500,000, or more than in the entire fifteen years since 1885, the date at which the first record of our exports to the Philippines was made by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. To the Samoan Islands the exports of the year were about $125,000, or nearly as much as in all the years since 1896, at which date the official records of our exports to those islands began.

On the import side, Cuba begins to show something of her old-time strength as an exporting island, as the total imports into the United States from Cuba for the full year show a total of $31,000,000, against $15,000,000 in 1898 and $18,500,000 in 1897, though they still are less than half the average for the reciprocity years 1892, 1893, and 1894, when our imports from that island averaged over $75,000,000 per annum. From Porto Rico the imports of the year are but $1,350,000, which is less than the total for any preceding year since 1880, and is due to the destruction by last year's tornado of the crops which supply Porto Rico's chief articles of export. From the Hawaiian Islands the imports for the full fiscal year are $21,000,000, or double the average annual importation for the period prior to 1896, and 20 per cent higher than in any preceding year, while from the Philippines, despite the war conditions which reduce producing and exporting power, the imports are larger than in any year since 1894.

The following table shows the exports to and imports from Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Hawaiian and Philippine islands in each fiscal year since 1885, the figures for May and June, 1900, being estimated:

Year.	Exports from the United States to—
	Cuba.	Porto Rico.	Hawaiian Islands.	Philippine Islands.
	Dollars.	Dollars.	Dollars.	Dollars.
1885	9,006,160	1,569,205	2,787,922
1886	10,409,170	1,710,569	3,192,698	132,993
1887	10,546,411	1,738,492	3,622,029	147,682
1888	10,053,560	1,969,618	2,085,203	165,903
1889	11,691,311	2,224,981	3,575,611	170,647
1890	13,084,415	2,297,588	4,711,417	122,276
1891	12,224,838	2,155,234	5,107,212	124,572
1892	17,953,570	2,856,003	3,781,628	60,914
1893	24,157,698	2,510,607	2,827,663	154,378
1894	20,125,321	2,720,508	3,306,187	145,466
1895	12,807,661	1,838,544	3,723,057	119,255
1896	7,530,880	2,102,094	3,985,707	162,466
1897	8,259,770	1,983,888	4,690,075	94,597
1898	9,561,656	1,506,046	5,907,155	127,804
1899	18,619,377	2,685,843	9,305,470	404,193
1900*	25,000,000	3,000,000	14,500,000	2,500,000

Year.	Imports into the United States from—
	Cuba.	Porto Rico.	Hawaii.	Philippines
1885	$42,306,093	$6,104,263	$8,857,497	.....
1886	51,110,780	4,594,544	9,805,707	$9,566,912
1887	49,515,434	4,661,690	9,922,075	8,614,830
1888	49,310,087	4,412,483	11,060,379	10,268,278
1889	52,130,623	3,707,373	12,847,740	10,593,172
1890	53,801,501	4,053,626	12,312,908	11,592,626
1891	61,714,395	3,164,110	13,895,597	5,167,209
1892	77,931,671	3,248,007	8,075,882	6,308,653
1893	78,706,506	4,008,623	9,146,767	9,150,857
1894	75,678,251	3,135,634	10,065,317	7,008,342
1895	52,871,259	1,516,512	7,888,961	4,731,366
1896	40,017,730	2,296,653	11,757,704	4,982,857
1897	18,406,815	2,181,024	13,687,799	4,383,740
1898	15,232,477	2,414,356	17,187,380	3,830,315
1899	25,408,828	3,179,827	17,831,463	4,409,774
1900[1]	31,000,000	1,350,000	21,500,000	5,800,000

[1] May and June, 1900, estimated.

IMPORTS OF CUBA, PORTO RICO, AND THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines afforded a market for over $40,000,000 worth of Spanish goods per annum, according to a recent statement of the British consul at Barcelona. About three-fourths of this amount was in manufactured goods, and considerable more than one-half of this market was that of Cuba alone. According to the statement which Mr. Consul Roberts sends to the British foreign office, dated June 18, 1899, the exports of Spain to Cuba in 1896 amounted to $26,882,335; to Porto Rico, $7,532,162, and to the Philippines, $4,671,551, making a total of $42,096,048, accepting the value of the peseta at 20 cents. Of the $26,892,335 value of goods exported to Cuba in 1896, $16,530,418, according to Consul Roberts, consisted of manufactured goods, $10,170,111 provisions, and $191,805 of raw materials. Of the $7,532,161 value of goods exported from Spain to Porto Rico in 1896, the value of $5,821,595 was manufactured goods, $1,680,300 provisions, and $20,264 raw materials. To the Philippines, of the $7,671,551 value of goods exported from Spain, the value of $6,850,178 was manufactured goods, $814,111 provisions, and $7,261 raw materials. Totalizing the three colonies, Consul Roberts finds that of the $42,096,048 value of goods exported from Spain to Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines in 1896, the value of $29,202,192 was manufactured goods, $12,664,525 provisions, and $229,331 raw materials.

To this market for $42,000,000 worth of Spanish produce, which the three colonies supplied, Mr. Consul Roberts adds $4,600,000 for money paid to the Spanish steamship companies for the carrying trade to and from the colonies. The imports into Spain from the colonies, he says, amounted in 1896 to 260,877 tons from Cuba, 26,071 tons from Porto Rico, and 40,985 tons from the Philippines, and computes that the amount paid in freight amounted in the commerce with Cuba to $1,565,262; Porto Rico, $156,426, and the Philippines, $450,835, or a total of $2,172,523, and says:

> If to this be added the value of passage money to and from the colonies, putting it at the low average of $50 a head, it shows a further $2,600,000 per annum, giving a total of $4,600,000 per annum paid in freight and passage giving to the steamship companies for the carrying trade to and from the colonies.

Consul Roberts intimates that other nationalities have in the past participated in the so-called Spanish trade with these islands by locating in Spain and thus getting the advantage of low tariff rates into the islands which were originally given to commerce originating in Spain. On this subject he says:

> In the year 1892 the Spanish customs tariff on manufactured goods was very considerably increased with the view of virtually giving a monopoly to goods manufactured here for exportation to the colonies. This, of course, gave an enormous impetus to manufacture in this province. Factories increased largely in number and the Catalan manufacturers grew rapidly rich. The only way in which foreigners who had good clients in the colonies could meet this competition and retain their markets was by starting factories in the country, the goods thus being manufactured in the Peninsula entering the Spanish colonies on the same terms as those of the Spanish manufacturers, whereas if shipped from England or elsewhere the prohibitive duty rendered competition impossible; or by having a resident agent in this city, who, purchasing from the Catalan manufacturers, exported the merchandise from here free of duty.

The following tables indicate the classes of articles exported from Spain to Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines in 1896, the year discussed by Consul Roberts, including all articles or classes of articles in which the value exceeded $200,000:

Principal exports from Spain to the Philippines in 1896.

Cotton fabrics	$5,094,146
Paper, and manufactures of	314,260
Leather, and manufactures of	202,580

Principal exports from Spain to Porto Rico in 1896.

Cotton, and manufactures of	2,487,953
Shoes	1,076,148
Sandals	720,276
Rice	530,522
Soap	251,163
Oil, common	240,415

Principal exports from Spain to Cuba in 1896.

Wheat flour	4,065,376
Cotton manufactures	3,744,257
Leather shoes	3,449,952
Sandals	2,686,702
Firearms	1,872,240
Wine	1,488,161
Preserved foods	948,472
Flax, hemp, etc., and manufactures of	740,017
Oil, common	663,244
Soap	635,369
Wood, manufactures of	451,568
Wax and stearin	419,124
Beans	375,604
Onions, garlic, and potatoes	241,023
Smoking paper	377,046
Packing paper	284,047
Rice	298,970
Corn	286,563
Pressed meat	316,314
Soup pastes (vermicelli, etc.)	287,200
Saffron	234,252
Woolen blankets	219,971

Imports into Porto Rico from the United States and Spain, 1888 to 1898.

Year.	From United States.	From Spain.
1888	$1,909,618	$3,012,725
1889	2,224,931	3,277,086
1890	2,297,528	4,512,123
1891	2,155,234	3,425,122
1892	2,856,003	3,945,681
1893	2,510,607	4,808,985
1894	2,720,508	5,706,407
1895	1,833,544	5,444,910
1896	2,102,094	7,532,121
1897	1,988,888	.....
1898	1,505,946	.....

Trade of the Philippine Islands, by countries, during the calendar year 1893.

Countries.	Imports.			Exports.			Total imports and exports.
	Pesos.		Per cent.	Pesos.		Per cent.		Per cent.
United Kingdom	6,929,662	$4,247,883	26.73	16,247,877	$9,959,949	44.90	$14,207,832	27.32
China (including Hongkong)	3,659,340	2,237,471	14.08	7,939,054	4,866,640	21.94	7,104,111	18.66
Spain	8,327,691	5,104,875	32.13	3,130,919	1,919,253	8.65	7,024,128	18.45
United States	1,560,695	956,706	6.02	4,885,639	2,994,897	13.50	3,951,603	10.38
Germany	2,033,031	1,246,248	7.84	32,182	19,728	.09	1,265,976	3.32
Egypt (Port Said)	5,195	3,185	.02	1,887,056	1,156,765	5.21	1,159,950	3.05
France	778,183	477,026	3.00	394,525	241,844	1.09	718,870	1.89
Singapore	254,707	156,135	.98	831,831	509,912	2.30	666,047	1.75
French Indo-China[a]	844,915	517,933	3.26	9,840	6,725	.03	523,658	1.38
Japan	298,006	182,678	1.15	498,666	305,682	1.38	488,360	1.28
Russia	428,965	262,956	1.66	.....	.....	.....	262,956	.69
Switzerland	327,357	206,800	1.30	.....	.....	.....	206,800	.54
Belgium	127,801	78,342	.49	74,034	45,383	.20	123,725	.32
Australasia	106,687	65,399	.41	75,985	46,579	.21	111,978	.29
Dutch East Indies	.....	.....	.....	154,277	94,572	.43	94,572	.25
Austria-Hungary	102,725	62,970	.40	350	214	.....	63,184	.17
Netherlands	66,230	40,599	.26	18,012	11,041	.05	51,640	.14
Italy	52,831	32,385	.20	1,150	705	.....	33,090	.09
British India	4,250	2,605	.02	6,480	3,972	.02	6,577	.02
Sulu Islands	8,645	5,299	.03	.....	.....	.....	5,299	.01
Sweden and Norway	2,375	1,456	.01	.....	.....	.....	1,456	.....
Denmark	2,205	1,352	.01	.....	.....	.....	1,352	.....
Portugal	325	199	.....	590	362	.....	561	.....
Total	25,922,515	15,890,502	100.00	36,187,966	22,183,223	100.00	38,073,725	100.00

[a] Through Saigon.

The following table shows the imports into Porto Rico from Spain in 1891 and 1896, by principal articles:

Articles.	1891.	1896.
Cotton, manufactures of	$539,113	$2,487,953
Shoes	717,824	1,076,148
Sandals	33,957	720,276
Rice	97,434	530,522
Soap	249,493	226,162
Oil, common	170,463	240,414
Preserved food	112,567	168,804
Felt hats		165,989
Flax and hemp manufactures	84,212	162,582
Wax and stearin	51,835	140,315
Soup pastes, etc	31,433	104,969
Wheat flour	156,724	95,637
Wood, manufactures of	67,824	92,639
Beans	114,270	90,273
Wool, and manufactures of	23,025	87,737
Chocolate and sweets	70,057	77,502
Leather	22,940	68,416
Packing paper	33,105	70,112
Wine	202,432	120,692
Oils and paints		25,852
Chemicals and drugs	8,325	26,298
Perfumery	57,219	61,420
Silk manufactures	37,525	45,847
Writing paper	12,153	21,414
Books, music, etc	14,117	24,025
Other paper	15,614	35,349
Saddlery	10,176	21,024
Hams and meats	7,313	22,062
Butter	17,434	46,783
Other dried vegetables	11,139	28,365
Glass and earthenware	5,579	16,302
Playing cards	11,512	13,817
Umbrellas	38,395	18,713

The prospective value of Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Hawaiian, Philippine, and Samoan islands as markets for the products of the farm and factory in the United States is illustrated by a recent publication in the Moniteur Officiel du Commerce, an official publication of the French Government, which discusses at considerable length the consuming powers of those islands and their consequent economic value to the United States, and the prospective increase in their consuming powers through enlarged production under American capital. The statement is as follows:

At present the imports of these countries amount to about $100,000,000. Those of Cuba were in 1892 (which was an average good year), $52,101,682; of the Philippines in 1896, $28,815,075; of the Hawaiian Islands in 1898, $11,650,890, and of Porto Rico in 1896, $8,656,578. The imports, however, show already an increase, as is seen by the American export figures to these islands, those to the Hawaiian Islands for 1899 being $9,905,470, as against $5,907,155 for 1898 and $4,690,075 for 1897; those to Cuba, $18,616,317 in 1899, as against $9,561,656 in 1898 and $8,259,776 in 1897; the respective figures of exports to Porto Rico being $2,685,848 for the year 1899, as compared with $1,505,946 for 1898 and $1,988,888 for 1897. There is no doubt that with an increased productive power which must naturally be followed by increased consumption, the volume of the foreign trade of these islands is likewise bound to increase considerably.

The consumption of foreign products by these islands is made up almost equally of articles of manufacture and of agriculture of the temperate zone. Out of $20,125,321 worth of products exported from the United States to Cuba in 1894, the value of $9,440,953 was in products of agriculture, and out of $18,616,377 worth of exports for the year 1899, $9,799,512 worth belonged to the same category. The exports from the United States to the "Pearl of the Antilles" are made up principally of cereals, live animals, salt meat, cotton goods, machinery, foot wear, instruments, etc.

Spain, under normal conditions, sold annually to Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, about $40,000,000 worth of goods, principally manufactured articles, besides wines, oils, flour, meats, and vegetables. Out of 135,000,000 pesetas' worth of merchandise shipped from Spain to Cuba in 1896, about 50,000,000 represented the value of products of agriculture. The proportion was nearly the same in the case of Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Speaking generally, we may assume that under normal conditions the surplus production of Cuba and the Philippines before the war amounted to about $125,000,000 annually, and their consumption to $100,000,000, but that their productive power is capable of great increase, which in turn will cause a similar increase in consumption. About one-half of the imports into these islands was of Spanish origin and the other half came from other countries proportionate to their proximity or distance. Thus the United States furnished the greater part of the imports into Cuba and Porto Rico, while the Philippine Islands received whatever Spain was unable to furnish them with from Hongkong, Shanghai, Yokohama, Singapore, Calcutta, and Australian ports.

The following statement, prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, shows the exports from the United States, by principal articles, to each of the islands mentioned in the above discussion. The statement covers the seven months ending with January, 1900, and compares that period with the corresponding period in earlier years, thus indicating the growth in exports from the United States to those islands since 1897:

Articles.	Cuba.	Porto Rico.	Hawaii.	Philippines.
Animals*	$2,050,232	$1,104	$167,941	$407,300
Breadstuffs†	1,738,905	460,270	605,490	116,543
Chemicals	256,135	81,661	110,712	32,600
Coal and coke	308,456	22,502	67,545	60,134
Cotton manufactures	445,382	122,731	252,580	14,393
Iron and steel	2,090,801	340,790	2,728,522	291,706
Liquors	503,955	62,853	201,850	192,653
Mineral oil	254,897	30,522	76,427	4,567
Provisions‡	2,945,139	416,346	246,494	22,980
Vegetables	$672,125	$45,773	$41,492	$44,128
Wood§	905,476	218,044	705,883	58,963
Other articles‖	9,239,251	511,616	2,196,283	297,061
Total seven months of—	15,405,754	2,264,213	7,501,219	1,552,122
1897	4,793,754	1,126,732	2,548,929	88,091
1898	6,522,579	1,102,998	3,508,016	67,328
1899	8,467,696	1,059,044	4,754,430	97,492
1900	15,405,754	2,264,213	7,501,219	1,552,122

* Chiefly cattle.
† Chiefly flour and corn.
‡ Chiefly lard, bacon, hams, and fresh meat.
§ Chiefly lumber and furniture.
‖ Includes exports of foreign merchandise.

Imports of principal articles into the United States from Cuba during the years ending June 30, 1898, 1896, and 1898.

Articles.	1898.	1896.	1898.
Sugar	$60,637,631	$24,102,835	$9,828,607
Tobacco, leaf	8,940,058	10,613,468	2,883,260
Tobacco manufactures	2,787,030	2,096,884	1,450,818
Fruits and nuts	2,389,523	1,214,994	45,326
Molasses	1,061,034	128,474	85,941
Wood, unmanufactured	1,071,123	531,349	17,576
Iron ore	641,943	521,310	$25,818
Chemicals, drugs, and dyes	377,269	32,312	2,004
Hides and skins	279,153	184,281	88,147
Vegetables	67,042	40,265	0,612
Asphaltum	25,992	7,028
Spirits, distilled	19,419	7,493	8,995
Textile grasses	2,314	442
All other articles	386,975	574,996	540,373
Total	78,706,506	40,017,730	15,232,477
Imports free of duty	66,049,369	2,074,763	276,000
Imports dutiable	12,657,137	37,942,967	14,956,477

NOTE.—The decrease in free and increase in dutiable imports in 1896 and 1898, compared with 1893, are due to the transfer in 1894 of sugar and molasses from the free to the dutiable list.

Imports of principal articles into Spain from Cuba, 1895.

Sugar	$2,080,987	Cooperage	$37,823
Tobacco, unmanufactured	2,030,485	Paraffin, wax, etc	29,016
Tobacco, manufactured	1,148,587	Perfumery and extracts	26,253
Cocoa	531,607	Leather and hides, undressed	24,945
Rum	191,376	Fruits	9,488
Coffee	153,816	All other articles	101,196
Cabinet woods	75,201	Total	6,551,204
Sweets and conserves	71,599
Sacks and bags	38,825

NOTE.—The imports from Cuba and Porto Rico are not separately stated in the commercial reports of France, Germany, and the United Kingdom. The total imports from both islands in 1896 were: Into the United Kingdom, $179,225; into Germany, $3,837,205, and into France, $3,204,670. The principal imports of France from the islands were coffee, manufactured tobacco, and sponges; those of Germany, tobacco, manufactured and unmanufactured; United Kingdom, mahogany.

Imports of principal articles into the United States from Porto Rico, during the years ending June 30, 1895, 1896, and 1898.

Articles.	1898.	1896.	1898.
Sugar	$3,228,993	$1,708,318	$1,913,742
Molasses	708,905	520,275	264,781
Coffee	23,814	24,101	24,217
Fruits and nuts	26,628	63	11,532
All other articles	20,343	43,896	100,084
Total	4,008,623	2,296,653	2,414,356
Imports free of duty	3,994,673	48,608	50,667
Imports dutiable	13,950	2,248,045	2,363,689

NOTE.—The decrease in free and increase in dutiable imports into United States from Porto Rico in 1896 and 1898, compared with 1893, are due to the transfer in 1894 of sugar and molasses from the free to the dutiable list.

Imports of principal articles into Spain from Porto Rico, 1896.

Coffee	$3,278,253	Fruits	$21,933
Sugar	1,610,826	Tobacco, manufactures of	12,574
Cacao	196,240	All other articles	46,146
Tobacco, leaf	88,740	Total	5,376,457
Leather and manufactures	77,051
Sacks and bags	44,694

NOTE.—The imports from Cuba and Porto Rico are not separately stated in the commercial reports of France, Germany, and the United Kingdom. The total imports from both islands in 1896 were: Into the United Kingdom, $179,225; Germany, $3,837,205, and France, $3,204,670. The principal imports of France from the islands were coffee, manufactured tobacco, and sponges; those of Germany, tobacco, manufactured and unmanufactured; United Kingdom, mahogany.

THE PHILIPPINES AS A DOOR TO THE COMMERCE OF THE ORIENT—AN IMPORTANT DISTRIBUTING POINT TO HALF THE EARTH'S POPULATION—A MARKET FOR MORE THAN A BILLION DOLLARS WORTH PER ANNUM OF PRODUCTS OF OUR FARMS AND FACTORIES.

The market which the people of the United States will be able to make in the Philippines, while amounting to many millions of dollars is, however, a small item compared to that which opens to them through the possession of the Philippines as an entrepôt for the distribution of American goods in the Orient. Grouped around Manila, as a point of distribution, lies the most densely populated part of the world. More than 800,000,000 of people form the population of Japan, Asiatic Russia, China, French Cochin China, Siam, British India, Australasia, the Dutch East Indies, etc., all of which are nearer to Manila, as a point of distribution, than any other great commercial center, while such cities as Canton, Shanghai, and others are as near Manila as Havana is to the city of New York. The commerce of this section, of which Manila may be made a great commercial center, now amounts to more than $2,000,000,000 per annum, and its annual purchases $1,200,000,000 per annum, or an average of $100,000,000 a month. Practically all this vast sum which it sends to other parts of the world is expended for the class of goods for which the people of the United States are now seeking a market. Cotton and cotton goods, breadstuffs, provisions, dairy products, manufactures of iron and steel and wood, the products of the farm and factory, are demanded by the people of that part of the world.

In most cases the apparent disposition is of these countries to purchase from the people of the United States rather than from any other section or people. China, which in 1880 took only 2.5 per cent of her imports from the United States, in 1898 took 8.2 per cent of her imports from this country. Japan, which in 1893 took only 6.8 per cent of her imports from the United States, took 14.4 per cent of her imports from this country in 1898. Our exports to China, which in the fiscal year 1893 were but $3,900,457, were in 1899 $14,493,440. Our exports to Japan, which in 1893 were $3,195,494, were in 1899 $17,264,688, and in the fiscal year of 1900 will reach $25,000,000. To British Australasia our exports, which in 1894 were $8,131,939, were in 1899 $19,777,129, and will reach $25,000,000 in 1900. To the Hawaiian Islands our exports in 1893 were $2,827,663, and in 1899 $9,305,470, while those of the fiscal year 1900 will reach $14,000,000. To the Philippines our exports in 1897 were less than $100,000, and in the year 1900 will exceed $2,000,000. Taking Asia as a whole, our exports, which in 1893 were but $16,222,354, were in 1899 $48,360,161, and in 1900 will reach $65,000,000, or four times those of 1893, while to Oceania our exports, which in 1893 were $11,199,477, will in 1900 exceed $40,000,000. Thus our exportations to Asia and Oceania, which in 1893 were $27,000,000, will in 1900 be upward of $100,000,000, or four times those of seven years ago.

That such fields still remain open to us in the Orient is, however, shown by the following table, prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics from the latest available data, showing the value of the imports and exports of the Orient and the share of the United States therein:

	Imports.	Per cent from United States.	Exports.	Per cent to United States.
British East Indies	$221,552,305	2.0	$365,217,000	4.6
British Australasia	277,879,000	5.8	278,708,000	4.6
China	146,077,000	5.6	110,849,000	8.4
Japan	138,751,000	12.4	82,877,000	32.1
Straits Settlements	109,955,000	.....	97,822,000	.....
Dutch East Indies	66,458,000	1.7	80,061,000	9.6
Russia, Asiatic	21,579,000	.7	29,456,000	1.2
Siam	19,384,000	.....	25,280,000	.....
Philippine Islands	14,300,000	1.1	16,550,000	30.1
Hawaiian Islands	7,165,000	76.2	15,436,000	90.7
Mauritius	15,010,000	1.9	15,652,000	5.6
Persia	25,476,000	.....	15,054,000	.....
Ceylon	20,722,000	.2	14,641,000	5.7
Hongkong*	20,000,000	30.0	10,000,000	9.1
French East Indies	790,595	8.7	3,088,000	.....
Korea	8,088,000	.....	2,482,000	.....
Total Asia and Oceania	1,114,067,000	5.3	1,163,193,000	8.6

*Estimate: Statesman's Year Book.

WE CAN'T TURN BACK—BISHOPS POTTER AND THOBURN ON OUR DUTY IN THE PHILIPPINES—CONDITIONS IN THE ISLANDS EXHAUSTIVELY REVIEWED BY ONE WHO HAS NO POLITICAL BIAS, AND A CONVINCING STATEMENT MADE OF THE REASONS FOR THE AMERICAN PEOPLE GOING FORWARD WITH THE WORK OF ESTABLISHING PEACE.

Mr. Speaker, there has been much criticism of the course of the present Administration in the Philippines. While most of it is clearly for partisan purposes, by men who would even sacrifice national honor as well as national duty to bring about Democratic success, some part of it may be due to a misunderstanding of the situation and of the facts in the case. For their information and for the information of all who want to be sure beyond a peradventure that we are right—as all should desire to be—I desire to present statements by two eminent men whose standing with the people of the United States is such that no man will call into question their integrity, while the fact that they make their statements after a careful personal study of the country and the people affected will give equal assurance of their ability to reach accurate and just conclusions.

The two distinguished men to whom I refer are Bishop Potter and Bishop Thoburn, men well known to the public, and men whom two of our great religious organizations have given the highest honors and highest evidence of confidence.

BISHOP POTTER'S VIEWS.

Both these men speak after a personal study of the people of and situation in the Philippines; and Bishop Potter says frankly that he reaches his conclusion in the face of what was at first an adverse opinion on this subject. His first view was that the course of this Government in the Philippines was of doubtful wisdom, but after a visit to those islands and a study of the situation and people he returned to the United States, and in an interview in March of the present year said:

There is but one thing for us to do now: that is to hold on to the islands and assume the responsibility for their future.

BISHOP THOBURN'S VIEWS.

Bishop J. M. Thoburn, of the Methodist Church, is also a man of high standing in this great religious organization, and if his name is less known to the people of the United States than that of Bishop Potter it is because of his long absence in the Orient, where he has been for years engaged in missionary work, and where he had especial opportunities to study the Philippines and the Filipino. He went to India as a missionary in 1859, and was chosen missionary bishop of India and Malaysia in 1888. He has written a book, entitled India and Malaysia, which is an exhaustive study of the peoples and languages of his immense diocese. He has visited the Philippines a number of times within the past fifteen years and has devoted much time to study of the Filipinos. His last visit was made this year, just previous to his return to America.

Bishop Thoburn is a quiet, unobtrusive man, a keen observer and scholar, and broad in his religious views. The Thoburn family is proud of its loyalty to the flag. Col. Joseph Thoburn, a brother of the bishop, was killed in the civil war at the battle of Cedar Creek while leading a division. Bishop Thoburn, then, knows what he is talking about, and therefore the following statement, made on the eve of his journey to the Far East, is of immense value to all students of present conditions in the Philippines.

In reply to an inquiry the bishop said:

The destruction of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila was a surprise to the whole world, and our worst enemies can not accuse our Government of having deliberately declared war against Spain with a view to gaining possession of the Philippine Islands.

Those islands were so far away and had so long been under the close restraint of Spain that the world had for many years ceased to give them any attention, and when Admiral Dewey left Hongkong for Manila, no doubt he did so for the sole and sufficient reason that a powerful Spanish fleet lay there, and that the Pacific coast of the United States would be exposed to grave danger so long as that fleet was afloat in Pacific waters. This fact completely answers the question so often asked: "Why did the Americans go to Manila?" Admiral Dewey would have been fatally negligent if he had not done so. It was his duty to protect the American ports on the Pacific coast, and the surest and most effective way of doing this was to capture or destroy the Spanish fleet. This fleet chanced to be lying in the bay of Manila and this fact alone directed Admiral Dewey's course to that port.

When this explanation is brought forward, many objectors ask why the admiral did not leave after accomplishing this purpose. And why, if they were obliged to remain, the Americans did not keep their vessels at anchor, without disturbing the people of Manila.

A child ought to know that this question is simply foolish. Some 20,000 Spanish soldiers were present on the shore and war had been declared between the American and Spanish nations. No fleet can lie quietly at peace with such an armed force within cannon range of them and ignore a war which was going on between the two countries represented by the fleet in the harbor and the soldiers on shore. It ought to be clear to the understanding of any child that hostile proceedings were inevitable under the circumstances. If Admiral Dewey had been supported by land forces, he would undoubtedly have thought it his duty to capture the city of Manila the day after destroying the fleet, and the whole world would have condemned him if he had failed to do so.

It thus becomes clearly evident that the embarrassing situation in which the Americans found themselves placed at Manila was inevitable from the very hour that war was declared against Spain. They could not have done less than they did do, and it is morally certain that if they had pursued the extraordinary course which their critics now advocate, and refrained from any hostile proceedings, the very men who now find fault with them would probably have been the first to censure them for their inactivity.

A still more extraordinary question is asked, even by men who are sometimes called statesmen: "Why did the United States insist that the Philippine Islands should be ceded to the American Goverment when peace was made with Spain? Why did they not leave the islands in charge of Spain and let her settle her troubles as best she could?"

It seems unreasonable that such an unreasonable question should be asked by intelligent men, but there are those—and they are not few in number—who persist in assuming that the United States had an option in this matter.

The Americans had gone to war to remedy a grievous state of things in Cuba, which had its parallel in the Philippines, and they would simply have stultified themselves before the world if, while delivering the people of an island in the West Indies from unspeakable tyranny and misery, they had at the same time left a much larger population in the East Indies in a state of social and political misery equally deplorable with that which existed in the west. To have pursued such a course as is advocated by opponents of the present war would have been not only politically inconsistent and unwise to the last degree, but morally wrong from every point of view. The people of the Philippines had as much claim upon the Americans as the people of Cuba had, the only difference being that one people were near at hand and the others removed to the other side of the globe.

Still another question is asked: Why not, after expelling the Spaniards from the Philippines, leave the people of the islands alone in peace? Why meddle with them further? Why deprive them of the liberty of choice, which belongs to every people on earth? In other words, why not let them organize a government of their own and live under its protection?

These questions involve several impossibilities. To leave the people of the Philippine Islands to themselves would be to proclaim general anarchy for years and generations to come, and had such an attempt been made the confusion which would have resulted, with all its attendant bloodshed and misery, would have created such a spectacle that the whole civilized world would have execrated us.

A great many extraordinary mistakes are made by writers and speakers when discussing this subject, owing to the very limited knowledge which the outside world possesses concerning the actual status of the people of the islands. It seems impossible for many intelligent persons to comprehend the fact that there are at least eighty different tribes or races of people inhabiting the Philippines. The islands as a whole have never been subjugated by Spain. Her title to many of the more southern islands has been only nominal.

The class of persons known as the Filipinos belong almost exclusively to the island of Luzon. They are by no means popular among the other islands, nor has Aguinaldo or any other man ever succeeded in winning the confidence of the islanders generally.

Like all Mohammedan Malays, the people inhabiting the southern portions of the archipelago are treacherous, warlike, and turbulent. In the more civilized islands, inhabited by the Visaya race, the Filipinos constitute a very small minority, and if the parties were left to themselves in a short time a bitter enmity would manifest itself even among the most civilized portions of the northern and central islands. At every hazard and every cost it becomes the solemn duty of the American people, a duty from which the civilized world will never absolve them, to put down all warlike opposition and give peace to the island of Luzon, and also provide for a good government throughout the whole archipelago.

In any and every case there should be no mention of our retiring from the field. We did not seek this great responsibility, but it was thrust upon us. To retire now would be to shrink from a manifest duty, to make a confession of national timidity, and to call down upon us as a nation the ridicule and contempt, if not indeed the execration, of the civilized world.

We have taken up our burden and we must carry it patiently and fulfill the task which the providence of God, as I verily believe, has thrust upon us. A few years hence the whole situation will wear a different aspect. Peace will be restored to these disturbed islands and a new career set before a people who have been carrying grievous burdens and suffering unspeakable wrongs for more than three hundred years.

EXPANSION OF THE UNITED STATES—THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY HAS ALWAYS FAVORED EXPANSION—IT ADDED PRACTICALLY EVERY FOOT OF TERRITORY, AND SOUGHT TO ANNEX CUBA, HAWAII, THE DANISH WEST INDIES, AND YUCATAN—ADDITIONAL SLAVE TERRITORY AND SLAVE POWER WAS THEIR AMBITION, AND WHEN SLAVERY ENDED THEIR INTEREST IN EXPANSION CEASED.

Mr. Speaker, while the expansion which has occurred under the McKinley Administration is now generally commended even by a large majority of those opposing the party in power, it may not be amiss to answer some of the criticisms of this policy which have been offered by leading Democrats.

It did not take long when this question came up for public discussion to bring to the surface the fact that Democrats who attempted to criticise the expansion policy of the Republicans were at the same time criticising the continuous policy of their own party during all of the years in which it administered the affairs of the nation prior to the birth of the Republican party. A few moments' reflection was sufficient to show that the enormous additions to our territory which were made beginning with the Louisiana purchase by Jefferson in 1803 were accomplished by Democratic administrations. The reply to this, however, was that the Democratic party's policy with reference to expansion had been only to add contiguous territory while that which the Republicans were now adopting contemplates the addition of noncontiguous territory—islands of the sea, which contain a population dissimilar to that of our own. Let us see about that. The fact is—and a fact easily sustained by historical and official documents—that nearly every Democratic President from Jefferson to Buchanan expressed a desire for the addition of Cuba to the territory of the United States, several of them hinting at a similar desire with reference to Porto Rico, and at least one of them actively pressed for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, while schemes looking to the addition of noncontiguous territory in Central America and upon the Isthmus of Darien were favored by leading Democrats. Jefferson, both while President and afterwards, in correspondence with Madison and Monroe, frequently expressed a desire that Cuba should some time become a part of the United States, and the Democratic handbook as late as 1898, issued as an official document of the Democratic party, quotes extracts from his letters in support of that statement. President Monroe also expressed himself in favor of making Cuba a part of the United States. Polk favored the annexation of Cuba, and Hon. James D. Richardson, the present member of Congress from Tennessee, who now holds up his hands with holy horror at the thought of this kind of expansion, says in his index to the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, page 332, volume 10:

President Polk made a proposition in 1840 for the purchase of the island by the American Government for $100,000,000. In 1854 the Ostend manifesto claimed the right of the United States, should Spain refuse to sell Cuba, to take and annex it.

The Ostend manifesto, it will be remembered, was an announcement made by President Pierce's ministers to England, France, and Spain (Buchanan, Madison, and Soulé), in which they suggested that an earnest effort be made to purchase Cuba at a price not to exceed $120,000,000 and if this should be refused by Spain "we should be justified by every law, human and divine, in wresting it from Spain if we possess the power," a proposition of which Lossing, the historian, says: "The bald iniquity of this proposition amazed honest men in both hemispheres." Spain having refused to sell, and the sentiment of the world failing to sustain the Democratic proposition to seize the island, Pierce's Administration failed, but that of Buchanan immediately took it up again, and President Buchanan in three of his annual messages to Congress urged that Cuba ought to be made by purchase a part of the United States. During his term a bill for that purpose was introduced in Congress by Senator Slidell, whose name is well remembered in connection with the Confederate Government, and was sustained by Southern Democrats generally, while the general proposition for obtaining control of the island of Cuba by some process was publicly commended by Jefferson Davis in a speech in his own State during that time. The efforts of the various Democratic Presidents for the purchase of Cuba having been rejected by Spain, the Democratic national convention took up the question, and in the platforms upon which two of its candidates, Douglas and Breckinridge, ran in 1860 it declared pointedly in favor of the annexation of Cuba.

It is also on record that at least one Democratic President attempted to make Hawaii a part of the United States, although within the memory of the present generation a Democratic President hauled down the United States flag in that island and withdrew from the Senate a treaty of annexation which a Republican President had sent to that body. Under President Pierce an active effort was made to annex Hawaii, and probably would have been successful but for the death of the King after the treaty of annexation had been prepared and forwarded to the United States. It is a matter of official record in the State Department that negotiations were opened by President Pierce, through his Secretary of State, Marcy, and the minister to the Hawaiian Islands, David L. Gregg, for the annexation of Hawaii; that a treaty for that purpose was drawn and forwarded to the United States in 1854, and that while President Pierce objected to certain of its features, his Secretary of State responded to Minister Gregg that—

This Government will receive the transfer of the sovereignty of the Sandwich Islands with all proper provisions relative to existing rights of the people thereof, such as are usual and proper to territorial sovereignty. The President directs me to say that he can not approve of some of the articles of the treaty; there are in his mind strong objections to the immediate incorporation of the islands in their present condition into the Union as an independent State. It was expected that the Hawaiian Government would be willing to offer the islands to the United States as a Territory and leave the question in relation to their becoming a State to the determination of this Government, unembarrassed by stipulations on that point. * * * The President desires me to assure you that he takes no exception whatever to your course in this difficult and embarrassing negotiation, but, on the contrary, it is highly approved. Your efforts have been properly directed and your ability is appreciated and commended.

In addition to the above evidence of Democratic efforts to add island territory to that of the United States, a part of it thousands of miles away, it may be further remarked that President Polk in a message to Congress, on April 29, 1848, intimated strongly a desire to send troops to Yucatan and take possession of that territory, suggesting that this might be advisable in order to prevent that territory from falling into the hands of a European power, while President Johnson, after severing his allegiance to the Republican party and receiving the support of the Democrats, recommended, in a message to Congress, the purchase of the Danish West Indies.

COMMERCIAL EXPANSION.

The Republican policy of expansion differs widely from that which controls the Democrats in their ambitions for adding territory, and especially tropical territory. What they desired, especially in the case of Cuba, was additional slave territory and additional power in Congress through increased number of slave States. The Republican policy of expansion is to secure footholds by which our commerce will be protected and extended. The territory which has come under the control of the Government in the Gulf of Mexico is of supreme importance in guarding that approach to the mouth of the Mississippi River and to a great isthmian canal, which the Republican party is pledged to bring into existence, and a bill for which has already passed the House of Representatives. The Hawaiian and Samoan islands are of equal importance in relation to the commerce of that great Pacific Ocean which is now attracting so much attention as a highway of transportation between the Orient and the Occident. The Hawaiian Islands form the only way station and satisfactory harbors in the central Pacific, while the harbor of Tutuila in the Samoan group, which has recently become a part of the United States, is recognized as the finest in the southern Pacific, and probably the finest in the entire Pacific Ocean.

With these two islands as way stations for coaling, watering, repairing, and receiving telegraphic orders vessels can satisfactorily engage in commerce between the United States and the Orient, and by making the Philippine Islands a great entrepôt for American products, can command the trade of the Orient as Great Britain commanded it in former years, and much more successfully than she now does by reason of greater proximity and greater facilities for producing articles which the people of that country desire. The countries lying within easy reach of Manila as a point of distribution—China, Japan, Asiatic Russia, French Indo-China, Siam, India, and Australasia—contain half the population of the earth and have an annual commerce of more than $2,000,000,000. Their purchases alone amount to $1,200,000,000 annually, or an average of $100,000,000 per month, and at the present time the United States supplies but 6 per cent of their purchases. Yet their wants include all the articles which we have to sell. Not only is this the case, but they are rapidly coming to recognize the fact that they can obtain more satisfactorily from the United States the articles they desire than from any other part of the world. American flour, provisions, tobacco, cotton and cotton goods, and manufactures of all kinds are rapidly making their way into the Orient and are as rapidly excluding those which the European countries have been supplying them.

Our exports to Japan have increased from $5,275,501 in 1889 to $20,604,774 in 1899; to China, from $3,254,034 in 1889 to $15,225,294 in 1899; to Hongkong, from $3,864,224 in 1889 to $778,719 in 1899; to British Australasia, from $7,576,890 in 1893 to $24,142,591 in 1899; and to all Asia, from $21,534,847 in 1889 to $53,843,554 in 1899; and to all Oceania, from $16,081,021 in 1889 to $37,542,936 in 1899. With this rate of increase we are, as already indicated, supplying but about 6 per cent of the total purchases of that enormous population grouped around Manila as an entrepôt and point of distribution for our merchants and manufacturers.

To the islands with which we have come in closer relations during the last two years our exports show a rapid growth. To Porto Rico the exports of 1899 were $3,677,564, against $1,955,814 in 1896; to Cuba in 1899, $24,861,261, against $7,296,613 in 1896; to the Hawaiian Islands in 1899, $11,305,589, against $4,184,351 in 1896 and to the Philippine Islands, $1,663,213 in 1899, against $69,459 in 1897.

This opportunity for expansion affects every producer, every individual engaged in any form in agriculture, in mining, in manufacture, in transportation; and in commerce the people of the Orient demand flour, meats, and dairy products, cotton and cotton goods, and manufactures of all kinds, and they have clearly shown in recent years a preference for the products of the United States, a preference which will give to us a large share of their enormous market, with the control of Hawaii and Manila, the opening of the Nicaraguan Canal, and the establishment of American shipping with which to carry American products.

State Ownership of Railways.

Its Effect upon Wages, Freight Rates, and Convenience of Travel—Lower Wages; Higher Freight Rates; Inferior Accommodations of Travel.

SPEECH

OF

HON. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 4, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11598) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. GROSVENOR said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The recent pronouncement of political platforms in support of State ownership of railways suggests some facts which have been developed by a careful study of the experiments made in this line by nations of Europe. These studies, which have been made by the United States Department of Labor, may be summed up in a single sentence: Lower wages for employees, higher freights for shippers, poorer accommodations for travelers.

It is a direct insult to the millions of employees of the country, and at least indirectly so to the millions of other working people, to propose to substitute for our present system, in which wages are high and employees prosperous, one which pays from $23 to $35 per month for engineers; from $17 to $23 per month for firemen and brakemen, and from 39 to 58 cents a day for ordinary labor.

These are the figures quoted by an official report of the United States Department of Labor regarding the rates of wages paid on the State-owned railways in Belgium, while in the machine shops tool hands range from 39 to 85 cents per day, turners from 39 cents to $1, while blacksmiths, masons, and others of this class receive from 58 cents to 70 cents per day. In Prussia, where railways are completely owned and managed by the State, the average yearly wages of workshop employees is $256, or a little over $20 per month; track men, $182 per annum, or $15 per month; and this is pointed out as a marked advance over wages of earlier years.

The state ownership of railroads is a proposition which is opposed to the established policy of this country and adverse to the most fundamental interests of the community. For the United States the State ownership of railroads at this time would mean higher rates for shippers, lower wages for employees, an obstacle in the way of future progress, and it would lead to anarchy in the field of production and to an unparalleled carnival of corruption in our political life.

It would be well, before committing our country to this policy, to glance at some of the results which have been obtained in other countries. In most of the countries of continental Europe, especially in Germany, Belgium, Austria, Sweden, Portugal, Russia, and Spain, the state ownership of railroads has been adopted, either entirely or in part. In all of these countries the field for the adoption of such a policy was the more favorable owing to the fact that they are all monarchical, and the control of the railroads was placed directly in the hands of the king, or in those of his ministers, and not intrusted to the legislative body.

Thus in Prussia and Saxony, as in Belgium and other countries, the representatives of the people have no voice in the determination of rates or other questions of railroad policies, this being placed in the hands of the minister, who is appointed by the king. Even in these countries, however, the results of railroad ownership have not brought their management up to the high level which the full play of competition has produced in the United States.

HIGHER FREIGHT RATES UNDER STATE OWNERSHIP.

A comparison of rates will show that in no country in the world is transportation so cheap or wages of railway employees so high as in the United States. The countries with state ownership of railroads have not been able to operate them at as low a rate as has been the case with the railroads of the United States under the competition which has arisen among our own roads. Nor is the service on the European railways in any way comparable with that of the American railways.

The American traveler is immediately disenchanted when he attempts to journey on the Continent of Europe. Not only are the cars small and uncomfortable, the speed of the trains slow, the accommodations for comfort, health, and cleanliness insufficient, and station accommodations totally inadequate, but in other respects—in the number of cars run, in the opportunities to use sleeping cars, in the urbanity and complaisance of the railway employees, etc.—the American railways are incomparably superior.

The railways under state management seem to adopt the catch-penny policy of having a traveler pay for every trifle, and for treating him as a child or a criminal; and in every respect the service rendered is much inferior to that in the United States. The fares, moreover, are higher for the first-class traffic in all continental countries than they are in the United States.

LOWER WAGES FOR EMPLOYEES UNDER STATE OWNERSHIP.

The effect of the nationalization of the railroads on the wages of employees is one which should not be overlooked. There are at present in the United States almost a million persons earning their living directly from the railroads, and a population of about 5,000,000 is directly supported from this source. This population of 5,000,000 does not include the persons employed by electric railways or by builders of railway materials, but those persons only who are supported directly by work in the operation of steam railways.

This vast army of employees, which comprises some of the most intelligent and skilled workmen of the country, is now paid annually an immense sum of money, aggregating many hundreds of millions of dollars. The countries with state ownership of railways, however, pay wages which are considerably lower than those in the United States, and thus the wages of railway employees in Belgium, Germany, Austria, Norway and Sweden, where state ownership in the main prevails, wages are much lower than in the United States, England, and France, where private ownership prevails. In every branch of the railway service the wages paid by the Governments owning their railways are pitifully small, as will be shown later.

The advocates of the State ownership of railroads fail to realize, also, the immense political dangers which such a revolution in transportation would produce. The effect that the patronage of an additional million Government employees would have upon the Government may easily be imagined.

FREIGHT RATES CAN NOT BE PROPERLY CONTROLLED UNDER STATE OWNERSHIP.

It would also be a dangerous experiment to attempt to regulate rates with our present political machinery. It would be dangerous to vest the power of making rates for billions of dollars' worth of traffic in the hands of a single person, such as a secretary of railways, since it would be in his power to ruin not only industries, but cities, States, and whole districts. The power to fix rates is the power to fix prices, and the power to fix prices is the power to determine what industries shall flourish and what industries shall die.

The question whether wheat and grain shall be shipped to New York, or to Baltimore, to Philadelphia, or to Newport News is one entirely of comparative rates, and there would inhere in the person controlling this vast machinery the power to destroy the prosperity of any State or of any producing community. It would introduce a new and incalculably powerful corrupting force into our politics to place the fate of various parts of the country in the hands of a single man, or a body of men, instead of allowing it to be regulated by the law of competition.

The advocates of State ownership of railroads also fail to perceive the effect which this acquisition would have upon the finances of the country. The immediate effect would be to increase the national debt by more than tenfold, and to add the sum of over twelve thousand million dollars to the burden of our debt. It is by no means certain that the Government would be able to manage the railroads profitably, and the burden which would be involved by annually paying interest upon a new debt of twelve to fifteen billions of dollars would embarrass the finances of the country and bring us dangerously near the verge of bankruptcy.

The effect, therefore, of the acquisition of the railroads by the State would be to vastly increase the debt of this nation; to involve us in the most perilous financial straits; to imperil our political institutions by creating an immense amount of new patronage; and by vesting despotic power in the hands of a single man or body of men to introduce immense pressure on the Government for favors for various interests or sections; to stop abruptly the rapid increase in the efficiency and improvements in the technical processes of railway operation; to put a check upon the continued improvement of the service; to evoke a considerable increase in freight rates, and to reduce over a million wage-earners to the low wages and the low standard of living prevailing among the employees of continental state-owned railways.

The following table from the report of the Department of Labor shows the statistics of wages of employees on the railways of Prussia, which may be classed as the most successful of all the state-owned railway systems of Europe:

Average yearly wages for workshop employees and track men, Prussian state railways, 1888 to 1897.

Year.	Workshop employees.	Track men.
1888	$201.04	$145.49
1889	206.32	150.25
1890	215.53	160.41
1891	224.27	165.46
1892	226.17	166.91
1893	245.64	174.55
1894	246.57	174.88
1895–96	252.14	180.88
1896–97	256.42	182.31

With the exception of these two classes, workshop employees and track men the gross sum of $65,131,080 was expended during 1896–97 on all the Prussian State railway employees. This amounted to $318.68 per head, 9,925 marks per kilometer of line ($8,801.53 per mile), 803 marks per 1,000 locomotive kilometers (30.8 cents per locomotive mile), 26 marks per axle kilometer ($9.96 per axle mile), and 20.7 per cent of the gross receipts from traffic. The estimated expenditures for 1897–98 were about 10 per cent greater, and a still further increase was provided for in the budget of 1898–99, the annual average wages of employees anticipated for 1898–99 being 1,408 marks ($335.10), as compared with 1,339 marks ($318.68) in 1896–97 and 1,330 marks ($316.54) in 1895–96. These averages, however, are too inclusive and general to give a definite idea of the real state of wages.

The increase in wages is indicated in a very general way by the increase of the scale of wages between 1888–89 and 1897–98. The statistics give the lowest, the highest, and the average wage, but the average wage considered is not the true average of all wages paid in that class, but merely the arithmetical mean between the highest and lowest wage, and is therefore useless and may be discarded. The comparative valuelessness of such wage statistics may be shown by the fact that the average rate of wages may decline while the minimum and maximum wage may both increase.

While it is, therefore, evident from other sources that the wages have quite considerably increased on the Prussian State railways, the following figures are shown less in support of the statement than as showing the higher wages which may now be attained than under the old régime and the rising of the minimum wage offered to the younger and less efficient workers. The general tendency may be traced in over forty classes of employment, but only three or four will be mentioned in this connection.

The workshop foremen commence now, as in 1888–89, with 2,100 marks ($499.80) per year, but the maximum wages that they may obtain have been raised from 3,200 marks ($761.60) in 1888–89 to 3,600 marks ($856.80) in 1890–91 and to 4,200 marks ($999.60) in 1897–98. The station masters of the first class now begin with 2,400 marks ($571.20) instead of 2,100 marks ($499.80), and may attain to 4,200 marks ($999.60), instead of 3,200 marks ($761.60); those of the second class still begin with 1,800 marks ($428.40), but now reach 3,000 marks ($714), instead of 2,100 marks ($499.80).

The locomotive engineers begin now, as before, with 1,200 marks ($285.60), but may attain to 2,200 marks ($523.60), instead of 1,800 marks ($428.40). The initial wages of the firemen have increased from 900 to 1,000 marks ($214.20 to $238), their maximum wages from 1,200 to 1,500 marks ($285.60 to $357); conductors who had a minimum wage of 780 and 690 marks ($185.64 and $164.22), respectively, now commence with 800 marks ($190.40), while the highest salary they may obtain has been increased from 900 to 1,200 marks ($235.62 to $285.60); and the wages of the night watchmen, which formerly were uniformly 600 marks ($142.80), range since 1890 between 700 and 900 marks ($166.60 and $214.20).

The increase in wages and salaries took place largely in the years 1890–91 and 1897–98. In connection with the increase in the former year, the administration adopted the plan of granting "Stellenzulagen," which are supplementary payments to the employees in places where the work is peculiarly difficult or responsible. These "Stellenzulagen" are of growing importance, the budget of 1898–99 calling for an extra credit of 2,500,000 marks ($595,000) for this item alone. The wages are also supplemented by so-called "Ortszulagen," which are granted in consideration of the greater cost of living in and near the larger cities and towns.

The Prussian railways publish the average daily wages for a number of classes of employees in the intermediate and lower ranks of the service. These statistics are obtained by dividing the total amount of wages paid to a certain group of employees by the total number of single days of work obtained from the group, overtime being converted into days of work. These statistics, which take into account neither the contributions of the employees to the pension funds nor the payments by the funds to the employees, show the average scale of wages to be comparatively low in Prussia.

In 1896–97 the pay for 63,799,517 days of work amounted to 153,694,077 marks ($36,579,190.33), which equals 2.41 marks (57.3 cents) per day. These wages differ, however, very greatly in the various departments, varying with the amount of skill and intelligence required for the work. The highest wages are received by the technical clerks, whose wages average 5.78 marks ($1.38) per day; the assistant draftsmen receive 4.13 marks ($0.98). The wages range highest in the workshops and lowest for the purely clerical work.

Trusts.

SPEECH
OF
HON. JOHN S. WILLIAMS, OF MISSISSIPPI,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, May 15, 1900,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I insert for the information of the House and the country the following list of trusts:

TRUSTS AND COMBINES IN THE UNITED STATES.

[List prepared for The Commercial Yearbook, by Byron W. Holt.]

Attention is particularly requested to the following definition:

As popularly used, the word "Trust" is now applied to any consolidation, combine, pool, or agreement of two or more naturally competing concerns which establishes a partial or complete monopoly, in certain territory, with power to fix prices or rates in any industry. Viewed from the standpoint of the consumer, the informal agreement and the iron-clad combine look alike if the one has the same effect as the other upon prices.

Present name of trust.[1]	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.[2] Common stock.	Preferred stock.
Adams Express Company	New York	New York City	[3]$12,000,000
American Automatic Weighing Machine Company (three companies—all in U.S.)	England	New York (?)	£135,000	£135,000
American Axe and Tool Company (16 plants)	Kentucky	New York City	$2,872,500
American Beet Sugar Company			15,000,000	$4,000,000
American Bell Telephone Company (owns American Telephone and other telephone companies).	Massachusetts	Boston	25,886,300
American Birch Company (to control New York market)	New Jersey		4,000,000	6,000,000
American Brass Company	Connecticut	Waterbury	20,000,000
American Bridge Builders' Association (trust forming 13 firms)	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia	[4]30,000,000
American Caramel Company (all export trade of United States)	do	do	1,000,000	500,000
American Car and Foundry Company (railroad cars)	New Jersey		27,600,000	27,600,000
American Cereal Company (much larger company forming)	Ohio	Chicago	3,400,000
American Cotton Oil Company (123 properties)	New Jersey	New York City	20,237,100	10,198,600
American District Telegraph Company[5]	New York	do	3,844,700
American Electric Heating Corporation		Boston	10,000,000
American Express Company (not incorporated)[6]	New York	New York City	18,000,000
American Felt Company (nearly all companies in United States)	New Jersey	do	2,500,000	2,500,000
American Fisheries Company (menhaden oil, 15–18 companies)	do	do	8,000,000	2,000,000
American (Window) Glass Company (majority in United States)	do	Pittsburg	20,000,000
American Glucose Sugar Refining Company (opposition company)	do		3,000,000
American Glue Company		Boston	1,400,000	700,000
American Hay Company	Michigan		[7]5,000,000
American Ice Company (forming; to control ice output of Maine)	Maine		60,000,000

Present name of trust.[2]	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.[3]
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
American Indies Company (gas, electric, etc., new colonies)	New Jersey		$13,000,000	$5,000,000
American Jute Bagging Manufacturing Company			2,800,000
American Lamp Chimney Company (one-third total United States)	West Virginia		500,000	250,000
American Last Company	Ohio		2,000,000	1,500,000
American Linseed Oil Company (82 plants; 85 per cent of all in country)	New Jersey	Chicago	14,250,000	14,250,000
American Lithograph Company	do	New York	8,000,000	3,500,000
American Machine Company (sewing)	Ohio	Cleveland	[1]10,000,000
American Malting Company (30 companies; nearly all in United States)	New Jersey	New York City	13,750,000	12,540,000
American Ordnance Company (guns, projectiles, etc.)		Washington	2,500,000
American Pegamoid Company			5,000,000
American Pipe and Foundry Company (5 plants in South; bigger trust forming)			[4]10,000,000
American Potteries Company (forming; nearly all in United States)	New Jersey	New York City	17,000,000	16,000,000
American Powder Company		Chicago	1,500,000
American Preservers' Company	West Virginia	do	2,500,000
American Radiator Company (4 companies; 75 per cent United States product)	New Jersey	do	5,000,000	3,000,000
American Saddle Company (bicycle saddle consolidation)	do		1,000,000	800,000
American Screw Company	Rhode Island	Providence	3,250,000
American Sewer Pipe Company (forming, with 51 big companies)	New Jersey (?)	Pittsburg (?)	12,500,000	12,500,000
American Silk Manufacturing Company (silk thread)	Connecticut	New London	7,500,000	5,000,000
American Skewer Company (all manufacturers in United States)	Indiana (?)		300,000
American Soda Fountain Company	New Jersey	New York	1,250,000	2,500,000
American Spirits Manufacturing Company (whisky; 18 distilleries)	New York	do	28,000,000	7,000,000
American Steel and Wire Company of New Jersey (controls wire industry, etc., in United States).	New Jersey	Chicago	50,000,000	40,000,000
American Steel Casting Company	do		4,200,000
American Stove Board Company (7 manufacturers)	West Virginia	New York	81,100
American Strawboard Company (19 plants)	Illinois	Chicago	6,000,000
American Sugar Refining Company	New Jersey	New York City	36,968,000	36,968,000
American Telegraph and Telephone Company (controls long-distance lines)	New York	do	25,000,000
American Thread Company (13 cotton-thread companies)	New Jersey		6,000,000	6,000,000
American Tin Plate Company (281 mills—95 per cent of all)	do	Chicago	28,000,000	18,000,000
American Tobacco Company (plug business sold in 1898)	do	New York City	21,000,000	14,000,000
American Type Founders' Company (23 companies in United States)	do	do	4,000,000
American Whip Company (20 manufacturers)	Massachusetts	do	250,000
American Woodworking Machinery Company (14 firms)	New Jersey		2,000,000	2,000,000
American Woolen Company (men's woolens—mills in New England; forming)		New York City	30,000,000	20,000,000
American Wringer Company	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	850,000	1,650,000
Ammunition Manufacturers' Association (cartridges)		New York City	[5]4,000,000
Anaconda Copper Mining Company	Montana		30,000,000
Associate Wine Dealers (agreement with California Winemakers' Corporation		San Francisco	[5]5,000,000
Association of Boat Oar Manufacturers of United States; (agreement on prices)			[5]500,000
Association of Fire Underwriters for Arkansas (44 companies)[6]	Arkansas	Little Rock (?)	39,694,226
Atlantic Dynamite Company (giant powder, etc.)	New York	New York City	[5]2,500,000
Atlantic Passenger Steamship Pool (renewed in 1899)			[5]100,000,000
Atlantic Snuff Company (all but 2 companies)	New Jersey	Nashville	2,000,000	8,000,000
Atlas Tack Company	Massachusetts	Boston	700,000
Atwood-Morrison Company (consolidation of 3 silk and cotton machinery companies).	New Jersey		300,000
Baltimore Electric Light Company (3 electric companies of Baltimore)			5,000,000
Barber Asphalt Paving Company (pools with other companies)[6]		New York City	5,000,000
Bay State Gas Company (several gas companies in and near Boston)	Delaware		100,000,000
Bessemer Ore Association		Cleveland	[5]20,000,000
Bolt and nut (several associations—carriage, stove, tire, etc.)			[5]10,000,000
Booth, A., & Co. (fish and oysters; 43 concerns)	Illinois	Chicago	3,000,000	2,500,000
Borax Consolidated, Limited (absorbing Pacific Borax, etc., Company)			£600,000	£300,000
Boston Fruit Company (4 companies, controlling output from West Indies)		Boston (?)	[5]10,000,000
Boxmakers' Combine (of California-Oregon)		San Francisco	1,000,000
Brass Foundry and Machine Company (iron and brass castings)	New Jersey	Jersey City	6,000,000
Brooklyn Rapid Transit (most streets, ways, elevated and Brooklyn)		New York	45,000,000
Brooklyn Union Gas (7 companies)	New York	Brooklyn	15,000,000
Brooklyn Wharf and Warehouse Company[6]	do	do	5,000,000	$7,500,000
Broom Manufacturers' Association of United States (regulates prices)		Chicago	5,000,000
Broom Twine (selling combine)			[5]500,000
Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company (billiard tables, etc.)	Ohio	New York City	1,500,000
Buffalo City Gas Company (4 companies; consolidated with People's Gas in 1898).[6]	New York	Buffalo	5,500,000
Buffalo Traction Company (consolidation pending)		do	5,370,500
California Raisin Growers' Association (2,000 growers and 60 packing houses; controls 95 per cent of crop).			[5]5,000,000
California Winemakers' Corporation (allied with California Wine Association)[6]	California	San Francisco	10,000,000
Cambria Steel Company (owns Cambria Iron Company; plants in five counties in Pennsylvania).	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia	16,000,000
Cedar Shingles Manufacturers' Association (Washington State; limits production).			[5]5,000,000
Celluloid Company	New Jersey	Newark	3,000,000
Central Coal and Coke Company (selling agency)[6]	Ohio	Columbus	500,000
Central Coal and Coke Company of Kansas City, Mo.[6]	Missouri	Kansas City	1,500,000	1,500,000
Central Electric Railway of Kansas City, Mo. (all companies)		do	500,000
Central Lumber Company of California[6]			[5]$70,000,000
Central New York Brewing Company	New Jersey		2,200,000	1,800,000
Central Union Telephone Company (consolidation of Bell Telephone in Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, except certain cities).			6,605,300
Central Union Gas Company (17 gas and electric lighting companies in Ohio and Indiana).	Virginia		5,000,000	9,000,000
Central Walnut Association (California; fixes prices)			[5]2,000,000
Chain Manufacturers' Association (trace, wagon, etc.)			[5]3,000,000
Charleston (South Carolina) Consolidated Railway, Gas and Electric Company (forming with all in city).			1,500,000
Chemical (Pharmaceutical Manufacturers') Combine		Philadelphia	[7]50,000,000
Chicago and Northwestern Granaries Company (agreements with other companies).		Chicago	£120,000	£120,000
Chicago City Railway Company (cable, electric, and horse lines)		do	$14,000,000
Chicago Consolidated Traction Company (8 suburban companies)	Illinois	do	14,400,000
Chicago Edison Company (absorbed 4 companies)		Chicago	4,975,100
Chicago Junction Railway and Union Stock Yards Company (meat packing and cattle; consolidation 3 companies).	New Jersey	do	6,500,000	$6,500,000
Chicago Milk Company (forming to supply three-fourths of city's milk)		do	3,000,000	3,000,000
Chicago Packing and Provision Company (Limited)		do	£200,000	£200,000
Cincinnati Gas-Light and Coke			$9,000,000
City of Chicago Brewing and Malting Company (English and American companies).		Chicago	£625,000	£625,000
Cleveland and Sandusky Brewing Company (11 breweries)			$3,000,000	$3,000,000
Colorado Fuel and Iron (connected with Colorado Coal and Iron Company)	Colorado	Denver	11,000,000	2,000,000
Columbia Electric Car Lighting and Brake Company	New Jersey		10,000,000
Columbia River Canneries Company (fish packers; re-forming, 1899)		Portland	[5]2,000,000
Columbia Spring Company	Ohio	Cleveland	2,000,000
Columbus (Ohio) Gas-Light and Heating Company (will own 2 big companies)	West Virginia	Columbus	1,700,000	3,300,000

Present name of trust.[a]	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.[a]
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
Commercial Chemical Company, United States (paris-green manufacturers form selling agency).	.....	New York City	[b]$2,000,000	.....
Commonwealth Electric Company (12 companies; pools with Edison)	.....	Chicago	3,000,000	.....
Consolidated City Water Company (3 companies, Los Angeles, Cal)	.....	Los Angeles	2,480,000	.....
Consolidated Gas of Baltimore City[c]	Maryland	Baltimore	10,770,968	.....
Consolidated Gas Company of Newark, N. J. (all gas companies between Passaic and Elizabeth).	New Jersey	Newark	6,000,000	.....
Consolidated Gas of New York City (all but New Amsterdam Company)[c]	New York	New York City	9,078,000	.....
Consolidated Gas of Pittsburg (5 companies in west Pennsylvania)	.....	Pittsburg	4,000,000	$2,500,000
Consolidated Ice (10 or 12 companies in New York and Maine)[d]	Maine	New York City	6,500,000	3,500,000
Consolidated Packing Companies (Beef)	.....	.....	5,000,000	.....
Consolidated Smelting and Refining Company (forming with 11 big companies in United States and Mexico).	New Jersey	.....	27,000,000	27,000,000
Consolidated Street Railway Company	.....	Grand Rapids	1,600,000	1,419,000
Consolidated Traction of New Jersey[a]	.....	Newark	15,000,000	.....
Consumers' Ice Company (all dealers of Indianapolis)	.....	Indianapolis	[b]1,000,000	.....
Continental Cement Company	New Jersey	.....	5,000,000	5,000,000
Continental Tobacco Company (7 plug companies and plug interests of American Company).	.....do	New York City	30,000,000	30,000,000
Copper Sheets and Bolts, Manufacturers' Association (fixes prices)	.....	Pittsburg	[b]5,000,000	.....
Denver City Tramway Company (consolidated street lines)	.....	Denver	5,000,000	.....
Denver Union Water Company (complete plant)[c]	Colorado	.....do	5,000,000	2,500,000
Derby Hat Pool (4 big companies sell together)	.....	.....	[b]3,000,000	.....
Detroit Citizens' Street Railway Company[c]	.....	Detroit	2,650,000	.....
Detroit City Gas (all natural and artificial gas companies in city)[c]	Michigan	.....do	4,560,000	.....
Diamond Match Company (mills all over United States)	Illinois and England	Chicago	11,000,000	.....
Dry Dock Trust (Philadelphia syndicate)[c]	.....	.....	1,000,000	.....
Dynamite Pool (3 big California companies)	.....	San Francisco	[b]2,000,000	.....
Eastern Burial Case Association (big trust forming in 1899)	.....	.....	[b]4,000,000	.....
East Jersey Electric Company	.....	.....	1,000,000	.....
Edison Electric Illuminating Company of Boston	New Jersey	.....	3,744,000	.....
Edison Electric Illuminating Company of New York[c]	.....	New York City	9,200,000	.....
Electric Boat Company	New York	.....	5,000,000	5,000,000
Electric Company of America (gas and electric companies just outside of Philadelphia).	New Jersey	.....	25,000,000	.....
Electric Storage Battery Company (absorbed other companies in 1895)	.....do	Philadelphia	8,500,000	5,000,000
Electric Vehicle Company	.....do	.....	5,000,000	1,000,000
Electrotypers, New York city and vicinity[c]	.....do	New York City	[b]5,000,000	.....
Erie Telegraph and Telephone Company (controls 4 telephone companies in 7 Western and Southern States).	.....	Cleveland	5,000,000	.....
Factory Insurance Association, 29 companies††	.....	Hartford	34,655,000	.....
Federal Steel Company (owns many mills and properties)	.....	New York City	46,484,000	52,767,600
Fire-Proofing (9 Ohio companies sell together)	New Jersey	.....	[b]3,000,000	.....
Five States Milk Producers' Association (farmers to keep prices of milk up, as against the trust.)	.....	.....	[b]20,000,000	.....
Fox River Birch and Tile Company (consolidated 15 birch yards in Wisconsin)	Wisconsin	.....	200,000	.....
Francis Gowdy Distilling Company (combination Eastern gin companies)	Connecticut	.....	100,000	.....
General Chemical Company	New York	.....	12,500,000	12,500,000
General Electric; pools with other companies	New York	Schenectady	18,276,000	2,551,200
General Electric Company of Minneapolis; light, heat, and power	New Jersey	.....	2,100,000	.....
Glucose Sugar Refining Company; nearly all in United States	.....do	Chicago	24,027,300	12,619,000
Granite Ware Trust; 4 companies combining	.....	.....	[b]20,000,000	.....
Grape Growers' Pool; agree on prices in northern Ohio	.....	.....	[b]2,000,000	.....
Havana Commercial Company (Cuban tobacco, etc.)	New Jersey	.....	10,000,000	6,000,000
Havana Electric Railway; electric, gas, telephone, etc	.....do	.....	5,000,000	.....
Hawaiian Commercial and Sugar Company	.....	.....	2,312,755	.....
Hecker-Jones-Jewell Milling Company[c]	New Jersey	New York City	2,000,000	3,000,000
Herkimer County Light and Power Company; companies in 3 cities in county	.....	Herkimer (?)	400,000	.....
Herring-Hall-Marvin; reorganizing	New Jersey	New York City	1,650,000	1,650,000
Illinois State Board of Fire Underwriters; 72 companies[a]	.....	.....	49,430,700	.....
Indiana League of Fire Underwriters; 27 companies[a]	.....	.....	10,028,568	.....
Indurated Fiber Industries Company	New Jersey	New York City	1,000,000	.....
International Air Power Company; plants in Massachusetts and Rhode Island	.....do	.....	6,400,000	600,000
International Cement Company; forming	.....do	.....	25,000,000	25,000,000
International Heater Company; 4 companies	New York	.....	900,000	900,000
International Paper Company; 25 news and printing paper manufacturers east of Chicago.	.....	.....	16,040,400	20,530,700
International Silver Company; 24 companies—75 per cent silver plate companies	New Jersey	.....	11,000,000	5,000,000
International Steam Pump Company; 5 biggest companies in United States	.....do	.....	12,500,000	15,000,000
Kansas City (Mo.) Gas Company	Missouri	Kansas City	5,000,000	.....
Kentucky Distilleries and Warehouse Company; 57 "bourbon" plants	New Jersey	.....	18,500,000	10,500,000
Kings County Electric Light and Power Company; all electric companies in Brooklyn except one.	.....	Brooklyn	1,968,000	.....
Knickerbocker Ice Company, Chicago; 28 companies, all in Chicago	.....	Chicago	4,000,000	3,000,000
Kodak Limited Company; consolidated English, French, German, and American companies.	.....	.....	£1,000,000	£600,000
Laclede Gas Light Company;[c] controls all in St. Louis since 1889	Missouri	St. Louis	$7,500,000	$2,500,000
Lake Carriers' Association; 3 lines; pool prices	.....	.....	[b]10,000,000	.....
Lake Dredgers' Association; 123 owners of dredges on Great Lakes	Illinois	.....	$5,000,000	.....
Lake Superior Consolidated Iron Mines[c]	.....	New York City	28,450,000	.....
Lanyon Zinc Company	New Jersey	.....	1,000,000	$2,000,000
Lexington (Ky.) Railroad; 4 companies	.....	.....	800,000	.....
Linen Thread Company; selling agency 3 manufacturers	New Jersey	Paterson (?)	[b]4,000,000	.....
Lumber Carriers' Association; vessels on Great Lakes	.....	Detroit	[b]6,000,000	.....
Manhattan Spirit Company; wood alcohol	.....	.....	5,000,000	.....
Manufacturers' Paper Company of Chicago; selling agency for many mills	.....	.....	[b]10,000,000	.....
Maple Flooring Manufacturers' Association; fixes prices	.....	.....	[b]2,000,000	.....
Marsden Company of Philadelphia (cellulose trust)	.....	.....	30,600,000	1,500,000
Martin Kalbfleisch Chemical Company	New York	New York City	1,450,000	.....
Maryland Brewing Company; 17 brewery companies of Baltimore	.....	Baltimore	3,250,000	3,250,000
Mass Consolidated Company; 5 copper properties in Michigan belt	.....	.....	2,500,000	.....
Metropolitan Street Railway Company[c]	.....	Kansas City	5,586,800	.....
Metropolitan Street Railway; most in New York city	.....	New York City	40,000,000	.....
Metropolitan Tobacco Company; selling combine	New York	.....do	500,000	500,000
Michigan Salt Association	.....	.....	[b]4,000,000	.....
Milk Combine of Scranton, Pa.; entire supply	.....	Scranton	[b]1,000,000	.....
Milwaukee and Chicago Breweries Company; English and American companies	.....	.....	£775,000	£775,000
Milwaukee Electric Railway and Light Company; all in city	.....	Milwaukee	$5,494,500	.....
Minneapolis General Electric; plants in city	New Jersey	Minneapolis	1,500,000	$500,000
Minnesota and Dakota Fire Underwriters; 53 companies[a]	.....	.....do	45,119,740	.....
Mississippi River Steamboat Pool; 3 companies pool	.....	.....	[b]10,000,000	.....
Missouri Edison Electric Company[a]	Missouri	St. Louis	[b]4,000,000	.....
National Abrasive Manufacturing Company; controls corundum and other abrasive materials.	.....	.....	1,000,000	.....
National Association of Axle Manufacturers	.....	Pittsburg	[b]5,000,000	.....
National Biscuit Company (90 per cent of large bakeries in United States)	New Jersey	Chicago	20,000,000	23,000,000
National Carbon Company (all companies in United States and three-fourths in world).	.....do	Cleveland	5,500,000	4,500,000

Present name of trust.[1]	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.[2]
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
National Casket Company		New York City	[3]$10,000,000
National Electric Car Lighting Company			2,000,000	(?) $500,000
National Enameling and Stamping Company (consolidation of 4 principal companies in United States).	New Jersey		20,000,000	10,000,000
National Harrow Company (spring-tooth harrows)	New York		[4]2,000,000
National Lead Company (28 white lead, etc., plants)	New Jersey	New York City	14,905,400	14,904,000
National Mirror Manufacturers' Association (40 companies; fix prices, etc.)			[5]5,000,000
National Rice Milling Company	New Jersey	New Orleans	1,867,000	1,320,000
National Salt Company of New Jersey (forming to control salt interests in the East).		New York City	[5]5,000,000
National Saw Company (controlled by Diston)	Kentucky	do	[2]2,000,000	600,000
National Shear Company	New Jersey	Newark	1,500,000	1,500,000
National Starch Manufacturing Company (20 plants; price agreement with other companies in 1898)	Kentucky	New York City	3,233,000	4,006,200
National Tin Plate and Stamped Ware Company (opposition to National Enameling Company).	New Jersey		10,000,000	10,000,000
National Steel Company; expects to control 20 plants	New Jersey		32,000,000	27,000,000
National Tube Company; forming with 17 companies	do	Pittsburg	30,000,000	30,000,000
National Wall Paper Company; 28 companies in 1892, absorbing 2 or more in 1899; forming.		New York City	27,931,500	7,500,000
New Amsterdam Gas Company; consolidates 3 companies in New York City		do	12,000,000	9,000,000
New England Gas and Coke Company of Boston; all in Boston except Bay State.[6]	Massachusetts	Boston	14,000,000
New England Dairy Company; milk companies	New Jersey		600,000	250,000
New England Telephone and Telegraph Company		Boston	11,986,400
New England Insurance Exchange; 84 fire-insurance companies[6]		do	58,537,167
New Orleans Water Works Company[6]		New Orleans	2,000,000
New York and New Jersey Telephone		Brooklyn (?)	4,662,400
New York Arch, Terra-Cotta Company; allied with other companies	New York	New York City	[4]2,000,000
New York Gas, Electric Light, Heat and Power Company of New York City	do	do	36,000,000
New York Suburban Gas Company (5 companies in Westchester County)	do		1,500,000
Nicholson File Company; 5 plants—70 per cent product		Providence	[4]2,000,000
North American (owns street railways and electric companies)	New Jersey	New York	39,733,000
North Carolina Pine Timber Association; fixes prices			[6]20,000,000
North Jersey Street Railway Company; consolidated trolleys and 2 ferries	New Jersey		5,000,000
North River Light, Heat and Power Company	do	Hoboken	300,000
North Shore Traction Company; controls railways around Boston	do	Boston	4,000,000	2,500,000
Oilcloth Pool (table, enamel, etc.)			[6]1,500,000
Oil Well Supply Company	Pennsylvania	Pittsburg	1,000,000
Omaha Street Railway Company[6]		Omaha	5,000,000
Otis (Passenger) Elevator Company; 13 companies—85 per cent of product	New Jersey		6,000,000	4,000,000
Pacific American Fisheries Company	do	Chicago	5,000,000
Pacific States Telephone Company; 4 telegraph and telephone systems of Pacific coast.			[6]10,000,000
Paducah (Ky.) Railway and Electric Light Company; all railway and electric-light plants of Paducah.			200,000
Paterson and Passaic Gas and Electric Company; consolidation of 4 companies	New Jersey		5,000,000
Pennsylvania Central Brewing Company; 12 breweries in Wyoming Valley	Pennsylvania		2,800,000	2,800,000
Pennsylvania Manufacturing Light and Power; all electric companies of Philadelphia.[6]	New Jersey	Philadelphia	15,000,000
People's Gas Light and Coke Company of Buffalo; consolidated		Buffalo	4,975,000	3,025,000
People's Gas Light and Coke Company of Chicago; took in new Chicago companies in 1898.[6]	Illinois	Chicago	28,750,000
People's Light and Power Company; 14 companies in New Jersey		Newark	20,000,000
Petersburg, (Virginia), Railway and Electric; consolidation of all companies		Petersburg	500,000
Photographic Paper; 26 companies, manufacturers of sensitized paper			2,000,000
Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Company (Limited)	Minnesota	Minneapolis	£500,000	£500,000
Pittsburg Brewing Company			$6,500,000	$6,500,000
Pittsburg Plate Glass Company		Pittsburg	9,850,000	150,000
Postal Telegraph Cable Company		New York City	15,000,000
Pressed Steel Car Company; consolidates Fox and Schoen companies and has a monopoly.	New Jersey	Pittsburg (?)	12,500,000	12,500,000
Print Cloth Pool; 30 mills; restrict production and fix prices			50,000,000
Pueblo Traction and Electric Company; owns 3 electric light companies of city	California	Pueblo	500,000
Reading Company (Anthracite Coal Trust)			[6]150,000,000
Refrigerator Trust; 36 firms; 80 per cent of trade			[6]8,000,000
River Coal Operators' Company; Pittsburg to New Orleans			[6]11,000,000
Royal Baking Powder Company; consolidation of all companies	New Jersey	New York	10,000,000	10,000,000
Rubber Goods Manufacturers' Company; consolidation of mechanical goods companies.	do	New York city	25,000,000	25,000,000
Saginaw Valley Traction Company; consolidation of 4 companies		Saginaw	700,000	400,000
San Francisco Breweries, Limited (agreement with other breweries)		San Francisco	[6]20,000,000
Santy-Kalsomine Company (Plaster Trust)	Michigan	Grand Rapids	[6]3,000,000
Sash and Door Combine; 26 companies; fix prices		Chicago (?)	[6]15,000,000
Shelby Tube Company; weldless tubes		Shelby, Ohio	5,000,000
Shot and Lead Manufacturers' Association; fixes prices			[6]2,000,000
Shovel Makers of United States and Canada; international agreement			[6]6,000,000
Southeastern Tariff Association; 67 fire insurance companies[7]		New Orleans (?)	$41,424,318
Sperry Flour Company; California	California		10,000,000
Spirits Distributing Company; selling agency for American Spirits and Southern Distributing companies.	New Jersey		3,675,000	3,676,000
Springfield Coal Association; 10 companies	Illinois	Springfield	[6]4,000,000
Standard Distillingland Distributing Company; whisky	New Jersey	New York City	16,000,000	8,000,000
Standard Oil; controls petroleum refineries, etc., in United States		do	97,250,000
Standard Rope and Twine Company; sells through Union Selling Company	New Jersey	do	12,000,000
Standard Sardine Company			5,000,000
Standard Telephone Company; bought Central Missouri Company in 1898	Missouri (?)	Kansas City	[6]10,000,000
Steel Beams Association; fixes prices		Pittsburg	[6]20,000,000
Steel Rail Manufacturers' Association; all big companies agree			50,000,000
Steel Steamers; forming with all manufacturers on Great Lakes			[6]15,000,000	15,000,000
Steel Tired Car Wheel Company; 6 or 7 car-wheel companies		Trenton	2,000,000
Swift and Company (beef)	Illinois	Chicago	20,000,000
Syracuse Rapid Transit Railway Company; all in Syracuse		Syracuse	2,750,000	1,250,000
Temple Iron Company; consolidated 7 anthracite coal companies in Pennsylvania.
Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company; plants in Tennessee and Alabama		Birmingham	20,000,000	1,000,000
Theatrical Trust; 50 big ones work together			[6]30,000,000
Tidewater Oil Company; consolidation of 4 companies	New Jersey	New York City	5,000,000
Torrington Needle Company			1,500,000	1,500,000
Trenton Gas and Electric Company; 4 companies		Trenton	[6]2,000,000
Tubular Dispatch Company; consolidated 2 companies			2,100,000
Twin City Rapid Transit; all street railways in Minneapolis and St. Paul[6]	New Jersey	Minneapolis	15,000,000	2,462,200
Umbrella Hardware Company	do		2,000,000
Underwriters' Association of State of New York; 72 companies		Syracuse	56,423,711
Union Bag and Paper Company	New Jersey		16,000,000	11,000,000
Union Carbide Company (acetylene consolidated)	Virginia		6,000,000
Union Light and Power Company; 4 companies of Salt Lake and Ogden, Utah	Utah		4,250,000	300,000

Present name of trust.[3]	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.[4]
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
Union Switch and Signal Company; consolidated with National Switch and Signal Company.	.....	.....	$997,950	$997,600
Union Tobacco Company; absorbed Durham Company	New York	New York City	12,000,000
Union Traction Company; all trolleys in Philadelphia[6]	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia	30,000,000	7,350,000
Union Typewriter; 5 leading companies	New Jersey	New York City	10,000,000
United Breweries Company; 13 breweries, Chicago	....do	Chicago	5,463,000	8,015,000
United Electric Company of New Jersey; to unite all companies in North, New Jersey.	....do	.....	20,000,000
United Gas Improvement Company	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia	15,000,000
United Ice Cream Company; 4 companies in Chicago	Illinois	Chicago	300,000
United Lighting and Heating Company; 8 companies; oil lighting interests of United States.	New Jersey	.....	6,000,000	6,000,000
United Paper Company (tissue)	....do	Paterson	1,500,000	1,500,000
United Railways and Electric Companies of Baltimore; all in city	Maryland	Baltimore	24,000,000	14,000,000
United Shoe Machinery Company	New Jersey	.....	8,625,000	8,625,000
United Traction Company; controls all electric roads in Reading, Pa	.....	Reading	1,400,000
United Traction and Electric Company; all roads in and near Providence[8]	New Jersey	Providence	8,000,000
United States Cast Iron Pipe and Foundry; 13 companies, practically all in South and West.	.....	.....	12,000,000	12,000,000
United States Dyewood and Extract Company; to unite all in United States	New Jersey	.....	4,000,000	6,000,000
United States Eaves Trough and Conductor Pipe Association	.....	Pittsburg	[8]2,000,000
United States Envelope Company; 10 companies; 90 per cent product in United States.	Maine	.....	750,000	3,750,000
United States Express; not incorporated	New York	New York City	10,000,000
United States Furniture Company (school; enlarging and reforming in 1899)	.....	Chicago	[8]10,000,000
United States Glass Company; flint glass	Pennsylvania	Pittsburg	3,458,100	600,000
United States Leather Company	New Jersey	New York City	62,854,600	62,254,600
United States Oil Company	.....	Boston (?)	1,250,000
United States Playing Card Company; allied with 3 other companies	.....	Cincinnati	3,600,000
United States Rubber; controls boot and shoe output of United States	New Jersey	New York City	23,666,000	23,525,500
United States Varnish Company; organizing with all in United States	....do	.....	18,000,000	18,000,000
Vermont Marble Company [8]	New York	New York City	3,000,000
Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company; 27 fertilizer factories	.....	.....	4,363,900	5,085,000
Virginia Electric Company of Norfolk; consolidated all companies in city	Virginia	Norfolk	450,000
Virginia Iron, Coal, and Coke Company; properties in Virginia	.....	.....	7,500,000
Welsbach Commercial Company; owns Welsbach light; 8 companies	Colorado	Philadelphia (?)	3,500,000	3,500,000
Wells-Fargo Express	.....	.....	8,000,000
Western Elevator Association; 40 leading in Buffalo	.....	Buffalo	[8]15,000,000
Western Factory Insurance Association; 23 companies[9]	.....	Chicago (?)	23,862,500
Western Live Stock and Land Company	Colorado	New York City	408,000
Western Strawboard Company; plants not in American Company	.....	.....	2,500,000	2,500,000
Western Union Fire Insurance Association; 50 companies in Western and Southern States.[9]	.....	Chicago	47,902,368
Western Union Telegraph; consolidated other companies in 1881, 1887, and 1894.	New York	New York City	97,370,000
Westinghouse Air-Brake Company; bought American and Boyden companies in 1898.	Pennsylvania	.....	10,950,000
Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company; pools with General Electric and owns United States Electric Locomotive Company and Walker companies.	....do	Pittsburg	8,987,950
Wholesale Druggists' National Association; 25 firms. [9]	.....	Philadelphia	[8]25,000,000
Wholesale Grocers of New England. [10]	.....	Boston	[8]75,000,000
Window Shade Manufacturers' Association; nearly all in country	.....	.....	[8]2,000,000
Wire Cloth Manufacturers' Association of America; 12 firms agree on prices	.....	.....	[8]5,000,500
Writing Paper Trust; forming with 35 mills in Connecticut Valley	.....	.....	[8]40,000,000
Yarn (cotton hosiery) Manufacturers; fix prices	.....	Philadelphia	[8]3,000,000
Yellow Pine Company [8]	New Jersey	New York City	2,500,000
Totals	.....	.....	4,247,918,981	870,575,200

[3] A few of the trusts included in this list are not at this particular time in full force. In most such cases new agreements are pending, and it is unlikely that, having realized the benefits of combination, capital in these industries will long continue to compete with itself. Some trusts, like the Michigan Salt Association, are renewed every five years, or at other regular or irregular periods. The Paris Green Combine is likely to make its appearance during, or previous to, the potato-bug season.

[4] When a trust is incorporated the amount of capital reported as issued is usually taken, though it is often far above or below the actual capital employed. When not incorporated, the capital employed in the allied concerns is estimated.

[5] Unincorporated trusts pay no dividends, though they often make profits to the constituent companies. Sometimes the rate of dividends on preferred stock is averaged for two or more kinds of such stock. In bonded indebtedness several kinds of bonds are often grouped together.

[6] Estimated.

[7] Only typical trusts are taken in these industries. Such trusts are duplicated in many other cities or sections of the country.

[8] This association maintains prices of proprietary medicines by refusing to handle goods sold to wholesalers who cut prices. Similar local associations cover all sections of the United States and regulate prices of most leading articles. Jobbers and retailers have similar combinations in States, counties, and cities.

[9] Wholesale grocers' associations exist in all parts of the country. By means of rebates, etc., they assist the manufacturers of sugar, starch, baking powder, and of hundreds of other leading articles in maintaining uniform prices.

ADDITIONS TO TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS.

The following are some of the industrial trusts formed and projected since about the middle of March to May 27:

Present name of trust.	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
Amalgamated Copper Company; to acquire copper properties	New Jersey	.....	$75,000,000
American Agricultural Chemical Company; 23 fertilizer plants	Connecticut	.....	17,000,000	$17,000,000
American Bicycle Company; 100 plants—95 per cent in country	New Jersey	.....	45,000,000	35,000,000
American Chicle Co.; forming with 6 chewing-gum plants	....do	.....	6,000,000	3,000,000
American Gas and Electric Lighting Fixture Company; forming with 14 plants	....do	.....	9,000,000	6,000,000
American Hide and Leather Company; 30 companies—85 per cent upper leather output.	....do	.....	40,000,000	30,000,000
American Plow Company; forming—17 agricultural implement manufacturers, Chicago.	.....	Chicago	[1]65,000,000
American Plumbing Supply and Lead Company; 45 companies	.....	.....	25,000,000	10,000,000
American Railways Company; to control electric railway companies in United States.	New Jersey	.....	25,000,000
American Railway Equipment Company; forming—18 freight-car equipment companies.	....do	Chicago	9,730,000	7,730,000
American School Furniture Company; school and church furniture	....do	.....	10,000,000
American Shipbuilding Company; shipbuilding, etc., on Great Lakes	....do	.....	10,000,000	10,000,000
American Smelting and Refining Company; controls many big companies[1]	New Jersey	.....	27,400,000	27,400,000
American Steel Hoop Company; 10 hoop, tie, and band companies	....do	.....	19,000,000	14,000,000
American Stoneware Company; forming—25 potteries companies east of Mississippi River.	Delaware	Akron	2,500,000
American Window Glass Company; forming to control 80 or 90 per cent of all	.....	.....	30,000,000

Present name of trust.	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
American Writing Paper Company; forming with 21 mills in Massachusetts[2]	.....	Holyoke	$12,500,000	$12,500,000
Automobile Machine and Screw Company; forming—9 screw manufacturers in United States.	.....	.....	6,000,000	4,000,000
Boston Breweries Company; forming—6-10 breweries	New Jersey	Boston	3,250,000	6,500,000
Carnegie Steel Company; forming—includes 15 Carnegie & Frick iron, steel and coke companies.[3]	....do	Pittsburg	125,000,000	125,000,000
Central Hudson Steamboat Company; 9 Hudson River boats[4]	....do	.....	1,000,000	.....
Consolidated Street Car Company; 5 of largest manufacturers	....do	.....	10,000,000	8,000,000
Chamber Furniture Manufacturers' Association; 50 manufacturers of sideboards, etc.; fixes prices.	.....	.....	[1]10,000,000	.....
Chicago Laundry Combine; forming with 75 steam laundries	.....	Chicago	[1]4,000,000	.....
Chicago Sash, Door, and Blind Company; 35 Chicago companies	New Jersey	.....	3,500,000	2,500,000
Columbian Car Lighting and Brake Company; 3 companies	....do	.....	10,000,000	.....
Consolidated Ice Company; all artificial companies in Pittsburg	.....	.....	2,000,000	2,000,000
Continental Cotton Oil Company; 7 Southern companies	New Jersey	.....	3,000,000	3,000,000
Continental Packing Company; with Standard Company; controls sardine output.	....do	.....	3,000,000	.....
Cotton Yarn Combination; forming—7 mills in Massachusetts	.....	.....	8,460,000	.....
Encaustic Tile Company; to control all companies	.....	.....	4,000,000	3,000,000
Federal Sewer Pipe Company	Delaware	.....	10,750,000	10,750,000
Hot Air Furnace Manufacturers' Association; fixes prices	.....	Pittsburg	[1]5,000,000	.....
International Automobile and Vehicle Tire Company; 3 rubber-tire companies.	New Jersey	.....	1,500,000	1,500,000
Ledger Paper Combination; forming with 4 Massachusetts companies	.....	.....	[1]1,000,000	.....
Macbeth-Evans Glass Company; forming—5 chimney concerns, all in the United States.	.....	.....	2,000,000	.....
Manufactured Rubber Company; to control output	New Jersey	.....	5,000,000	1,000,000
National Association of Wagon Manufacturers; fixes prices	.....	.....	[1]40,000,000	.....
National Car Equipment Company; forming in California	California	.....	10,000,000	.....
National Carpet Company; forming—nearly all mills in United States	.....	.....	[1]50,000,000	.....
National Dining Table Association; 39 firms; fixes prices	.....	Chicago	[1]2,000,000	.....
National Glass Company; 17 flint bottle, etc., companies	.....	.....	4,000,000	8,000,000
National Screw Company; forming—includes American and 13 other companies.	.....	.....	10,000,000	.....
National Strawboard Company; forming; will act with American Company	New Jersey	.....	2,000,000	2,000,000
Pacific Coast Biscuit Company; forming with 7 big companies[5]	....do	.....	2,500,000	1,500,000
Patent Leather Combination; forming; 95 per cent of United States product	.....	Newark	[1]20,000,000	.....
Pittsburg Laundry Company	.....	.....	1,750,000	1,750,000
Puget Sound Packers' Association; 8 big salmon packers; fixes prices	.....	Seattle	[1]1,000,000	.....
Republic Iron and Steel Company; 31 bar and forge iron companies, etc	New Jersey	Chicago	30,000,000	25,000,000
Soapmakers' Combination; most of big Western companies	.....	.....	[1]25,000,000	[1]25,000,000
Southern New England Brick Manufacturers; trust forming	.....	.....	[1]5,000,000	.....
Springfield (Mass.) Breweries Company; 4 breweries[7]	.....	.....	1,150,000	1,150,000
Standard Metal Company; forming—10 companies, car-journal bearings, etc	.....	.....	4,000,000	1,800,000
Standard Chain Company; forming—95 per cent machine-made chains	.....	.....	3,250,000	3,250,000
Union Steel and Chain Company; forming	Delaware	.....	30,000,000	30,000,000
United Fruit Company; 10 big companies; tropical fruits	New Jersey	.....	20,000,000	.....
United Power and Transportation Company; to control street railways in Pennsylvania.	....do	.....	12,500,000	.....
United States Dry Paint Company; forming—mineral paints	New Jersey	.....	[1]3,000,000	[1]4,500,000
United States Flour Milling Company; forming—19 mills[8]	.....	.....	3,500,000	5,000,000
United States Glue Company; forming to control glue product	New Jersey	.....	15,000,000	10,000,000
United States Worsted Yarn Company; forming to unite 19 largest mills	....do	.....	20,000,000	16,000,000
United Zinc and Lead Company; to unite mills in Missouri and Kansas	....do	.....	5,000,000	1,000,000
Western Drug Jobbers; forming—Western combination	.....	.....	[1]15,000,000	[1]15,000,000
Total	.....	.....	962,740,000	490,830,000

[1] Estimated. [2] $2,133,000 bonds. [3] $17,000,000 bonds. [4] $100,000,000 5 per cent bonds. [5] $500,000 bonds. [6] $1,500,000 6 per cent bonds. [7] $1,150,000 bonds. [8] $7,500,000 6 per cent bonds.

In the above list only the capital stock and bonds actually issued or proposed to be issued at once are given, when known. Some of the trusts in this list include trusts in the main list. Thus the United Fruit Company includes the Boston Fruit Company; the United States Flour Milling Company includes the Hecker-Jones-Jewell Milling Company, etc. Some of the trusts are under different names, since being formally organized. Thus the Chicago Sash, Door, and Blind Company probably includes but little more than the Sash and Door Combination; the American Shipbuilding Company is the incorporated name of the Steel Steamers Combination. Some of the trusts marked "forming" are so far advanced that retraction is hardly possible. Others have simply secured options on plants and are attempting to float the bonds and stocks.

Prosperity of the Farmer—More than $4,000,000,000 added to his Wealth in Three Years—Testimony of the American Agriculturist to the Prosperity of the American Farmer under Protection.

SPEECH

OF

HON. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 4, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11538) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. GROSVENOR said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The disposition of our friends of the Democratic party to try to make it apparent that the prosperity of to-day is not real leads me to present and make a matter of permanent record the views of a well-known publication, the American Agriculturist, on the prosperity which has come to that substantial and deserving class of our people, the farmer. It is published in its issue of March 17, 1900, and therefore presents a view of their present condition. It will be seen that it shows a gain of more than $4,000,000,000 in the value of their farms, their crops, and their live animals, and a reduction of three hundred millions in farm mortgages, compared with three years ago. Is the reduction of a hundred millions a year in mortgages and an increase of over a billion dollars a year in values of property owned by a single class "fictitious prosperity?" If so, let us have more of it.

AGRICULTURAL PROSPERITY IS HERE—FARM PRODUCTS ADVANCED IN VALUE NEARLY 23 PER CENT—A GAIN TO FARMERS OF OVER $1,600,000,000 A YEAR—FARM REAL ESTATE FULLY RECOVERED IN VALUE—UNITED STATES FARMERS OVER $4,000,000,000 BETTER OFF—UNPRECEDENTED IMPROVEMENT IN THE GREAT LIVE-STOCK INDUSTRY—FARM PRODUCTS OF EVEN LARGER VALUE FOR 1899 THAN DURING THE BOOM OF 1889—INCREASE IN NUMBER AND VALUE OF FARMS—OVER $300,000,000 OF FARM MORTGAGES PAID OFF—GRATIFYING CONDITIONS THROUGHOUT THE NATION'S BASIC INDUSTRY.

Advance in farm values for 1900.

[Compared to the depths of depression.]

	Amount.	Per cent.
Gain in live stock	$998,000,000	38
Gain in staple crops	401,000,000	23
Gain in live-stock produce	370,000,000	40
Gain in other produce	200,000,000	25
Total gain	1,969,000,000	31
Gain in real estate	2,550,000,000	21
Aggregate advance	4,219,000,000	24

The astounding improvement in agricultural conditions now contrasted with the depths of depression in 1894–1896 is as little appreciated by the outside public as was the farmers' conditions during the hard times. It is conservative, however, to say that the produce of United States farms in 1899 will realize to the farmers over $1,600,000,000 more than their produce was worth in either of the depressed years of 1894–1896. This is an average advance of 31 per cent in values compared to the low point.

These values show an increase of 6 per cent, or nearly $400,000,000, over the census returns for 1889, which was a fairly prosperous period. Quite likely the comparison with ten years ago is really more favorable than this, but glaring errors in census returns, even when corrected as much as possible, admit of no more definite data for 1889. In all cases some duplication of figures is unavoidable; for instance, the increase in live stock or its products representing much grain consumed; but the basis is the same in all cases.

Farm values now compared with the low point and 1889.

[In millions of dollars.]

	Present values, 1900.	Low point, 1895-96.	Highest previous, 1889.
Value of land, buildings, etc	$14,500	$11,950	$13,280
Live stock	2,558	1,860	2,210
Implements and machinery	500	450	494
Total investment	17,558	14,260	15,984
Staple crops	2,180	1,779	2,141
Live-stock produce	1,300	920	1,100
Other produce	1,000	800	1,000
Total product	4,480	3,500	4,241

Staple crops show a total value for the past season some 23 per cent greater than during the hard years of 1895 and 1896, or a gain of $401,000,000. Other produce, including the great poultry industry, the minor staple crops, and other sources of farm income (including all products consumed by the family, etc.), show a gain of at least 20 per cent compared with the low point, or a total of $200,000,000. These figures look large to the uninitiated; but when it is remembered that the income from the sales of the single item of poultry (including eggs) in the United States amounts to over $300,000,000 a year, the conservative nature of our statistics can be better understood.

The produce from live stock, including milk, butter, cheese, hogs, and pork products, beef cattle, mutton sheep and lambs, hides and pelts, the increase of horses, mules, etc., amounts to about one-half of the value of the live stock at the beginning of each year. This conclusion is based on a careful inquiry covering a series of years.

Farm lands, buildings, etc., depreciated terribly during the hard times, but have more than recovered in value. Together with the new farms and the improvements thereon, the value of the agricultural real estate in the United States to-day probably amounts to fourteen thousand five hundred millions of dollars, or an increase from the low point of two thousand five hundred and fifty millions and of one thousand two hundred and twenty millions over values in June, 1889, as determined by the Federal census.

The value of live stock on farms in January of this year was two thousand five hundred and fifty-eight millions of dollars, an increase of six hundred and ninety-eight over 1895-96, or 27 per cent. Implements and machinery show a natural gain within the past six years, but owing to the fact that these goods have been sold at such low prices of late years their total value to-day is probably about the same as a dozen years ago.

The total investment in American agriculture at the present time is thus set down as having a value of seventeen thousand five hundred and fifty millions of dollars, or a gain of some three thousand three hundred over the extreme depths of depression, and a gain of nearly one thousand six hundred millions over the comparatively high basis of values indicated by the Federal census taken in June, 1889.

IMPROVEMENT IN STAPLE CROPS.

This table compares the average farm price of leading staples during the period of extreme depression with the farm value per bushel, pound, or ton of the same crops grown last year.

	December.	Low point.		Crops of 1899.		Per cent advance.
		Farm price.	Total value.	Total value.	Farm price.	Per unit.	In total value.
Corn	1896	$0.215	$488,000,000	$963,000,000	$0.303	41	98
Wheat	1894	.491	236,000,000	334,000,000	.584	19	42
Oats	1896	.187	134,000,000	218,000,000	.249	33	55
Buckwheat	1896	.992	6,000,000	7,000,000	.557	42	17
Barley	1896	.323	23,000,000	39,000,000	.403	25	70
Rye	1896	.406	10,000,000	13,000,000	.51	25	30
Potatoes	1895	.27	77,000,000	96,000,000	.39	44	25
Cotton	1894	.046	259,000,000	338,000,000	.053	65	31
Tobacco	1894	.068	28,000,000	44,000,000	.08	18	17
Hay	1896	6.00	408,000,000	425,000,000	7.27	21	49
Aggregate			1,669,000,000	2,180,000,000			33

Wheat is low compared to some other things, owing directly to the large visible supply throughout the world. Yet the current comparatively low level of wheat values is nearly one-fifth higher than in 1894 when wheat went "almost out of sight," and the total value of the crop, by reason of the larger production, was 48 per cent greater for the past season than during the year cited.

Oats are also one-third higher than the low point, while last year's crop of oats was so much greater in volume that the total value of oats is more than half as large again. Corn is some 40 per cent higher, and though its market price is comparatively low, it is now better than at this season for six years past, with the single exception of the 1898 crop. Many feeders claim that corn and oats put into hogs and cattle have yielded a higher return per bushel for the grain than for several years.

Hay shows a considerable increase in aggregate value in spite of last year's short crop and the large supply of old hay carried over. Tobacco is materially better than during the hard times, although the past crop in the heavy leaf sections is lower than for several years, due in a measure to manipulation by the tobacco trust. Potatoes have been fairly profitable for a series of years.

Cotton is on a veritable boom. Its price is now about 50 per cent higher than a few months ago, and may yet go to 10 cents per pound at New York, having already passed 9½ cents. The world's visible supply is now some 1,200,000 bales (27 per cent) less than a year ago, value half again increased. Of course much of the crop left planters' hands before the big advance, yet it is safe to say that many millions of dollars more have gone into the South for 1899's short crop than for the big crops of the two preceding years.

Doubtless the New York price of the 1899 crop will average above 8 cents, so that only three recent crops (those of 1894, 1897, and 1898) have been phenomenally low—6 and 6¼ cents at New York. The other seven crops during the decade since cotton values went below 10 cents have averaged quite 8 cents per pound. In other words, since 1889 the South has suffered less from the decline in cotton than the West suffered from the decline in cereals—another remarkable fact that is known to but few. With an enormously increasing consumption for cotton it is only necessary to restrict the area within reasonable limits to make the New York price average around 10 cents per pound for the next ten years, as it did from 1880 to 1890.

STRENGTH IN LIVE-STOCK INTERESTS.

Live stock has advanced nearly 40 per cent in value above the low point of 1896, and exceeds the high point of the boom that reached its zenith in 1889. The gain during the past five years has been phenomenal, both in numbers and total values. The facts are emphasized by this little table (taken from our own reports, which are much more reliable than the Government's figures), stated in round millions:

	Values.		Advance.	Numbers.		Advance.
	1896.	1900.		1896.	1900.
			Per ct.			Per ct.
Cattle	$364	$796	41	33	32	(*)
Horses	551	679	23	16	15	(*)
Milch cows	394	603	53	18	19	6
Mules	94	100	14	2	2
Sheep	53	127	140	33	43	33
Hogs	204	246	21	46	49	7
Total	1,660	2,556	38	148	160	8

*Decrease.

Sheep are higher than for twenty years, worth about double on the farm what they were five years ago, and are fully 20 per cent higher than during the early eighties—a period that has long been a milestone in the prosperity of the sheep industry. Almost as much can be said of wool, while mutton sheep are selling at quotations 50 per cent above the low point.

The extreme depression in cattle five and six years ago has been followed by a 50 per cent advance in farm values. Indeed, cattle are worth more to-day than at any time since the industry assumed large proportions. The value of cattle on farms this January averaged within a few cents of $25 a head, compared to $14 in 1895, from $15 to $19 per head between 1894 and 1887. Even in the then unprecedented boom of 1884-85 cattle averaged $2 per head, or 8 per cent less than to-day. This strength in stockers and beef cattle is confirmed by the extraordinary demand for thoroughbred stock of the favorite beef breeds at almost unlimited prices, as well as by the great activity in the range industry and farm feeding.

In milch cows the same is true. Cows are worth 50 per cent more now than during the ten years preceding 1897, and are fully as high as during the boom of 1884-85. Last summer cheese got back to old-time prices. Butter has of late sold much above the low quotations of four or five years ago. Even milk sold in market is stiffening in prices and may go up to the values of the early eighties, and will go there with organized persistency by producers and reasonable cooperation from the trade.

Hogs have also advanced heavily, and though they have been worth more on the farm than now in occasional years since the early eighties, they are worth more to-day relatively to the price of corn than for a long time. Hogs are to-day no greater in number than a dozen years ago, while population has increased 23 per cent, to say nothing of the growth of export trade. Few realize this fact, but it means good prices for hogs and pork product for several years to come, unless there should be sudden overproduction.

Average farm prices, per head, United States.

	Low point.		Advance.
	Date.	Am't.	Jan., 1900.	Per cent.
Horses	1897	$33.65	$45.60	36
Mules	1898	39.66	48.67	23
Cows	1862	21.40	31.12	45
Cattle	1896	14.15	24.83	76
Sheep	1896	1.60	2.97	86
Hogs	1897	4.13	4.99	21

FARMERS PAYING UP MORTGAGES.

The extensive inquiry conducted by the American agriculturist weeklies in 1896-97 as to the movement of farm mortgages has been kept up since, so far as feasible. Our work affords the only basis for an opinion on this subject since the Federal census returns for January, 1890, and the latter were at best somewhat conflicting and unsatisfactory. Condensed into a brief comparison we get this table, showing—

United States farms, number owned and mortgaged.

	1900.	1890.
Occupied by owners	3,450,000	3,012,663
Occupied by tenants	1,550,000	1,551,978
Total number of farms	5,000,000	4,564,641
Of the farms occupied by owners there were:
Owned free of debt	3,750,000	3,286,542
Owned but mortgaged	1,250,000	1,278,099
Total	5,000,000	4,564,641
Amount of incumbrance	$800,000,000	$1,086,000,000
Value of mortgaged farms	$2,963,000,000	$3,055,000,000
Per cent of value covered by mortgage	27	36
Average value of each encumbered farm	$2,750	$3,444
Average amount of mortgage	$1,000	$1,224
Per cent of value covered by mortgage	27	36
Average rate of interest, per cent	6	6.3
Proportion of mortgage incurred for purchase and improvement	78	74

The number of farms has increased by some 400,000 during the past ten years, against a gain of nearly 600,000 in the previous decade, and an increase of nearly 1,500,000 from 1870 to 1880.

A larger proportion (69 per cent) of these farms are occupied by their owners now than ten years ago, tenants occupying 31 per cent of them against 32 per cent in 1890. This is contrary to the general impression, but is partly due to the buying of farms during the late period of low values by those who had previously been tenants. In spite of this, the number of farms now under mortgage that are occupied by their owners is certainly no greater than ten years ago—another remarkable fact.

Just how much mortgages on farms have been actually paid off since 1890 it is almost impossible to say. From 1893 to 1896 many millions were foreclosed, especially in the semiarid region, and the farms merged into large holdings for stock ranges. As near as we can get at it, the amount of mortgages on farms occupied by their owners is now about $300,000,000 less than ten years ago. The great bulk of this vast sum apparently represents the paying off of mortgages by actual owners, who now own their farms free and clear of all incumbrance. This movement has been strongest in the great corn and wheat States of the central West.

The value of farms shows a gain, while the existing mortgages average smaller in amount. Thus mortgages now average only about 27 per cent of the value of the farms they are on, compared to 30 per cent formerly. The rate of interest has also fallen materially. The great bulk of mortgages now in force was incurred to buy the farm or to improve it—praiseworthy objects.

American National Red Cross Association.

SPEECH
OF
HON. TOWNSEND SCUDDER,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, May 16, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (S. 2931) to incorporate the American National Red Cross Association, and for other purposes—

Mr. SCUDDER said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I shall occupy the attention of the House for only a few moments.

This bill is one which has in different forms, but all having the same general purpose, been favorably reported to both Houses of Congress, but failed to receive consideration, and has once passed both Houses, reaching the President too late to become a law. The importance and magnitude of the work of the American National Red Cross for the past sixteen years is such as entitles it to recognition and its work and insignia to the protection of the Government, which it is organized to serve in cases of national calamity or emergency.

The work of the Red Cross in the different civilized countries of the world is carried out under a compound treaty between forty-three of the civilized nations. It was the outcome of a conference which convened in Geneva, Switzerland, October 26, 1863, at which fourteen governments were represented by delegates, and there were also present five members of the Geneva committee, six delegates of different associations, and some unaccredited visitors. Its object was to find out and agree upon humane and reasonable methods for the treatment of the unfortunate and helpless victims of war, and a series of resolutions looking to this object and providing methods by which they should be carried out were adopted. These resolutions were the basis of the Red Cross treaty of August 22, 1864, which was entered into at Geneva, Switzerland, by the plenipotentiaries representing Italy, Baden, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, Portugal, France, Prussia, Saxony, Wurtemburg, and the Federal Council of Switzerland.

This treaty has been found of incalculable usefulness in every war which has occurred in Europe since its adoption. During the first ten years of its existence there were five great wars, and in all of them the National Red Cross of each signatory country was the capable agent which carried succor to the wounded and sick of the opposing armies.

Miss Clara Barton, whose public work for humanity began in our own civil war, was in Europe at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war and was asked to join the relief corps of the Red Cross in the field, which she did, and her heroic service on the battlefields of France during that war are matters of history. When she returned to her native country, by request of the International Committee of the Red Cross at Geneva, Switzerland, she presented the subject of the Geneva treaty to the President in 1877, and four years later President Garfield in his first message to Congress recommended the accession of the United States to the treaty. President Arthur in his first message to Congress made the same recommendation; the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate reported favorably, and it was ratified by the Senate, and received the signature of the President March 1, 1882, making the United States the thirty-second country to come into the Red Cross treaty.

While originally formed to give its aid in times of war, through the efforts of Miss Clara Barton there has been added an article enlarging the work of the Red Cross to all cases of national emergency and disaster, known in foreign countries as the "American amendment," and in accordance with this article this country has already, under the leadership of this same woman, given its aid to Russia at the time of the famine in 1892, to Armenia and Turkey in 1896. In our country the Red Cross has led in ameliorating and relieving the sufferings arising from the fires in Michigan in 1881; the Mississippi floods in 1882 and 1883; the Mississippi cyclone in 1883; the Ohio and Mississippi floods in 1884; the Charleston earthquake in 1886; the Mount Vernon, Ill., cyclone of 1888; the Florida yellow-fever epidemic of 1888; the Johnstown disaster of 1889; the Pomeroy, Iowa, cyclone of 1893, and the South Carolina islands hurricane of 1893 and 1894.

At the request of the President of the United States and with the permission of Spain the American National Red Cross carried the bounty of the people of this country to the suffering reconcentrados of Cuba in 1897, 1898, and 1899.

The work done by the Red Cross in the late Spanish-American war in Cuba and in the hospitals and camps in the United States was far-reaching in its benefactions, including, as it did, officers and men, friend and foe alike, and many a man to-day owes his life to the Red Cross.

All meetings of the international conferences of the Red Cross have recommended to the governments concerned the importance of the protection of the Red Cross as the sacred insignia of this humane work and also urged the necessity of the incorporation of their National Red Cross committees. In pursuance of this recommendation every signatory country except ours has so protected its National Red Cross, most of them with measures much stronger than those embraced in the accompanying bill.

Our delay in this matter has resulted in the unauthorized use of the Red Cross to collect money from the people of the United States which has never reached the American National Red Cross or any auxiliary Red Cross body. There should be an incorporated national body to carry out the provisions of the treaty, and the insignia of the treaty, the red cross on a white ground, is entitled to legislation which will give it legal protection for its humanitarian work.

It seems to me that honor should fall to those to whom honor is due. This Red Cross Society has built up for itself the enviable name which it now bears, and that name and the work of the society are so closely identified with this emblem—the red cross—it seems to me both fair and equitable that the emblem be preserved to it and not paraded about, taken or used by anybody and everybody for any or every purpose, thereby detracting from the honor inseparably connected with the Red Cross Society through its work of humanity for humanity.

The committee has given this matter very careful consideration. I sincerely hope that its action and its report upon this bill will be accepted and adopted by the House. This society has won for itself, not alone in this country, but also beyond the seas, an honorable, enviable record. Foreign countries pay it their tribute. Pray why should the emblem which is so closely and honorably associated with its work be used to raise funds or advertise by any who may choose to take it, any more than the trade-mark of a corporation or business man should be taken so likewise and used? The action of the committee should be sustained by this House, that the bill as reported and amended should be passed, and the emblem of the Red Cross preserved to and handed down to future generations associated with the work of this noble organization.

The Colored Citizen—His Share in the Affairs of the Nation in the Years 1897-1900—Fifteen Thousand Participated in the War—The President's Generous Treatment of Colored Men in the Military and Civil Service of the Government.

SPEECH
OF
HON. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, June 4, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11538) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. GROSVENOR said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I can not let pass this opportunity, at the close of a long session of this Congress and the end of three years of this Administration, without putting into permanent form for a record to enlighten future generations the history of the part which the colored citizen has had in the stirring events of this remarkable period. It is a period in the history of the country of which future generations will be proud, as are those of to-day, and as the colored citizens of the United States have participated nobly in it, it is but justice to them that the facts be put on record.

In civil duties in Washington and throughout the States, in the Army, in the Navy, in the heat and labor of the campaign, and on the battlefield he has been active, earnest, faithful, even unto death, risking his life fearlessly in defense of that country in which too many States permit his exclusion from the rights of citizenship. But in spite of his wrongs by those whom he faithfully served as a slave, he has gone confidently forward, trusting in the continued and increasing control of the party which gave him freedom and has always stood for his rights as a citizen.

HIS PART IN THE WAR.

I want first to speak of his part in the war—in Cuba, in Porto Rico, in the Philippines. "Would a war with Spain benefit the negro?" was a popular question for debate. Some thought it would benefit; others thought not. In many respects it has been a godsend, and beyond dispute a great benefit. If in no other way, 15,048 privates have shown their patriotism and their valor by offering their bared breasts as shields for their country's honor; 4,114 (the regulars) did actual, noble, and heroic service at El Caney, San Juan, and Santiago, while 266 officers (261 volunteers and 5 regulars) did similar service and demonstrated the ability of the American negro to properly command even so well as he does readily obey.

When we have learned to appreciate that three years ago the negro had in the Army only 5 officers and 4,114 privates and that one year ago he had 266 officers and 15,048 privates, we must know that inestimable benefit has come to the race. Among the officers are to be found many of the brightest minds of the race. Fully 80 per cent of those in authority come from the best-known and most influential families in the land. Their contact with and influence upon their superior officers will be sure to raise the negro in the popular esteem and do incalculable good. Some of these men are colonels at $3,500 per annum, lieutenant-colonels at $3,000, majors at $2,500, captains (mounted) at $2,000, captains (not mounted) at $1,800, first lieutenants (mounted) at $1,600, first lieutenants (not mounted) at $1,500, etc.

There were in 1899 in the service the following:

Regiment and company.	Officers.	Enlisted men.
REGULARS.
Ninth United States Cavalry	1	1,177
Tenth United States Cavalry	2	1,016
Twenty-fourth United States Infantry	1	1,080
Twenty-fifth United States Infantry	1	841
Total	5	4,114
VOLUNTEERS.
Eighth Illinois Infantry	46	1,234
Third Alabama Infantry		1,141
Third North Carolina Infantry	40	1,059
Twenty-third Kansas Infantry	29	648
Sixth Virginia Infantry	28	623
Ninth Ohio Battalion	16	419
A and B, Indiana Infantry	7	213
Seventh United States Volunteer Infantry	24	981
Eighth United States Volunteer Infantry	23	984
Ninth United States Volunteer Infantry	24	990
Tenth United States Volunteer Infantry	23	978
Total volunteers	260	10,670

Total regular officers	5
Total regulars	4,114
Paymasters	2
Officers	266
Grand total	15,050

IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

In the civil service of the Government the colored man has participated more fully than ever before. President McKinley, who has always shown a disposition to honor the race and to grant it a fair and just share of the honors he had the power to bestow, has called the colored man to many positions of honor—to a larger number than any other President in the history of the country. On this point I desire to quote the Hon. Judson W. Lyons, the efficient and honored Register of the Treasury, who, in a speech delivered at the annual dinner of the Republican leaders of the city of New York, January 27, 1900, said:

I am prepared to prove from the records of the Government, beyond all possibility of dispute and cavil, that more colored men have employment in the service of the Government to-day than at any time since the close of the civil war. I am further prepared to show that President McKinley has sent the names of more colored men to the Senate for confirmation to office than any of his predecessors; that more colored men have received original appointments under this Administration than under any previous one; that the colored race is better represented in every branch of the Federal service to-day than at any time during the past third of a century, and that in the classified service of the Government at Washington, covered by the civil-service law of 1883, colored men have been promoted to higher average grades than ever before.

The facts themselves, taken from the records of the Government, so far as obtainable, bear out each one of these statements. There are on the pay rolls of the Federal Government, in all of its branches, the names of 18,267 colored persons who receive regular employment and pay. This is a greater number than at any time since the close of the civil war. This great army of employees is distributed as follows: In the service of the Government in the District of Columbia, 2,517; in the various branches of the service outside of Washington, 7,500; in the Army and Navy, 8,250.

As proof of my second statement that President McKinley has sent the names of more colored men to the Senate than any one of his predecessors I submit the following facts: Nominations of all classes, 233, divided as follows: Commissions in the Army, 186; collectors of internal revenue, 2; consuls, 9; receivers of public moneys, 4; register of lands, 1; surveyor-general, 1; naval officer, 1; collectors of customs, 9; postmasters, 15; ministers to foreign countries, 2; recorder of deeds, 1; supervisors of census, 2; secretary of legation, 1, and Register of the Treasury Department.

As to original appointments, there have been upward of 7,000 of all classes, or slightly more than one-third of the sum total.

A hasty survey of the situation shows that the colored race has more consuls abroad, more commissioned officers in the Army, more collectors of customs and deputy collectors of customs, more collectors and employees in the Internal-Revenue Service, more postmasters and postal employees than at any time heretofore in the history of the Government.

In the classified service at Washington there has been an unprecedented number of promotions of colored employees. The average grade of colored clerks is at least one step higher than has ever before been attained. In one very large bureau of a Department every colored clerk has received a promotion, and in some instances clerks have received two promotions since the beginning of the present Administration. This is in marked contrast to the conduct of the preceding Democratic Administration, when reductions and dismissals were the order of the day. I might here add that under the President's civil-service order of May 29, 1899, a number of colored men, dismissed from the service during the preceding Democratic Administration, have been reinstated.

Our people draw in salaries and pay from the Federal Treasury $5,538,612. Nor are these millions of dollars and these thousands of places the sum total of benefit that the race receives from this recognition. Far outweighing these mere material advantages is the moral influence proceeding from the fact that colored men given the opportunity are showing capacity of no mean order in the administration of grave and responsible trusts. By this means the critics and detractors of the race are silenced, the friends of the race are encouraged, and the masses of the race itself are inspired with hope, and are encouraged to put forth their utmost exertions to rise from unfortunate conditions. Opportunity is the one word that needs to be written in the lexicon of our race, and the Republican party has well-nigh completed the writing of that word.

Upon this record the Administration of President McKinley has no fears in appealing to the colored Republicans of the country. President McKinley has at all times been entirely frank and sympathetic toward us. He has listened to our representatives at all times when they came to present the cause of the race. He has discharged his duties in the love of man and in the fear of God. The colored race in the United States has had no steadier friend in the White House at Washington than William McKinley.

Take this question of lynching as an example. In his inaugural address on the 4th of March, 1897, when he was just entering upon his responsible duties as President of the United States, he spoke out firmly and decidedly against this growing evil, and put the moral influence and weight of his office against it. He has since renewed and confirmed the opinions uttered in his inaugural address in his recent message to the Fifty-sixth Congress. Every man who runs may read his utterances on lynching and know where he stands with reference to this question.

In the case of the assassination of Postmaster Baker at Lake City, S. C., every resource of the Administration was exhausted to secure the apprehension and conviction of the assassins. An ample reward was offered, skilled detectives were employed, the culprits were arrested, ample evidence to convict was secured, able counsel was employed; but a mistrial resulted only because the public sentiment of the vicinity from which the jury was selected was averse to a verdict of guilty, nor would he reestablish that office where Postmaster Baker had been so foully assassinated until the colored citizens of that town came forward under a petition and asked for its reestablishment and presented the name of a person who had had no part, either actively or passively, in the assassination of Postmaster Baker. An old proverb says, "Love is acts, not words." Judged by this standard, President McKinley fills the full measure of reasonable expectation, and stands out in the full light of public opinion and conscience as the ideal embodiment of a firm and just ruler.

FINANCIALLY CONSIDERED.

Now let us consider the financial side of the question. The colored citizens had during the war 266 officers, approximated, and a fair average of salaries, at $1,600, $425,600; 14,784 privates, at $208, $3,075,472; 5,000 men employed as drivers, cooks, servants, laborers, etc., at $250 per year, $1,250,000. Total, $4,751,072.

Add to this the honor attached to the following names and positions: Col. J. R. Marshall, of Illinois; Col. James Young, of North Carolina; Col. J. M. Brown, of Kansas; Lieutenant-Colonel Taylor, of North Carolina; Maj. John R. Lynch, of Mississippi; Maj. R. R. Wright, of Georgia; Maj. Charles Young, of Ohio; Major Haywood, of North Carolina; Major Walker, of North Carolina.

Below follow other figures kindly furnished by the respective Departments:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

1 at	$2,500	$2,500
1 at	1,200	1,200
1 at	1,000	1,000
2 at	900	1,800
1 at	840	840
6 at	720	4,320
17 at	660	11,220
2 at	480	960
1 at	360	360
2 at	240	480
34		24,680

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Secretary's office:
1 at $1,400		$1,400
3 at 840		2,520
4 at 720		2,880
8 at 660		5,280
1 at 480		480
1 at 240		240
18		12,800
General Land Office:
1 at $3,000		3,000
1 at 2,776		2,776
1 at 2,222		2,222
1 at 1,986		1,986
1 at 1,600		1,600
1 at 1,000		2,800
2 at 1,400		4,800
4 at 1,200		1,800
2 at 900		5,280
8 at 660
21		26,264

STATE DEPARTMENT.

Consular service:
1 at $5,000		5,000
1 at 4,000		4,000
2 at 2,500		5,000
2 at 2,000		4,000
4 at 1,500		6,000
1 at 1,000		1,000
11		25,000

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

1 at $1,000		1,000
1 at 840		840
1 at 720		720
1 at 660		660
2 at 240		480
6		3,700

PENSION OFFICE.

1 at $2,000		2,000
7 at 1,400		9,800
2 at 1,300		2,600
21 at 1,200		25,200
31 at 1,000		31,000
7 at 900		6,300
4 at 840		3,360
1 at 720		720
8 at 660		5,280
4 at 400		1,600
3 at 240		720
89		87,740

PATENT OFFICE.

1 at $1,400		1,400
3 at 800		2,400
7 at 720		5,040
9 at 600		5,400
15 at 480		7,200
3 at 360		1,080
38		22,520
Geological Survey:
1 at $720		720
8 at 600		4,800
1 at 520		520
1 at 480		480
4 at 180		720
15		7,240
Miscellaneous:
1 at $3,000		3,000
1 at 900		900
1 at 720		720
1 at 480		480
1 at 400		400
1 at 360		360
6		5,860

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

168 men, at an average salary of $700 per annum	117,600

RECORDER OF DEEDS OFFICE.

1 at $4,000		4,000
2 at 1,200		2,400
1 at 900		900
16 at 400		6,400
1 at 240		240
1 at 120		120
22		14,060

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

District building,	10 at $720	7,200
District courts,	15 at 600	9,000
Miscellaneous,	50 at 500	25,000
	75	41,200

Add to these figures the following reasonable estimates: State Department, $20,000; Navy Department, $20,000; War Department, $30,000; Treasury Department, $200,000; Agricultural and Executive Departments, $25,000, and we have the following:

RECAPITULATION.

Army	$4,751,073
Post-Office Department	24,080
Interior Department	271,000
Printing Office	117,600
District of Columbia	55,260
Consular Service	25,000
State Department (estimated)	20,000
Navy Department	20,000
War Department	30,000
Treasury Department	200,000
Agricultural and Executive Departments	25,000
Total	5,538,012

Then, when we shall have added the salaries of the hundreds of postmasters, deputy postmasters, collectors of customs, collectors of internal revenue, with their thousands of deputies, the numerous watchmen, custodians of public buildings in many States, three supervisors of census, and at least 150 enumerators with an average pay of $50 each, we can readily figure the enormous sum of $6,000,000 salary drawn by the negro under the openhanded and generous Administration of William McKinley!

PROMINENT COLORED MEN IN THE COUNTRY'S SERVICE.

The following is a partial list of colored men and women in the service of the country, appointed in every instance by President McKinley or those acting under his instructions. And here it is proper to say that while Mr. McKinley has been deeply engrossed with the most intricate problems of statecraft, he has not been unmindful of the just claims of the race. He has distributed the official rewards with rare tact and judgment, and no element which assisted in the masterful triumph of 1896 is without representation. The negro vote has fared handsomely at his hands. Colored men of intelligence and character have been selected from every section of the country to fill positions of trust and profit under the Administration, and the instance has yet to be recorded where the honor has been bestowed unworthily.

Indeed, while it is a fact of great significance that the President has within nineteen months appointed fully twice as many negroes as any previous Administration, developments are now being so shaped by him, through a revision of the civil-service regulations, that the number of negro officeholders will be increased fourfold. Not only this, but the constitutional rights of the negro will continue to be sacredly regarded and his future in the new possessions will be surrounded by every guaranty calculated to insure his peace and material well-being. The great work which the Administration has done in the line of negro recognition is graphically illustrated by the subjoined roster, which gives some of the more important positions to which eminent negroes have been assigned since the advent of the present régime. From this roster is omitted dozens of Army appointments, scores of civil-service appointments, promotions, and retentions, State recognition, and hundreds of minor departmental positions, which are the legitimate fruits of the great victory of 1896, and which should be placed to the credit of the Administration.

FEDERAL APPOINTMENTS GIVEN TO COLORED MEN.

J. W. Lyons, Register of the Treasury.
H. A. Rucker, collector internal revenue, Atlanta, Ga.
J. H. Deveaux, collector of customs, Savannah, Ga.
C. C. Wimbish, collector of port, Atlanta, Ga.
I. J. McCottrie, collector of port, Georgetown, S. C.
Budd Coffee, St. Marys, Ga.
R. R. Wright, paymaster in Army.
Rev. C. T. Walker, chaplain in Army.
Dr. George C. Stoney, surgeon in Army.
E. R. Belcher, deputy collector customs, Brunswick, Ga.
M. P. Morton, postmaster, Athens, Ga.
I. H. Lofton, postmaster, Hogansville, Ga.
J. T. Jackson, postmaster, Darien, Ga.
Mrs. E. L. Bamfield, postmistress, Beaufort, S. C.
Dr. A. M. Curtis, surgeon in chief, Freedmen's Hospital.
Rev. B. W. Arnett, jr., chaplain in Army.
John R. Lynch, paymaster in Army.
James Hill, register of lands, Jackson, Miss.
Frank P. Brinson, postmaster, Duncansville, Miss.
Thomas Keys, postmaster, Ocean Springs, Miss.
H. P. Cheatham, recorder of deeds, District of Columbia.
John C. Dancy, collector of port, Wilmington, N. C.
Dr. J. E. Shepard, Internal-Revenue Service, North Carolina.
Rev. O. L. W. Smith, minister to Liberia.
John T. Williams, consul, Sierra Leone, Africa.
Mrs. S. E. Jones, postmistress, Bladen County, N. C.
Colin Anthony, postmaster, Scotland Neck, N. C.
Joseph E. Lee, collector of internal revenue, Florida.
D. N. Pappy, collector of port, St. Augustine, Fla.
Dr. L. W. Livingston, consul, Cape Haitien, Haiti.
W. F. Powell, minister to Haiti.
Robert Pelham, special Indian agent.
J. C. Leftwich, receiver of public money, Montgomery, Ala.
H. V. Cashin, receiver of public money, Huntsville, Ala.
R. A. Parker, Internal-Revenue Service, Alabama.
Dr. A. M. Brown, surgeon in Army.
Rev. I. Dawson, postmaster, Eutaw, Ala.
M. W. Gibbs, consul, Tamatave, Madagascar.
J. E. Bush, receiver of public money, Little Rock, Ark.
Fred. Havis, postmaster, Pine Bluff, Ark.
M. B. Van Horn, consul, St. Thomas, Danish West Indies.

Dr. George H. Jackson, consul, La Rochelle, France.
John P. Green, superintendent of stamp division, Post-Office Department.
C. L. Maxwell, consul, Santo Domingo.
W. T. Anderson, a Regular Army chaplain.
H. Y. Arnett, comparer, office of recorder of deeds, District of Columbia.
E. P. McCabe, Oklahoma.
N. T. Velar, postmaster, Brinton, Pa.
J. H. Jackson, postmaster, Pennsylvania.
J. N. Ruffin, consul, Asuncion, Paraguay.
Gen. Robert Smalls, collector of port, Beaufort, S. C.
F. J. Baker, postmaster, Lake City, S. C.
J. E. Wilson, postmaster, Florence, S. C.
T. C. Walker, collector of port, Tappahannock, Va.
B. T. Greener, consul, Vladivostock, Russia.
Dr. H. W. Furniss, consul, Bahia, Brazil.
W. A. Gaines, Internal-Revenue Service, Kentucky.
Dr. J. O. Holmes, pension examiner, Kentucky.
J. R. Spurgeon, secretary legation, Liberia.
Henry Demas, naval officer, New Orleans, La.
James Lewis, surveyor-general, Louisiana.
Mrs. V. E. Bahn, postmistress, Madisonville, La.
E. L. Simon, postmaster, South Atlanta, Ga.

So Mr. McKinley reached the close of three years of his service firmly established in the confidence of the people and stronger than ever by reason of having so successfully piloted the grand old ship of state through the channel of political unrest, skillfully escaping the Scylla of domestic discord while steering away from the Charybdis of foreign complication.

In war or in peace, whether dealing with whites or blacks, foreigner or native, President McKinley's course has been dictated by a singleness of purpose—that of faithfully administering the trust placed in his hands. Uninfluenced by prejudice, unmoved by ill-advised clamor, and unruffled by captious criticism, he pursues the even tenor of his way, adhering steadfastly to the right as God gives him to see the right, vindicating day by day the judgment of his supporters, and presenting to the nations of the globe the perfect embodiment of the typical American.

RECORDER CHEATHAM ON THE SITUATION—WHAT ONE OF THE RACE'S MOST POWERFUL LEADERS SAYS OF PRESIDENT M'KINLEY'S ADMINISTRATION—NEGRO INTELLIGENCE UPON THE SIDE OF REPUBLICANISM.

At no time since the enfranchisement of the negro have so many conflicting problems confronted our people and called for keener discrimination or calmer judgment. It gives me infinite pleasure to note the intelligent interest taken by my race in all the questions now up for solution. It points to a brighter era and offers a remedy for many of the ills that now beset us. The more the negro reads and studies, the better he becomes acquainted with the history of the country and the attitude of parties on the issue of human rights, the stronger a Republican he becomes. The so-called "blind faith" of other days is giving away to the conviction that as a plain business proposition the Republican party can more safely be trusted to conduct the affairs of government, and that its continuance in power is the surest method of sustaining and increasing the wave of prosperity now sweeping over the land.

The Administration of President McKinley is a grand success. He has led us successfully through a trying foreign war; he has made the name of the United States respected and honored in every nook and cranny of the civilized world; his policy of judicious expansion, as exemplified in the acquisition of the Philippines and Porto Rico, and the protection of Cuba, is placing our beloved nation beyond the period of provincialism and is opening broader avenues for the investment of capital and the promotion of Christian principles; he has given the negro splendid recognition in the domestic and diplomatic service, and has afforded us an opportunity to prove anew our skill and valor upon the field of battle; he has just given us two regiments of picked men, and placed over them the gallant heroes who won fame at Santiago.

In accord with military usage, the colonel and regimental officers are tacticians of wide experience and happen to be white, but I am satisfied that when the troops take the field, and when the black soldier performs, as he will, some conspicuous act of bravery and demonstrates beyond question his capacity for epaulettes, President McKinley will not hesitate to award them to him. Every step we take in advance must be earned, and it can only be held by hard and continuous work and eternal vigilance. This may seem cruel, but it is the condition we are compelled to meet, and we might as well prepare ourselves for merciless competition. Our future greatness lies in industry, education, and the ability to do what is needed a little better than anyone else can do it, with equal promptness and fidelity. Our prosperity lies in making friends with the strongest forces of the body politic, and yielding cheerful obedience to the law.

There is hope for the negro, and the problem can be solved by natural processes, if he just keeps "hammering away," and permits no opportunity for advancement to escape him. We have good friends in the South, as well as in other sections of the country, and we should be careful when we discuss the situation not to abuse those who are kindly disposed toward us.

I have no fears of the result in Ohio. The President's wise and conservative administration will be sustained, and Judge Nash will be elected by a healthy majority. The negro voters are too sensible to be led away by appeals to prejudice and passion, and under the guidance of such eminent men of affairs as George A. Myers, W. R. Stewart, W. H. Parham, H. C. Smith, John P. Green, Charles Cottrell, Robert Harlan, and others, they will rally enthusiastically around the Republican standard. The issues are strongly and candidly stated in the platform, and the negro understands thoroughly that in the prosperity brought about by Republican success he will enjoy an equitable share.

There is nothing for the negro in Democratic success in Ohio. There is everything for him in the triumph of the party of freedom and human rights.

HENRY P. CHEATHAM.

COLORED MEN IN THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR—PRESIDENT WILLIAM M'KINLEY GIVES THEM PROMINENT ASSIGNMENTS.

When hostilities broke out between the United States and Spain in 1898, President McKinley did not hesitate to call upon valiant colored men to assist in maintaining national honor and defending the country's flag. Several volunteer regiments were organized at once and were officered by some of the brightest men of the race.

In Cuba the negro soldiers distinguished themselves by signal bravery and daring, the charge at San Juan Hill being a lasting monument to their valor and courage. As a result of this memorable battle many were promoted from the ranks to executive positions. Those who were not assigned to duty in Cuba served their country by discharging important guard and picket duty. At the close of the war with Spain the bulk of the regiments, white and black, were mustered out. The negro troopers of the Regular Army, comprising the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry and Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry, remained in the service.

Appreciating the superior services of the negro troops in the recent war with Spain, President McKinley decided to increase the number of negro regiments in the Regular or Standing Army, and on the 8th of September, 1899, issued an order for the organization of two new regiments of infantry, to be composed of colored men. The Democrats protested against this action, but to no avail. Two regiments were called for. The regiments have been designated as the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Volunteer Infantry, and are being organized, respectively, at Fort Thomas, Ky., and Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

The full complement of officers has been selected, and following are the field officers (white):

Forty-eighth Regiment—Colonel, William P. Duvall, captain, First Artillery; lieutenant-colonel, Thaddeus W. Jones, captain, Tenth Cavalry; majors, Sedgwick Rice, first lieutenant, Seventh Cavalry; Alexander L. Dade, first lieutenant, Third Cavalry; John Howard, first lieutenant, Nineteenth Infantry.

Forty-ninth Regiment—Colonel, William H. Beck, captain, Tenth Cavalry; lieutenant-colonel, Arthur C. Ducat, captain, Twenty-fourth Infantry; majors, Ernest Hinds, first lieutenant, Second Artillery; George W. Kirkman, captain, Twenty-third Infantry; James W. Brott, captain, Twenty-fourth Infantry.

Following are the company officers (colored) of the Forty-eighth Regiment:

Captains—John Buck, first sergeant Troop B, Tenth Cavalry; Thomas Campbell, late first lieutenant Company L, Seventh United States Volunteer Infantry; William H. Brown, sergeant-major, Ninth Cavalry; Carter P. Johnson, Tenth Cavalry; Thomas Grant, late first lieutenant Company F, Tenth United States Volunteer Infantry; Robert R. Rudd, late captain Company A, Ninth Battalion Ohio Volunteers; James E. Hamlin, late captain, Third North Carolina Volunteer Infantry; Pleasant Webb, late captain, Sixth Virginia Volunteers; William A. Hankins, late captain, Sixth Virginia Volunteers; Leon W. Denison, late captain Company K, Eighth Illinois Volunteers; Stephen Starr, late second lieutenant, Ninth United States Volunteer Infantry; Alexander Richardson, late first lieutenant, Ninth United States Volunteer Infantry.

First lieutenants—L. H. Smith, first sergeant Troop M, Tenth Cavalry; Peter McGown, first sergeant Troop E, Tenth Cavalry; William H. Allen, sergeant, Company A, Ninth Cavalry; John H. Anderson, squadron sergeant-major, Ninth Cavalry; Charles O. Thomas, late lieutenant, Eighth United States Volunteer Infantry; Jerry M. White, late first lieutenant, Twenty-third Kansas; James F. Powell, late second lieutenant, Indiana Volunteers; H. B. Brown, late first lieutenant, Third North Carolina Volunteer Infantry; H. J. Parker, late first sergeant, United States Volunteer Infantry; Jacob G. Smith, late second lieutenant, Ninth United States Volunteer Infantry; John W. Brown, late second lieutenant, Ninth United States Volunteer Infantry; Charles C. Caldwell, late first lieutenant Company B, Ninth Battalion Ohio Volunteers.

Second lieutenants—Walter Green, first sergeant Company K, Tenth Cavalry; G. B. Turner, commissary-sergeant, Tenth Cavalry; Joseph Moore, first lieutenant Company H, Eighth United States Volunteer Infantry; J. B. Coleman, late first lieutenant Company E, Seventh United States Volunteer Infantry; Lincoln Washington, sergeant-major, Ninth Cavalry; David B. Jeffers, late second lieutenant, Tenth United States Volunteer Infantry; Wilson Ballard, late second lieutenant, Ninth Battalion Ohio Volunteers; Joseph C. Andrews, private, Company L, Sixth Massachusetts Volunteers; Frank R. Chisholm, late private, Company L, Sixth Massachusetts Volunteers; John K. Rice, late first lieutenant, Sixth Virginia Volunteers; George W. Taylor, noncommissioned officer, Third North Carolina Volunteers; Green F. Marion, late sergeant, Third Alabama Volunteers.

Forty-ninth Regiment—Captains, William B. Edwards, sergeant, Company A, Tenth Cavalry; Charles W. Jefferson, first sergeant Company B, Ninth Cavalry; Floyd H. Crumbly, late first lieutenant Company A, Tenth United States Volunteer Infantry; Edward L. Baker, late first lieutenant Company B, Tenth United States Volunteer Infantry; John C. Proctor, late first lieutenant, Eighth United States Volunteer Infantry; Emanuel D. Bass, late first lieutenant Company D, Ninth Battalion Ohio Volunteers; William H. Hawkins, late captain, Twenty-third Kansas Volunteers; Benjamin Graves, late captain, Sixth Virginia

Volunteers; William R. Staff, sergeant-major, Twenty-fourth Infantry; Frank R. Steward, late second lieutenant, Eighth United States Volunteers; Robert G. Wood, late second lieutenant, Ninth United States Volunteer Infantry; Robert Gage, late captain, Third Alabama Volunteers.

First lieutenants—Charles Perry, first sergeant Troop L, Tenth Cavalry; L. H. Jordan, first lieutenant Company K, Seventh United States Volunteer Infantry; Charles Spurlock, sergeant, Company E, Ninth Cavalry; Ebert W. Maden, sergeant, Company E, Ninth Cavalry; Charles H. Robinson, first lieutenant, Sixth Virginia Volunteers; James H. Thomas, late first lieutenant, Indiana Volunteers; David J. Gilmer, late captain, Third North Carolina Volunteer Infantry; Robert Blakeman, late first sergeant Company H, Eighth Illinois Volunteers; Hamilton H. Blunt, late first lieutenant, Ninth United States Volunteer Infantry; Thomas C. Butler, late second lieutenant, Ninth United States Volunteer Infantry; Macon Russell, late second lieutenant, Eighth United States Volunteer Infantry; L. A. Tillman, late quartermaster-sergeant, Seventh United States Volunteer Infantry.

Second lieutenants—A. M. Ray, sergeant, Company F, Tenth Cavalry; Robert L. Gough, corporal, Company D, Twenty-fourth Infantry; Wyatt Huffman, late second lieutenant, Eighth United States Volunteer Infantry; Beverly Ferea, late first lieutenant, Seventh United States Volunteer Infantry; Henry F. Walla, commissary sergeant Ninth Cavalry; William Blaney, late second lieutenant, Tenth United States Volunteer Infantry; Horace F. Wheaton, private, Company L, Sixth Massachusetts Volunteers; George E. Payne, second lieutenant, Twenty-third Kansas Volunteers; Leander W. Hayes, late sergeant, Third North Carolina Volunteers; Gilford E. Campbell, late sergeant, Eighth Illinois Volunteers; Edward B. Johnson, Tenth Cavalry.

These two regiments will be composed of about 1,200 men each, all of whom will be colored, with company officers of their own race.

What has President McKinley done for the negro along military lines, you ask? Let us see.

He has appointed 24 negro captains at a salary of $1,800 per annum each, amounting to $43,200; 24 first lieutenants at a salary of $1,500 each, amounting to $36,000; 24 second lieutenants at a salary of $1,400 each, amounting to $33,600; 2 regiments of 2,400 privates at $156 each, amounting to $374,400. Grand total, $487,200 per annum.

HON. JOHN P. GREEN PRESENTS A FEW FACTS IN FAVOR OF MR. M'KINLEY'S ADMINISTRATION.

[From the Colored American.]

Permit me to say, here and now, that I am positively and unqualifiedly in favor of the renomination and reelection of President McKinley, for the following reasons, in part:

First. His Administration has given us an honest and conservative Government, has maintained our financial integrity, abolished soup houses, and given work to all who are able and willing to work, at increased wages.

Second. Under his wise and statesmanlike leadership, Cuba has been liberated at a minimum of cost in blood and treasure, and large and valuable tracts of territory added to our domain. The possession of these "colonies" will stimulate our manufacturing and commercial industries, and furnish valuable markets in the near future for the products of the farm, the mine, the loom, the factory, and mills, and furnaces. This is what we need and must have. Further, President McKinley has given more official patronage to the colored American than any other President before him; and would have done more for the colored Republicans of the South if the murderous assaults made on Federal appointees there had not discouraged it. I speak advisedly when I say that the colored American has drawn more dollars under McKinley's Administration than ever before.

Third. I favor President McKinley because I know him to be our friend.

Now, what are the charges preferred against the President by some of our people, by reason of which they advise colored men to abandon the Republican party and ally themselves with the Democratic party, dominated by the Southern wing, which has suppressed our vote, colonized us in "Jim Crow" cars, and are daily engaged in horribly mutilating and murdering us?

They censure the President because he has not sent Federal troops into the South to prevent lynching; and they point to the Administration of Grant, in contrast. The cases are not parallel. President Grant did not send any troops into the South to suppress Kuklux Klan outrages; they were there already, had not been recalled after the termination of the civil war, and he simply ordered them from place to place in the several States where they were located to protect voters at the polls, and to assist United States civil officials in serving process.

The case of ex-President Cleveland sending United States troops to protect the mails during the strike at Chicago is often referred to. This is not a similar case for several reasons.

First. There was no dispute on the part of President Cleveland's law advisers as to his legal right to send those troops to Chicago to protect the mails.

Second. The disorder at Chicago continued for a week or more, and Mr. Cleveland had time to send troops there. In the case at Lake City, S. C., no one save the bloody lynchers knew that Baker and his family were going to be assassinated; and after it was done it was too late to send troops. All that was left to be done was to detect the assassins and prosecute them according to law. This the President has done and is doing. He even has employed extra able counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney at Charleston.

Take the terrible affair at Wilmington, N. C. The governor of North Carolina is a Republican, and was authorized to call on the President for troops in an emergency. The governor did not call for troops; the election was ended; no one was killed. Then, like a clap of thunder out of a cloudless sky, the mob assailed and killed a lot of helpless colored people. Not even the colored people at Wilmington knew that this foul deed would be perpetrated. The President could not foresee what even they could not tell, even if he had possessed the legal power and the means had been appropriated by Congress to send troops there.

No one could know that those six men "lynched" at Newnan, Ga., would be lynched, or that Sam Hose would be mutilated and burned, before the deeds were done. After these acts were perpetrated the sending of troops to the several localities would have been only a shallow farce.

Of one thing we are certain: When President McKinley was Governor McKinley and there was no question as to his legal right to use troops to protect a menaced prisoner, he used them, and that in such a way that the law had its full and free course. But that was in a State where the law officers notified him in time of the danger, and he had the opportunity to send troops before the victim was lynched. Again, the President is complained of because he did not refer in his message to the lynchings in the South. While this was, from my point of view, a mistake, yet we must not lose sight of the fact that doing is more valuable than talking; and what Democratic platform ever contained anything advising for the welfare of the colored American or what Democratic President ever remembered him in his messages? At the very moment when the message was being read the vicinity of Lake City, S. C., was "bristling" with detectives who were gathering evidence for the prosecution of the assassins of Baker and his family, and at the prosecution of the same at Charleston the evidence collected was cumulative, and had the trial taken place anywhere except in the South they would have been convicted.

If the President himself had been assassinated nothing more could have been done than to arrest the guilty parties and prosecute them in a court of law. This has been done and is still in process in the case referred to. Others will follow, let us hope. We must not forget that in the President's first utterance as President he condemned lynching and lawlessness.

Again, the President is found fault with because he has not appointed more and higher commissioned officers in the Army. Well, as to this complaint we can say the end is not yet. More than this, we can say that he not only sent our four regular regiments of soldiers to the front and gave them places of honor (at the front) when white regiments were clamoring to go there, but he also appointed a large number of first and second lieutenants in the volunteer service; and what more has a Democratic President ever done?

It may be said that a Democratic President would have done more, but who can prove it to be fact? In that trying ordeal the President was not "a law unto himself." We must remember he had many influences that were hostile to us to reckon with, and let us give him credit for what he has done.

The foregoing, Mr. Editor, are my earnest, honest sentiments, and however much your readers may differ with me, I trust they will at least credit me with having the courage to express my convictions.

With respect,

JOHN P. GREEN.

T. THOMAS FORTUNE ON THE NEGRO IN 1897-1900.

[From the New York Sun.]

Through all the troublous three years of the past the rock of safety has been President McKinley. He remained unruffled and unexcited when many of the people of the Republic thought we were unprepared for war. He made the mandate of the people his own and responded to the Macedonian cry of the outraged people of the Pearl of the Antilles and drove the Spanish oppressor from this hemisphere. There is no one, in my opinion, so well prepared to grapple with all the grave questions growing out of the Spanish-American war as William McKinley; hence, have no doubt that next November the American people will say to him at the ballot box: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." I believe, however, that the crowning feature of President McKinley's Administration is the prosperity which it has brought to the nation, and in which the Afro-American people have shared equally with others of their fellow-citizens, and the basis of this prosperity has been the sound financial policy the Administration has stood for and made a fixture, so that the credit of the Republic at home and abroad is as good as that of any nation.

No one who has traveled in the South within the last twelve months can deny the fact that the men who make our annual output of 10,000,000 bales of cotton are more prosperous, more cheerful, more contented, and better dressed, and take more pride generally in their country. This condition of affairs is not only true of the South and of the black man, but of all sections of our country and of all races of our people. I want also to refer here to the consummation of the dying wish of General Grant that the resentments and estrangements growing out of the civil war might be removed and that we should again become a united people. The generosity and fairness of President McKinley and the Spanish war have accomplished this, which I am sure is gratifying to every patriotic citizen.

It is not generally known how handsomely President McKinley has treated the Afro-American citizens in appointments to office. It is estimated that there are about 18,267 of these in the public service. In the District of Columbia there are 2,517; in the States, 7,500. In the Army and Navy there are 8,250, of whom 186 are officers. The President has made 237 nominations of Afro-Americans, among them 2 collectors of internal revenue, 9 consuls, 4 receivers of public money, 1 register of land office, 1 surveyor-general, 1 naval officer, 8 collectors of customs, 16 postmasters, 2 ministers to foreign countries, the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, 2 supervisors of the census, 1 secretary of legation, the Register of the Treasury, and a special agent to the Paris Exposition.

There have been made of original appointments more than 7,000, slightly more than one-third of the whole. In the classified civil service there has been an unprecedented number of promotions, and the average grade of colored clerks is higher than ever before. Under the President's civil-service order of 1899 quite a number who were removed under Mr. Cleveland's two Administrations for offensive partisanship have been reinstated. We draw in salaries from the Federal Treasury $5,536,612 per annum, nearly 60 cents for every man, woman, and child in the country.

In his inaugural address President McKinley strongly condemned mob and lynch law, and in his recent message to Congress he reiterated the condemnation. The whole power of the Administration was used to secure a conviction of the persons who murdered Postmaster Baker at Lake City, S. C. On all the counts, it seems to me that President McKinley has done the handsome thing by Afro-American citizens, and I believe they will support him as cordially next November as they did in 1896.

T. THOMAS FORTUNE.

Mr. Speaker, I desire in closing to express my admiration of the course of President McKinley in the trying duties of his position. In the conduct of the war with Spain Mr. McKinley has exhibited a quality of generalship the most potent encomium upon which is the speedy and satisfactory termination of the exasperating conflict. In this struggle the negro was given a man's chance, and a lion's share of the glory is his. The President's prudence, sagacity, and inflexible determination here stamped him as the peer of the greatest military commanders of any age.

The waving Stars and Stripes, unfurled over the ramparts of Cuba, of Porto Rico, of Hawaii, and the Philippines are mute but eloquent witnesses to his wise and patriotic leadership. "McKinleyism" has come to be associated with protection to labor, the elevation of the citizen, sound finance, enduring prosperity, and, best of all, to be synonymous with a "Greater America," upon whose expanded soil the sun never ceases to shine. While Mr. McKinley has been deeply engrossed with the most intricate problems of statecraft, he has not been unmindful of the just claims of party workers. He has distributed the official rewards with rare tact and judgment, and no element which assisted in the masterful triumph of 1896 is without representation. The negro vote has fared handsomely at his hands.

Military Academy Bill.

SPEECH
OF
HON. THOMAS M. JETT,
OF ILLINOIS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 15, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11538) making appropriations for the Military Academy—

Mr. JETT said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I will not address myself to the pending bill, but desire to make some observations on the question of trusts.

Mr. Chairman, that there exists within the United States a great many monopolies and trusts, formed for the purpose of private gain and which are exceedingly dangerous to the well-being of the people as well as the free institutions of our country, is well known. When these trusts are permitted to carry out their purposes, as they have been doing recently, they become oppressive and interfere with labor and legitimate enterprise and rob the people of the fruits of their toil. That the great aggregations of capital in many instances rob the people of the fruits of their toil no one can successfully deny.

I desire, Mr. Chairman, to submit the testimony of many who are informed thoroughly and can speak knowingly upon this subject.

I will first submit that of Mr. Henry C. Frick, a former business partner of Andrew Carnegie:

THE CARNEGIE EXPOSURE—RICH BEYOND THE DREAMS OF AVARICE—MR. CARNEGIE'S PROFITS GREATER THAN A KING'S REVENUES—ONE DAY'S INCOME PAYS THE PRESIDENT'S SALARY—CONFRONTED BY TRUSTS OF HALF A BILLION—THE MODERN YOUTH FACES A WALL OF MONOPOLY—ALL DOORS OF OPPORTUNITY CLOSED BY THE TRUSTS.

Is there a man in the country who can read the extraordinary statements made by Henry C. Frick in his suit against Andrew Carnegie without stopping to think of the swift change which the trust system, backed by Government favoritism, has wrought in economic, political, and social conditions in America?

Mr. Frick says that Mr. Carnegie's share of the profits of the Carnegie Steel Company last year was $12,285,000. He also says that Mr. Carnegie's share of the earnings this year will probably be $24,867,500.

CARNEGIE'S PROFITS GREATER THAN KING'S REVENUES.

Can you grasp the meaning of that? Twelve millions of dollars last year; $24,000,000 this year! This is the private income of one man. Let me give you a list of annual incomes that may help you to establish a rule of proportion:

Queen Victoria	$1,925,000
The German Emperor	3,852,770
The Emperor of Austria	3,875,000
The King of Italy	2,858,000
Andrew Carnegie	24,867,500

ONE DAY'S INCOME PAYS PRESIDENT'S SALARY.

Mr. Carnegie's income from his steel works is $68,130.13 a day. That is more than the salary of the President of the United States for a whole year. His annual income is equal to the wages of 12,000,000 of workingmen at $2 a day.

But is Mr. Carnegie the only man in the community who is able to pay the President's salary for a year out of one day's income?

Until Mr. Frick made his astounding revelation no one had any suspicion that the Carnegie Steel Company was earning $42,500,000 a year. May there not be other men in the country—many of them—whose incomes would startle the country if the real facts were to be made known? Who can tell? The trust system, the scheme of limited monopoly, is so well surrounded with safeguards of secrecy that it is only by the accident of a legal quarrel among the great financial captains that the truth may now and then be uncovered. Senator HANNA, the spokesman of the present Administration at Washington, laughs at the earnest men who have tried to probe this greatest problem of the present generation. The trusts should be "let alone." They pay millions of dollars into the Republican campaign fund. Why should they be disturbed or investigated?

RICH BEYOND THE DREAMS OF AVARICE.

I do not single out Mr. Carnegie for criticism. I make no complaint because he is rich beyond the dreams of avarice. He is simply the product of a system. He has brains and courage and industry. While others have dawdled or groped stupidly he has mastered hard questions. He has not spared himself. What he has he got by his own genius. He has been a benefactor of his race in more ways than one.

But when Mr. Carnegie began his struggle for wealth and power there were no trusts. That is true of practically every other man of power in the trusts. The door of opportunity was open for them. They have not left it open for others.

THE MODERN YOUTH FACES A WALL OF MONOPOLY.

Mr. Frick deserves the thanks of the nation for this contribution to the world's knowledge. He has no doubt started springs of thought in the public mind that will flow long after his suit against Mr. Carnegie has been won or lost. The thinking American citizen will ask himself how it is that one man can lawfully—and Mr. Carnegie's wealth is lawful—earn twenty-four millions a year. He will glance backward and forward. He will think of his father, of himself, of his son. And he will see that the founders of the great trusts entered upon their business careers when competition was possible, and that they have gradually destroyed the competitive system.

Could Andrew Carnegie start in the steel trade to-day and achieve power? Does anyone believe that this man, with all his intelligence and ability to apply himself to the work before him, could break through the wall of monopoly built around the steel trade?

CONFRONTED BY TRUSTS OF HALF A BILLION.

Imagine Mr. Carnegie young again and eager to become the independent proprietor of a successful steel plant. He would find himself face to face with such colossal combinations as these:

American Car and Foundry Company:
Common	$29,000,000
Preferred, 7 per cent	29,000,000
Total	58,000,000
American Steel Hoop Company:
Common	19,000,000
Preferred, 7 per cent	14,000,000
Total	33,000,000
American Steel and Wire Company:
Common	50,000,000
Preferred, 7 per cent	40,000,000
Total	90,000,000
American Tin Plate Company:
Common	28,000,000
Preferred, 7 per cent	18,000,000
Total	46,000,000
Federal Steel Company:
Common	46,484,300
Preferred, 6 per cent	53,253,500
Total	*99,737,800
National Steel Company:
Common	32,000,000
Preferred, 7 per cent	27,000,000
Total	†59,000,000
Pressed Steel Company:
Common	12,500,000
Preferred, 7 per cent	12,500,000
Total	25,000,000
Republic Iron and Steel Company:
Common	27,352,000
Preferred, 7 per cent	20,852,000
Total	48,204,000
*Bonded indebtedness in addition	29,959,000
†Bonded indebtedness in addition	13,042,000
Total	43,001,000
Grand total:
Common stock	244,336,300
Preferred stock	214,605,500
Bonded indebtedness	43,001,000
Aggregate capital	501,942,800

THIS POWER DANGEROUS TO THE REPUBLIC.

Men like Mr. Carnegie, having established themselves in power, naturally seek to prevent competition. He is not alone in this. It is the foundation idea of the trust system.

But can a power like this exist in a republic without destroying the republic?

What is the remedy? Who knows? Is there a remedy at all? And how can there be any effective and reasonable remedy until the Government is in the hands of men who honestly want to find a remedy?—James Creelman in New York Journal.

CRUSHING POWER OF THE TRUSTS—DRIVES THOUSANDS TO THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY—SMALL MERCHANTS AND MANUFACTURERS CROWDED OUT—THEY CAN NO LONGER SUPPORT THE PARTY OF HANNA, AND THEY ARE BOLTING.

Thousands of small business men and manufacturers who supported Mr. McKinley in 1896 have decided to support the Democratic party this year. A more significant movement can hardly be imagined.

This means that the crushing power exerted by the trusts is driving the victims of this all-ingulfing, rapacious system of centralization out of the party dominated by Mr. McKinley and Senator HANNA, the open agents of trusts and syndicates, and for the first time the trust has become a factor—probably a controlling factor—in practical politics, not only in the West and South, but also in the East, and particularly in New York.

BUSINESS MEN BECOME SALARIED EMPLOYEES.

The cry which rings from State to State and increases in volume and intensity every week is a cry against a system of absolute monopoly, backed by Government favoritism, which is crushing out small proprietors, shutting the gates of opportunity and converting a large and important body of hitherto independent business men into salaried employees. The change has been swift and almost noiseless. In every city and town are to be found scores of hired men who, only two years ago, were in business on their own account. These men were helpless to resist the overpowering weight of the trust system. Let any man in any part of the country investigate this statement in his own community. The great danger which threatens the country is that no man will be able to engage in any of the businesses controlled by trusts unless he does so as a hireling, and that, with competition destroyed, the prices of necessaries of life will be fixed arbitrarily by the trusts, without restraint. Go to any store in your neighborhood and ask whether the trusts have reduced prices. The rapid rise in the prices within the past year is startling, almost incredible.

HANNA SAYS "TRUSTS DO GOOD."

Senator HANNA says publicly that the trusts are doing good by lowering the cost of manufacture and distribution. That is true. The Journal has said the same thing. It is a part of the order of progress. Organization and systematic economy, whether by trusts or otherwise, must cheapen manufacture. I have failed to find any man whose opinions on any subject are worth hearing who is willing to say that it is not a good thing to lessen the cost of producing any necessary of life.

TRUSTS INCREASE PRICES.

But Senator HANNA has nothing to say about the fact that the trusts have become so powerful, so ruthless, that, while the cost of manufacture is growing less, the price to the consumer is increasing.

The startling rise in the prices of articles manufactured by trusts completely unmasks the gigantic industrial and commercial conspiracy which is bleeding the whole country. No man is safe now. No man dares to interfere with the pillage. Within one year the trusts have nearly doubled in power and in perfection of organization. Yet prices in retail stores everywhere are going up and up. If you are not already aware of this, ask your wife, your housekeeper, your butcher, your grocer. This is the most overwhelming thing on the whole social, political, or economic landscape. This it is that is driving tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of new recruits to the Democratic party. Monopoly stalks grimly on the ashes of competition.

The business community is losing its independence; the trusts, with a newly awakened realization of power, are raising the prices of everything they manufacture; in small towns and villages clerks are taking the place of proprietors.

ADMINISTRATION SYMPATHETICALLY INACTIVE.

President McKinley and Attorney-General Griggs are sympathetically inactive. They know that the Supreme Court of the United States has declared in the most positive and unmistakable language that the anti-trust law passed by Congress is constitutional, and that it is sufficient to reach the criminal nature of the trust conspiracy. The President and the Attorney-General know that at the present time there is being organized the most extensive and irresistible combination of railroad transportation, hand in hand with the other trusts, and that the nation is becoming weak and bloodless under the burden. But they also know that Mr. HANNA expects to get $25,000,000 from the trusts, to be used in keeping the Administration in power. The Attorney-General refuses the enforce the anti-trust law, and the President will not compel him to do it.

COUNTRY ROUSED TO ITS PERIL.

The result of my investigation in New York and the Middle West during the past few weeks is a firm conviction that for the first time the country is aroused to the real peril to a republican form of government arising from the trust system, which Mr. HANNA says is a good thing.

This is the supreme Democratic issue. No leader and no combination of leaders can decrease its power or importance. It is changing votes every hour. There may be a difference of opinion regarding legislation on the subject, but every man I have met seems to understand that with a President and Cabinet free from the control of the trusts the country has a better chance to strike at the giant crimes of the trusts than is possible when the President and the Cabinet place the whole power of the Government behind the criminal combinations.—James Creelman in New York Journal.

Mr. Chairman, I now desire to submit a full and clear statement from the pen of Hon. John DeWitt Warner, published recently in the publication known as the Middle West, of Grand Rapids, Mich., in which some very interesting questions concerning the steel and wire monopoly are discussed. It is here shown the effect of this great trust upon the prices of wire and steel; how it more than doubled the prices in 1899; how the people of the United States are made to pay 88 per cent more for fencing wire than foreigners have to pay for the same wire.

LESSON IN TRUSTS—STEEL AND WIRE MONOPOLY MORE THAN DOUBLED PRICES IN '99—EXPORTS AT HALF PRICE—WIRE NAILS NOW FOUR TIMES AS HIGH AS IN 1896—ENGLAND GETS HALF HER NAILS OF US—MILLS CLOSED TO RESTRICT PRODUCTION—RESULTS OF PROTECTION.

The steel and wire trust is a monopoly combination born of and maintained by the tariff, the sole purpose of which, in this case at least, is to enable this great corporation to fleece American consumers, while at the same time exporting vast quantities of their products, and, after paying freights, selling them in foreign markets at little more than half the price extorted from American consumers. Grand Rapids citizens, many of them at least, are familiar with John DeWitt Warner, lately a Congressman from New York City, whose address here on the tariff question in 1892 was one of the most effective indictments of the protection robbery system ever drawn. Well, Mr. Warner has been looking up the steel and wire trust and has given the result in an exhaustive special article, the chief features of which are here printed:

CONFESSION OF A TRUST.

The demoralizing effects of the tariff on trusts, and the manner in which it enables these trusts to fleece consumers, is well illustrated by the testimony of John W. Gates, managing director of the American Steel and Wire Company, before the Industrial Commission, November 14, 1899. Without a blush he stated that prices of wire nails, etc., had been doubled; that he deprecated the necessity for such high prices; that they were due to the high prices of raw materials; that his company exported 700 tons of wire a day; that it furnished England with 60 per cent of her supply; that goods were sold lower to foreigners; that such prices were necessary "to hold outside trade;" that not infrequently new plants were shut up and dismantled; that this was done for "various reasons;" that five plants had been closed; that his company had a monopoly of the barbed wire business; that, therefore, higher prices were charged for these products; that his company was making big profits; that his company did not recognize labor unions as such; that subsidies should be paid to steamship lines and to corporations with $5,000,000 or more capital; that the Government should supervise all such corporations; that he went to Europe to form a world trust; that he proposed to increase prices $10 a ton if such a trust were formed; that the Germans contemplated a $20 increase; that the Germans wanted too big a share of business; that Germany's bounty system was excellent; that if it were applied here we should soon be doing 90 per cent of the iron and steel business of the world; that the protective tariff had had much to do with building up the industry; that the continuance of the policy was necessary to the future prosperity of the industry.

Can any sensible, fair-minded, and patriotic man take the statements and admissions of Mr. Gates and reach his conclusions as to the necessity for tariff duties or bounties? Is it not clear that he has received so much from the Government that he now thinks it owes him and his kind a living? Will any honest man think it fair for these manufacturers to sell their products at the highest possible notch to those who pay the tariff bounties and to bestow upon the untaxed foreigners the blessings of low prices—even "to hold outside trade?" Why not tax the foreigner a while and give home consumers a chance to get some of their tariff taxes back? Consider to what use the tariff has been put in the wire and nail industry by the millionaires whom it has produced.

EARLIER WIRE COMBINATIONS.

Going no farther back than in 1895 we find the Consolidated Steel and Wire Company, an Illinois corporation of 1892, with $4,000,000 capital, as the barbed-wire trust, with John W. Gates as manager. Various pooling agreements were formed in 1894, 1895, and 1896 between all of the barbed-wire manufacturers, but they were only temporarily successful in producing higher prices. The Export Barbed-Wire Association, composed of four principal exporters, was in force several years previous to 1895 and was partially revived in 1896. In September, October, and November, 1895, "prices were fixed by agreement," and were $2.85 per hundred pounds for barbed wire. The previous April the price was $1.90. The average prices for previous years were: 1894, $2.18; 1893, $2.55; 1892, $2.29; 1891, $2.72; 1890, $2.97. In December, 1895, the combination broke and prices fell to $2.

NAILS PREVIOUS TO 1898.

Early in 1895 wire nails were selling at a "base" price of 75 to 80 cents a keg in Pittsburg. In May two associations, one for cut and one for wire nails, got together and put this price up to $1.20. These associations pooled and the wire-nail people "contributed financially to enable the Cut Nail Association to keep control of the market, especially in the payment of subsidies to keep idle the large number of nail machines," as the Iron Age of December 3, 1896, tells us. The associations regulated the amount of nails offered for sale each month and the price at which they should be sold. "Understandings were had with Canadian manufacturers. Nail-machine makers were subsidized not to sell to those outside the associations. Jobbers who did not cut prices were given rebates. Prices were advanced almost steadily for one year. By May, 1896, wire nails were selling at $2.70 in Chicago and $2.55 in Pittsburg. The pool held together until December, 1896, when prices broke more than 1 cent per pound, and in July, 1897, were down to $1.35 per keg.

HOME TWICE EXPORT PRICES.

On December 3, 1896, the Iron Age said high prices of cut and wire nails had reduced consumption from over 9,000,000 kegs in 1891 and 1892 to less than 8,000,000 in 1895 and in 1896 to probably "far less than in 1895, notwithstanding the fact that a large amount of nails had been exported into foreign countries at less than half the price that the American public paid for their nails." In November, 1896, the price to foreigners was $1.30, while the price to Americans was $2.70. At least one dealer bought a large quantity of nails at export prices and after shipping them to Amsterdam and back and paying freight and other charges both ways made a handsome profit while underselling the trust in its own market. He, however, was boycotted by the trust and was thereafter unable to buy nails at any price. The exports for the fiscal year 1896 were 28,762,187 pounds.

TRUST FORMED IN 1898.

Agreements were broken and patched up in 1897 and 1898. In April, 1898, the American Steel and Wire Company of Illinois was formed with $24,000,000 capital. It contained 14 mills, 7 of which constituted the Consolidated Steel and Wire Company, formed in 1892 with $4,000,000 capital. This trust was not large enough to fully regulate production and prices. It was swallowed up by the new American Steel and Wire Company, a New Jersey corporation formed January 13, 1899, with $90,000,000 capital, $40,000,000 of which is 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock. This trust includes practically all of the wire, wire-rod, and wire-nail mills of this country. The value of the 26 plants and other property absorbed is about $20,000,000, which, even admitting the $18,000,000 other capital claimed, would leave over $50,000,000 of water. It owns its own sources of supply. Its monopoly conditions and advantages were thus set forth in March, 1899, by its president, John Lambert:

"It will not be necessary to make any further purchases, for the reason that we have all the producing capacity that we need. It has been our policy to so fortify ourselves that we are practically independent, or, if you please, to put ourselves in a position to take the ore from our own mines, transport it in our own vessels, convert it into pig iron in our own furnaces, roll it into steel billets in our own steel mills, roll it into iron rods in our own rod mills, and finish it in our own mills into plain and barbed wire and all the different kinds of wire used, not only in the United States, but all other countries where wire is used. In this way we have succeeded, as we own one of the best ore mines in the Mesaba range. We have our own coke mines and coke furnaces; so that you will see that we start at the bottom and have all the profits that there are from ore to finished material. Our business is entirely satisfactory and the company is doing very well."

The trust has a monopoly of the drawn and barbed wire business, but has considerable competition in woven fence wire. It also does a large business in copper wire and copper electrical goods and in fencing, poultry netting, baling wire, and bale ties. The actual output in 1898 of all the plants now in the trust was:

Wire rods	tons	826,840
Drawn wire	do	1,130,124
Barbed wire	do	275,918
Wire nails	kegs	6,551,737
Woven-wire fencing	miles	10,050

EFFECT ON PRICES.

The effect of this trust upon prices has been almost marvelous. The following tables of average monthly New York and Chicago "base" prices are from the Iron Age of January 4, 1900. The first gives the base prices of wire nails:

Month.	1899.	1898.	1896.	1895.
January	$1.59	$1.55	$2.49	$0.95
February	1.73	1.57	2.42	.95
March	2.00	1.55	2.57	1.00
April	2.25	1.47	2.55	.95
May	2.35	1.45	2.70	1.10
June	2.00	1.43	2.70	1.50
July	2.70	1.36	2.70	1.95
August	2.80	1.36	2.70	2.20
September	3.10	1.45	2.70	2.40
October	3.20	1.47	2.70	2.40
November	3.28	1.40	2.70	2.42
December	3.53	1.37	1.60	2.42
Average	2.60	1.45	2.54	1.68

(The column of 1897 prices is omitted for lack of space. But when the old nail pool broke in December, 1896, to $1.60 they kept falling till they reached $1.35 for July, the average for the year being $1.46. It is worth noting, too, that the base price—which is the rate for "spikes"—is now $3.75, instead of $3.53, as given by the foregoing table for December.) In the table following, giving the "base" prices of barbed wire, the 1897 column is omitted for the same reason. In this case the price kept falling until it averaged $1.65 for August, 1897, the average for the year being $1.80:

Month.	1899.	1898.	1896.	1895.
January	$2.05	$1.90	$2.02	$1.90
February	2.25	1.90	1.97	1.90
March	2.62	1.90	1.95	1.95
April	2.80	1.87	2.05	1.90
May	2.95	1.80	2.15	1.95
June	3.20	1.80	2.00	2.10
July	3.30	1.80	2.00	2.15
August	3.40	1.80	1.90	5.55
September	3.67	1.80	1.85	2.85
October	3.77	1.82	1.85	2.85
November	3.88	1.82	1.85	2.85
December	4.13	1.82	1.95	2.00
Average	3.17	1.85	1.96	2.25

It should be noticed that these are the base prices of wire nails in carload lots. Because of "extras," due to sizes, the average price per keg is fully 60 cents more than those quoted above. Of course the prices of small lots are still higher, and the retail prices, especially in remote districts, very much higher. The base price is fixed at Pittsburg, and freights are added to all points of delivery. The Pittsburg price is now 33 cents lower than Chicago and New York prices, which are 5 cents below St. Louis prices.

ENORMOUS TRUST PROFITS.

In April one of the directors estimated the yearly net earnings at $12,000,000. The statement of the earnings to June 30, 1899, showed a net profit of $4,802,000 for the first six months. Judging from the prices of wire and wire nails, the profits for the second six months should be at least $8,000,000, the increase in prices being nearly all profit, because the trust owns its own mines and furnaces, and the actual cost of making iron, steel, and wire is not much greater than when prices were less than half present prices. While it is unlikely that the present excessive profits will continue for many months, it is difficult to see how the profits from July, 1899, to July, 1900, can fall below $15,000,000.

It may be noted that when this trust was first formed we heard a great deal about the economic advantages and savings of great combinations. Thus Garrit H. Ten Broek, of St. Louis, counsel for the company, announced that "the only effect on the market that I can see will be a possible slight lowering of prices, because of the economy, and also a steadiness of prices for the future." There are still numerous pro-trust theorists prating about the blessings of trusts, as if nearly all of the trusts had not, in practice, actually demonstrated that they are, under present conditions, all-round curses.

If the wire trust lowers prices it will do so only because of the removal or threatened removal of tariff duties or because prices are too high to yield maximum profits. The Iron Age of November 30, 1899, contains six columns of interviews with hardware men in twenty-five States on "the effect of high prices on the demand for goods." Many dealers say they expect to sell 25 or 30 per cent less goods in 1900 because of advanced prices. Many farmers are refusing to build fences with wire at high prices. A Maryland farmer said: "The price of wire is prohibitive; I shall go home and put the hands to work and make rail fences." The farmers are deferring the building of houses because of the increased prices of lumber, nails, glass, etc.

LOW EXPORT PRICES.

Mr. Gates neglected to tell the Industrial Commission how much export prices were below home market prices. It will make these farmers feel happy to know that this same trust which charges them at a "basis" of $3.53 per keg for nails (about $4 to $4.50 at retail for spikes) exports these nails and sells them to Europeans at $2.14 "basis" per keg, and that it exported about 70,000,000 pounds in 1899 to all parts of the earth. The exports for the fiscal years 1893 to 1899 of wire and wire nails were as follows in pounds:

Year.	Nails.	Wire.
	Pounds.	Pounds.
1893	2,300,501	42,796,043
1894	3,233,776	44,778,268
1895	4,367,267	61,093,717
1896	8,031,927	70,928,706
1897	2,941,714	107,729,155
1898	22,894,099	137,054,094
1899	51,233,212	215,194,475

Exports are increasing rapidly and were 50 per cent greater than ever before during the last six months of 1899. The total exports of wire for the first eleven months of 1899 were 241,922,967 pounds; of wire nails, 62,996,401 pounds. These tremendous exports and the prices at which they are made indicate that there is no need of protection and subsidies at home, except for the officers of the trust, who are trying to capture "90 per cent of the world's trade." Will the farmers who are building rail fences because barbed wire is too expensive feel like voting to continue a tariff system which compels them to pay 88 per cent more for fencing wire than foreigners have to pay for the same wire? Large quantities of barbed wire were exported from New York in December, 1899, at $2.20 per hundred, although the home price at the end of the month was $4.10.

JOHN DE WITT WARNER.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit for the benefit of this House and for the country some facts in relation to the great salt trust.

From this it will be seen that this trust has fattened and thrived because of the fact that it has the benefit of the high protection laws. This, also, Mr. Chairman, is evidence of the fact that the position of the Democratic party as to how to regulate the trusts is a correct one—that is, by putting on the free list goods and products of the kind and character manufactured by these trusts.

This article is prepared by Mr. Byron W. Holt, and you only have to read it to become convinced that he is familiar with his subject and that this trust is a great detriment to the American people.

STORY OF THE GREAT SALT TRUST—HAS RAISED PRICES 80 PER CENT SINCE 1897—HOW REPUBLICANS MANAGED THE BUSINESS FOR THIS PET.

Salt was on the free list of the Wilson bill, in force from August 28, 1894, to July 24, 1897. Under the McKinley and Dingley bills the duty on salt in bags or barrels was 12 cents and in bulk 8 cents per 100 pounds. These duties vary from 30 to 100 per cent and will average about 50 per cent.

Before salt was put on the free list the manufacturers appeared at Washington, declaring that such a proceeding would practically ruin the business. Thus, Mr. Thomas Molloy, secretary of the Onondaga Coarse Salt Association, told the Senate Committee on Finance that "when salt shall be admitted free * * * our even now struggling industry shall be paralyzed or destroyed in an unequal competition with the cheaper product of foreign cheaper labor. We will then soon be made to pay to the English Salt Union the price which it exacts elsewhere."

Contrary to predictions, we both produced and consumed more salt from 1895 than ever before, as is shown by the following table of production and imports:

Consumption of salt in United States (in barrels of 280 pounds each).

Year.	Domestic production.	Net imports.	Total consumption.
1890	8,876,991	1,820,427	10,697,418
1891	9,987,945	1,678,159	11,666,104
1892	11,698,890	1,614,816	13,313,706
1893	11,897,208	1,224,025	13,121,233
1894	12,968,417	1,511,792	14,480,209
1895	13,669,649	1,760,115	15,629,764
1896	13,850,726	1,795,223	15,645,949
1897	15,973,302	1,438,838	17,412,040
1898	17,612,634	1,307,972	18,920,606

PRICES AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The average net factory price for all kinds of salt (about one-half of which is common fine salt), according to the United States Geological Survey, was 36½ cents per barrel in 1894, 32 cents in 1895, 29.2 cents in 1896, 30.8 cents in 1897, and 35.3 cents in 1898. The "net" price means the price of the salt alone; the cost of the barrel adds about 20 cents—though much coarse salt is not sold in barrels.

The present price of "factory-filled" dairy salt at works in Michigan is 55 cents as against 35 cents, or less, in 1896. The Chicago price is now 75 cents. The New York City price of same grade salt from western New York is $1.40 as against $1 to $1.10 in 1896 and 1897. Prices of salt in many Middle and Western States are now nearly double those of 1896.

In 1897 many manufacturers asked to have the McKinley duty on salt replaced. Over 40 pages of the Tariff Hearings of 1897 are occupied by the statements of the manufacturers who wanted duties and of the importers, meat packers, etc., who wanted free salt. The manufacturers in 1894 stated that the repeal of the duty would not make salt cheaper, and in 1897 that the replacement of the McKinley duty would "not perceptibly" add to the cost of salt. Yet for some indefinite and unexplained reason they wanted the duty and could not continue to live much longer without it. They got the duty and immediately began to fix prices and to form a trust, which has quite "perceptibly" advanced prices.

SALT ASSOCIATIONS AND TRUSTS.

The salt manufacturers have always had an affinity for selling agencies and price agreements. In 1866 the Michigan manufacturers were uniting. The Michigan Salt Association began in 1876. It takes the product of all members and sells it, thus avoiding much competition. It has been renewed every five years since 1876, and has generally controlled about 90 per cent of Michigan's product, which is one-third of our total product. Since 1890 New York has produced more salt than Michigan, and the two States now produce 70 per cent of our product.

Other similar selling agencies were in operation in New York and Ohio, and each had alliances and agreements with the others. As, however, previous to 1898, but little was done to restrict production, the permanent effect upon prices was not great.

March 20, 1899, the National Salt Company, a New Jersey concern, was incorporated with $12,000,000 capital, $5,000,000 of which is 7 per cent preferred stock. It immediately acquired the dozen or more manufactories in New York for which its predecessor, the National Salt Company of West Virginia, was the distributing agent. Those plants were said to manufacture 90 per cent of New York's product and to have made net profits in 1898 of "not less than $450,000." By October this company had purchased many of the best plants in Ohio, West Virginia, Michigan, and Kansas, had leased other plants for five-year periods, and had contracted for the output of other plants. Thus, in the Pomeroy, Ohio, district, the trust appears to have bought and closed one plant, closed three other plants which it had "dead rented" for five years, and contracted for the output of three more plants. In Michigan it has contracted for the product of the members of the Michigan Salt Association.

The prosecuting attorney for Meigs County and the attorney-general of Ohio are proceeding against this trust to test its power to own and close furnaces which have been running for thirty years.

The United States Salt Company, an Ohio corporation of 1890, appears to have been the local trust which prepared the way for the national company. Both of these organizations are said to be officered by Standard Oil people and to be, practically, adjuncts of the Standard Oil trust. The headquarters at New York are in the building of the Standard Oil Company, and Standard Oil attorneys in Ohio are defending the National Salt Company.

The National Salt Company now has a natural monopoly in many of the inland States and an artificial tariff monopoly in many of the coast States. It has only recently begun to limit production and to put up prices in the Middle and Western States. It will undoubtedly soon put up prices to what it considers the maximum-profit point. It is said to have had an "understanding" with the Salt Union, which controls much of Great Britain's product. It is difficult to verify this statement, although New York salt importers admit that there are "friendly" relations of some kind between these organizations.

Our imported salt comes principally from Great Britain, West Indies, and Italy. The cost of transportation from Liverpool averages about $1.60 per ton, or 30 cents per barrel. This, added to the duty, gives our manufacturers an advantage in our markets of about 20 cents per 100 pounds, or 50 cents per barrel. This advantage is less on the coast and greater inland. If our trust, as now seems probable, gets what is virtually a complete monopoly, there is no reason why it can not, by charging higher prices inland, collect the whole tariff tax on all its product. This would amount to $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year. It is probably collecting half this amount at present.

The only classes who have thus far avoided the trust are our fish packers and our exporters of meats. These enjoy the special privilege of getting their salt free and cheap. Is there any sound reason why others should be compelled to pay tribute to this trust?

BYRON W. HOLT.

Mr. Chairman, here is a suggestion from the Buffalo Evening Times that is worthy of much consideration. It tells of the origin, the evil, and the remedy for trusts. I most heartily commend it to our Republican friends on the other side of this Chamber:

THE TRUSTS—ORIGIN OF THE EVIL AND THE REMEDY.

The old rhyme runs:

"For every evil under the sun
There's a remedy or there's none;
If there is one, try and find it;
If there isn't, never mind it."

It is almost universally conceded that modern monopolistic industrial combinations are a public evil and a menace to society. If they are an evil, How is the evil to be overcome? is the sensible and practical question. Some say there is no remedy, others propose remedies that would be worse than the evil. There are those who seem to become hysterical the moment they would discuss the trust problem. Questions in economics can be best studied by the application of approved economic teachings. Flippant writers and orators lacking in information scoff at the arguments of scholarship against the trusts as "theoretical," just as they did at the arguments against a protective tariff—the father, mother, and great grand parent of nearly every trust. Remove the high protective tariff and one of the sources of trust inspiration would thereby be removed.

If the evil is admitted, here is at least a partial remedy. There is no use indulging in academic disputation if practical ends are not to be sought. There are publicists and politicians who continually rant "Down with the trust," but who are persistent in their stubbornness to give no heed to the policies and practices which produce the trusts. They shout "Down with the trust" and then defend the policy of a Gage in placing the banking trust more firmly on the people's already overburdened shoulders. They cry "Down with the trust" and then contend that the Democratic party shall not declare as one of its cardinal principles a determination to regulate the meanest and most dangerous of all trusts, viz, the money trust. Here again is a cause and in this line may be found a remedy for the trust evil—a cause, an appreciating value—a remedy, a stable currency. The present money system leads inevitably to centralization—government and financial centralization and industrial combinations go hand in hand. The idea of it all is that the Republican policy of protection is a prolific breeder of trusts and the English policy of gold monometallism, adopted by modern Republicanism, is the stay of their youth and the sustenance of their years.

For more specific remedies Professor Hadley, president of Yale, proposes social ostracism of the beneficiaries and promoters of trusts. As incidental to some real solution of the problem, this will do very well; but it is only another of the very many propositions advanced by those who look at the results rather than at the causes of social ills. Trusts do not appear, like mushrooms, in a night. They are the outgrowth of long years of iniquitous economic teaching and of special privilege legislation. The time has passed to argue with those who deny that there is any evil and who assert that these colossal combinations are merely the result of the development of the laws of trade. The same was said of personal slavery that is now being said of this industrial serfdom; and it is just as idle for those who are convinced that the trusts are a menace to individual and civic life to seek to overcome this form of oppression without beginning with first causes as it was in slavery days to propose superficial, compromising policies.

Mr. Bryan and Mr. Cochran have agreed upon publicity. Mr. Bryan also suggests a national law confining the operation of every business combination to the State wherein it is incorporated, or State laws excluding corporations of one State from doing business in another State. This, with the application in legislation of old-fashioned Democratic principles—principles which are so old that they appear to be young—will go far to remedy the trust evil. This the Democratic party proposes to do. The Democratic party proposes to remedy the trust evil by the application of those principles of government which would make these ominous combinations impossible except when conducted by the State itself, the people being always the beneficiaries. It proposes to prevent all trusts, national and international, and to aid in this prevention to inaugurate the original and American policy of finance, the stability and equity of which was unquestioned for more than eighty years, and which has the indorsement and approval of the best statesmanship of the Republic from the days of Jefferson to the days of Blaine.

Mr. Chairman, I further submit some very important information concerning the prosperity of the trust business for the year 1899. This is a statement from the publication heretofore mentioned, of Grand Rapids, Mich. To every member of this House it will be quite evident that the writer knows a few Administration secrets.

Mr. Chairman, this shows also the great influence that the trusts are able to command and the power they exercise, and reads as follows:

NINE BILLIONS—AGGREGATE OF CAPITALIZATION OF AMERICAN TRUSTS—PROSPERITY CROP OF 1899—GREAT GROWTH IN NUMBERS, CAPITAL, AND INFLUENCE—POWERFUL ENOUGH TO DICTATE THE VERDICT IN THE EMBALMED-BEEF CASE AND SAVE EAGAN.

The trusts marched with giant strides in 1899. They recruited to their army hundreds of industries, great and small. They increased their capital by billions of dollars. They dictated the decisions of official bodies, as in the Army beef investigation. They faced the people at the polls, not of their choice, to be sure; yet, in spite of the raising of this political factor in the Ohio campaign, that State was carried by the Republicans. It is admitted that they were treated with deference in the report of the United States Industrial Commission which has been inquiring into their methods and tendencies.

Lastly, the leader of the trust movement, the Standard Oil "crowd," has appeared in the open as a money trust. By control of stupendous sums of its own and others' money the Rockefeller clique brought on a Wall street panic in the next to the last week of 1899, which demonstrated its power to lower or raise the prices of stocks and the ruling rate of interest in the exchanges and money markets of the world.

Two events of the year, on the other hand, have caused apprehension to the men most interested in the trusts. One, the most recent, was the decision by the Supreme Court of the United States on December 4, in the celebrated Addystone Pipe case, brought under the Sherman anti-trust law. That statute had been violated by the six corporations in the iron-pipe business, which had divided territory among themselves and had agreed upon prices.

The other warning is the twice-repeated fall in the prices of industrial securities on the stock exchange. In the July slump "industrials" shrank $101,255,618 in value; in December they fell $400,000,000.

New Jersey, the great breeding ground of the trusts, reported at the close of the fiscal year in November that it had chartered 2,000 corporations with an aggregate authorized capital of $4,403,400,000. No such figures as these had ever startled observers of the times.

Of these the greatest were the Federal Steel Company, with $200,000,000 of capital; the Distilling Company of America, $125,000,000; the newly formed Standard Oil Company, $110,000,000; the American Steel and Wire Company, $90,000,000; the American Bicycle Company and the National Tube Company, $80,000,000 each; the Continental Tobacco Company and the Amalgamated Copper Company, $75,000,000 each; the American Hide and Leather Company and the United States Worsted Company, $65,000,000 each; the American Ice Company, $60,000,000; Republic Iron and Steel Company, $55,000,000; American Foundry Company, $50,000,000; National Steel Company, $50,000,000; Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company and American Tin Plate Company, $50,000,000 each.

Below these figures there were 11 corporations with $30,000,000 or more; 13 with $25,000,000 or more; 11 at $20,000,000; 33 with $10,000,000 or more.

At the end of February, 1899, the total capitalization of 353 trusts was $5,832,882,842. An estimate of the additions in 1899 places the total capitalization of trusts now in existence at about $9,000,000,000.

Delaware has begun to see the advantage to a State in fostering these combinations. Under a new law offering superior advantages to companies with large capital, the Blue Hen State has hatched $416,850,000 of charters since March. New Jersey's revenue from a year's incorporations was $758,000.

A recent estimate shows that 3,547,000 men earn their living in the employ of trusts.

The year's most striking instance of a single trust's power with the Government was the whitewashing of the beef trust. General Miles charged against the Commissary Department that it had fed unfit beef to the soldiers in the Cuban and Porto Rico campaigns. The "fresh" beef was "embalmed," he declared, and the canned beef was nauseous and unwholesome. President McKinley appointed the Wade commission to investigate the charges. The Packers' Combination supplied the beef.

The commission brought in a verdict practically of "guilty, but no conviction." Its report found that improper food "enervated" the troops and unfitted them for the advance upon Siboney and Santiago; that their "food supply was insufficient and irregular;" that Commissary-General Eagan had bought 7,000,000 pounds of canned beef for the campaign, which act it describes as an "unwarranted and reckless" purchase of "food that was practically unknown and untried." This the report pronounced "a colossal error, for which there is no palliation."

This fault was placed wholly upon General Eagan, and although most of the commanding officers testified to the fact that the beef itself was bad, no word against the trust or against the Secretary of War, who practically dictated the purchases, was used in the report.

The commission further decided that "the interests of the service will be best subserved if further proceedings are not taken."

General Eagan, not for his "colossal error," but for violent language in reference to General Miles, was sentenced by court-martial to dismissal from the Army. The President modified this to suspension—with full pay.

The Industrial Commission, in an investigation undertaken because of a pressing demand for Government action, held leisurely sessions through the year. Important men in the leading trusts have made some startling admissions before it. Henry O. Havemeyer, of the sugar trust, said:

'It would be beneficial to the public to have under Government supervision all corporations dealing in things essential to the comfort of mankind. It is the Government through its tariff law—the mother of trusts—which plunders the public. The trusts are merely the machinery."

Daniel G. Reed, president of the American Tin Plate Company, said: "The tin plate trust has had to double the price of its product within the year. A fee of $10,000,000 was paid to Judge Moore, of Chicago, for organizing this company."

The commission discovered that the American Tin Plate Company, controlling the product in that industry; the National Steel Company, and the National Steel Hoop Company were practically one organization, with a capital of $150,000,000.

Railroad men said that the anti-trust law and the interstate-commerce act were violated by the railroads themselves, and that these laws should be amended to permit the railroads to form a pool.

P. E. Dowe, of the Commercial Travelers' League, showed that leading trusts had got rid, through destruction of competition, of 6,000 "drummers," while they had raised prices of standard articles of necessity by from 10 per cent for paper to 100 per cent for iron pipe.

This and other testimony was damaging, but the trusts had prepared for this. At a meeting at the Hoffman House early in the year leading spirits in the greatest corporations in the country were represented and a line of policy was agreed upon. What pressure this coalition was able to bring to bear at Washington is not discovered, but advance suggestions from the commission indicate that its findings will not be disagreeable to the combinations of capital under investigation.

Mr. Chairman, I will now submit some evidence from the North American, a publication of Philadelphia, and a Republican paper, to show how the trusts work. It will be seen that this editor does not agree with Senator HANNA, the chairman of the Republican National Committee, in this, that the trusts are a good thing. Here is the testimony of the North American on this great question:

HOW THE TRUSTS WORK.

We are constantly being assured that trusts tend directly to help the whole people by lowering prices. The Standard Oil Company, which has lately been under investigation in Washington, pleads injured innocence and strives to show that the ugly things that have been testified against it are untrue. All the same, however, there was another rise in the price of coal oil a few days ago, and for no other apparent reason than that the Standard, having things all its own way, can raise its prices without hindrance. Inasmuch as this is the third or fourth increase in prices within a year, it is evident that the Standard managers understand that the proper office of a trust is to squeeze the people in order to pay 33 per cent dividends.

A year ago, after the window-glass trust got into working order, the price of glass went up 75 per cent. There was no pretense that the price of sand or other raw materials had advanced, or that the workmen had demanded a 75 per cent increase in their wages. The trust, without saying anything, simply put up the price, and that was all there was to it; but it so happened that there were a number of concerns making window glass that had not been taken into the trust, and as this opposition became considerably augmented by the formation of a large cooperative company of workingmen, there was difficulty in maintaining trust prices, and something had to be done. This something has just been announced, and it is a sweeping reduction in prices, amounting to something like 50 per cent. It is hoped by this move to crowd out the cooperative and individual concerns, and if a 50 per cent reduction will not do it, then doubtless a 75 or 100 per cent decline will. The trust, having the enormous gains of the last twelvemonth in its treasury, and being well capitalized, can afford to do business for nothing for a few months, or long enough to starve out and break up those who are opposing its monopoly of high prices.

These are two instances of how the trust works to help the people, and the plan is so simple that anybody can understand it. It is just to have a sliding scale of prices—a slide down till the opposition is pushed to the wall, and then a slide up to recoup by robbing the people. Yet there are many men in public as well as in private life who would assure us that the trust is all right, and that it is a good friend of the people, notwithstanding the fact that the the farmer has to pay three times as much for a shovel as he did a year ago, or that the man who needs a new roof on his house finds that the wire-nail trust has helped him to the extent of an advance of 150 per cent in the price of nails. Trust prices are always high prices when the trust can get a monopoly.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to be able to offer the evidence of the Sons of Husbandry in opposition to the great monopolies that are causing so much evil and distress throughout the country. Here is what the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry say, as given by the Gazette, of Terre Haute, Ind., on the all-absorbing subject of trusts:

[The Gazette, Terre Haute, Ind., Thursday, November 23.]

THE NATIONAL GRANGE ON TRUSTS—RESOLUTIONS PASSED AFTER A LONG DISCUSSION WEDNESDAY.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO, November 23, 1899.

The National Grange, which has been in session in this city during the past week, will adjourn sine die to-day. Important in to-day's proceedings were the reports of the committee on "trusts," and the merchant marine committee's report was as follows:

"The National Grange express their approval of the address of our worthy master, Aaron Jones, regarding trusts, and demand the enactment by Congress of such laws as will protect the people against all combinations of men and capital inimical to public policy.

"We are not opposed to associations of interests which merely lessen the cost of production, but we are decidedly opposed to the misuse of the power which large combinations of capital give for the purpose of destroying competition, controlling production, and arbitrarily dictating prices of commodities. Associations opposed to legislation are one thing; combination as opposed to isolation is another. We are opposed to all corporations or trusts which control the source of supply and, like the Standard Oil Company, reach out their arms and embrace all competition. Special favors are granted them by railroads, thus enabling them to undersell and force to the wall the smaller dealers who might otherwise compete with them. We encourage the investment of capital in every branch of legitimate industry and demand fair play. The construction of the Erie Canal benefited the farmer. Competition has reduced the price of transportation in New York 80 per cent during the past twenty-five years. The expansion of our territory and commerce tends to increase the number of capitalized associations. The greed and selfishness which too often actuate men has become an element of danger and must be controlled. It must be made impossible for so-called trusts to accumulate millions by selling watered stock without adding to the wealth of the country.

Therefore we recommend:

1. Official inspection of all corporations, as in the case of national banks. No corporation should be tolerated whose books can not bear such inspection.
2. Prohibition of all rebates or discriminations by public carriers.
3. Taxation of all capital stock.
4. All capital stock should be paid up in full.
5. Severe penalties for violation of law (a) by forfeiture of charter, fine, and imprisonment; (b) by impeachment, fine, imprisonment, or all public officials whose duty it may be to enforce the law and who fail to perform that duty.

Suggestions: We would advise petitions to Congress to pass remedial legislation along the lines above suggested.

We ask the members of our body to secure State legislation not in conflict with national laws, but suited to the peculiar requirements of their respective States. One of the greatest evidences of trusts is their power to control elections and corrupt officials. This can be remedied by educating the people. Meanwhile, we must control by the strong arm of authority.

One principle worthy of consideration has been thus stated. Whenever monopolies are based upon the acquisition of nearly the entire supply of national treasures of any sort, or upon exclusive ownership of raw material of any kind, Government ownership of the source of supply is called for. The National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry pledges its best efforts for the suppression of such dangerous associations, and we invite the earnest cooperation of every liberty-loving citizen of the Republic.

The merchant-marine resolution was taken up, but after considerable discussion it was referred to a committee, with instructions to draft a subresolution, which in substance was as follows:

"That we most heartily desire the upbuilding of our merchant marine, but we are emphatically opposed to the principle of subsidy and believe the desired results can and will be accomplished without resorting thereto."

Mr. Chairman, the commercial travelers are united in denouncing monopolies. Here is what Mr. P. E. Dowe, president of the Commercial Travelers' National League, says upon this question of trusts. It is worthy of thoughtful consideration:

[From the Philadelphia North American.]

ANTI-TRUST IS THEIR SLOGAN—COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS ARE UNITED IN DENOUNCING MONOPOLIES—NO GREEN GOODS AGAIN—PRESIDENT P. E. DOWE SAYS HIS COMRADES HAVE BEEN DECEIVED ONCE TOO OFTEN—THEY ARE A MIGHTY POWER, AND WILL TAKE CARE THAT THOSE TO WHOM THEY INTRUST THEIR VOTES ARE WORTHY OF THEM.

"Three hundred and fifty thousand traveling men in the United States are ready to talk anti-trust at the next Presidential election. Each of these men can easily talk to 20 voters every day. Anti-monopoly, in short, can be drummed into the ears of 4,500,000 voters during each twenty-four hours preceding the November day upon which the vote will be cast."

The above statement was made by P. E. Dowe, of New York, president of the Commercial Travelers' National League and an officer of the American Anti-Trust League.

Mr. Dowe is in this city on a brief business trip. He is one of the foremost anti-trust men in the country. Continuing, Mr. Dowe said:

"I am glad that the North American is willing to give the trust question a fair discussion, but would like to reply to 'Mr. Eclectic' in your paper this morning.

"Commercial travelers do not desire to be objects of charity. They are opposed to trusts from policy and principle. They consider them detrimental and demoralizing, un-American and unhealthy. Vast commercial conspiracies for purely speculative purposes, composed in the aggregate of over seven parts water, their purpose is to limit output, control products, advance prices, and subjugate the people by the degradation of labor.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR ALL.

"'Mr. Eclectic' has fallen into the fallacious argument which has been suggested by henchmen in the service of the trust, using the weapons of impractical and theoretical writers, advancing the proposition that commercial travelers should have no right to complain because of assumed improvement in business methods for economy's sake, and calling attention to improved machinery in the past having affected other classes. All writers advancing this fallacy do so either with the thorough knowledge that the proposition is an untenable one or shows an ignorance of the true situation.

"Commercial travelers represent the most intelligent labor in the country, and there is only one bar to their being the employing class—lack of capital. In all instances where machinery has saved labor it has been physical and not intellectual labor. The only machine that is applicable in the argument is the machine of wild-cat speculation, the machinations of stock-jobbing promoters, underwriters and speculators, the gamblers in watered stocks.

FALSE ECONOMY.

"These men who, under the misguise of scientific economy applied to business methods, attempt to foist on the people so-called industrial stock, composed of over seven parts water.

PRINTING PRESCRIBED.

"A machine which is specifically applicable to the case is the improved printing-press, which grinds out trust certificates that represent the combines that squeeze the people by advancing prices, by putting the screws to labor—intellectual and manual—and by filching the money of widows, orphans, and small speculators generally for stock which has an intrinsic value of only one-eighth.

"Leaders among the traveling fraternity have urged time and again the appointment of commercial travelers or men of business experience in the consular department of the Government as a means of increasing its efficiency. I read this morning that the President has under serious consideration the establishment of a department of industry and commerce, to be represented in the Cabinet.

"Commercial travelers' associations have urged this for years, and in Nashville two years ago was held a conference of presidents of various commercial travelers' associations to urge that steps be taken along those lines. No consideration has been given our request either for the appointment of consuls or the establishment of the department of commerce and industry. Yet the Administration favorably considered recommendations along that line from other sources.

HOW THEY WERE CHEATED.

"Prior to the last Presidential election nothing was too good for the commercial traveler, and he was lauded by Republican managers in the highest terms, but he had delivered the goods and payment was protested, and, although I was a Republican in all previous elections, I consider the commercial travelers can expect nothing from the Republican Administration.

"I have here a press report in which MARK HANNA says: 'The trusts are not by any means an objectionable combination.' As straws show from where the winds blow, I am of the opinion that any anti-trust plank in the Republican platform will be no better than a farce comedy. The willingness of trust officials and trust magnates to supply campaign funds is sufficient evidence of that, were not MARK HANNA'S statement already in print.

"The Republican Congress may attempt to take the matter from politics by passing some law for the purpose of pulling wool over the eyes of the public, which, in the hands of indifferent officials, would be found as inadequate as the Sherman anti-trust law and the Donnelly measure in New York.

"I have concluded, after efforts to secure action by public officials under the laws of different States, that absolutely nothing can be expected from the Republican officials to cope with the situation.

"The commercial travelers have been sold green goods once, but are not likely to be caught by the same game a second time."

Mr. Chairman, I desire in this connection to submit a list of commodities advanced in price, furnished by Mr. Percy E. Dowe, under oath, which fully explains itself. Here will be found the increases in price brought about by the operations of the monopolies to the great injury of the masses.

A PARTIAL LIST OF COMMODITIES ADVANCED IN PRICE.

During the last week of August the American Anti-Trust League had representatives call upon 500 manufacturers and dealers in New York City to obtain information as to advances in prices, both of trust goods and of the commodities higher in price owing to the increased cost of materials used in production (directly or indirectly affected by trusts).

The agents turned in reports made in writing at the time of each interview, and many of them signed by the party giving the information.

No commodity was discovered as having been decreased in price. The following is the list in alphabetical order:

Agate ware or enameled ware	50 p. ct.
Almonds	100 p. ct.
Angles, iron	45 p. ct.
Builders' hardware, since June	35 to 65 p. ct.
Beds, iron	50 to 65 p. ct.
Beds, brass	10 to 20 p. ct.
Buttons, bone and ivory	20 p. ct.
Buttons, metal	33⅓ p. ct.
Brass castings, within two months	87½ p. ct.
Barbed wire	87½ p. ct.
Beams, iron	30 p. ct.
Beef	25 p. ct.
Beef tongue, smoked	3 c. a lb.
Beef, corned and boiled	100 to 150 p. ct.
Bolts	15 p. ct.
Building papers, within two months	10 p. ct.
Bags and trunks, on account of advance of stock	40 to 50 c. a doz.
Brooms, within six months	30 p. ct.
Brushes, whitewash	50 p. ct.
Bright-wire goods	33⅓ p. ct.
Belting, rubber, within year	75 to 80 p. ct.
Brass wire	3 c. a lb.
Corned beef (delicatessen)
Canned goods, general advance.
Canned salmon	15 p. ct.
Canned lobster	15 p. ct.
Copper wire	100 p. ct.
Copper and brass hollow ware	About 40 p. ct.
Copper, since August 31, 1898	50 p. ct.
Crackers	1 to 1½ c.
Condensed milk, Magnolia brand	25 c. a case.
Cotton linings	12½ to 15 p. ct.
Cement, Rosendale	15 p. ct.
Carpets	16 to 20 p. ct.
Combs, rubber	About 25 p. ct.
Chains	2½c. a lb.
Chairs, ordinary	25 to 33⅓ p. ct.
Chairs, wood-seat	33⅓ p. ct.
Edge tools	5 to 15 p. ct.
Envelopes—Notice out for a further advance, previous prices canceled, new quotations not given, advance to date	40 p. ct.
Extension tables	Fully 30 p. ct.
Flannels	10 p. ct. or more.
Files	25 p. ct.
Felt roofing	30 to 33⅓ p. ct.
Gloves (gents')	15 to 20 p. ct.
Galvanized ware	About 40 p. ct.
Glassware	20 p. ct.
Glass, window, double, since May	50 p. ct.
Glass, window, single, since May	40 p. ct.
Glass, plate	35 p. ct.
Hats, felt	7½ to 10 p. ct.
Hats, wool	7½ to 12½ p. ct.
Ham (delicatessen)	3c. a lb.
Hardware, since June	45 p. ct.
Iron, wrought	100 p. ct.
Iron (for horseshoes)	About 40 p. ct.
Iron sash weights, within two weeks	33⅓ p. ct.
Iron pipe, wrought, nearly doubled, recent advances aggregate	62½ p. ct.
Iron, galvanized (last advance June 11), advance	62½ p. ct.
Iron, structural	87½ to 100 p. ct.
Iron beams	87½ p. ct.
Iron angles	100 p. ct.
Iron beds	35 to 65 p. ct.
Iron, pig, foundry, since August 31, 1898	100 p. ct.
Iron, pig, Bessemer, since August 31, 1898	125 p. ct.
Iron, pig, charcoal, since August 31, 1898. Chicago	100 p. ct.
Iron, old material	75 to 100 p. ct.
Iron bar, refined	80 p. ct.
Iron tank plates	125 to 130 p. ct.
Knit underwear	7 to 10 p. ct.
Knit wool	$1 to $1.50 a doz.
Linings, cotton	12½ to 15 p. ct.
Linseed oil, within three weeks	20 p. ct.
Lead	14 p. ct.
Lumber (except oak)	20 to 25 p. ct.
Lumber, oak	33⅓ p. ct.
Linoleum, domestic	12½ to 20 p. ct.
Lead pencils, cheap grades	10 to 15 p. ct.
Lanterns, June 1, advance	25 p. ct.
Muslins	About 5 p. ct.
Medicines, patent	5 p. ct.
Notions, advance is general throughout the line, averaging	5 p. ct.
Nails, cut, within twelve months	115 p. ct.
Furniture, July advance, average	25 p. ct.
Flour, within three weeks	30 c. a bbl.
Nails, wire, within twelve months	92 p. ct.
Pails, wood	50 p. ct.
Pulley blocks, wood	10 p. ct.
Photo paper (prepared) nearly	110 p. ct.
Plumbers' supplies	30 to 60 p. ct.
Piano supplies	10 to 33⅓ p. ct.
Pins	Over 25 p. ct.
Poultry netting	About 25 p. ct.
Paper, book and writing. Notice of further advance, compelling independent envelope makers to withdraw quotations. Advance to date	20 p. ct.
Rubber goods—everything in rubber greatly advanced.
Rubber belting, within year	33⅓ p. ct.
Refrigerators (ordinary) advanced	$1 to $1.25 each.
Ribbons	5 to 10 p. ct.
Ranges	20 to 33⅓ p. ct.
Rope, since January	33 p. ct.
Spelter	20 p. ct.
Shoes, advances owing to the hide and leather trusts, in all grades	10 to 20 p. ct.
Shoes, Ray State, for workmen, advanced	15 c. a pair.
Shoes, cheap grades, advanced	20 to 50 c. a pair.
Soaps, common	25 c. a box.
Spool cotton	from 8 to 25 p. ct.
Spool cotton, Willington American Thread Company (And an agreement to forfeit a semiannual bonus of 10 per cent if prices are cut.)	1½ c. a doz., or 8 p. ct.
Silk, sewing	About 20 p. ct.
Steel (for horseshoes), within two years, over	100 p. ct.
Salt, coarse, for the grocery trade	10 to 15 p. ct.
Salt, fine, for the grocery trade	10 p. ct.
Price to outsiders, $1.10; old price, 80 cents barrel. Special prices for the salt clique.
Spring beds	30 to 50 p. ct.
Steel billets, within one year over	130 p. ct.
Sash cord	About 10 p. ct.
Stoves	25 to 33⅓ p. ct.
Another advance expected.
Shovels	100 p. ct.
Screws	About 50 p. ct.
Scoops	Over 50 p. ct.
Snow shovels	Nearly 145 p. ct.
Solder	50 p. ct.
Steel bars	110 p. ct.
Steel billets	130 p. ct.
Structional iron	90 to 100 p. ct.
Sheet iron	52½ to 62½ p. ct.
Turpentine, recent advance	62½ p. ct.
Type, recent advance	5 p. ct.
Trunks, on account of advance of stock	10 p. ct.
Tea, advance to consumer, 15 to 25 cents a pound, owing to war tax of 10 cents a pound; wholesale advance	10 to 15 c. a lb.
Tobacco—American Tobacco Company in competition will often furnish 6 pound packages of tobacco at the price of 5.
Tin plate, within year 67½ per cent; total advance	About 75 p. ct.
Tinware	From 20 to 500 p. ct
Tubs, wood	50 p. ct.
Tin, nearly doubled within year	95 to 100 p. ct.
Tank plates	125 to 130 p. ct.
Varnish	15 p. ct.
Woodenware, average	33⅓ p. ct.
Woolens (tailors')	20 to 25 p. ct.
Wall paper, cheap grades	50 to 80 p. ct.
Wall paper, high grades	25 p. ct.
Whisky	10 to 25 c. a gallon.
Wine, California. It is claimed that Crocker interests have cornered grape crops for seven years.
Wheels for baby carriages, rubber-tired	25 p. ct.
Wood handles	20 p. ct.
Wrought iron	Over 100 p. ct.
Wire rod	100 p. ct.
Wire goods (bright)	50 p. ct.

Personally appeared before me, Percy E. Dowe, who states, being duly sworn, that he is the chairman of the committee of statistics of the American Anti-Trust League, and that the foregoing list of articles and advances of the prices of the same is a correct compilation of written reports of duly authorized agents of the said American Anti-Trust League, of which fact he fully attests.

PERCY E. DOWE.

Sworn to before me this 7th day of September, 1899.

FREDERICK THEALL,
Notary Public, Orange County, State of New York.

Mr. Chairman, I now call the attention of the House to a discussion of commodity prices and wages, which is very ably presented by the Quincy Journal:

COMMODITY PRICES AND WAGES.

According to Bradstreet's latest record of average commodity prices, there was an average advance in about a hundred staple commodities of 17 per cent over a year ago; of 22 per cent over two years ago; of 30 per cent over three years ago.

These advances mean, of course, increased cost of living. How has it been in regard to salaries and wages? Have they correspondingly advanced? The United States Investor says:

"During 1899 the general level of commodity prices rose between 20 and 30 per cent, but as regards a large part of the community there was absolutely no increase in income, while in the case of some there was an increase which fell far short of the figure representing the advance in prices. These are facts which can not be controverted, and the conclusion is inevitable."

Iron and steel have increased over 200 per cent the past year; woolens at least from 20 to 30 per cent; the advance in cotton goods has been greater than that in woolens. The rise in wheat and flour and in one or two other products in Bradstreet's list has been less than the Investor states, but it probably represents with approximate correctness the average advance.

Has there been from 10 to 30 per cent advance in wages? In the iron and steel industries and in the woolen and cotton mills there have been advances of 10 per cent in wages, but in what industries has there been from 20 to 30 per cent advance? The average advance in wages does not probably exceed 3 or 4 per cent.

And, as the Investor says, the major part of the community has not been favored in this way at all. The professional classes, the official class, and the clerical classes in the wholesale and retail trades are in receipt of the same incomes substantially as when commodity prices were at the lowest. The great agricultural class, at least so far as engaged in cereal production, is in no better position now as consumers of manufactured commodities than prior to 1897; for the great advance in grain, which began three years ago on the basis of wholly exceptional and temporary conditions, has been nearly all lost. There has been increased employment of labor in many lines, but this gain to the factor of consumption is partly offset by the idleness among salesmen which the industrial combinations have brought about.

The vast majority of the people are evidently not prepared to meet the advanced prices. The increased cost of living has come when there has been much smaller advance in salaries and wages, when, indeed, there has been any advance at all.

Commenting on this situation, the Springfield (Mass.) Republican says:

"The great majority of the people, in a word, are not prepared to meet the increased prices and the higher cost of living. If it be said that they already have risen to the new demands upon them, since production at the high prices is already in progress, it may be replied that this is not so. The greatly increased cost of iron and steel and products therefrom has not yet reached the final consumer. The shipbuilder, the railroad, the building constructor, and so on, have encountered the higher costs and expect to be able to recoup themselves in higher transportation rates and house and store rents, but whether they will be able to or not is just the question.

"The recent marked increase in woolen quotations is for goods which will not be offered to the retail consumer until next summer, fall, and winter, and there is some doubt in manufacturing circles whether the higher prices can be enforced, or whether consumption will not fall off enough to wipe out any gain from the higher prices.

"And this reduced consumption must certainly be the effect of the present demands of the producer unless salaries and wages and wheat farmers' profits are somehow increased materially above their existing level. No immediate possibility of this is observable. The recent collapse in speculation, foreshadowing some little reversal of recent tendencies in business and industry, makes any general marking up of salaries and wages above where they are at present out of the question.

"It would appear, therefore, that the present level of commodity prices can not be maintained, but must recede to meet the conditions of consumption."

Mr. Chairman, here is what a "trust maker" has to say about his offspring:

SUGAR.

HENRY O. HAVEMEYER. I would state freely that where a corporation dealing particularly in things that are essential to the benefit of mankind—clothing, fuel, oil, sugar, food, or anything which would become, as I describe it, of a quasi public character—it would be beneficial to the public to have them under Government supervision.

It is the Government, through its tariff laws, which plunders the people, and the trusts, etc., are merely the machinery for doing it.

The true "communion of pelf" is the customs tariff bill. It says to the people, "Here is a law we have enacted for your robbery. Do not complain of it."

Steel rails were exported at the time the steel schedule was under discussion, and about being voted for, to England, where they can be produced at $15 a ton. Here they are worth $24. That is in evidence now. The rails are sold for $24 a ton, and that is because the people, under the tariff, are mulcted the difference.

I have got Carnegie, and can quote him, that he can export steel rails to any part of the world. What does he want a tariff for? I am not talking about things that are ancient history. I am talking about the infamy of the tariff of to-day, which is the mother of these trusts; there is not a line of it free from it.

Hundreds of thousands of workmen and middlemen have been eliminated by the formation of industrial combinations. The stockholders must receive dividends on their enormous capitalization, and this can only be done by curtailing the expense to the lowest possible limit, and by putting the price of commodities up to the highest notch the public will stand. This is the basic principle of all trusts.

Mr. Chairman, is there any wonder why the McKinley Administration is so severely criticised for its relations with the trusts? This criticism has been brought about by the Administration itself, and it had no right to complain for being criticised.

Take the action of the Secretary of the Treasury with the National City Bank of New York:

GAGE PAYING THE DEMANDS FOR FAVORS BY THE 1896 CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTORS.

Here are the facts from Secretary Gage's report to Congress:

"Under my administration of the Treasury Department no discrimination in favor of one bank against another has been made."—Secretary Gage to Congress in answer to the Post-Dispatch charges.

A. B. Hepburn, vice-president of the National City Bank, wrote, under date of June 5, 1897, to Secretary Gage:

"The National City Bank, of which I recently became vice-president, through the consolidation of the business of the Third National Bank with it, is one of the banks designated as a United States depository, and I write to request that in any changes which may be made under the Administration we may not be disturbed in this respect. We should like to remain a United States depository at present.

"Of course the bank is very strong, and if you will take pains to look at our list of directors you will see that we also have very great political claims, in view of what was done during the canvass last year.

"Yours, very truly,

A. B. HEPBURN."

Here are some of "our list of directors who have very great political claims in view of what was done during the canvass last year" (1896):

H. O. Havemeyer, president sugar trust.

William Rockefeller, president Standard Oil Company.

W. D. Sloan, banker and Vanderbilt representative.

James H. Post, broker of sugar trust, and director of National Sugar Refining Company.

Robert Bacon, member of J. Pierpont Morgan bond syndicate; also director in copper trust.

Jacob H. Schiff, chairman Union Pacific refunding syndicate.

Stephen S. Palmer, national zinc trust.

Samuel Sloan, director in number of railroads.

Cleveland H. Dodge, of copper trust and director in Copper Queen Consolidated Company.

H. Walter Webb, then vice-president of the New York Central.

(The Vanderbilt railroad directors were the largest individual subscribers to the McKinley campaign fund.)

Figures from Gage's report to Congress: May 14, 1897, before Secretary Gage received the Hepburn letter, the Government deposits in the Standard Oil National City Bank were $300,000.

After date of above letter in 1897 the National City Bank received, of the $58,000,000 in settlement of the Union Pacific debt, $24,000,000.

On July 14, 1898, the balance of Government money deposited without interest in National City Bank was $19,579,000.

On September 20, 1899, the balance was $29,000,000.

In the floating war loan of $200,000,000 in June, 1898, in which 313 banks participated, the National City Bank received $14,000,000.

On January 7, 1899, the Government balance in the National City Bank was $20,555,000.

On July 8, 1898, the balance was $10,500,000, showing that the bank had the free use of over $10,000,000 for six months.

AGREED TO SAVE THE BANK CITY TAXES.

NEW YORK, January 11, 1900.

Among the letters sent to Congress by Secretary Gage was the following from President Stillman, of the National City Bank, under date of August 8 last, referring to taxes on the New York custom-house:

"We shall make the above payment of $3,215,000 upon the understanding, of course, that we are not to be liable for any taxes or water upon the property so long as you remain in possession and the balance of $50,000 remains unpaid and the deed is undelivered."

Not one dollar of this purchase price was paid into the Treasury, as directed by the special act of Congress authorizing the sale of the property. The custom-house was not sold under the general act of 1864, quoted by Mr. Gage in justification.

Although Mr. Stillman asks the Secretary to protect him from the payment of city taxes, the Government was under agreement to pay the bank 4 per cent annually on the money paid for rental. This while the bank had full use of the money to loan out at market rates.

Does any general act of 1864 or the special act of Congress authorize any such jugglery?

This is the position in which the Administration finds itself, as shown in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, and as set forth in an Indiana paper upon the said report.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to append the following article of Col. William Jennings Bryan and make it a part of my remarks. This is an able discussion of the cost of an imperial policy sought to be thrust upon the American people:

WILL IT PAY?

On former occasions I have quoted authority against the policy of imperialism and have insisted that the adoption of an European colonial policy would endanger the perpetuity of the Republic. While every lover of his country should be willing to surrender a pecuniary advantage, however alluring, if that advantage would in the least jeopardize our national existence, still the opponents of imperialism are fortunate in having upon their side the dollar argument as well as the arguments based upon fundamental principles.

The forcible annexation of the Philippine Islands (and, in my judgment, even annexation by the consent of the people) would prove a source of pecuniary loss rather than gain. Heretofore our acquisitions have been confined to the North American Continent, the nation having in view either security from attack or land suitable for settlement. Generally both objects have been realized. Florida and the territory between the Mississippi and the Pacific were necessary for purposes of defense, and, in addition thereto, furnished homes and occupation for an increasing population.

The Hawaiian Islands are nearer to the Western than to the Eastern Hemisphere, and their annexation was urged largely upon the ground that their possession by another nation would be a menace to the United States. When objection was made to the heterogeneous character of the people of the islands, it was met by the assertion that they were few in number. In the opinion of those who favored the annexation of Hawaii the advantages to be gained from a strategical standpoint outweighed the objection raised to the population. No argument made in favor of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands can be used in support of the imperialistic policy. The purchase of Alaska removed one more monarchy from American territory and gave to the United States a maximum of land with a minimum of inhabitants.

In the forcible annexation of the Philippines our nation neither adds to its strength nor secures broader opportunities for the American people.

Even if the principle of conquest were permissible under American public law, the conquest of territory so remote from our shores, inhabited by people who have no sympathy with our history or our customs, and who resent our attempt to overthrow their declaration of independence, would be a tax upon our military and naval strength the magnitude of which can not now be determined.

Who can estimate in money and men the cost of subduing and keeping in subjection 8,000,000 people, 6,000 miles away, scattered over 1,300 islands, and living under a tropical sun?

How many soldiers did Spain sacrifice in her effort to put down almost continuous insurrection in Cuba? How many perished from wounds and disease in the vain attempt to keep the Pearl of the Antilles under Spanish dominion? Yet Cuba has only about a million and a half of inhabitants, and Habana is only half as far from Cadiz as Manila is from San Francisco.

If this question is to be settled upon the basis of dollars and cents, who will insure the nation that the receipts will equal the expenditures? Who will guarantee that the income from the Philippines, be it great or small, will find its way back to the pockets of the people who, through taxation, will furnish the money?

And even if the amount invested in ships, armament, and in the equipment of soldiers is returned dollar for dollar, who will place a price upon the blood that will be shed? If war is to be waged for trade, how much trade ought to be demanded in exchange for a human life? And will the man who expects to secure the trade risk his own life or the life of some one else?

The demand for a standing army of 100,000 men is the beginning of a policy which will increase the hours of toil and fill the homes of the land with vacant chairs.

In his essay on the West Indies, Lord Macaulay denies that colonies are a source of profit, even to European countries. He says:

"There are some who assert that, in a military and political point of view, the West Indies are of great importance to this country. This is a common but a monstrous misrepresentation. We venture to say that colonial empire has been one of the greatest curses of modern Europe. What nation has it ever strengthened? What nation has it ever enriched? What have been its fruits? Wars of frequent occurrence and immense cost, fettered trade, lavish expenditure, clashing jurisdiction, corruption in governments, and indigence among the people. What have Mexico and Peru done for Spain, the Brazils for Portugal, Batavia for Holland? Or, if the experience of others is lost upon us, shall we not profit by our own? What have we not sacrificed to our infatuated passion for trans-Atlantic dominion?

"This it is that has so often led us to risk our own smiling gardens and dear firesides for some snowy desert or infectious morass on the other side of the globe; this induced us to resign all the advantages of our insular situation—to embroil ourselves in the intrigues, and fight the battles of half the continent—to form coalitions which were instantly broken—and to give subsidies which were never earned; this gave birth to the fratricidal war against American liberty, with all its disgraceful defeats, and all its barren victories, and all the massacres of the Indian hatchet, and all the bloody contracts of the Hessian slaughterhouse; this it was which, in the war against the French Republic, induced us to send thousands and tens of thousands of our bravest troops to die in West Indian hospitals, while the armies of our enemies were pouring over the Rhine and the Alps.

"When a colonial acquisition has been in prospect, we have thought no expenditure extravagant; no interference perilous. Gold has been to us as dust, and blood as water. Shall we never learn wisdom? Shall we never cease to prosecute a pursuit wilder than the wildest dream of alchemy, with all the credulity and all the profusion of Sir Epicure Mammon?

"Those who maintain that settlements so remote conduce to the military or maritime power of nations fly in the face of history."

Thus wrote England's orator, statesman, and historian.

Shall we refuse to profit by the experience of others? Has the victory of 70,000,000 people over 17,000,000 so infatuated us with our own prowess that gold is to become to us also as dust and blood as water?

Let us consider for a moment the indirect cost of annexation. Grave domestic problems press for solution; can we afford to neglect them in order to engage unnecessarily in controversies abroad.

Must the people at large busy themselves with the contemplation of "destiny" while the special interests hedge themselves about with legal bulwarks and exact an increasing toll from the productive industry?

While the American people are endeavoring to extend an unsolicited sovereignty over remote peoples, foreign financiers will be able to complete the conquest of our own country.

Labor's protest against the black list and government by injunction, and its plea for arbitration, shorter hours, and a fair share of the wealth which it creates, will be drowned in noisy disputes over new boundary lines and in the clash of conflicting authority.

Monopoly can thrive in security so long as the inquiry, "Who will haul down the flag" on distant islands turns public attention away from the question, Who will uproot the trusts at home?

What will it cost the people to substitute contests over treaties for economic issues? What will it cost the people to postpone consideration of remedial legislation while the ship of state tosses about in the whirlpool of international politics?

In considering the question of imperialism we have a right to weigh possibilities as well as certainties; and among the possibilities may be mentioned an offensive and defensive union between the United States and one or more European nations. Already one may hear an Anglo-American alliance suggested—a suggestion which would have been discarded as a dream a year ago. When this nation abandons its traditions and enters upon a colonial policy, a long step will have been taken toward those entanglements against which Washington and Jefferson with equal emphasis warned their countrymen.

What a change the imperialistic idea has already wrought in the minds of its advocates! During the nation's infancy and development the American people spurned the thought of foreign alliance and its attendant obligations; they refused to yoke the young Republic with a monarchy. The wisest among us are not able to measure the cost of a policy which would surrender the nation's independence of action and drag it into the broils of Europe and Asia.

The Monroe doctrine, too—what will become of it? How can we expect European nations to respect our supremacy in the Western Hemisphere if we insist upon entering Asia? So long as we confine ourselves to our own continent we are strong enough to repel the world; but are we prepared (or is it worth while to prepare) to wage an offensive warfare in other parts of the globe?

On the other hand, what advantages are suggested by imperialists to offset the cost and dangers mentioned.

They tell us that trade follows the flag and that wider markets will be the result of annexation. Without admitting that any argument based upon trade advantages can justify an attempt to adopt a double standard in government—a government by consent in America and a government by force in Asia—it may be answered that commerce is a matter of cost and not a matter of bunting. The protectionist understands this and demands, not a flag barrier, but a price barrier between the home manufacturer and the foreign competitor.

Public attention has already been called to the fact that while Spain was sending soldiers to the Philippines England was sending merchandise. While the home government was sending money to the islands Great Britain was drawing money from them.

The cost of transportation is an important factor and has more influence than sovereignty in directing the course of trade.

Canada does not refuse to deal with us merely because she flies the British jack; in fact, I have been told that she sometimes buys even her British jacks in the United States. Our foreign trade is increasing, and that increase is not due to an expanding sovereignty.

The insignificance of the trade argument will be manifest to anyone who will compare the consuming capacity of the Filipinos with that of a like number of Americans. The inhabitants of the Torrid Zones can never equal or even approach the inhabitants of the Temperate Zones as customers. England's commerce with the United States is greater than her commerce with India, and yet India has a population of nearly 300,000,000, and the English flag floats over them.

It is yet to be decided whether the open-door policy will be adopted in the Orient or a tariff wall built around our subjects there, but neither plan will be found satisfactory.

Our people, however, should not expect a colonial policy to prove acceptable, either to the governed or to the governing. If we attempt to run our country upon the European plan we must prepare ourselves for continual complaint. History has thus far failed to furnish a single example of a nation selfish enough to desire a colony and yet unselfish enough to govern it wisely at long range.

It has been argued that annexation would furnish a new field for the investment of American capital. If there is surplus money seeking investment, why is it not employed in the purchase of farm lands, in developing domestic enterprises, or in replacing foreign capital? In 1896 we were told that we were dependent upon foreign capital and must so legislate as to keep what we had and invite more. Strange that it should be necessary to have an English financial system in order to bring European capital into the States and also an English colonial policy for the purpose of taking American capital out. Every dollar sent to the Philippines must be withdrawn from present investments, and we must either suffer to the extent of the amount withdrawn or borrow abroad and increase our bondage to foreign money lenders.

It is sometimes suggested that the Philippines would furnish homes for those who are crowded out of this country. This argument, too, is without foundation. The population of the United States amounts to only 21 persons to the square mile, while the Philippine Islands already contain about 60 to the square mile. It will be several generations before the population of the United States will be as dense as it is now in the Philippines.

Our people will not flock to Manila; climatic conditions will be as great an obstacle as overpopulation. English supremacy in India has continued for nearly a hundred and fifty years, and yet in 1891 the British-born population of India was only 100,551—less than the total number of prisoners confined in the jails of India at the end of 1895.

Jamaica has had all the advantages which could be derived from an English colonial policy, and yet the white population in 1891 numbered less than 15,000 out of a total of 639,000.

Java has been under the dominion of the Netherlands for nearly three hundred years, and yet in 1894 the Europeans upon the island numbered less than 60,000 out of a total population of more than 25,000,000.

Spain has been able to induce but a small number of her people to settle in the Philippines, and, if we can judge from the reports sent back by our volunteers, we shall not succeed any better.

But while the Philippines will not prove inviting to Americans, we shall probably draw a considerable number from the islands to the United States. The emigration will be eastward rather than westward. During the six years from 1889 to 1894 more than 90,000 coolies left India, and we may expect an influx of Malays.

It is not strange that the laboring men should look with undisguised alarm upon the prospect of oriental competition upon the farms and in the factories of the United States. Our people have legislated against Chinese emigration, but to exclude a few Chinese and admit many Filipinos is like straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel.

The farmers and laboring men constitute a large majority of the American people; what is there in annexation for them? Heavier taxes, Asiatic emigration, and an opportunity to furnish more sons for the Army. Will it pay?

Death of Hon. Lorenzo Danford.

REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN J. LENTZ,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, January 20, 1900.

The House having under consideration the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for paying tributes to the memory of Hon. LORENZO DANFORD, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Ohio.

"Resolved, That, as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings shall stand adjourned.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the family of the deceased.

"Ordered, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate."—

Mr. LENTZ said:

Mr. SPEAKER: To me a peculiar interest attaches to the life and service of LORENZO DANFORD. He was really the first prominent public man whom I knew personally in my boyhood. In his greatest days I was a student in the high school under that matchless and faithful teacher, Prof. James J. Burns, at St. Clairsville, where Mr. DANFORD was almost constantly in court. His ability and success have been so well portrayed here in the eulogy of my colleague (Mr. KERR) that it seems almost unnecessary to undertake to say anything, because what could be said would seem like repetition. But I feel that I ought to say something of how he appeared to us in that community in our boyhood days.

LORENZO DANFORD was on one side or the other of every important case that came before the court, and it was usually considered in advance that the side that was fortunate enough to secure his services would be victorious in the cause, particularly if it was a jury case. Not only was he considered a great lawyer, but I can appreciate what my colleague (Mr. GROSVENOR) has said about the tears at his grave. He was appreciated as a friend, as a councillor, as a neighbor, as a good citizen, and as a soldier with a magnificent record. No one spoke of DANFORD except to praise him. To the boys in that community he was the model before the court, and he was the model not only through the seventies, but even later, as an orator. It was painful to see his uncomfortable condition during the last few months of his life, particularly after his visit to the deathbed of his father, and my colleague is quite right in his statement that Mr. DANFORD'S death really began at that bedside of his father. He was not, in those last few months, the DANFORD of whom we, at least in Ohio, are proud. The DANFORD of the last few months was not even the DANFORD of 1896 or 1897.

I know of no better description of him in the campaign of 1897 than that given in some newspaper account of a speech made by him at Marietta. He and Senator HANNA were there, and the account of the meeting was simple and brief. I do not know who the reporter was who described it, but in substance, and I think in exact language, these were the words:

Senator HANNA took the platform and made a speech to a large and enthusiastic audience. After him the Hon. LORENZO DANFORD, of St. Clairsville, took the platform and showed Senator HANNA how to make a speech.

That was a sufficient description of that meeting to all who had heard DANFORD in the court room or on the rostrum. This is no discredit to the ability of Senator HANNA to make a speech, nor to the ability of any other man; because I think it is fair to say, with due regard to all that may have been said of the Shannons and and the Kennons of St. Clairsville, and others who were giants in the forties and the fifties, that Belmont County, yes, and the eastern part of Ohio, never produced any man of whom it might not be said that LORENZO DANFORD could show him how to make a speech.

I am pleased to know that LORENZO DANFORD was born in Belmont County, and who is there that is not proud of old Belmont! No one of us born in that beautiful county has ever had to apologize for the morality or hospitality of its people. Nature and nature's god were generous to old Belmont, giving her pure air, rich minerals, fertile soil, and crystal waters. The world's greatest masters in music, sculpture, and painting would have been greater masters could they have spent their youth in the dreamland beauty and inspiration of the song of the birds, the sculpture of the hills, and the paintings of the sunrise and sunset of old Belmont.

LORENZO DANFORD was born in a county that was greater relatively at the time of his boyhood and young manhood than it is now among the counties of the State. The great highway known as the National Road runs through that county and in his younger days it was the greatest thoroughfare of the Republic. It was as important in Mr. DANFORD'S young manhood as the Union Pacific Railroad was in a later day.

The bar at St. Clairsville has gained distinction probably not equaled by any other bar in the State except that of Lancaster, which was the home of the Ewings, the Shermans, the Hunters, and others of that school. LORENZO DANFORD has left a name that will live with other generations; it will be a sweet memory; it will be a pleasant dream; the recollections of him will go down in the traditions of Belmont County as a part of the honor and fame of one of the best counties in the State, and LORENZO DANFORD'S memory will be repeated to the youngest of the children of old Belmont with a fond and affectionate regard by all who knew him, for none knew him except to love him. As we here to-day in the American Congress pay the last tribute of affectionate words to the memory of a faithful friend, whose life added to the dignity and the beauty of the hills of old Belmont, I recall the philosophy of Tom Moore's sad poem:

This world is all a fleeting show,
For man's illusion given;
The smiles of joy, the tears of woe,
Deceitful shine, deceitful flow:
There's nothing true but Heaven.

Poor wanderers of a stormy day,
From wave to wave we're driven;
And fancy's flash and reason's ray
Serve but to light the troubled way:
There's nothing calm but Heaven!

Porto Rico.

SPEECH

OF

HON. CHARLES L. BARTLETT,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, February 26, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8245) entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes," and the Senate amendments thereto—

Mr. BARTLETT said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The remarkable spectacle is presented to the House and the country by the Ways and Means Committee, and by a majority of the Republicans on this floor, of endeavoring to stretch the Constitution so that we can acquire and govern distant colonies and then at the same time to contract it so that when such territory is once acquired it shall not be governed by the Constitution. Against such a theory of government and such a construction of the Constitution, of which this bill is a product, I most earnestly protest. It degrades our science of government and the principles of the Constitution from the high plane on which the fathers and the founders placed them to the low level of an imperialistic "three card monte" game for empire—"now you see it and now you don't." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I oppose this measure with all the earnestness of my nature. I believe it is the first avowed step in a policy which will embark this country and its people upon imperialism, and will bring destruction to this Government, founded though it be on the theories of government formulated and established by the framers and fathers of it, that the Republic might be perpetuated for all time to come.

I fear that it is but the entering wedge which will eventually rend asunder the great principle that this Government rests for its powers upon the grant to it in the written Constitution, the product of the minds of the wisest, most patriotic, and ablest men that ever assembled to consider and promulgate the principles of free government under the sun. It is the result of their experience, after considering the efforts and failures of all other peoples before their time, and which has lived and survived through many trials and conflicts, and I trust and hope it will live and survive long after those who now seek to destroy it are forgotten.

This theory of government, the grant of power in the Constitution to it, and the restraint of authority that forbids its exceeding the grant is the sheet anchor of our people, and it has enabled them to resist safely the waves of every conflict and of every political and domestic storm, and it will carry them into safety now. For there is one consolation to those who believe that this bill is unconstitutional, and it is this: Whatever this Congress may do, however they may trim down, shade, or override the sections of the Constitution, there is a court which is the greatest that ever sat upon a bench, and it will, if it is guided, as we believe it will be, by the prior decisions of that grand tribunal, hold to the indestructible principles of the Constitution, which, for them and the people and our posterity, are our only safety and hope for the preservation and perpetuation of this Republic.

For, above partisan politics and party aims and desires, when the cold, calm judgment of the law and the Constitution are alone permitted to guide and govern the judges, as doubtless they will be, whose duty it is to ascertain and declare the law and to restrain illegal and void unconstitutional acts of legislation, this court will save this people from the wrong and injustice sought now to be inflicted by them upon the innocent and unfortunate people of Porto Rico and the greater injury to our own institutions.

But aside from the question whether this bill violates the Constitution, the Congress of the United States, and that people whose ancestors established by their struggles, by the forfeit of their lives and the shedding of their blood, this free Republic, the grandest and best that ever rose to bless mankind, should be slow to forget that we are a people whose Government had its origin in the effort of the mother country, in the exercise of despotic power, to impose upon our forefathers a system of unjust taxation. They freed themselves from the yoke of England on the issue of unjust taxation, and the great war of independence was fought and carried to a successful end and the Republic began, and has prospered and lived over a century mainly because of the effort to impose a much less onerous but still as odious a tax as the one sought now to be enacted.

What a commentary for those who do not believe that republics can survive, that the descendants of the American Revolution, who fought because unjustly taxed, now propose to tax unjustly and unequally the small island of Porto Rico, which has come to us by the fortunes of war, and whose people have welcomed the rule of this Republic. What has Porto Rico done to merit at our hands the passage of such a bill as this? And to do this we must not only stab the Constitution in its most vital, living principles, but declare that the rights we now propose to assert are above and beyond the limitations of that instrument framed by the fathers of the country to restrain both national and State governments.

The people of Porto Rico protest; its business men protest against it; and the business men of New York and other places in this country have protested; the President of the United States undertakes to stay the hand of his party; the commissioner and other officials who have investigated affairs in Porto Rico unite in recommending that it be treated as a part of the United States and be permitted to have its products sent in free; and every man who believes that this Government should be fair and just and not play the part of a hypocrite toward Porto Rico will protest.

They were powerless under Spain; they had suffered under her misrule for years; they welcomed our arms and accepted our Government, not only without protest, but with joy. And now we propose by this bill to deny the Declaration of Independence, the theories of our Government, and stand before the world, as we justly should, as self-convicted hypocrites. Why? The two great monopolies of the sugar and tobacco trusts demand that we sacrifice not only the Porto Ricans, but the provisions of the Constitution. How subservient we must be to lend our aid to these interests when justice, humanity, good faith, good conscience, the theory and genius of our Government, and the plain grant of its powers forbid us to do it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention briefly to a few questions of law upon this subject. And first I desire to say that the principle of the law of nations as promulgated by those writers who have written on this subject declares that when any country, by conquest, purchase, treaty, or otherwise, extends its domain and territory, the instant that is done the acquired territory becomes a part of the territory of the empire, of the republic, or of the kingdom, and that that part of it so acquired by conquest or law is to be ruled by the laws of the country which so acquires it.

I go back to the foundation, to the elementary law writers. I go back to the books which we as students at the law school studied, books which every man who enters upon the study of the law first reads when he undertakes to find out what is the law of nations. And we find it laid down in Vattel's Law of Nations that—

> When a nation takes possession of a distant country and settles a colony there, that country, though separated from the principal establishment or mother country, naturally becomes a part of the state equally with its ancient possessions. Whenever, therefore, the political laws or treaties make no distinction between them, everything said of the territory of the nation must also extend to its colonies. (Vattel's Law of Nations, chapter 18, section 210.)

Also, book 2, chapter 7, section 80, Vattel, declares that the—domain of a nation extends to everything she possesses by a just title; it comprehends her ancient and original possessions, and all her acquisitions made by means which are just in themselves, or admitted as such among nations—concessions, purchases, conquests made in the regular way, etc. And by her possessions we ought not only to understand her territories, but all the rights she enjoys.

And that is the rule all over the world, even among people who are not ruled by written constitutions, as we are. But, Mr. Chairman, this Republic of ours, founded as it is upon a written constitution that has provisions restraining the powers of the congress and of its people, until they shall change it—this principle of government extends to us and makes us govern these people according to the provisions of the Constitution.

I have here all the provisions to which I shall refer, and which I shall print in my remarks.

I desire to say that the Supreme Court has settled this question in the matter of taxation. They have settled it in the case of Loughborough vs. Blake, which I shall not now quote, and in the oft-quoted case of Cross vs. Harrison. They have settled it in later cases which I shall undertake to read or to incorporate in my remarks. But without making any other criticism upon Cross vs. Harrison, I desire to say that in my judgment the principles which it enunciated and decided are misconstrued by some gentlemen who have read it here. This is the language which it appears to me has escaped them:

No one can doubt—

This is on page 190 of that decision, in 16 Howard—

No one can doubt that these orders of the President, and the action of our Army and Navy commanders in California in conformity with them, were according to the law of arms and the right of conquest, and that they were operative.

When and how long, say the court?

Until the ratification and exchange of a treaty of peace.

These orders of the President thus given to the military authorities are fully set forth in the instructions of Mr. Buchanan, who was then Secretary of State under President Polk. After directing the collection of taxes under the de facto government as a military necessity, the Secretary proceeds:

"This de facto government will, of course, exercise no power inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which is the supreme law of the land. For this reason no import duties can be levied in California on articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States."

Mark it. That was while California was living under the de facto military government. That was while the military governor was collecting the taxes on goods imported from foreign countries and was not obedient to the tariff law of 1790 and the act of 1846. But the Secretary of State, the mouthpiece of President Polk, who carried on the war, declared:

But no such duties can be imposed in any other part of our nation on the productions of California.

Why? Because the Constitution of the United States was the supreme law of the land, and the supreme law of the land declared that we should make these taxes uniform.

I read the following from the case of Cross vs. Hamson:

This de facto government will, of course, exercise no power inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which is the supreme law of the land. For this reason no import duties can be levied in California on articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, as no such duties can be imposed in any other part of our Union on the productions of California. Nor can new duties be charged in California upon such foreign productions as have already paid duties in any of our ports of entry, for the obvious reason that California is within the territory of the United States.

Then the war tariff was, immediately on receiving news of ratification of the treaty, made to conform to the existing tariff law.

That war tariff, however, was abandoned as soon as the military governor had received from Washington information of the exchange and ratification of the treaty with Mexico, and duties were afterwards levied in conformity with such as Congress had imposed upon foreign merchandise imported into the other ports of the United States, Upper California having been ceded by the treaty to the United States. This last was done with the assent of the Executive of the United States, or without any interference to prevent it. Indeed, from the letter of the then Secretary of State and from that of the Secretary of the Treasury we can not doubt that the action of the military governor of California was recognized as allowable and lawful by Mr. Polk and his Cabinet. We think it was a rightful and correct recognition under all the circumstances, and when we say rightful we mean that it was constitutional, although Congress had not passed an act to extend the collection of tonnage and import duties to the ports of California.

The court say:

That war tariff was immediately made—

Immediately on receiving news of the ratification of the treaty made what?—— by the Governor-General, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to conform with the tariff laws of the United States in existence in this country.

Again, the court go on to say:

The war tariff, however, was abandoned as soon as the military governor had received from Washington information of the exchange and ratification of the treaty with Mexico, and duties were afterwards levied in conformity with such acts as Congress had imposed upon foreign merchandise imported into the other ports of the United States, Upper California having been ceded by the treaty to the United States.

This last was done with the assent of the Executive of the United States, or without any interference to prevent it. Indeed, from the letter of the then Secretary of State and from that of the Secretary of the Treasury, we can not doubt that the action of the military governor of California was recognized as allowable and lawful by Mr. Polk and his Cabinet. We think it was a rightful and correct recognition under all circumstances; and when we say rightful, we mean that it was constitutional, although Congress had not passed an act to extend the collection of tonnage and import duties to the ports of California.

So, Mr. Chairman, with all that has been said about the Cross and Harrison case being authority which will sustain this bill, here is the permission by which these taxes were levied; here are the facts and the history, and here the decision of the court, which undertakes to declare that the Constitution of the United States extended there, and those duties can not be collected because they were not uniform.

I desire especially to call attention to the case of Geofroy vs. Riggs (133 U. S. R., page 158).

The opinion in this case is by Justice Fields, and it is a discussion of our treaty with France in 1800, and determines the question whether or not the territory ceded the United States was a State within the contemplation of that treaty and of the Constitution of the United States.

In discussing this case, and referring to the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, the justice says:

The power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises is given for the purpose thereinafter mentioned. This grant is general, without limitation as to place. It consequently extends to all places over which the Government extends. If this could be doubted, the doubt is removed by the subsequent words, which modify the grant. The words are: "But all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." It will not be contended that the modification of the power extends to places to which the power itself does not extend. The power, then, to lay and collect duties, imposts, and excises may be exercised and must be exercised throughout the United States.

The grant of this power and the exercise of it, according to this statement, must be exercised subject to the rule of uniformity, and on this question this case seems to take it as being undoubted.

In speaking of the general grant to lay and collect taxes, and declaring that it comprehends the District and Territories as well as the States, he declares:

The subsequent clauses are intended to regulate the exercise of this power, not to withdraw from it any portion of the community.

In discussing what is meant by the State, he quotes the seventh article of the treaty of 1800 with France, as follows:

"In all the States of the Union whose existing laws permit it, so long and to the same extent as said laws shall remain in force, Frenchmen shall enjoy the right of possessing personal and real property by the same title and in the same manner as the citizens of the United States."

* * * This article is not happily drawn. It leaves in doubt what is meant by "States of the Union." Ordinarily these terms would be held to apply to those political communities exercising the various attributes of sovereignty which compose the United States, as distinguished from the organized municipalities known as Territories and the District of Columbia; and yet sovereign communities with an independent local government are often described as States, though the extent of their political sovereignty be limited by relations to the more general government or to other countries. (Halleck on International Law, chapters 5, 6, and 7.)

The term is used in general jurisprudence and by writers on public law as denoting organized political societies with an established government. Within this definition, the District of Columbia, under the Government of the United States, is as much a State as any of those political communities which compose the United States. Were there no other territory under the Government of the United States, it would not be questioned that the District of Columbia would be a State within the meaning of international law, and it is not perceived that it is any less a State within that meaning because other States and other territory are also under the same Government.

In Hepburn vs. Ellzey (2 Cranch, 445–452) the question arose whether a resident and a citizen of the District of Columbia could sue a citizen of Virginia in the circuit court of the United States. The court, by Chief Justice Marshall, in deciding the question, conceded that the District of Columbia was a distinct political society, and therefore a State, according to the definition of writers on general law, but held that the act of Congress in providing for controversies between citizens of different States in the circuit courts referred to that term as used in the Constitution, and therefore to one of the States composing the United States. A similar concession, that the District of Columbia being a separate political community is in a certain sense a State, is made by this court in the recent case of the Metropolitan Railroad Company vs. District of Columbia (132 United States, 1, 9), decided at the present term.

In the same opinion the court further declare:

The treaty power as expressed in the Constitution is in terms unlimited, except by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government or of its departments, and those arising from the nature of the Government itself and of that of the States. It would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, or a change in the character of the Government, or in that of any of the States, or the cession of any portion of the territory of the latter without its consent. (Fort Leavenworth Railroad Company et al. vs. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525–541.)

But, with these exceptions, it is not perceived that there is any limit to the questions which can be adjusted touching any matter which is properly the subject of negotiations with a foreign country. (Ware vs. Hylton, 3 Dall.,

199; Chirac vs. Chirac, 2 Wheat., 259; Hannestein vs. Lynham, 100 U. S., 483; 8 Op. Attys. Gen., 417; The People vs. Guke, 6 Cal., 381.)

If the Constitution prescribe one rule and the law another and different rule, it is the duty of courts to declare that the Constitution and not the law governs the case before them for judgment. If the law include no case save those for which the Constitution has furnished a different rule, or no case which the legislature has the power to govern, then the law can have no operation.

If it includes cases which the legislature has power to govern, and concerning which the Constitution does not prescribe a different rule, the law governs those cases, though it may, in its terms, attempt to include others, on which it can not operate. In other words, this court can not declare void an act of Congress which constitutionally embraces some cases, though other cases, within its terms, are beyond the control of Congress, or beyond the reach of that particular law. If, therefore, Congress had power to make a law excluding slavery from this territory while under the exclusive power of the United States, the use of the word "forever" does not invalidate the law, so long as Congress has the exclusive legislative power in the territory.

But it is further insisted that the treaty of 1803 between the United States and France, by which this territory was acquired, has so restrained the constitutional powers of Congress that it can not by law prohibit the introduction of slavery into that part of this territory north and west of the Missouri and north of 36° 30' north latitude.

By a treaty with a foreign nation the United States may rightfully stipulate that the Congress will or will not exercise its legislative power in some particular manner on some particular subject. Such promises, when made, should be voluntarily kept with the most scrupulous good faith. But that a treaty with a foreign nation can deprive the Congress of any part of the legislative power conferred by the people, so that it no longer can legislate as it was empowered by the Constitution to do, I more than doubt.

I desire to refer to the noted case of Scott vs. Sanford in 19 Howard, which has been criticised upon the floor of this House as being "an infamous decision," and has been referred to as the only case sustaining the doctrine laid down by Chief Justice Taney that this country had no constitutional right to hold territory as colonies. Upon an investigation of that case it will appear to any unprejudiced mind that the entire court was united upon that proposition.

The opinion of the court is pronounced by Chief Justice Taney, in which two of the justices—Justice McLean and Justice Curtis—dissent, and the third justice—Nelson—gives a separate opinion upon a single point in the case, expressing no opinion upon the unconstitutionality of the act of 1820, known as the "Missouri compromise law," and the rest of the justices declaring it unconstitutional. It is declared, Chief Justice Taney speaking for the whole court:

There is no power given by the Constitution to the Federal Government to establish and maintain colonies bordering on the United States or at a distance, to be ruled and governed at its own pleasure, nor to enlarge its territorial limits in any way, except by the admission of new States. That power is plainly given; and if a new State is admitted, it needs no further legislation by Congress, because the Constitution itself defines the relative rights and powers and duties of the State, and the citizens of the State and the Federal Government. But no power is given to acquire a territory to be held and governed permanently in that character.

He further adds:

We do not mean, however, to question the power of Congress in this respect. The power to expand the territory of the United States by the admission of new States is plainly given; and in the construction of this power by all the departments of the Government, it has been held to authorize the acquisition of territory, not fit for admission at the time, but to be admitted as soon as its population and situation would entitle it to admission. It is acquired to become a State, and not to be held as a colony and governed by Congress with absolute authority; and as the propriety of admitting a new State is committed to the sound discretion of Congress, the power to acquire territory for that purpose, to be held by the United States until it is in a suitable condition to become a State upon an equal footing with the other States, must rest upon the same discretion. It is a question for the political department of the Government, and not the judicial.

He further adds that it is the duty of Congress to maintain in the territory the authority and rights of the Government, and also the personal rights and rights of property of individual citizens, secured by the Constitution. (See pages 52 and 53, Dred Scott case.)

He further declares that the power in the General Government to obtain and hold colonies and dependent territories over which they might legislate without restriction would be inconsistent with its own existence in its present form. Whatever it acquires it acquires for the benefit of the people of the several States who created it. It is their trustee acting for them and charged with the duty of promoting the interests of the whole people of the Union in the exercise of the powers specifically granted.

Further on it is declared by him:

The power of Congress over the person or property of a citizen can never be a mere discretionary power under our Constitution and form of government. The powers of the Government and the rights and privileges of the citizen are regulated and plainly defined by the Constitution itself. And when the territory becomes a part of the United States the Federal Government enters into possession in the character impressed upon it by those who created it. * * *

The territory being a part of the United States, the Government and the citizen both enter it under the authority of the Constitution, with their respective rights defined and marked out; and the Federal Government can exercise no power over his person or property beyond what that instrument confers, nor lawfully deny any right which it has reserved.

Justice Wayne concurred entirely in the opinion of the Chief Justice, and Justice Nelson concurred in the opinion of affirmance, and did not discuss the question nor deny the propositions stated.

Justice Grier concurred fully; Justice Daniel concurred at length, and so did Justice Campbell, distinctly denying the supreme sovereignty of Congress over territory then belonging to the United States, or that they might thereafter acquire.

Justice Catron also concurred, upholding the propositions of the Chief Justice.

Justice McLean and Justice Curtis dissented, on page 148, Justice McLean said:

In organizing the government of a Territory Congress is limited to means appropriate to the attainment of the constitutional object. No powers can be exercised which are prohibited by the Constitution or which are contrary to its spirit; so that, whether the object may be the protection of the persons or property of purchasers of public lands, or of communities who have been annexed to the Union by conquest or purchase, they are initiatory to the establishment of State governments, and no more power can be claimed or exercised than is necessary to the attainment of the end. This is the limitation of all the Federal powers.

He further says:

The Constitution was formed for our whole country, and the expansion or contraction of her territory require no change in the fundamental law.

Justice Curtis, dissenting, said:

Before I proceed further to notice some other grounds of supposed objection to this power of Congress, I desire to say that if it were not for my anxiety to insist upon what I deem a correct exposition of the Constitution, if I looked only to the purposes of the argument, the source of the power of Congress, asserted in the opinion of the majority of the court, would answer those purposes equally well. For they admit that Congress has power to organize and govern the Territories until they arrive at a suitable condition for admission to the Union; they admit, also, that the kind of government which shall thus exist should be regulated by the condition and wants of each Territory, and that it is necessarily committed to the discretion of Congress to enact such laws for that purpose as that discretion may dictate; and no limit to that discretion has been shown, or even suggested, save those positive prohibitions to legislate which are found in the Constitution.

I confess myself unable to perceive any difference whatever between my own opinion of the general extent of the power of Congress and the opinion of the majority of the court, save that I consider it derivable from the express language of the Constitution, while they hold it to be silently implied from the power to acquire territory. (Opinion of Mr. Justice Curtis, Scott vs. Sanford, pages 229, 230.)

This case of Scott vs. Sanford has been referred to, and the principle just quoted approved in the following cases: 16 Wallace, page 73; 112 U. S. R., page 101; 114 U. S. R., page 45; 143 U. S. R., page 159; 152 U. S. R., page 49; 169 U. S. R., page 705.

In these cases above cited opinions have been rendered by Justice Miller, Chief Justice Waite, Justice Gray, Justice Matthews, and Chief Justice Fuller.

In 16 Howard, in what is known as the Slaughterhouse Cases, page 73, Justice Miller, referring to the Dred Scott decision, says that this decision in the Dred Scott case, while it has been attacked by some of the ablest constitutional lawyers and statesmen in the country, has never been overruled. The decision in the Slaughterhouse Cases was made in 1872.

In this case, also, in discussing what privileges and immunities the citizens of the United States and of the States are entitled to, the Justice quotes with approval the decision of Justice Washington (4 Washington, Circuit Court Reports, 471), which declares:

Protection by the Government; the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the right to acquire property of every kind and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety; subject, nevertheless, to such restraints as the Government may justly prescribe for the general good of the whole; the right of a citizen of one State to pass through or to reside in any other State for purposes of trade, agriculture, professional pursuits, or otherwise; to claim the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus; to institute and maintain actions of any kind in the courts; to take, hold, and dispose of property, either real or personal, and an exemption from higher taxes or impositions than are paid by other citizens; to which may be added the elective franchise as regulated and established by the laws or constitution of the State in which it is to be exercised.

And on page 75 of 16 Wallace, Justice Miller says:

Fortunately we are not without judicial determination of the meaning of section 2 of the fourth article of the Constitution.

In the case of Murphy vs. Ramsey (114 U. S. R., page 44) Justice Washington decided as follows:

The personal and civil rights of the inhabitants of the Territories are secured to them, as to other citizens, by the principles of constitutional liberty, which restrain all the agencies of government, State and national. Their political rights are pledges which they hold as privileges in the legislative discretion of the Congress of the United States.

Already the statutes of the United States, as embraced in the Revised Statutes, section 1978, provide what shall be the rights and what are the rights of the inhabitants of any territory that may be possessed or acquired.

Section 1977 declares:

All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and to no other.

In the case of Ward vs. State of Maryland (12 Wallace, page 430) the court declares:

These privileges include those not named, but which are of the same general character, and embrace nearly every civil right for the establishment and protection of which organized government is instituted.

In the case of Crandall vs. Nevada (6 Wallace) the court declare:

The citizen of this great country has the right to be protected by the implied guaranties of its Constitution.

Amongst which he distinctly lays down the right of free access to the ports of the country, through which all the operations of foreign commerce are conducted, etc., and quoted from the language of Chief Justice Taney:

We are one people with one common country; we are all citizens of the United States.

See especially the further opinion in this case (Candrell vs. Nevada), on bottom of page 79 and page 80.

It is true that this decision arose under a discussion of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which declares:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

Another case sustaining the proposition that the principles of the Constitution extend to all the territory of this Government is that of the United States vs. Moore (3 Cranch, page 159).

In the court below the opinions of the judges were delivered to the following effect:

Cranch, J.: The question to be decided upon this demurrer is whether the act of Congress for abolishing the fees of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia can affect those justices who were in commission before and at the time when that act passed, and who accepted their commissions while those fees were legally annexed to the office. The points made in the argument of this case are important, and some of them not altogether clear of doubt. It has been contended that Congress, in legislating for the District of Columbia, are not bound by any of the prohibitions of the Constitution. But this is a doctrine to which I can never assent. Can it be said that Congress may pass a bill of attainder for the District of Columbia?

That Congress may pass laws ex post facto in the District of Columbia, or order soldiers to be quartered upon us in time of peace, or make our ports free ports of entry, or lay duties upon our exports, or take away the right of trial by jury in criminal prosecutions. Yet all this they may do if, in legislating for the District of Columbia, they are not restricted by the express prohibitions of the Constitution. The words must be positive and strong indeed to justify such a construction. The only clause from which such an inference can possibly seem to flow is that which says: "Congress shall have the power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District."

The court, in deciding this case, say:

But the whole instrument is to be taken together and every part is to be made consistent with the residue, if possible. That Congress may legislate "in all cases whatsoever over such District," etc., is the general proposition, and the prohibitions are the exceptions. The true construction is that Congress may legislate for us in all cases where they are now prohibited by other parts of the Constitution. The express commands of the Constitution operate as prohibitions of everything repugnant to such commands. In every case, therefore, where Congress are not bound, either by the commands or prohibitions of the Constitution, they have a discretionary power to legislate over the District.

The Constitution was made for the benefit of every citizen of the United States, and there is no such citizen, whatever may be his condition or wherever he may be situated within the limits of the territory of the United States, who has not a right to the protection it affords.

Marshall, J., concurred. Present: Marshall, C. J., Cushing, Patterson, Chase, Washington, and Johnson.

Hon. Thomas M. Cooley, a former president of the American Bar Association, and during his life the leading constitutional jurist of the United States, in an article contributed to the Forum in 1893, in which he discussed the question of Hawaiian annexation, said:

Now outlying colonies are not within the contemplation of the Constitution of the United States at all. The structure of government created under it never had in view such colonies, and the people of the United States would never have consented to provide for our holding them. Our Government is not suited to that purpose. The proposal that we should vie with England and France and Germany in establishing colonies in distant quarters of the globe would now be scouted at once by the people and by the Congress as being altogether foreign to our institutions.

He went on to say:

There is no indication in the Constitution itself or in any of the actions or discussions which led up to its formation that the people of the day contemplated any other condition of things than a Union composed of contiguous States made up of people mainly of one race, with territory held in common by them, to be governed under Congressional authority while on its way through increasing population to the formation of other such States and to admission to the Union on an equal footing with the original States when the proper maturity had been reached.

This was the general plan of the Union; and all the terms of the Constitution, when applied to it, are fully satisfied. Anything proposed under the treaty-making power that, if carried into effect, would change this condition of things, and especially anything that would make of the nation the ruler of outlying states or colonies or territories not acquired with any expectation of being brought into the Union, or not capable of becoming harmonious members of a family of contiguous States, constituting together one common country, would seem to be as much by implication forbidden as would be anything that directly antagonized provisions of the Constitution itself. (Forum, Volume XV, pages 389, 393, 398.)

In Loughborough vs. Blake (5 Wheaton, 377) the question of the right of Congress to tax property in the District of Columbia by direct tax, according to population, was discussed and the tax upheld upon the ground that the District of Columbia was territory of the United States and subject to the Constitution of the United States, just as the States were subject.

Chief Justice Marshall, for the entire court, defined the term "United States" as follows:

Does this term designate the whole or any particular portion of the American empire? Certainly this question can admit of but one answer. It is the name given to our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The District of Columbia or the territory west of the Missouri is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania.

Judge Cooley, whose commentaries are universally accepted as conclusive interpretations of our constitutional law, summarizes the doctrine as follows:

And when territory is acquired the right to suffer States to be formed therefrom and to receive them into the Union must follow of course, not only because the Constitution confers the power to admit new States without restriction, but also because it would be inconsistent with institutions founded on the fundamental idea of self-government that the Federal Government should retain territory under its own imperial rule and deny the people the customary local institutions. (Cooley's Principles of Constitutional Law, 170.)

Prof. Henry Wade Rogers, president of the Northwestern University, in a paper read before the American Social Science Association, in September last, concludes as follows:

The truth of the matter would seem to be that Congress, in the exercise of the power to lay and collect duties, imposts, and excises, must so frame the law that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States; that the term "United States" includes all annexed territory; that where an act of Congress is necessary to include newly annexed territory within a collection district it is plainly the duty of Congress to enact such legislation, and its failure to do so would result in a condition of things contradictory to the intent of the Constitution. After a treaty of cession has been ratified duties can be fixed by action of the President as the head of a military government established by him; but such action is only a temporary expedient, and can not be of permanent nature. That Congress, when it comes to legislate upon the subject, can not establish one tariff law for Hawaii or for Porto Rico and a different one for the remainder of the United States, but the law which it enacts must be uniform throughout all our possessions.

So much has been said in denunciation of the opinion of Chief Justice Taney in the celebrated Dred Scott case that it will not be out of place to call attention to the fact that, while this country was engaged in civil war, on the 15th of October, 1864, in the city of Boston, honor was paid to the memory of this distinguished Chief Justice by the bar of that city, on learning of his death; and his former associate upon the bench, Justice Curtis, was the chairman of the committee to report resolutions upon his life and character.

The proceedings of that meeting were as follows:

At a meeting of the members of the bar of the first circuit, at Boston, on Saturday, the 15th day of October, A. D. 1864, to take measures for giving expression to the feelings of the bar on occasion of the death of Chief Justice Taney, the meeting having been called to order by Richard H. Dana, jr., attorney of the United States; Sidney Bartlett was appointed chairman.

On motion of Mr. Dana, a committee consisting of Benjamin R. Curtis, Caleb Cushing, Richard H. Dana, jr., and Sidney Bartlett was appointed to prepare and report resolutions for the consideration of the bar.

At an adjourned meeting, held Monday, the 17th day of October, A. D. 1864, the following resolutions, reported by Benjamin R. Curtis, in behalf of the committee, were unanimously adopted, namely:

"Resolved, That the members of this bar render the tribute of their admiration and reverence for the preeminent abilities, profound learning, incorruptible integrity, and signal private virtues exhibited in the long and illustrious judicial career of the late lamented Chief Justice Taney.

"Resolved, That the attorney of the United States be requested to communicate these proceedings to the court and ask to have them entered on the records of the court."

Mr. B. R. Curtis then addressed the Court:

May it please the Court: I have been requested to second the resolutions which Mr. Attorney has presented. I suppose the reason for this request is that for six years I was in such official connection with the late Chief Justice as enabled me to know him better than the other members of the bar.

Among other things, he said:

Perhaps I may be permitted to say that, though on the only important occasions on which I had the misfortune to differ with the Chief Justice on such points I thought he and they who agreed with him carried the powers of the court too far, yet, speaking for myself, I am quite sure he fell into neither of these extremes. The great powers intrusted to the court by the Constitution and laws of his country he steadily and firmly upheld and administered; and, so far as I know, he showed no disposition to exceed them.

Are the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the provisions of the Constitution of the United States to be denied to these people who voluntarily submitted to our armies and rejoiced at becoming citizens of the United States and being released from the oppression of Spain? Our forefathers, who signed the immortal Declaration and severed themselves from the mother country and ceased to be colonies, fought for their independence because, amongst other things, it was declared that we had the right to be free and independent, and amongst other complaints were "the cutting off of our trade with all the ports of the world, imposing taxes upon us without our consent, and depriving us, in many cases, of trial by jury."

Surely the descendants of these patriots, who set upon this continent the first beacon light for liberty and the establishment of a republican government, can not afford to deprive even so small a portion of the people of the United States of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

The President himself has recognized the right of these people to share in the privileges and rights of American citizens, for in his message to Congress he said:

> It must be borne in mind that since the cession Porto Rico has been denied the principal markets she had long enjoyed, and our tariffs have been continued against her products as when she was under Spanish sovereignty. The markets of Spain are closed to her products except upon terms to which the commerce of all nations is subjected. The island of Cuba, which used to buy her cattle and tobacco without custom duties, now imposes the same duties upon these products as from any other country entering her ports. She has therefore lost her free intercourse with Spain and Cuba without any compensating benefits in this market. Her coffee was little known and not in use by our people, and therefore there was no demand here for this one of her chief products.
>
> Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Porto Rico and give her products free access to our markets.

The Secretary of War joined in that recommendation as follows:

> The question of the economic treatment of the island underlies all the others. If the people are prosperous and have an abundance of the necessities of life, they will with justice be easily governed, and will with patience be easily educated. If they are left in hunger and hopeless poverty, they will be discontented, intractable, and mutinous. The principal difficulty now in the island of Porto Rico is that the transfer of the island from Spain to the United States has not resulted in an increase of prosperity, but in the reverse. The industry of the island is almost entirely agricultural. The people live upon the products of their own soil and upon the articles for which they exchange their surplus products abroad. Their production is in the main coffee, sugar, and tobacco. The prosperity of the island depends upon their success in selling these products. * * * And I wish most strongly to urge that the customs duties between Porto Rico and the United States be removed.

If the President and Congress shall now by this bill withdraw from these people the protection of the Constitution, the right of equal and uniform taxation, and the other guaranties of the Constitution, then the profession of the President in his message is to be accepted as not having been made in good faith.

When this bill is passed and becomes a law, it can be said of the Republican majority—

> Thou hast unmasked a nation falsely clad
> In altruistic garb; revealed a land
> Blind to distinctions between good and bad,
> And smiting liberty with ruthless hand.

The action of the President in first recommending free trade for Porto Rico, and then at the behest of his party bosses in changing his recommendation to Congress by secret admonitions to his political associates in the House, must and will be passed on by the people at the polls.

> Whether as tool or tyrant History's pen,
> Upon the nation's scroll of lasting shame,
> Shall pillory in letters black his name,
> Time alone can adjudge.

So much has been said upon the floor of this House and elsewhere with reference to the duty of the South in looking after her own interests in the matter of cotton raising and cotton manufactures, and the advantage to her in colonial expansion, in order to acquire trade and commerce and a market for our products and manufactures, I desire to call attention to certain facts with reference to cotton manufacture and the cost thereof in China and Japan, which are as follows:

COTTON INDUSTRY IN CHINA.

In January, 1899, there were reported:

Number of cotton spinning mills	15
Number of spindles in operation	378,052
Annual output (when all the existing mills are in full operation), 390,000 bales of 400 pounds (approximate); value of annual output	$18,720,000

Manufacturer's cost of a bale of yarn, 400 pounds of 20 hanks:

Raw cotton, including import duty	$36.50
Cost of production	5.00
Commission for purchasing cotton	.10
Interest on money invested in purchasing cotton, storage, etc.	1.00
Insurance on import of cotton	.20
Interest on money invested in machinery	1.50
Insurance on the plant and incidental expenses	1.00
Total	45.30

The average price for Chinese spun yarn is about $47 per bale of 400 pounds; therefore the manufacturer's profit is about 5 per cent. (Taken from the current price list published by the Celestial Empire, of Shanghai, January 10, 1900.)

The value of raw cotton imported into China during three calendar years ending December 31, 1898, was as follows:

1896	$954,822
1897	1,649,939
1898	2,073,003

The value of cotton yarn (foreign spun) imported into China during the same period was—

1896	$15,939,556
1897	25,019,260
1898	28,495,396

Wages in the cotton mills of Shanghai, Hankow, and Soochow vary according to the skill of the operatives, the average being about 25 cents (silver) per day (12½ cents in United States currency). This low rate is largely caused by the scarcity of skilled labor which compels the employment of several unskilled hands to compass the work of one trained operative; thus three or four women are required to do the work at a frame which could be attended to by one experienced person. The aggregate pay of the four unskilled operatives amounts to 50 cents in United States currency.

A considerable quantity of cotton is annually raised in central and southern China, but there are no data as to its exact quantity. The native cotton brings a much higher price than the Indian or American product.

In 1898 China imported from the United States 156,314,155 yards of cotton cloth, valued at $6,944,520, and in 1899 227,868,196 yards, valued at $10,273,487. The total value of imports of all kinds of cotton goods into China in 1898 was $56,631,741.

COTTON INDUSTRY IN JAPAN.

Reports of May, 1899, represent the cotton industry in Japan as follows:

Number of cotton-spinning mills	47
Number of spindles in operation	1,106,404
Annual output, bales of 400 pounds	650,000
Value of annual output	$29,250,000

Cost of manufacture per bale of cotton yarn of 400 pounds, 20 hanks:

Raw cotton (cost at mill)	$34.50
Labor	8.00
Commission on purchasing cotton	.10
Interest on money invested in purchasing cotton, storage, insurance, etc	1.00
Interest on money invested in machinery	.50
Total	44.10

The average price for Japanese spun yarn is about $45.50 per bale.

The value of raw cotton imported into Japan during the three calendar years ending December 31, 1898, was as follows:

Year.	Ginned.	In the seed.	Total.
1896	$16,053,136	$233,538	$16,286,674
1897	21,561,131	248,476	21,809,607
1898	22,705,220	166,957	22,872,186

The value of the total imports of raw cotton imported into Japan in the calendar years 1897 and 1898, respectively, was $21,674,000 and $22,872,000, of which $3,636,000 in 1897 and $7,376,000 in 1898 came from the United States. The Japanese cotton manufacturers will this year begin to import cotton direct from Galveston, Mobile, New Orleans, etc., by their own regular steamers, in which event it is expected that much larger quantities will be annually imported than ever before.

The wages of Japanese labor have increased nearly 100 per cent within the last five years, the average pay of operatives in cotton factories being about 25 cents per day in United States currency.

Although the cotton industry has made great progress in Japan, her imports of cotton goods have been $27,894,177 in 1896, to $32,582,209 in 1897, and to $32,812,293 in 1898.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal said with reference to the immense amount of trade that we are to secure in the South and elsewhere by the acquisition of these new territories. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] was bold enough to declare the other day after they squeezed them all they could be, that then the Government and the Republican party proposed to hold these islands—for what? For the purpose of allowing others to make as much money out of them as possible, and after they had made all the money they could, then, perhaps, after you had got all that you could by squeezing them, you proposed to extend to the Philippines, perhaps, the Constitution and ingraft the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

For myself—I am speaking now with reference to my own people—I say that the statistics and facts and the history of the trade of these colonies has demonstrated that it is not profitable. Take the colonies of England, France, and Germany, and history will demonstrate in every instance that the trade with tropical colonies has not been sufficient to stand alone and that it led to a tax upon the people. France pays $14,000,000 to-day, Germany $5,000,000, and England something over $1,900,000 a year in order to sustain her colonies. This is shown by an article by Mr. Ireland in the February number of McClure's Magazine.

This article that I have permission to print will show that in the consumption of English products, of manufactured goods, the nontropical countries consume the products of England averaging $26.16 per head, while the tropical colonies consume of the mother country's product only 72 cents per head; and as $26.16 is to 72 cents so is the difference between the benefits paid by England, this great mother of colonies, that Empire which is to-day straining the force of the Empire in an effort to extend her colonies and to throttle liberty in South Africa. Great Britain, who has the most powerful navy in the world and can guard and protect her colonies, receives from her tropical colonies no benefit, but a great loss.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal about the immense trade that we were to get by extending our power and our commerce. If we were to follow the example of Rome and the other countries that extended their power and their commerce over other countries, they did so until the people were corrupt. Their legislation became corrupt, and they fell. I shall be very glad to do all things proper to extend our trade and commerce, but so far as my people are concerned, trade and commerce are not above the love of liberty and not above the Constitution. And after we have gotten it all, Mr. Chairman, what will be the result? The English poet, Thompson, has truly said:

> Whenever puff'd with power and gorged with wealth,
> Nations like ours let trade enormous rise,
> And East and South their mingled treasures pour;
> Then swelled, impetuous, the corrupting flood
> Burst o'er city, and devours the land.

And I repeat here the question propounded to the poet by his friend Mr. Hill, who, in writing to him after he had read the poem from which these lines are taken, said:

> Think seriously upon this observation, and try if in all your acquaintance with past ages you can find a people long at once retaining public virtue and extended commerce.

[Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

APPENDIX.

A Few Facts About the Colonies of the Great Powers.

[By Alleyne Ireland, author of Tropical Colonization.]

VALUE PER ANNUM OF THE IMPORTS OF ENGLAND, FRANCE, AND GERMANY FROM THEIR RESPECTIVE COLONIES.

Although the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland—referred to throughout this article as England, for the sake of brevity—is not the oldest of the colonial powers, being outclassed in that respect by Spain, France, Holland, and Portugal, her colonies are to-day by far the most important, both in regard to their extent and population, whilst the commerce of the British colonies is greater in volume than that of all the colonies of all other powers put together.

If we include India, the colonies of England cover an area of 9,000,000 square miles; and if to this we add the area of British protectorates and spheres of influence, the total area subject to British rule is 11,000,000 square miles. The smaller area, that of the colonies and India alone, supports a population of 367,000,000; the larger area about 420,000,000, or, roughly speaking, six times the population of the United States. As a colonial power France comes next to England, but at a great distance behind. The French colonies, including Algeria, Tunis, and all protectorates and spheres of influence, have an area of 3,500,000 square miles, and a population of 53,000,000.

Next comes Germany, whose colonies and protectorates have an area of 1,000,000 square miles and a population of 11,000,000. The Dutch colonies have an area of 800,000 square miles and a population of 33,000,000. As compared with these, the colonies of the United States cover an area of 125,000 square miles and have a population of 9,000,000. The details are:

Country.	Area.	Population.
	Sq. miles.
Hawaii	6,640	117,000
Porto Rico	3,668	813,000
Philippines	115,000	8,000,000

But to return to colonies. Colonies may be divided into two great classes, tropical and nontropical. The difference between tropical and nontropical colonies from the commercial standpoint is most striking. During the five-year period 1893-1897, England imported from her nontropical colonies annually goods to the value of $230,000,000, and from her tropical colonies goods to the value of $230,000,000. What this means will be seen when it is remembered that the population of the nontropical colonies during the five years was about 9,500,000, whilst that of the tropical colonies was 346,500,000. To put it in another way, each man, woman, and child in England's nontropical colonies sends annually to England about $23.18 worth of goods, whilst each man, woman, and child in the tropical colonies sends only 66 cents' worth. Similarly in regard to exports of British goods. Each person in the nontropical colonies consumes $12.32 worth of British goods, whilst each person in the tropical colonies consumes only 71 cents' worth. In other words, taking imports and exports together, it pays England better that one child should be born in Canada than that 25 children should be born in Ceylon.

Let me put this in yet another way. Taking Victoria in Australia as a typical nontropical colony, and comparing it with the average of twelve tropical colonies—British Guiana, Mauritius, Trinidad, Jamaica, Barbados, St. Kitts-Nevis, Antigua, Grenada, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Montserrat, and Dominica—we get the following results, the figures being based on the average returns of ten years: Victoria, the nontropical colony, exports yearly per head of her population goods to the value of $70, whilst the tropical colonies export only $25.80 worth per head of their population.

But the tropical colonies themselves vary very greatly in their productive efficiency, as measured by their exports, some exporting as much as $45 per head, whilst others export only $13 per head annually. This wide difference is easily explained. The value of exports from these colonies is regulated by the efficiency of their labor supply—a good labor supply means big exports, a poor labor supply small exports. In regard to their labor supply, we can divide tropical colonies into three classes: 1. Those in which imported contract labor is used. 2. Those in which there is such a dense population that the natives must either work or starve. 3. Those in which there is no pressure of population and in which imported contract labor is not used.

In order to compare the productive efficiency of these three classes of colonies I select three of each class: Mauritius, British Guiana, and Trinidad, which employ imported contract labor; Barbados, Antigua, and Grenada, in which there is a pressure of population, and St. Vincent, Montserrat, and Dominica, in which there is no pressure of population and in which there is no imported contract labor. If I take the average value of the annual exports of these colonies during the ten-year period 1882-1891, I get the following results: The colonies of the first class export yearly $45.51 worth of goods per head of their population; the colonies of the second class, $36.40 worth, and the colonies of the third class only $11.66 worth.

It is not difficult to understand why this should be so. In the colonies where there is no pressure of population there is no need for the natives to work, for they can supply all their wants from the bounty of nature. The forest furnishes them with excellent material for a house and food in abundance, whilst a little desultory labor will soon establish a small garden, which will grow a few bananas or plantains to be sold in the nearest town, thus supplying what little money is necessary for clothing. Under these circumstances the ordinary dweller in the Tropics is content to live. His wants are few and simple, and he can gratify them without the wages which the white man offers him. So he does not work. Where there is a pressure of population, things are different. Take Barbados as an example. There every inch of soil is occupied. There are no forests in which the negro can build his hut, and no spare lands on which he can cultivate his patch of corn or plantains. And there are about 1,200 souls to the square mile. Under these circumstances it is easy to understand that there is a moderately good labor supply. Lastly, there are the colonies employing imported contract labor. Their high productive efficiency is due to the presence of a large body of laborers who are under contract to work five days a week and seven hours a day for five years.

I may close this article with a very brief description of the manner in which the system of imported contract labor is worked in the British colonies. I select British Guiana as an example. The laborers are recruited in India by voluntary enlistment. The agent of British Guiana resides in Calcutta, and sends out recruiting agents who make known to the people the terms offered by the British Guiana planters.

Those men and women who express their willingness to go to the colony are called before a magistrate, and the terms of the contract are read over to them in their own language. If any wish to withdraw at the last moment, they are allowed to do so, and are then sent back to their homes at the expense of the British Guiana government. Those who sign the contract are then put on board a sailing vessel for the voyage. Each vessel carrying laborers is provided with a medical man, who has to see that all the regulations

A most interesting point in connection with the colonies of the European powers is whether they are a source of profit or of loss to the sovereign state. This may be looked at in two ways: First, whether they are directly a source of profit or loss, or, in other words, whether they pay revenue into the treasury of the sovereign state or are a cause of actual expense to the mother country; second, whether the home country succeeds in securing such a proportion of trade from her colonies as to amount to a real national advantage.

In regard to this point, we may compare the colonies of England, France, and Germany. The British colonies receive nothing from the imperial treasury and contribute nothing to it. This does not, of course, imply that under special circumstances, such as those created by the disastrous hurricane in the West Indies last year, no financial aid is given by England to her colonies, but merely that each colony raises its own revenue without depending on England in any way. Both Germany and France, however, pay out annually large sums of money for the administrative expenses of their colonies, scarcely any of which are self-supporting.

VALUE PER ANNUM OF THE EXPORTS OF ENGLAND, FRANCE, AND GERMANY TO THEIR RESPECTIVE COLONIES.

France pays yearly about $14,000,000, and Germany about $5,000,000. It has been stated that, although England's colonies are not a source of direct expense to the mother country, they are so indirectly, for it is the possession of colonies which necessitates such enormous expenditures for the British navy. This is a mistaken idea. Even if England owned no colonies she would still have to keep her navy at its present strength, for two reasons—because it is her first line of defense, and because her carrying trade, which forms about 60 per cent of the carrying trade of the world, must be protected.

It is seen, then, that so far from colonies being a source of direct revenue to the sovereign states, they are in the case of both France and Germany a source of great expense.

But what of trade? Does not the possession of colonies imply a very important commercial development in which the mother country reaps great profit? Here again we will compare France, Germany, and England. First, in regard to imports from colonies. In 1897 England imported from her colonies goods to the value of $470,000,000, her total imports from all countries, including her colonies, being valued at $2,250,000,000. In other words, she received more than one-fifth of her imports from her own colonies. In 1896 France imported from her colonies goods to the value of $70,000,000, her total imports being valued at about $750,000,000. That is to say, she received less than one-tenth of her imports from her colonies. Germany received in 1896 imports from her colonies to the value of $2,000,000, her total imports being worth $1,000,000,000. That is, she received about one five-hundredth part of her imports from her colonies.

Turning now to exports, we find that in 1897 England exported British and Irish produce to the total value of $1,170,000,000, of which $400,000,000 worth went to the British colonies—roughly, one-third of her total exports. In 1895 the value of exports of French merchandise amounted to $680,000,000, of which $68,000,000, or one-tenth, went to the French colonies. Germany exported in 1896 home merchandise to the value of $700,000,000, of which $2,000,000 worth, or one three hundred and fiftieth part went to the German colonies.

If we consider these figures for a moment, we shall perceive several curious facts. England exported to the British colonies goods to a value six times as great as that of the exports from France and Germany to their respective colonies; and she also imported from her colonies six times more goods than France and Germany put together imported from their colonies.

Now, both France and Germany strive to secure a monopoly of the trade of their own colonies by erecting formidable tariffs against the goods of other nations. England, on the other hand, throws open the trade of her colonies to the whole world, and anyone can thus compete with her for the trade of her own possessions; yet it is seen that England secures an immense trade with her colonies. This is not because the colonies are under the British flag (since there is no preferential treatment of British goods in the British colonies), but because she is highly efficient commercially. England's commercial efficiency is well shown by the following table:

Country.	Population.	Exports.
England	40,000,000	$1,170,000,000
United States	70,000,000	1,210,000,000
France	39,000,000	680,000,000
Germany	53,000,000	700,000,000

Roughly speaking, England produces for export a little less than twice as much per head of her population as the United States, France, or Germany. in regard to sanitation and food are observed during the passage. The laborers get the passage free of cost, as also food and clothing. Those who wish to carry young children with them are allowed to do so.

On arrival in British Guiana, the laborers are allotted to the different estates. The terms of the contract are as follows: The laborer contracts to reside on the estate and to work five days a week for seven hours a day for five years, at the end of which time he becomes absolutely free to go where he pleases. The planter contracts to supply each laborer with a well-built, well-ventilated house, with a good water supply. He must also provide on his estate a hospital for the use of sick laborers, and must employ a medical man to visit the estate at least once every forty-eight hours and examine and prescribe for all laborers presenting themselves. He must also build a school on his estate for the education of the children of the laborers. All the above are provided free of cost to the laborers. In addition to this, he must pay each man not less than 24 cents a day and each woman not less than 16 cents a day. When it is remembered that the ordinary laborer can buy all the food he can eat for 8 cents a day, the wages seem very fair. As a matter of fact, the laborers save considerable sums of money, and frequently after their term of indenture is over they set up small shops on the estates, and eventually in many cases become prosperous citizens. It should be noted that the planters are not allowed to sell goods of any kind to their laborers, under a very heavy penalty. In 1897 there were 4,444 East Indian depositors in the British Guiana Government Savings Bank, with a total sum of $413,351 to their credit. At the end of the five years' contract the laborer becomes free, and can not be engaged under contract again, a provision intended to protect the immigrant from any influence which might be brought to bear on him to forego his rights to entire freedom after his contract is out. If an immigrant remains five years in the colony after his indenture expires, even though he does no work during that time, he becomes entitled to a free grant of land from the government. Until quite recently he was entitled to a passage back to India on paying one-half of the actual cost of transport. Under this latter provision, 38,000 immigrants returned to India during the past twenty-five years, carrying with them money and jewelry to the value of about $2,800,000.

The interests of the contract laborers are under the care of a special department of the government—the immigration department. All employees of this department must pass examinations in the native dialects of the immigrants. Inspectors from this department visit the estates frequently and examine the pay lists in order to see if the laborers are getting their fair wages. These officers also hear and investigate any complaints that may be made to them, and if it is necessary, they may issue all process of law free to the laborers.

The immigration department can always enforce any demands it may make, for if a planter refuses to remedy any defect in his arrangements, or declines to perform any act suggested by the immigration agent-general, that official has the power to refuse further supplies of laborers, and may also take away from the estate what laborers it has. As this would mean ruin to the planter, he can not disregard the orders he gets from the immigration department. Should any planter be convicted of an offense against a laborer, the immigration department demands his dismissal from the estate, and warns all other estates that if they employ him they will not be furnished with any more laborers. As no punishment of any kind can be inflicted on a laborer except by the legal authorities of the colony, it will be readily perceived that the lot of the indentured laborer in British Guiana is not a hard one.

Of course there are systems of indentured labor which, when not under proper government supervision, give rise to great abuses, but this need not necessarily be so, and if the United States finds it expedient to sanction the employment of imported contract labor in its new possessions, it will undoubtedly establish the system on lines similar to those adopted in the British colonies, which insure strict Government control and high protection for the interests of the laborers.

Grant Memorial Services.

REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, May 19, 1900.

The House having under consideration the following resolutions:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be given to the Grand Army of the Republic for the statue of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant.

"Resolved, That the statue be accepted and placed in the Capitol, and that a copy of these resolutions, signed by the presiding officers of the House of Representatives and the Senate, be forwarded to the chairman of the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic on the Grant Memorial"—

Mr. GROSVENOR said:

Mr. SPEAKER: Time as it rolls along fills up and makes permanent reputations; breaks down and destroys reputations. In no walk of life, I presume, does time effect greater changes than in the career and history of the soldier.

I shall speak but a very few minutes, and, of course, shall not go over the historical data pertaining to the history and career of this magnificent American. But I want to speak along a line of thought incident, first, to the period of the activity of Grant, and then to the period in which we are now living, and see how much of the present we owe to what he did in the past.

He was born in an humble cabin, in an humble district of Ohio, in the Congressional district now represented by my friend from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], and was sent by the kindness of a member of Congress to the Military Academy. He did not go there under a competitive examination. He went there at the suggestion and upon the selection of a member of Congress—a politician. There has not been a man who has arrived at greatness in either the Army or the Navy of the United States who did not get his start in just that way. He did not develop greatness, as I have read the record, either at the Military Academy or during his service as a soldier prior to the war of the rebellion, and he made a very slow start in the beginning of the war. Going out as colonel of an Illinois regiment, he very shortly became a brigadier-general.

But the stars of that period of the civil war were not very hard to obtain, provided always the applicant or the recipient was capable of drilling a regiment or even a company. So little was known of military tactics among the volunteer troops of the North that he who could come possessed of ability enough to set a regiment in its proper position in the field was almost sure of early promotion; and it was that sort of promotion that Grant got. His earliest and warmest champions would not say that, beyond his practical knowledge which he had learned in the Army and at West Point, he had shown any qualities that would have singled him out from any of the other colonels of the splendid body of men who commanded the Illinois troops in the volunteer service.

He had the good fortune to be pointed at early by the envy and jealousy of others. He had the good fortune to be condemned bitterly at the very outset of his great career. The criticisms that were heaped upon him in his campaign along the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers were significant of the jealousies and heart-burnings and ambitions of that period of time. But out of it there came the first indications of his greatness of character as a soldier.

I do not know that I should at this time undertake to describe with accuracy what it was in particular that indicated itself then unless it was his determination to keep out of quarrels and controversies and to go steadily and straightforwardly upon the persistent pathway that he had selected in those campaigns. It is perfectly fair in making history to say that he was surrounded and environed by hostile criticism from the Headquarters of the Army that turned out to be not only unjust at the time and for the conditions then existing, but which became contemptible and insignificant in the light of that which followed.

The campaign up those rivers was a campaign of wonderful import. Those who remember the effect that the campaign of Grant at Fort Henry and Fort Donelson had upon the great army of the Confederacy that had wintered at Bowling Green and Nashville and through that interior section of the South will remember very well the effect that Shiloh had upon the entire movement of that great army.

His ideas of strategy, that were scarcely put in writing, but were worked out with the same tenacity of purpose that was afterwards exhibited in the Wilderness, were manifest at that time and have stood the fire of criticism ever since.

I shall not follow him through his career. I speak only of his growth and development at the beginning. I shall not discuss his strategy at Chattanooga, when he came to take command of the armies of the West after the undecisive battle of Chickamauga. He found the United States troops at Chattanooga practically cut off from supplies—almost in a condition of starvation. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that he found more suffering in the Union Army at Chattanooga for want of medical, hospital, quartermaster, and commissary stores than all the 250,000 men who served in the Spanish war had to endure from the firing of the first gun down to the surrender of Spain and the treaty of Paris. [Applause.]

He found more men sick and dying than were sick and dying in the whole Army of the United States that conquered Spain. He took hold of that army. This is not the time to discuss the men who were his assistants. Grant never had an assistant in the popular acceptation of that term. The plans of that army were his plans. The troops west of the mountains and southwest were moved and brought together and concentrated upon his own plan and by his own orders. He had just achieved disenthralment from the War Department. He had just gotten rid of the baneful influence of some of the inheritances that the old army had cast upon the new army.

I do not desire, as I said, to follow the details of this campaign. I wish to point out this fact: Thirty-five years have passed over our heads since Grant achieved the culmination of his great fame as a soldier. During that time there have been wars in the world. During that time there have been great changes in military tactics, in military organization, in military supplies and munitions, and all that appertains to the military arm of governments; but I venture to say that among those who have come and gone, among those who have led armies in Egypt, in Germany, in France, and in Africa there has been no man who has any pretense of competition with Grant as a soldier to-day. The men who led those armies may have inherited greater armies, better armament, and better material. They may have fallen commanders to greater armies. They may have had greater accumulations of munitions of war. They may have had many an auxiliary of success better than Grant had. But there is not one of them who stands to-day upon the record of war, or who will stand upon the record of the historian of the future, with anything like the character of Grant as a great soldier.

He has been criticised somewhat by one of the great generals of Europe, great in the amount of pay that he draws, great in the high rank that he holds, great in the splendid decorations that he has; but I ask my countrymen here to-day, when we are considering something of Grant in the light of thirty-five years, whether we may not with a pride that is enjoyable contrast the career of Grant, all his mistakes, if he ever made any; study his tactics, study all that he ever did as a soldier—and he was the great soldier and center of our operations—compare them, with the most critical eye, with the best thing that has been done by the British army in its great campaign against the Boers, and tell me whether Grant does not shine like a meteor.

General Grant never sent an unequipped and unprepared army into a strange country, strange in its topography, strange in its water courses, strange in all that relates to the physical conditions of the country, and divided his army up into three columns and sent them off into different directions to unsupporting distances and allowed them to be whipped in detail. It is an easy thing to overpower an enemy when you have five to one and are fighting with every advantage in your favor, and strategy counts but little where brute force is in such discrepancy.

I think the strategy of Grant that centered in the Wilderness and in front of Richmond the magnificent organization of the Army of the Potomac, will live as an exemplar of military strategy and perfection long after Wolseley, his critic, long after Wolseley, the man who had depreciated him, long after Wolseley, the hero of Tel el Keber, in Egypt, and the planner of the strategy of South Africa, will have been relegated to his proper position among the great generals of the world. [Applause.]

So much for Grant as a soldier. He was a great soldier. He was great in detail and great in aggregation. He was great in his knowledge of the position of a soldier and great in his knowledge of the position of armies.

Grant had the advantage of the Southern Confederacy in point of numbers and in point of the ability of his Government to furnish him munitions of war. The time is coming when we will more frankly discuss this question than has been proper in the days that have gone by. The time is coming when we shall feel less inclined to take offense or to fear friction and criticism when we discuss more frankly the real relative positions of the two great armies that confronted each other. Briefly, the Northern army had more men, more money, a seacoast, a better navy. Other suggestions might be made. So much for the Northern army. The Southern army had an advantage which, in my judgment, was as great or greater than all these aggregated.

The Southern army fought upon interior lines. They fought upon their chosen ground. They fought upon the ground of which they had full knowledge, and without that in their favor the disparity of numbers would have made it impossible that even the Americans of the South, the splendid soldiers of those armies, imbued by patriotism as they understood it, by false patriotism as we understood it, with all their glorious chivalry and devotion to their cause, could ever have maintained themselves for four bloody years as they did.

So much for the fighting part of it.

Grant was a good politician, a good statesman, and I am going to point out very briefly a point in his career that I think it is well for us to consider now. Grant was in favor of giving everybody a fair chance. There was a great deal of argument in his conduct about the horses. And is it not wonderful now that some members of this House who can go back and remember the bitterness with which we closed that war and came out of it have lived to vote to ratify Grant's generosity to the Southern soldier by passing in the House of Representatives a bill to pay some of those straggling soldiers for some of those straggling horses that Grant advised them to take home—the soldiers so straggling that I am afraid they are all dead, and the horses so straggling that we may never get an estimate of their value; and yet, lest we should not do our duty by the great commander's beneficent suggestion, we are willing to send our Departments out and hunt up the widows and children and next of kin and legal representatives of these men and pay them for horses when we do not know exactly what their original title was.

Grant proposed that the Southern people should start out without any load upon them. They were to start even; they were to start undisfranchised. They were to vote, they were to become members of a great body politic, and they were to work out their salvation not as enemies of this country but as friends. And no man did more to lay the foundation upon which equal rights have been extended to the South than did that grim soldier, Grant.

Now, the thought that comes to me is this: In a free government all must participate. In a government where all are taxed, all are compelled to obey the law, everybody must stand upon an equality of political rights or there will be destruction and overthrow of the body politic. The activity of enemies is far more potential to injure a republic than the activity of friends to uphold and support it. So it is inconsistent with the very idea of a free government that there shall be within that government a body of men who by reason of some distinction shall be in an inferior political relation to the government than the other class of the people.

You can have all friends of a government and it will live; but you can not maintain a free government half friends and half enemies. And so if General Grant were alive to-day and could speak from his magnificent resting place in New York, in my judgment—and I say it in all kindness and only as a suggestion, reviewing in the mind's eye only the things which he did and said to the people of the South, and the potentiality of his plans in that direction—he would say to the people of the South, "Be careful how you enter upon a condition to be made by you that shall place in the census returns of the eleven Southern States a registered body of disfranchised and forever organized enemy."

It is hard to work out the other plan, and there are many drawbacks to it, and the people of this country ought to be exceedingly patient while the great problem is being solved; but the other plan that makes an organized body of aliens is a worse plan, and will unsettle, ultimately, the very foundation upon which free government stands.

Mr. Speaker, I will not extend my remarks further. I had a little personal knowledge of General Grant by mere contact. I met him first in the Sequatchie Valley as he came to take command of the army down there. He demonstrated to us one of his wonderful characteristics—his judgment of men—when he took away from the army under Thomas and Rosecrans some of our very best generals, who afterwards became magnificent soldiers in the Army of the Potomac. I met him afterwards several times in the reunions of the soldiers, and met him finally when he was President of the United States.

We look upon General Grant not only as the greatest soldier that this country has ever produced, but a soldier far greater than has been produced elsewhere in all the world, judged by a critical study of what he accomplished, the manner of its accomplishment, and all the surrounding incidents of his great career.

Grant was produced in this country. He was an American through and through, a man of great proportions. He has been dead fifteen years, and during the whole of that period of time no successful rival of Grant has appeared anywhere upon the stage of the world's activity; and to-day we do ourselves honor when we come here, speaking in our representative capacity, speaking for the comrades of the dead chieftain, speaking for the loved ones who followed his career while their loved ones were exposed to war and evil—and we come in all these capacities to testify our love for Grant, our pride in memory of him, our affection and love for that which he accomplished, and to renew upon this same shrine our fidelity and fealty to the country which he saved from ruin, and come to point the eyes of all the world to this truest and best type of an American citizen. [Loud applause.]

Appropriations.

SPEECH
OF
HON. LEONIDAS F. LIVINGSTON,
OF GEORGIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 2, 1900,

On appropriations, fiscal years 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, and 1901, made by the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses and at the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

Mr. LIVINGSTON said:

Mr. SPEAKER: In submitting a statement of the appropriations made at this session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, I beg to call to the attention of the House and the country the fact that, notwithstanding the enormous appropriations for 1900 on account of the Spanish-Cuban war, the Army and Navy appropriations for this session are $50,770,888.58 in excess of those of the last session.

The statement I submit shows also that in every Department of the Government, beginning with the agricultural and ending with the permanent appropriations, we have increased at this session the amounts authorized at the last session. And when to the aggregate we add the amounts that should have been appropriated at this session, but which have been deferred, for no good reason, or at least for reasons that need explanation on the part of those in control—amounts which must be appropriated at the second session of this Congress, such as that necessary to complete the Nicaragua Canal (the bill having passed the House, carrying authorization of an expenditure of $141,000,000); and also that usually appropriated for rivers and harbors, $16,000,000; and for public buildings and grounds, $3,000,000; and for outstanding claims, estimated at $10,000,000—if, I say, we add $170,000,000 to the sum stated in the table, $709,729,476.89, we would have a grand total of $879,729,476.89 for this session alone. And thus the total shown in the exhibit is not quite complete or fair, considering that such large amounts that must be met are withheld for the next session.

I submit that, to be fair, we should let each fiscal year take care of all necessary appropriations and not unload this year on the fiscal year 1902 things that should be provided for and included in the fiscal year 1901.

And I call attention also to the constant and gradual increase in the appropriations for pensions, and likewise to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriations. These items could not have been affected to any great extent by the Spanish-Cuban war. It shows indeed an increase, as before stated, all along the line, despite the fact that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have held back all matters before them, and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors all matters before them, with two or three exceptions, and all accounts and claims have been practically barred from consideration at this session.

The exhibit, when carefully studied, will show the exact situation. Here it is:

Appropriations, fiscal years 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, and 1901, made by the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses and at the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

Title.	Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, fiscal year 1901.	Fifty-fifth Congress.		Fifty-fourth Congress.
		Fiscal year 1900.	Fiscal year 1899.	Fiscal year 1898.	Fiscal year 1897.
Agriculture	$4,023,509.00	$3,726,022.00	$3,509,202.00	$3,182,902.00	$3,255,532.00
Army	114,220,095.55	80,430,204.06	23,193,302.00	23,129,344.30	23,278,402.73
Diplomatic and consular	1,771,168.70	1,714,583.76	1,732,208.76	1,695,208.76	1,642,558.76
District of Columbia	7,576,869.31	6,834,535.77	6,426,880.07	6,186,991.06	5,900,319.48
Fortification	7,385,628.00	4,909,902.00	9,377,494.00	9,517,141.00	7,377,888.00
Indian	8,198,069.24	7,504,775.81	7,673,854.90	7,674,120.89	7,390,496.79
Legislative, executive, and judicial	24,176,532.53	23,410,840.79	21,635,846.65	21,690,766.90	21,519,324.71
Military Academy	653,589.67	575,774.47	458,689.23	479,572.83	449,525.61
Navy	65,080,916.67	48,099,909.58	56,098,783.68	33,006,234.19	30,562,660.95
Pension	145,245,236.00	145,233,830.00	141,233,830.00	141,263,880.00	141,328,580.00
Post-Office	113,648,230.75	105,634,138.75	90,222,300.75	95,665,338.75	92,571,564.22
River and harbor	561,000.00	16,091,841.94			12,659,550.00
Sundry civil	65,298,885.95	48,385,930.86	48,490,212.26	53,611,783.38	35,096,710.19
Deficiencies	15,679,512.46	25,005,912.26	349,772,389.96	10,557,417.34	15,341,911.07
Total regular appropriations	573,517,256.89	517,558,212.05	766,835,084.26	407,657,801.40	306,375,024.51
Miscellaneous	3,500,000.00	28,744,590.24	6,560,311.29	999,057.90	416,010.06
Permanent annual appropriations	132,712,220.00	128,678,220.00	117,836,220.00	120,078,220.00	119,054,160.00
Grand total	709,729,476.89	674,981,022.29	893,231,615.55	528,735,079.30	515,845,194.57

It should be borne in mind that in the case of the above-noted appropriations for the Navy the authorization of the 8 new war ships—2 battle ships, 3 armored cruisers, and 3 protected cruisers—involves an ultimate expenditure for construction, armor, and armament of something like $56,000,000, not one dollar of which is now appropriated for and does not figure in the Navy item, but must be met in future years.

The dominant party attempted to commit this Congress at this session, and will doubtless renew their efforts at the coming session, to commit the Government to what is known as the ship-subsidy scheme, which involves the sum of $120,000,000, to be expended throughout a term of years.

The Porto Rico Tariff.

SPEECH

OF

HON. JOHN F. FITZGERALD,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, February 28, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8245) to regulate the trade of Porto Rico, and for other purposes—

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: While I do not wish to answer for my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] that those Republicans who are opposing this measure will meet with the just wrath of their constituents next fall, I think I can safely say that in the position that my colleague has taken upon this matter he is in harmony with the sentiment of the majority of the people of the State of Massachusetts on this important question. The history of that State is more closely interwoven with the early history of this country than almost any State in this Union. The blood of her sons, shed upon the fields of Concord, Lexington, and Bunker Hill, emphasizes the devotion of that people to the principles that underlie this Government to-day, and these same principles lie at the root of the question we are discussing to-day. [Applause.]

"Taxation without representation" of the thirteen colonies received it death blow when the tea was thrown into Boston Harbor. And the people of that grand old Commonwealth have not forgotten those early struggles and what they meant. Massachusetts will never refuse to strengthen the arm of any of her sons who prefer principle to party and who are unwilling to see the flag of the country stand for oppression and injustice in place of freedom and humanity. [Applause.]

The gentleman from New York a few moments ago submitted an amendment calling for a reduction of the duties from 25 to 15 per cent. If it is a crime to tax those people for a large amount, the reduction of the tax is a mere descent from grand to petty larceny. In other words, these people are to become American citizens, 15 per cent removed. No man who has argued this question denies the fact that we have the power to admit the products of Porto Rico free. The greatest lawyers in this body seem to have an honest difference of opinion as to whether the Constitution requires the admission free of the products of Porto Rico. It certainly does not prohibit this being done.

In support of the former theory, I wish to submit to the House utterances on this question set forth by the greatest minds of this country.

In the first place, it has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, through Chief Justice Marshall, in Loughborough vs. Blake (5 Wheat., 317), that the term "United States" in the Constitution includes the Territories of the Union as well as the States. The court said:

The power, then, to lay and collect duties, imposts, and excises may be exercised and must be exercised throughout the United States. Does this term designate the whole or any particular portion of the American empire? Certainly this question can admit of but one answer. It is the name given to our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The District of Columbia or the territory west of the Missouri is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania, and it is not less necessary, on the principles of our Constitution, that uniformity in the imposition of imposts, duties, and excises should be observed in the one than the other. Since, then, the power to lay and collect taxes, which includes direct taxes, is obviously coextensive with the power to lay and collect duties, imposts, and excises, and since the latter extends throughout the United States, it follows that the power to impose direct taxes also extends throughout the United States.

Chief Justice Marshall, in Martin vs. Hunter's Lessee (1 Wheat., 304–326), said:

The Government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution, and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given or given by necessary implication.

And the same great jurist, in Givens vs. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1), in speaking of the Constitution, also said:

This instrument contains an enumeration of the powers expressly granted by the people to the Government.

Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, declares:

Such a state of absolute sovereignty on the one hand and of absolute dependence on the other is not congenial with the free and independent spirit of our institutions; and the establishment of distant territorial governments ruled according to our will and pleasure would have a very natural tendency, as all pro-consular governments have, to abuse and oppression.

Mr. Webster, in a passage that has been well quoted by my distinguished colleague [Mr. MCCALL], declares that—

An arbitrary government may have territorial governments in distant possessions, because an arbitrary government may rule its distant territories by different laws and different systems. Russia may govern the Ukraine and the Caucasus and Kamchatka by different codes or ukases. We can do no such thing. They must be of us, part of us, or else estranged. I think I see, then, in progress what is to disfigure and deform the Constitution. * * * I think I see a course adopted that is likely to turn the Constitution under which we live into a deformed monster, into a curse rather than a blessing, into a great frame of unequal government, not founded on popular representation, but founded in the grossest inequalities; and I think if it go on—for there is a great danger that it will go on—that this Government will be broken up.

Webster declared the same doctrine in his "Reply to Hayne," made January 26, 1830. He said:

The National Government possesses those powers which it can be shown the people conferred upon it and no more. The people erected this Government. They gave it a Constitution, and in that Constitution they have enumerated the powers which they bestow on it. They have made it a limited Government. They have defined its authority. They have restrained it to the exercise of such powers as are granted.

It is a Government of strictly limited powers; of enumerated, specified, and particularized powers; and whatever is not granted is withheld.

In a letter to the Barings, dated October 16, 1839, this great statesman wrote:

This General Government is a limited Government. Its powers are specified and enumerated. The State legislatures, on the other hand, possess all usual and extraordinary powers of government, subject to any limitations which may be imposed by their own constitutions, and with the exception of the operation on these powers of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Webster, in his "Reply to Calhoun," made February 16, 1833, said:

The sovereignty of government is an idea belonging to the other side of the Atlantic. No such thing is known in North America. Our governments are all limited. In Europe sovereignty is of feudal origin, and imports no more than the state of the sovereign. It comprises his rights, duties, exemptions, prerogatives, and powers. But with us all power is with the people. They alone are sovereign; and they erect what governments they please and confer on them such powers as they please. None of these powers is sovereign in the European sense of the word, all being restrained by written constitutions.

Alexander Hamilton said, in response to the objection of Mr. Randolph, Attorney-General, that the power to incorporate a bank could not be implied from the "nature of the Federal Constitution:"

This proposition is not precisely or even substantially that which has been relied upon. The proposition relied upon is that the specified powers of Congress are in their nature sovereign; that it is incident to sovereign power to erect corporations; and that therefore Congress have a right, within the sphere and in relation to the objects of their power, to erect corporations. It shall, however, be supposed that the Attorney-General would consider the two propositions in the same light, and that the objection made to the one would be made to the other. To this objection an answer has already been given. It is this: That the doctrine is stated with this express qualification, that the right to erect corporations does only extend to cases and objects within the sphere of the specified powers of the Government. * * * A particular legislative power implies authority to erect corporations in relation to cases arising under that power only.

Chief Justice Taney, in the famous Dred Scott decision, said:

The power of Congress over the person and property of a citizen can never be a mere discretionary power under our Constitution and form of government. The power of the Government and the rights and privileges of the citizen are regulated and plainly defined by the Constitution itself. And when territory becomes a part of the United States the Federal Government enters into possession in the character impressed upon it by those who created it. It enters upon it with its powers over the citizen strictly defined and limited by the Constitution, from which it derives its own existence, and by virtue of which alone it continues to exist and act as a government and sovereignty. It has no power of any kind beyond it, and it can not when it enters a Territory of the United States put off its character and assume discretionary or despotic powers which the Constitution has denied to it. It can not create for itself a new character separated from the citizens of the United States and the duties it owes them under the provisions of the Constitution. The territory being part of the United States, the Government and the citizen both enter it under the authority of the Constitution, with their respective rights defined and marked out, and the Federal Government can exercise no power beyond what that instrument confers, nor lawfully deny any right which it has reserved. * * *

The powers over person and property of which we speak are not only not granted to Congress but are in express terms denied, and they are forbidden to exercise them. And this prohibition is not confined to the States, but the words are general, and extends to the whole territory over which the Constitution gives it power to legislate, including those portions of it remaining under Territorial government as well as that covered by the States.

In Cooley on Constitutional Law it is said:

The Government created by the Constitution is one with limited and enumerated powers, and the Constitution is the measure and the test of the powers conferred. * * *

It is manifest that there must be a difference in the presumption that attends an exercise of national and one of State powers. The difference is this: To ascertain whether any power assumed by the Government of the United States is rightfully assumed the Constitution is to be examined in order to see whether expressly or by fair implication the power has been granted, and if the grant does not appear the assumption must be held unwarranted. To ascertain whether a State rightfully exercises a power, we have only to see by the Constitution of the United States it is conceded to the Union, or by that Constitution or by that of the State prohibited to be exercised at all. (Pages 29-31.)

I give the above opinions for what they are worth, but I suggest to my Republican brethren, who are intent on passing this bill, in the light of the decision that I have just quoted, as the part of wisdom on their part, to avoid any legal problem in connection with our government of this province by adhering to the original recommendation of the President.

Let us consider for a moment the condition of this island. I quote the report of Brigadier-General Davis, whose language must appeal with telling effect to the justice and humanity of the American people:

The coffee lands suffered worst. These trees are planted on the hill and mountain slopes, and in many places the declivities are very abrupt. The gale tore up the trees, loosened the soil, and the deluge of water converted the earth into a semifluid.

Then followed landslides, and thousands of acres of coffee plantations slid down into the valleys; trees, soil, rocks, and every vestige of culture are piled up in the bottom of the valleys. In such cases there is no restoration possible, for where there were smiling groves are now only bald rocks which were uncovered by the avalanches.

It will take five years to reestablish these coffee vegas, and there will be necessarily years of want and industrial paralysis.

The sugar industry has suffered much less than the others. Some cane has been uprooted and some has been buried, and many mills have been damaged or destroyed. The margin of profit at present prices to the sugar grower is small, but there is a margin of probably a half cent per pound to the manufacturer who has modern machinery; but the old "Jamaica train" mills, which are badly damaged, will probably never be reconstructed, and the growing cane for next year can not be ground on such estates unless their owners can negotiate large loans. Many will be unable to do this, so the prediction seems justified that much growing cane will next year be left to rot in the fields.

The municipal governments are many of them prostrate; the police can not be paid, the prisoners can not be fed, and the schools must be closed if not wholly supported from the insular treasury.

From every town and village I am appealed to for financial help, donations; loans are asked, implored even, and the alternative of chaos is predicted as the result of refusal. Proprietors beg for financial help and the homeless for rehabilitation of their dwellings. * * *

I can think of but two measures of relief. Neither alone will fully realize that result, and with a combination of the two the recovery will not be immediate. Unless something is done by the invocation of powers beyond my control, I fear that the conditions prevailing will go from what is now extremely bad to a still worse condition, even to the assumption in certain localities of military government, pure and simple, with hordes of people dependent for their existence on the bounty of the Government of the United States and its people.

I have abstained from any expression of opinion upon this matter until I could have time to investigate the real state of affairs in which the island was left by the calamity, the like of which the people of the United States fortunately have and can have no conception.

It is with hesitancy that I propose measures of relief that have been hitherto unknown, but our country has by assumption of sovereignty over foreign lands and people incurred responsibilities which can not be evaded. By the treaty of Paris nearly 1,000,000 inhabitants of Porto Rico have been brought under the laws of the Union. They are unused to American laws and customs, and have had in the past no power of initiation. They were taught and forced to rely upon the Government in any and every important undertaking or proposition. They have been thoroughly taught to obey, but know little of self-reliance. Is it surprising that the obliteration of one-third of the wealth of the island, other than the soil itself, has been followed with industrial paralysis? So I have to hear the appeals—most piteous appeals—for help from almost every hamlet. They see no way to turn but to the way they have always turned—i. e., to the Government, and as its representative here I must hear and dispose of those appeals.

Many millions of money, as loans, have been asked by municipalities and individuals. I can only give food for the hungry. Should the supply fail, there would be a famine such as in the past has swept over and depopulated large districts in India and China.

What is our duty under these circumstances? Let me here quote the proclamation of Gen. Nelson A. Miles when he took possession of this island:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Ponce, Porto Rico, July 28, 1898.

To the Inhabitants of Porto Rico:

In the prosecution of the war against the Kingdom of Spain by the people of the United States in the cause of liberty, justice, and humanity, its military forces have come to occupy the island of Porto Rico.

They come bearing the banner of freedom, inspired by a noble purpose to seek the enemies of our country and yours and to destroy or capture all who are in armed resistance. They bring you the fostering arm of a nation of free people, whose greatest power is in its justice and humanity to all those living within its fold. Hence the first effect of this occupation will be the immediate release from your former political relations and, it is hoped, a cheerful acceptance of the government of the United States. The chief object of the American military forces will be to overthrow the armed authority of Spain and to give to the people of your beautiful island the largest measure of liberty consistent with this military occupation.

We have not come to make war upon the people of a country that for centuries have been oppressed, but, on the contrary, to bring you protection, not only to yourselves, but, to your property, to promote your prosperity, and bestow upon you the immunities and blessings of the liberal institutions of our Government. It is not our purpose to interfere with any existing laws and customs that are wholesome and beneficial to your people so long as they conform to the rules of military administration of order and justice. This is not a war of devastation, but one to give to all within the control of its military and naval forces the advantages and blessings of enlightened civilization.

NELSON A. MILES,
Major-General Commanding United States Army.

The President of the United States, in his message to the Congress, in giving information as to the state of the Union, spoke these remarkable words:

It had been denied the principal markets she had long enjoyed, and our tariffs have been continued against her products as when she was under Spanish sovereignty; that the markets of Spain are closed to her products except upon terms to which the commerce of all nations is subjected. The island of Cuba, which used to buy her cattle and tobacco without customs duties, now imposes the same duties upon these products as from any other country entering her ports. She has therefore lost her free intercourse with Spain and Cuba, without any compensating benefits in this market. The markets of the United States should be opened up to her products. Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Porto Rico and give her products free access to our markets.

The Secretary of War, in his annual report, says:

The highest considerations of justice and good faith demand that we should not disappoint the confident expectation of sharing in our prosperity with which the people of Porto Rico so gladly transferred their allegiance to the United States, and that we should treat the interest of this people as our own; and I wish most strongly to urge that the customs duties between Porto Rico and the United States be removed.

What has occurred since December to bring about the changed condition of affairs and to disclose to the country a situation unique in the history of Congress, a Republican President deserted by his own party and sustained by practically the entire Democratic minority of this House.

The sugar trust and the tobacco trust have come to the front and have indicated to the Republican campaign manager that not a dollar in contribution need be expected from these interests this coming fall if sugar and tobacco are admitted free. It would be amusing, if it were possible under such distressing circumstance, to listen to the Republican leaders of this House tell of the philanthropic way in which the Government is going to alleviate the poverty and wretchedness of the Porto Ricans by levying taxes on their own products which, if even feasible, must take months before it amounts to a sum that will anywhere near meet the necessities of the case. [Applause.]

Is it not a humiliating confession for the American people to make that after two years of American control the people of the island are in a worse condition than when under the domination of Spain? Do we not know that since this province became part of the United States a hurricane has swept over it, destroying the coffee crop in storehouse and in field, as well as ruining the fields for coffee cultivation for some time to come? If we are to blame for the utter glutting of the warehouses of Porto Rico with thousands of tons of tobacco and sugar, by reason of the taking away of the Cuban and Spanish markets from this people because of the tariff barriers raised by those countries against Porto Rican products after its acquirement by this country, and the coffee crop absolutely destroyed by the hurricane, why are we not bound to grant immediate relief to the people by appropriating money from the Treasury?

I noticed in the report received from the Treasury Department this morning, notwithstanding our enormous war expenses, there is a surplus of nearly $40,000,000 in the eight months of this fiscal year. The Secretary is now engaged, and has been for months, in loaning our money without interest to national banks (which receive exorbitant rates in most instances) for the sake of keeping the money in circulation. Why not appropriate $1,000,000 at once to relieve the immediate wants of those people? Let them understand that this great nation of ours, which has stood before the world for the past century as the exemplar of humanity and liberty, will not allow a territory captured by her own soldiers, and over which the American flag flies, to suffer from starvation and want. [Applause.]

I read an order in last evening's paper from Secretary Root calling for the creation of another regiment of Porto Rican soldiers. In that order he said that the first battalion of native Porto Rican soldiers was such a success that others must follow, and further on in this order the United States cavalry which was on duty there was ordered home. What nation do these soldiers belong to? What flag are they sworn to protect? What constitutional rights do they possess? Can the right of trial by jury be denied them? Can they be denied the right to practice religious worship in any manner they please? Are they to be denied the right to assemble peaceably and petition the Government for a redress of grievances?

Can they be deprived of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness without due process of law? Just consider, Mr. Chairman, the inconsistencies of a government which calls on men to defend the flag, yet denies them the protection of the Constitution. What reason will the Republicans of this House give to the people of the country next year for their change of front on this question? Why are the men who have heretofore been so active in defense of liberty now so prone to slavery? It is in obedience to the call of the protected interests of the country, the trusts and monopolies which have thrived and fattened under the Administration and which hold the Republican party by the throat.

No government can exist upon a policy directly at variance with its time-honored principles. Success may follow for a while; but time betrays its weakness, and it falls to ruin. When one considers the care with which our great charter of liberties was framed, and the safeguards with which it was surrounded to protect human rights, does it seem possible that its framers intended that at any time or in any way Congress, by its mere dictum, could confer the power of life or death, vassalage or servitude, on the inhabitants of territory of the United States?

I am surprised at the use of the words "import" and "export" in this bill. Import and export imply dealings with a foreign country, and yet everybody knows that the American flag is the emblem to which the Porto Ricans have sworn allegiance.

If a foreign foe attacks Porto Rico to-morrow, what forces would be called upon to defend it?

Somebody has made the statement that it is necessary to tax Porto Rican sugar to protect the farmer who raises beet sugar. If this is so, why did we admit Hawaii on equal terms, with its population of Chinese, Japanese, and savages, with but 8,000 Caucasians and producing 240,000 tons of sugar, and refuse to admit Porto Rico, which is right at our shores and contains more than 800,000 Caucasians and produces but 60,000 tons of sugar?

In dealing with this island we should not forget Lincoln's words that—

> Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty.

In doubtful constitutional questions I think it is the part of wisdom to battle for rather than against human rights. [Loud applause.]

I am a firm believer in the policy of expansion, but am unalterably opposed to imperialism. I think it is well that the present legislation has been proposed at this time, as it will clear the atmosphere in regard to the respective attitudes of the two parties in the next campaign. I believe the time will come when the United States will include what is now known as North America. I think it will be done under the protection of the American flag as well as the benign influence of the American Constitution.

I rejoice that it was under Democratic Administration that practically the entire country west of the Mississippi was added to the territory of the United States; and I am proud of the fact that during any of these accessions no attempt was made to saddle any of the new Territories with taxation that was not uniform throughout the country. I have been in favor of sustaining the Government in the present struggle in the Philippines, and I rejoice that the Democratic party has voted every dollar asked for by the Government in the present conflict.

The Philippine Islands should never be annexed as part and parcel of our Government; but they should be retained by this Government until law and order are restored and our obligations to every interest satisfied. Then, when this is done, it is the bounden duty of the United States to help the people of that island to organize a republic which will be free and untrammeled and a living example of the beneficence of this great country. Our trade will then expand by friendship and gratitude, and not by tyranny and subjection. [Loud applause.]

I will close my remarks upon this question with a few quotations from history which bear with remarkable precision upon the present situation of our Government.

The first is from the pen of Mr. Froude, England's valiant champion in her atrocities on the Irish people. I am reminded by this reference of Ireland's sad picture, brought about by unjust taxation and oppression in the same form that we are about to saddle on Porto Rico. Do our Republican friends wish another Ireland saddled to our door? Have they not seen sufficiently the prostitution of the liberties and rights of the Irish people by the English Government to be unwilling to allow this country to occupy the same rôle with Porto Rico? Mr. Froude used these words:

> To the student of political history, and to the English student above all others, the conversion of the Roman republic into a military empire commands a peculiar interest. Notwithstanding many differences, the English and the Romans essentially resemble one another. The early Romans possessed the faculty of self-government beyond any people of whom we have historical knowledge with the one exception of ourselves. In virtue of their temporal freedom, they became the most powerful nation in the known world; and their liberties perished only when Rome became the mistress of conquered races, to whom she was unable or unwilling to extend her privileges. If England was similarly supreme, if all rival powers were eclipsed by her or laid under her feet, the imperial tendencies, which are as strongly marked in us as our love of liberty, might lead us over the same course to the same end. If there be one lesson which history clearly teaches it is this, that free nations can not govern subject provinces. If they are unable or unwilling to admit their dependencies to share their own constitution, the constitution itself will fall in pieces from mere incompetence for its duties.

Gibbon, in his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, uses this significant language:

> The tender respect of Augustus for a free constitution which he had destroyed can only be explained by an attentive consideration of the character of that subtle tyrant.
>
> When he framed the artful system of imperial authority, his moderation was inspired by his fears. He wished to deceive the people by an image of civil liberty, and the armies by an image of civil government. The names and forms of the ancient administration were preserved by him with anxious care. The usual number of consuls, prætors, and tribunes were annually invested with their respective signs of office and continued to discharge some of their least important functions. Cæsar—

Continues Gibbon—

> had provoked his fate by ostentatiously taking the title of king, while he might have reigned as such under the title of consul or tribune. Augustus was sensible that mankind is governed by names; nor was he deceived in his expectation that the senate and people would submit to slavery, provided that they were respectfully assured that they enjoyed their ancient freedom. To explain, in a few words, the system of the imperial government, as it was instituted by Augustus and maintained by those princes who understood their own interest and that of the people, it may be defined as an absolute monarchy disguised by the forms of a commonwealth. The masters of the Roman world environed their throne with darkness, and humbly professed themselves the accountable ministers of the senate, whose supreme decrees they dictated and obeyed. The face of the court corresponded with the forms.

Have we not a fitting parallel in this country to-day? Do not our friends on the other side declaim against imperialism and yet do their actions not belie their words? When we govern the people of our territories as vassals, we cease to be a republic and join in the inevitable march of empire. [Loud applause.]

In the government of Porto Rico we are bound by those principles of justice and equity which are the heritage of this nation.

We have existed as a Government for more than one hundred years. During all this period of time wherever our flag has floated there has reigned with it humanity, progress, and equal rights.

No man has ever ventured at any period of our history to suggest that we should legislate against the products of one State in favor of those of another.

Why take this action against poor down-trodden Porto Rico, with all the trials and tribulations that now surround her?

Action of this kind is indefensible, both in morals and politics, and will never be indorsed by the American people.

If we can not govern Porto Rico so as to give better results than Spain, then we should leave her alone. The personality, so to speak, of the whole nation ought to prevail in this matter, and if it does this island will be governed in furtherance of its own interests and not with any view to its exploitation in the interest of this country.

The extension of this kind of government is in the line of the expansion policy which has characterized the Democratic party's history since the foundation of the Government.

The conquering of foreign territory and its subsequent exploitation for the benefit of this Government, regardless of the interests and rights of the subject province, is the policy of empire which the Republican party now seeks to fasten upon the people of this country. The issue will be fought this coming November. Who can doubt the result? Who dares to say that the American people will ever declare that the Stars and Stripes can float over a subject province and dependent people? [Loud and long continued applause.]

Government by Injunction or Martial Law—Which? We Have Tried Both. Let Us Have No More of Either.

Government by injunction dwindles into a mere misdemeanor when compared with the bull pen and mediæval despotism of martial law in Idaho.

The slaves are no longer below us, but they are among us. We have abolished slavery without having solved the question of labor. In law there are no more slaves—in fact, there are many.

The industrial slaves of 1900 are more in need of William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Lovejoy, John Brown, Whittier, Lowell, and Lincoln than were the negro slaves of our own country or the vassals and serfs of Europe in the mediæval ages.

Agitation and education by organized labor is the best process and the only hope of maintaining free speech, free press, free schools, and a free ballot.

Unorganized labor is the timid, crouching, servile instrument of capital, yielding its head and extending its neck to the yoke of the master. Unorganized labor stands before the American people as a pitiable example of that old saying that "Necessity knows no law." They have become so hungry and so naked that to satisfy their immediate physical wants they are perfectly willing to sacrifice every mental and moral want, not only of themselves, but of their posterity, even to the fourth generation and all the other generations. Unorganized labor promises to the people of the United States nothing except in the final analysis a condition of labor not unlike that in China and India.

SPEECH

OF

HON. JOHN J. LENTZ,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 28, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes—

Mr. LENTZ said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I certainly fail to understand the application of the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY] to the question under discussion. I think he, as well as the rest of us, understands that these two proposed amendments are here largely to prevent the repetition of the injustice done in the Debs case, in Chicago. That case, above all others, attracted the attention of the people to the subject of government by injunction or the possible arrogance and despotism of a Federal judge, who does not go back to his people for reelection or approval once in five or six years, but who goes upon the bench by social pull or political favor for life, and, having gotten that place, commits acts of despotism under the power to punish for contempt or what is now better known as government by injunction.

For instance, the court has stated to a man, "You shall not go to your fellow-workers in reference to seeking employment or working in this mine or for that railroad," and then, some one having accused his fellow-man of violating this order, he is brought into court upon one affidavit, as against a dozen affidavits on the other side, and yet the judge may take the testimony of the one against the testimony of a dozen and imprison a man for six weeks or six months; and why not six years or sixty years? It is only a question of time when the terms of imprisonment will be lengthened; and what is to prevent the judge from exercising that power in that arbitrary way?

Now, I contend that it is just the same as if the judge were to send out a decree that no man in this District shall be a horse thief, no man in this District shall be a housebreaker, no man in this District shall commit murder, and if afterwards the judge thinks that a man is guilty of such an offense the judge may send out and have him arrested on an affidavit or two; and because he has issued such an order the man accused can be imprisoned, at the discretion of the judge, without the time-honored right of a trial by jury.

Mr. LINNEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question there?

Mr. LENTZ. Certainly.

Mr. LINNEY. In all these cases of contempt, is there not a right of appeal, where the party charged with the alleged contempt can have his case reviewed?

Mr. LENTZ. The gentleman certainly knows there is no such thing as the right of appeal. The gentleman certainly knows that the court refused Debs that right, because they held that they had no power to review the discretion of the court imposing the punishment. They dismissed the appeal on the ground that the judge whose order was treated with contempt was the one to determine that matter.

Mr. LINNEY. And held that the court had properly disposed of it.

Mr. LENTZ. What I am opposed to is imprisonment at the discretion of the court in connection with contempts committed beyond the presence and possible knowledge of the judge. I am opposed to clothing a Federal judge, whom we send into Alaska or elsewhere, with power to punish as for contempt disobedience to his order, which may have taken place 10 miles or 100 miles away from the presence of the court. What I insist upon is that we shall not invest a court with the right to send a man to prison for months or years, depending on the resentment of the judge or the persecution of the party complaining; but that there shall be a jury of the man's peers called in, and that there shall be a finding on the evidence whether this man has committed a contempt or not; and, having committed a contempt, I would be in favor of going still further and allowing that jury to impose the penalty.

There are States in this Union where the jury is allowed to determine the penalty to be imposed for the crime committed. This government by injunction is aimed at labor organizations, and there is no reason why a disinterested jury should not fix the penalty just as in other cases.

Mr. LINNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there? The question is, as most of these contempt cases are of a summary character, if it were to be modified now as you are suggesting with reference to a jury, will not that deprive that branch of the law of its summary character altogether?

Mr. LENTZ. I want to deprive it of that summary character. That is precisely what I would do. I want to strike out entirely the discretion, and would rather have twelve good and disinterested men than a judge, who might be influenced by personal prejudice or resentment, have the power of sending a man to jail. I would rather have twelve such men as are found in a jury box than any judge sent out by the President of the United States, I do not care whether that President is Mr. Bryan or Mr. McKinley. It is not a question of who it is. I think it would be safer to leave it to the community than to a judge who was appointed for life, and who at best is but human, and it is human to err.

But why dwell on the tyranny of government by injunction, which dwindles into a mere misdemeanor when compared with the bull pen and mediæval despotism inaugurated by Governor Steunenberg and perpetuated by President McKinley, Commander in Chief, using the military forces in the Cœur d'Alene district of Idaho under the name of "martial law?" Let us talk no more of Armenian outrages or atrocities of the unspeakable Turk. Let us make our apologies to Russia, and let us beg the pardon of degenerate Spain for the harsh things we said about her treatment of the Cubans and the Filipinos.

It was De Tocqueville who inquired—

Can it be believed that democracy, which has overthrown the feudal system and vanquished kings, will retreat before tradesmen and capitalists?

Had he lived forty years longer and witnessed the use of the United States troops by President McKinley in Idaho, at the demand of mine-owning capitalists, imprisoning more than a thousand men in the Idaho bull pen, without so much as an affidavit, or an indictment, or a warrant, or a trial, or a conviction against any one of them, he would not have asked the question, but would probably have repeated the famous remark of the historian Grote, who said:

I have lived long enough to outlive my faith in government by the majority. I have lived long enough to learn that there is no such tyranny as the tyranny of a majority.

The problem which confronts us is not merely an inquiry into the arbitrary and despotic use of the military branch of the National Government, but in connection with this we are also confronted with sociological and economic questions which strike their roots deeper in American soil than the bottom of the deepest mine in the Cœur d'Alene district.

In the language of Mr. Dole, in his introduction to Tolstoi's work entitled What To Do, I repeat:

Great social questions face us. They are rising like ominous storm clouds above the horizon, not only in what are sometimes called the "effete monarchies" of the Old World, but here in this New World, in this favored land. Thoughtful men and women are everywhere busying themselves with their solution.

Side by side with the portentous increase of wealth is the more portentous increase of destitution and crime. On the one side, unheard-of luxury; on the other, desperate poverty. On the one side, pride and idleness; on the other, beggary and anarchy. There are warnings in history—two mighty warnings—the fall of Rome, the French Revolution. Rome sowed the wind and reaped the whirlwind. The French aristocracy cried, "Après nous le deluge;" but the deluge came while, not after; it was a deluge of blood.

Modern civilization is sowing the whirlwind. What shall we or our children reap? There are enormous wrongs. Can they be righted while yet there is time? How?

And in solving this problem let us not forget the words of the Teacher who told us that—

No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye can not serve God and Mammon.

This is as true of nations as it is of individuals. It is as true of national policy as it is of individual character.

The immortal Henry George, in the ninth chapter of his Social Problems, has spoken in a language peculiarly suggestive and helpful to anyone desiring to make an intelligent and comprehensive analysis of the troubles in the Cœur d'Alene district of Idaho. I refer to these words:

Whoever considers the political and social problems that confront us must see that they center in the problem of the distribution of wealth, and he must also see that, though their solution may be simple, it must be radical.

For every social wrong there must be a remedy. But the remedy can be nothing less than the abolition of the wrong. Halfway measures, mere ameliorations and secondary reforms, can at any time accomplish little, and in the long run avail nothing. Our charities, our penal laws, our restrictions and prohibitions, by which, with so little avail, we endeavor to assuage poverty and check crime—what are they, at the very best, but the device of the clown, who, having put the whole burden of his ass into one pannier, sought to enable the poor animal to walk straight by loading up the other pannier with stones?

Let high moral and philosophic considerations of justice and equity inspire the American citizen to hear both sides of the question of the Idaho bull-pen before he determines which is the cause and which is the effect. And while inquiring let him not forget the thought of Amiel, who said:

If the measure of a civilization is to be the number of perfected men that it produces, we are still far from this model people. The slaves are no longer below us but they are among us. Barbarism is no longer at our frontiers; it lives side by side with us. The world grows more majestic but man diminishes. Why is this? Is it because we have abolished slavery without having solved the question of labor? In law there are no more slaves—in fact there are many.

And the wage slave whom Amiel recognized throughout Europe has brothers and sisters who are wage slaves not only in New York and Chicago, but also in the Cœur d'Alene district of Idaho.

A subsidized and syndicated press has, by suppression of many of the facts and by distortion of many others, led many of our people to believe that the Cœur d'Alene labor trouble is summed up in the statement that certain men belonging to labor unions blew up a mill, and that the governor of Idaho and the President of the United States imprisoned these men and punished them for that crime. If that were the case, if that were the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, I should have nothing further to say on the subject, except to withdraw my resolution for investigation and confess that I had been misled when I filed it.

But I propose to submit herewith, in as brief a compass as possible, an abstract of the facts and the history of the Cœur d'Alene labor troubles, which I believe ought to convince any fair-minded American citizen that the smallest crime committed in the Cœur d'Alene district was the blowing up of the mill, and that greater crimes were committed by those who violated the statutes of the State of Idaho and the constitutions of the State of Idaho and of the United States under the arrogance and despotism of martial law.

In addition to my own statement, I appeal to the conscientious citizen to read the testimony in its entirety as taken before the Military Committee, and if that be asking too much time, I then appeal to the fair-minded to be honest enough with themselves and their neighbors to read the extracts from the testimony and the comments thereon made by Prof. James A. Collins, ex-editor of the National Economist and statistician in the Eleventh Census, who has carefully read again and again the entire testimony, and who was frequently in attendance during the progress of the hearing, and whose age, learning, and experience peculiarly fit him for the analysis and abstract which I shall attach hereto and incorporate with my remarks.

To present the Cœur d'Alene case in a nut shell, suffice it to say it began with a strike of union and nonunion employees in the mine of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company, at Wardner, for wages equal to the wages paid at Burke, at Gem, at Mullen, and all the other mines in the Cœur d'Alene district, the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company having paid lower wages for several years than was paid by any other mine in that country, although it is one of the richest lead mines in the world. The managers of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan yielded and agreed to pay the same wages as was paid in the other mines, but in connection with this announcement they also announced that all union men must quit their employ. This was a violation on the part of the mining company of a statute of Idaho which prohibits employers from discriminating against union laborers among their employees, and accordingly the men continued the strike.

The management of the mining company appealed to the governor for protection. The governor suggested to the mining company that they arbitrate the differences in accordance with another statute of the State requiring arbitration. Again the Bunker Hill and Sullivan violated this statute of the State, wiring the governor their refusal to arbitrate. In other words, in the arrogance and insolence of a corporation without a soul, the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company defiantly committed the two crimes of violating two statutes of Idaho, the one preventing discrimination against union labor and the other requiring arbitration in cases of difference.

Following these two violations of the law a large number of unknown men met at Wardner on the 29th of April and blew up the concentrating mill of the Bunker Hill & Sullivan Company, a mill which the management by their sworn statement had placed on the tax duplicate of the county at a valuation of $51,000, but after it was destroyed, it was heralded to the world as a mill worth $250,000. If it be true that the mill was worth $250,000, then the management by perjury avoided paying taxes on $200,000 worth of their property, and compelled their poor neighbors who owned the small homes in that county to pay that much additional tax for the benefit of this gigantic and greedy corporation.

In other words, the corporation, in addition to being guilty of the two violations of law already mentioned, was guilty of a third, that of perjury, and fourth, that of theft, in thus compelling their poorer neighbors to take out of their pockets a sum sufficient to pay into the county treasury to make good that which was withheld from the county by the management of the mining company in their perjured statement that the mill was worth only $51,000.

Following the destruction of the mill, the governor, on the night of the 29th of April, wired to President McKinley for troops, claiming that Shoshone County was in a state of insurrection. On the following day, the 30th of April, D. C. Mills wired the Secretary of War; also James L. Houghteling, of Winnetka, Ill., wired the Secretary of War and the President for troops, and also the following telegram was sent direct to the President:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., April 30, 1899.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY, President United States:

As representative and treasurer of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company, I earnestly indorse the request of the governor of Idaho to the effect that Federal troops be ordered to protect our property, now in the course of destruction.

Very respectfully, WILLIAM S. CROCKER,
Banker, San Francisco.

It will be observed that to the signature of William S. Crocker was added the word "banker," it being evidently the theory and the purpose of Mr. Crocker to appeal to the President's well-known subserviency to the capitalists. And in this connection I submit another telegram, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 30, 1899.

J. ADDISON PORTER, Secretary to the President:

An armed mob has destroyed valuable property in Wardner, Idaho, in which Jack Hammond, James Houghteling, and others of your friends are interested. The governor has asked for Federal troops. Please lend your interest to this appeal with the President.

HERMAN B. BUTLER.

Consider carefully the language of Mr. Butler. It is not a telegram to Mr. Porter, but a telegram to Porter as secretary to the President. In other words and in substance, a telegram to the President. And again, note how pregnant are the three lines of this telegram. The property destroyed at Wardner, Mr. Butler says, is property in which Jack Hammond and James Houghteling, and others of your friends are interested—Jack Hammond, one of the Jamieson raiders of South Africa, who was condemned to death for treason, and spared and pardoned only by the leniency of Oom Paul Kruger. And as to the expression "others of your friends are interested," we shall probably never have much light or information. Suffice it to say that Mr. Butler's telegram and Banker Crocker's telegram are couched in such terms and so full of suggestion that one can not help thinking of the letter sent by Mr. Hepburn from the Standard Oil Bank to the Treasury Department reminding Secretary Gage of the valuable services rendered by the directors of the bank in the campaign of 1896. Was it the request of the governor or the sight draft drawn by the bankers and capitalists on the President which secured the use of the Army for the benefit of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company in the Cœur d'Alene district?

After the United States troops arrived the evidence shows that the officers and attorneys of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company were daily and almost constantly in close communion with General Merriam and his subordinate officers, and that many hundreds of men were arrested and imprisoned and subjected—many for several days, many for several weeks, many for several months—to all the indignities, humiliations, hardships, and losses of their time and their business without even so much as an accusation, or an indictment, or a warrant, or other process of law against them.

In less than a week after the troops had arrived the "ironclad" and "blacklisting" system, called the "permit" system, was devised and formulated by and with the assistance of Mr. Lindley, the attorney of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan. In fact, the evidence is quite sufficient that Mr. Lindley, the able attorney of San Francisco, was really the controlling spirit, and that General Merriam and Bartlett Sinclair carried into effect, by way of military orders under martial law, the designs and schemes of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company, as formulated and presented by their San Francisco lawyer, Mr. Lindley.

I shall not dwell at length on the outrages and the infamous treatment of the men in the bull pen, because I feel confident that every sane man will put himself for a moment, in his imagination, in prison without warrant, and without process, say for a night, or a week, or a month, or six months, without any privilege of writ of habeas corpus, or any other privilege or right except that conceded at the point of bayonets held by men who were really under the control directly of the United States Army, who in turn were under the control of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company, by reason of the subserviency of Governor Steunenberg and the indifference or collusion of the President of the United States.

The details of these outrages will appear sufficiently in the summary of Professor Collins. By use of this blacklisting permit system Dr. France, a young physician in the employ of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company, practically drove out from Shoshone County, Idaho, as tramps and outcasts, 1,500 union laborers, together with their wives and children, compelling them to seek a livelihood somewhere, anywhere, everywhere on the face of the earth by depriving them of that God-given right to labor in the community where they had established themselves and their homes.

Quoting one of my friends, I desire to say: The right to labor is the highest and most sacred of all human rights. Deprive man of that right and you at once deprive him of the right to life. All other rights are dependent upon and subordinate to this right. Everything in the physical and social world testifies that the supreme purpose of this life is labor. The science of human anatomy and human physiology alike proclaim it. It is manifest in the provision for varied and complex movement in the jointed skeleton, the contractile muscles, and the power-supplying apparatus of digestion and circulation.

The function of every organ testifies that the purpose of this life is labor. Moreover, God has created man with certain physical wants, upon the satisfaction of which depend not only the maintenance of his physical life, but also the development of his higher and nobler nature. He has made the satisfaction of these wants dependent on man's labor, giving him the power and laying on him the obligation to labor—a power that distinguishes him from all other animals and enables him to become as it were a helper in the creative work.

With what other power is man by his Creator clothed save the power of exercising his own faculties? Nature acknowledges no demand save the demand of labor. In no other way can her treasures be drawn forth or her powers utilized and controlled. She is an absolutely impartial mistress and makes no discriminations among men. All men to her stand on the same level and have equal rights. She acknowledges no claim but that of labor, and acknowledges that without regard to the claimant. The laws of nature are the decrees of God, and it behooves nations as well as individuals to respect them.

There is written in them broadly and distinctly the right of all men to labor and to enjoy the results. At the call of labor the ore is raised from the vein, the forest tree transformed to finished lumber, and cotton and wool converted to cloth. It was because these autocratic and despotic mine bosses would deprive American citizens of the God-given and inalienable right to labor that caused the destruction of the concentrator at the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine. These petty tyrants would contravene the laws of nature and nature's God, as well as the laws of Idaho.

And who is this Dr. France, who was placed in control of the liberty of all the union and nonunion men of Shoshone County? According to his own testimony, he is a young physician who made himself agreeable and acceptable to the managers of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, and they placed him and still keep him in a position where they levy a tax of a dollar a month upon each one of their 500 employees for his benefit, and in addition to this he secures additional pay from the 200 miners of the Last Chance mine, and in case he has occasion to treat the wives or children he receives still more pay.

Thus it will be seen that through his catering to the management of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, he is enabled to pocket an income somewhere between $8,000 and $10,000 a year, although he struck that community a stranger and a wanderer, without friends or acquaintances seven years ago. Is this such an impartial and fair-minded representative of the law of the land that he is fitted even in the least to determine the rights of men to earn their living in Shoshone County?

At the beginning of the strike the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company caused all the difficulty by making war on union labor. Is it fair or equitable on the part of Governor Steunenberg or President McKinley to permit, even for a single day, this henchman of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan to pass judicially upon the rights of men and women and children to live in the Cœur d'Alene district? Is this man capable of an impartial and just discrimination as to the rights of the men and women and children in that community, when he is receiving three or four times as much of a salary annually, through the agency of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company, as he would be able to earn in any other community on earth?

Is this the way the chief executives of a State and a nation are to administer justice? Let honest men stop and consider. Let true Americans ask themselves whether Weyler had any more power, or exercised his arbitrary will with any more malice against Cubans when he starved them to death, than did this Dr. France when he starved the 1,500 men and their wives and children out of a home in the State of Idaho and drove them to the four quarters of the globe.

To bring the infamous despotism established by the use of the United States Army in the Cœur d'Alene district more plainly before the mind's eye I invite attention for a moment to the present street-railway strike in the city of St. Louis. Suppose the governor of that State should wire the President for troops, declaring the city of St. Louis to be in a state of insurrection. Suppose a few capitalists, owners of the street railway, should wire the President that they and others of his friends are interested. Suppose the President should send the troops to St. Louis. Suppose the governor should declare martial law and place the city of St. Louis under the control of the Army.

Suppose the officers of the street railway company should send for Lawyer Lindley, of San Francisco, and he should advise the blacklisting permit system recently found so effective in Idaho, and suppose the street railway company has some subservient tool named Dr. France, who was receiving by and through the power of the street railway company three or four times as much salary as he could earn anywhere else on earth, and suppose this Dr. France, of St. Louis, should be authorized and empowered to sign permits, and suppose this Dr. France, in collusion with the managers of the street railway, should decide that it was for the best interests of the street railway company to drive all union labor out of the city of St. Louis, and to drive all men of whatsoever organization out of the city if they showed any sympathy for the striking street railway employees.

This would be martial law in St. Louis. This would be more effective than any ironclad or blacklisting system ever dreamed of by railway or manufacturing corporations. This would destroy the carpenters' unions, the horseshoers' unions, the bakers' unions, the typographical unions, and all the other unions of the city of St. Louis, and the same system extended will eventually destroy all the labor unions of the United States; and when you destroy the labor unions of the United States, you have destroyed the men who keep the small lamps of liberty lighted and burning. Unorganized labor, whether in the factory or on the farm, is losing ground year by year and day by day, and the hope of the American Republic remains in the debates and discussions kept alive in the lodges of the brotherhoods of organized labor. I repeat that government by injunction dwindles into a mere misdemeanor when compared with the bull pen and mediæval despotism of martial law in Idaho.

Recently I was honored by an invitation from New York City extended by the Workingmen's Committee of One Hundred to address them on the subject, "Abraham Lincoln." A part of what I then said I repeat here, as reported in the Journal of the Knights of Labor, as follows:

LINCOLN AND LIBERTY.

Immediately after Edward Markham had read his famous poem on Lincoln, Congressman LENTZ was introduced by the chairman and spoke, in part, as follows:

When I accepted the invitation of the Workingmen's Committee of One Hundred, I was advised that I was to answer to the toast, "Abraham Lincoln," and with no other thought than that I reached the Lexington Opera House, took my seat among the distinguished gentlemen here at this table, to be surprised when I opened the menu card to find opposite my name the subject: "Militarism—The Idaho bull pen."

However wide may appear to be the gap between the subject "Lincoln" and the words "bull pen," yet, my friends, I hope before I finish what I have to say that you will be convinced that there is in fact a very close connection between these two subjects.

The potency and inspiration of the name of Lincoln is due almost entirely to the fact that his life was devoted to the cause of liberty. It is a peculiarly happy coincidence that there is an alliteration in the name of Lincoln and the word "liberty." [Applause.]

Before Lincoln had gone far in his work as President of the United States—in fact, in his very first annual message to Congress—he gave the key and synopsis of his life work in this sentence concerning the relations of labor and capital:

Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the higher consideration.

[Applause.]

Such was the solemn judgment and the holy conviction of the greatest man in the President's chair since the day of Thomas Jefferson. It was this same Lincoln who said "This nation can not exist half slave and half free." It was this same Lincoln who at Gettysburg said:

The world will little note nor long remember what we say here; but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us; that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

[Applause.]

Can anyone review this philosophy of Lincoln and tolerate for a moment the thought of his being found to-day in company with those who, in their greed, are making war on the Filipinos or making war on labor unions? [Great applause.]

It is Scriptural, I believe, that "he who neglects his own family is worse than the heathen." In other words, I question the purposes of the man who prates about civilizing and reforming the other side of the earth while millions of homes in our own land are denied the ordinary comforts and privileges of decent and ennobling opportunities for bettering and improving the condition of the children living and yet unborn. [Applause.]

Until two years ago our National Government was spending about $23,000,000 annually through the War Department.

To-day we are appropriating about $125,000,000 for the Army, and enough more for the Navy to make the round figures about $200,000,000 a year.

The American citizen who is unable to see in these mammoth figures the plain demonstration that we have already begun our mad career of militarism and imperialism, and are rushing headlong toward despotism, is incapable of logical reasoning and unworthy of citizenship in this Republic.

Many of our conscientious people are confessing from day to day that they are alarmed at the rapid growth of militarism in this country and the many manifestations that the present policy of our Government is purely an imitation policy, patterned and fashioned absolutely after the example set by the monarchies of Europe. Notwithstanding the fact that the light is dawning upon many who have apparently been asleep, yet there are many others who seem to need further evidences that the policy of our Government is departing at right angles from the lines projected by all the patriots and statesmen from Washington to Lincoln; and to those who are still in doubt as to the real meaning of the signs of the times I appeal for an earnest and careful consideration of the facts involved in a study of what took place on both sides in connection with the labor troubles in the Cœur d'Alene district of Idaho.

To begin with, there is a statute in the State of Idaho providing for fine and imprisonment of any employer who discriminates against labor organizations, and there is another statute which requires arbitration of differences between employer and employees. [Applause.]

The people of the State of Idaho, by their legislation, clearly indicate that they recognize what you and I recognize to be a fact; that unless labor is organized the last hope of free institutions will be wiped from the face of the earth. I regret exceedingly that throughout this country the lyceum, the debating society, the town meetings, and all other institutions calculated to stimulate free thought and free speech are rapidly disappearing. Organized labor is to-day substantially the only institution which offers an opportunity for discussing public policies, economic questions, and the rights of man. As James B. Smiley says:

No one can ignore the unrest of the times, and many a voice cries out against the existence of tramps and paupers and hollow-eyed hunger in the midst of unparalleled wealth. In all our cities the squalor of the slums mocks the luxury of the palace. Many workers suffer want—many idlers live in luxury.

These are the shameful and monstrous conditions of industrial slavery in 1900, and they are much worse than were the conditions of negro slavery in 1860. The industrial slaves of 1900 are more in need of William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Lovejoy, John Brown, Whittier, Lowell, and Lincoln than were the negro slaves of our own country or the vassals and serfs of Europe in the mediæval ages.

Agitation and education by organized labor is the best process and the only hope of maintaining free speech, free press, free schools, and a free ballot.

Unorganized labor is the timid, crouching, servile instrument of capital, yielding its head and extending its neck to the yoke of the master. Unorganized labor stands before the American people as a pitiable example of that old saying that "Necessity knows no law." They have become so hungry and so naked that to satisfy their immediate physical wants they are perfectly willing to sacrifice every mental and moral want, not only of themselves, but of their posterity, even to the fourth generation and all the other generations. Unorganized labor promises to the people of the United States nothing except in the final analysis a condition of labor not unlike that in China and India.

Year by year, generation by generation, unorganized labor will continue to carry the masses of humanity downward and downward in their subserviency, not to feudal lords this time, but to the trust barons, until the millions and hundreds of millions who are to people the American Republic will be mere herds of dumb, driven cattle. In organized labor alone I see the salvation of unorganized labor. [Applause.]

The use of the military in Idaho is not in punishment of the men who destroyed a few dollars' worth of property; but, on the contrary, the governor of that State and William McKinley, acting in concert, and, as I believe, in collusion with the owners of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, have maintained martial law in Shoshone County, in the State of Idaho, and during the maintenance of martial law they have kept in prison many hundreds of men, and by their blacklisting permit system have prevented many more hundreds from the right to labor, and it is estimated that in the aggregate the losses inflicted upon the union workmen of that district by depriving them of the right to labor aggregated at least a million dollars.

Was not the martial law which destroyed a million dollars' worth of property of poor men a matter of concern to the President of the United States? Was he not more riotous in this despotism and violation of the Constitution than were the men who blew up the mill?

In addition to this loss there must be added to it the enormous loss to the other labor organizations of the United States, who by their charity supported the wives and children of these men throughout that long period, and all this was done by the President of the United States, by and with the use of the United States Army, for the ultimate and sole purpose of destroying the labor unions of that community.

Is any one of you aware of anything in American history on a par with this? In the hundred and odd years of the history of the forty-five States of the Union the law of the tyrant and the despot has never been thought of for any such period as that just witnessed in Idaho. [Applause.] Many men overlook the difference between martial law and military police.

Martial law is the law of war, the law of a conqueror invading a foreign country, invading the land of an enemy. A Roman general or a Mohammedan chief, with sword and fire, invades the country of a people whom he proposes to subjugate. He has neither time nor opportunity nor inclination to establish civil law, and for the time being his will, the arbitrary and unlimited caprice or whim of the military despot, is the only law of the land. This is martial law.

In America it is specifically provided in the Constitution of the United States that martial law should never be resorted to by the Chief Executive of the nation or any governor of any State except in two cases specifically mentioned in the Constitution: One, invasion; the other, rebellion—the one meaning in case of military necessity, when our own country has been invaded by a foreign enemy; the other, when the people of our own country rise up and undertake to overthrow the Government.

And for martial law, in case of a riot, there is absolutely no provision either in the Constitution of the United States or the constitution of Idaho. Both specifically limit the application of martial law to "invasion" and "rebellion," and in neither of these constitutions is the word "riot" or "insurrection" or "malicious destruction of private property" mentioned as a cause for the exercise of the law of a tyrant and a despot on the part of either the governor of the State or the President of the United States. [Great applause.]

Suppose one man murders another. There is no constitutional warrant for martial law. Suppose ten men or a hundred men kill one man. There is no warrant nor legal authority for martial law. Injury either to the property or the liberty of an individual is specifically an offense under the Constitution of the nation and States, to be punished by courts and juries, and in such cases the military power can be called into force only to assist the sheriff in making the arrest, to bring the accused before the civil court sitting to give the man indicted by due process of law a fair trial by a jury of his peers.

We had the riots in Chicago, but no one has forgotten that even there we did not resort to martial law, but merely made use of the military as a police, notwithstanding the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property.

We had a riot in Ohio which burned down the court-house in Cincinnati, and the riot continued for several days; but we did not establish martial law. We merely used the military arm as a police, notwithstanding the destruction of public property and public records and the halls of justice.

At Homestead there was no resort to martial law, but rather to military police.

At Hazleton, where innocent miners were shot in the back, the governor did not exercise the right of martial law.

In the great strike at Pittsburg in 1877, where millions of dollars' worth of property was destroyed, it was not considered necessary to resort to martial law; but in Idaho, where nothing was done except that the mill of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company was blown up, because of the prejudice and the ill will that the Bunker Hill had created against itself through years of gross conduct, the governor of the State and the President of the Union established martial law and denied the writ of habeas corpus; and these men, thus imprisoned from four to six months, not permitted to give bail or bond for their liberty, and all the while that they were kept in this prison their wives and their children were absolutely ignored, no one of whom was ever furnished, either by the President of the United States or the governor of the State, with even so much as a loaf of bread; and had it not been for organized labor throughout the Republic women and children would have been left naked and hungry, even to starvation.

Men were imprisoned who were not miners—for instance, shoe dealers, butchers, merchants, druggists, clerks, teachers, traveling men, and all classes—and were imprisoned merely because they were believed to be in sympathy with organized labor.

One man was kept imprisoned for four months who is the owner of probably fifty to one hundred thousand dollars' worth of property, and when he was finally released he was told that they had found that the charges against him were not true, and upon his inquiry as to what the charges were, he was told that he was suspected of being too friendly to one of the men who was accused of crime.

Now, I submit to you to think for a moment of yourselves being under indictment for some crime. Suppose under martial law your relatives and your friends upon whom you might depend for assistance in making your defense and in bringing into court witnesses who are in possession of information of your innocence; suppose that these friends and witnesses were arrested and imprisoned until after your trial, and then released, after you had been convicted, would you consider that you had been living in a free country? Would you believe that you had a fair and impartial trial by a jury of your peers? Such are some of the outrages perpetrated in Idaho under martial law.

Under martial law men were compelled to testify before an inquisition, without the privilege or presence of an attorney.

This despotic power of martial law is being used this very day in Shoshone County to drive union men away from a county wherein they have lived for the last fifteen years; where they have constructed and equipped a hospital at a cost of $50,000; where they have owned and maintained their own cemetery; where their children have been born and were being educated in the public schools, which the union men themselves had organized and established. This despotic power exercised by the use of the military of the United States is being used to break up an institution that keeps alive in its union halls the discussion and consideration of many social and public questions; to break up an institution which furnishes the halls in that community in which all public lectures and theatricals are given; to break up an institution which provides by monthly assessment a fund to maintain this magnificent hospital and to provide for the many misfortunes, injuries, accidents, and diseases which are common in that particular district; and all this because one mining company persistently insulted and outraged organized labor by discharging every member the very instant it found that a union man was in its employ!

All these outrages in the name of martial law have been and are being perpetrated because one mining company, although declaring dividends from thirty thousand to sixty thousand dollars a month, is determined to destroy union labor and reduce the wages of its employees! Such is the prostitution of the American eagle by the governmental forces in this day of militarism and imperialism! [Loud applause.]

This Abraham Lincoln, whose birth you commemorate and celebrate, ought to be here now fighting and bleeding that the industrial slave might be free. Militarism is abroad in the land. Martial law and despotism is rampant in Idaho. How long, if this is tolerated there, will it be in reaching the labor unions of New York and Ohio?

All that has been perpetrated in Idaho has been perpetrated in the name of law, but actually done in anarchy. The President of the United States and the governor of Idaho have been partners and tools under the direction and control of capitalists, who are determined to reduce the wages of labor until no hope for books, or musical instruments, or pictures shall ever again light up the minds of the boys and girls in the homes of the wage-earners. Is it a crime to belong to labor unions? If so, William McKinley and Governor Steunenberg are right in their perpetuation of martial law in Idaho. If it is not a crime to belong to labor unions, then William McKinley and Governor Steunenberg are worse than despots, and worse than anarchists, because they have intelligence enough to know the plain language of the constitutions of the United States and Idaho.

But the members of the social four hundred are too torpid and too sleepy to care. They belong to the same class of high priests and chief people who crucified Christ. History repeats itself, and in this day it is necessary that history should quickly repeat itself and produce for us another Lincoln, who will say from the high executive place of the President of the United States that "Labor is prior to and independent of capital; capital is only the fruit of labor. Labor is the superior of capital, and deserves much the higher consideration." Unless such a President is elected by the people of this Republic the time is not very far distant when every laborer will have a soldier to carry on his back as he goes to his work. [Great applause.]

Now, my friends, I think I have demonstrated what I said to you at the beginning:

> The time is ripe, and rotten ripe, for change.
> There is more force in names * * *
> Than most of men dream of; and a lie will keep
> Its throne a whole age longer if it skulk
> Behind the sound of some fair seeming name.
> Let us call tyrants, tyrants; * * *
> For men in earnest have no time to waste
> In patching fig leaves for the naked truth.

And I hope when you go away from this meeting to-night, and when you awake in the morning, that your first thought will be on the subject of the "rights of man," and I hope you will be permeated and inspired by the same spirit that moved and controlled James Russell Lowell, in the days of the black slave, when he said:

> Is true freedom but to break
> Fetters for our own dear sake,
> And with leathern hearts forget
> That we owe mankind a debt?
> No! true freedom is to share
> All the chains our brothers wear;
> And with heart and hand to be
> Earnest to make others free.
>
> They are slaves who fear to speak
> For the fallen and the weak.
> They are slaves who will not choose
> Hatred, scoffing, and abuse,
> Rather than in silence shrink
> From the truth they needs must think!
> They are slaves who dare not be
> In the right with two or three.

[Round after round of applause, participated in by all present.]

But since I made the foregoing remarks before the workingmen's banquet I have heard it urged as against the miners of the Cœur d'Alene district that they had a strike there in 1892 which resulted in the death of several men on each side in a contest between the miners and certain Pinkerton employees. In short, it was a repetition in the West of substantially the same thing which took place at Homestead in 1892, in the East, and if there is reason now for maintaining martial law in Idaho, why not establish the despotism of martial law in Pennsylvania?

The Republican majority of the Military Committee, arguing further in support of their condemnation of the miners' unions and their complete indorsement of all the barbarity, brutality, militarism, and repudiation of statutes and constitutions by the president of the union and the governor of Idaho, offer as an excuse for this mediæval despotism a recital of a few gross crimes committed in a mining country in a period of fifteen years in a country which, as one of the witnesses testified, has been entirely developed since 1885—in fact, so much developed that Wallace, the county seat of Shoshone County, a small city of 2,800 people, did not even have so much as a name nor the beginning of an existence in the year 1885.

Of the thousands of men who rushed into that country, some to remain for a few weeks and others for a few months, and others for years, constantly coming and going as men do in newly discovered mining communities, there were as a matter of course many gamblers and adventurers who put in their appearance during the first few years, but the evidence shows that since 1892 proportionately no more crimes have been committed in that community than in the city of Spokane, Wash., or any other city.

It is also urged by the Republican majority that because certain men blew up this mill of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan and then dispersed, many of them leaving the country and many of them returning to their work, that therefore constitutional guaranties could be ignored and the rights of man held for naught. Let the honest man inquire and ask himself why it was that these men on their way down to Wardner did not stop to do so much injury as scratching with a pin or the finger nail any one of the other dozen or score of mining properties in that community.

These men did not destroy property merely because they were wicked or insane. The destruction of this mill, unreasonable as it may have been, was simply the outcry and protest of men who saw a greedy corporation bent upon depriving them and their children of any hope in life except that of being mere beasts of burden. These men who destroyed this mill in their helplessness to secure their rights under the statute for arbitration or their rights under the statute against discrimination, like a child in misery or in pain, made this explosion their outcry, that fair-minded men might hear them and inquire into the matter, since the governor of the State had shown no disposition to compel the mining corporation to perform its obligations, specifically provided for in the statute of the State.

The Republican majority of the committee compliments the governor in his courage. The Democratic minority of the committee would compliment him much more in his courage had he shown that kind of courage as an executive which would stand up and compel the capitalists owning the mines to obey the laws of the State, even though it should make the mining corporation such an enemy of the governor that the governor might not secure a seat in the United States Senate a little later on.

There is much more that could be said and should be said in this connection, but I prefer at this point to submit to you the report of the Democratic minority of the Committee on Military Affairs, in which you will observe every Democrat on the committee concurs and subscribes his name. It is as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

On the 29th day of April, 1899, from 800 to 1,000 men went to the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, situate near Wardner, in Shoshone County, Idaho, and blew up the concentrator of that mine.

During the progress of the commission of this crime two men were murdered by those engaged in perpetrating this outrage; the citizens of Wardner were terrorized, and the officers of the law were powerless to prevent the crimes and outrages which took place on that day. This crime can not be too severely condemned. Nothing can extenuate it, and its authors deserve the severest punishment which the law can mete out to them.

After the crime had been committed the perpetrators of it dispersed. According to the evidence before the committee, three or four hundred of those engaged in it fled from the county of Shoshone into the State of Montana and into British Columbia. This evidence is reenforced by a telegram of General Merriam sent to the Adjutant General of the Army on May 4, 1899:

WARDNER, IDAHO, May 4, 1899.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL ARMY, Washington, D. C.:

Inquest still in progress with closed doors. One hundred and twenty-eight arrests made by State officials under military support. No signs of resistance, but indications are most leaders of mob have escaped, going east or west into Montana and Washington; others hidden in the mountains. Sheriff at Thompsons Falls, Mont., reports many arriving on foot over mountain trails. Governors Idaho and Montana corresponding for arrests in Montana. Troops in position to do all that is possible. There is now no sign of organized resistance.

MERRIAM, Brigadier-General.

These men escaped before May 4, 1899, and after the 29th of April, 1899, there was absolutely no resistance by anyone to the civil authorities of the State of Idaho. It appears from the evidence that the civil authorities of Shoshone County at once began to arrest those who were suspected of being engaged in the commission of the crime of April 29, 1899, and were so engaged when their authority was suspended by the action of the governor of Idaho, and by the sending of troops of the United States into Shoshone County.

The governor of Idaho, acting upon telegrams and advices sent him from the scene of the trouble, called upon the President of the United States for troops to aid him in suppressing what he called an insurrection. The President responded to this call, and General Merriam, of the Army, was placed in command of the troops and directed to proceed to Shoshone County. Your committee believes that the governor of Idaho had the right to call upon the President for troops, and that the President was authorized to respond to said call by virtue of Article IV, section 4, of the Constitution of the United States; but your committee is of opinion that the troops so sent to the State of Idaho continued to be under the control of the President of the United States, and that the military commander in command of said troops could only use them in aid of the civil authorities of the State to preserve peace and order, and to prevent resistance being made by lawless persons to the process of the courts and the proper civil authorities of the State.

The telegram of the Secretary of War dated May 31 clearly defines the duty of the commander of the troops, and shows beyond controversy that the soldiers of the United States should not be used unless it was necessary "to aid the State authorities to suppress rioting and to maintain peace and order."

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 31.

Brigadier-General MERRIAM,
Commanding Department of Colorado, Denver, Colo.:

You will instruct Major Smith, commanding at Wallace, that he is to use the United States troops to aid the State authorities simply to suppress rioting and to maintain peace and order. These were your original instructions. The Army must have nothing whatever to do with enforcing rules for the government of miners or miners' unions. That is a matter for the local authorities to deal with.

R. A. ALGER, Secretary of War.

As a matter of fact there never was any rioting in Shoshone County after the 29th of April, 1899; peace and order prevailed there when the troops arrived. No resistance whatever was made to the serving of process or to any action taken or sought to be taken by the State authorities. The courts were open, a coroner's inquest was being held, a grand jury was very soon empaneled, no justice of the peace was interfered with, no sheriff or constable was resisted by anybody. The State authorities were exercising their functions, and have so continued to exercise them from April 30, 1899, down to the present time. Such being the facts, it is most extraordinary that United States soldiers should have been kept for over a year in Shoshone County, Idaho, overawing the civil authorities, used with the consent of the President of the United States in upholding a most tyrannical course of conduct pursued by the governor of Idaho to prevent men, charged with no crime, from earning their daily bread.

The evidence clearly shows that General Merriam totally misunderstood his duties, and was ignorant of the first principles of the laws of the land. It may be, and probably is, true that he intended to do what he thought was right, but his conduct displayed gross ignorance of law and an utter indifference to the rights and liberties of the citizens. General Merriam arrived at Wardner on May 3, after some of his troops, which troops had already arrested a large number of men without semblance of warrant, and at the suggestion of one Bartlett Sinclair, the civil representative of the governor of Idaho.

After General Merriam's arrival at Wardner, upon the suggestion of Mr. Sinclair, he sent about 150 soldiers to the town of Burke, in Shoshone County (May 3); these soldiers were accompanied by four so-called deputies appointed by Sinclair verbally; these deputies and soldiers, upon their arrival at Burke, found no disturbance there, no rioting, no breach of the peace; the population of the town was pursuing its usual avocations; there was not a suspicion of resistance to the State authorities, and yet these soldiers and deputies proceeded to arrest, and did arrest and put under guard without warrant, the entire male population of that town, consisting of about 300 persons; among them were clergymen, school-teachers, druggists, merchants, etc.; they were given no hearing; it is true that some of them were released in an hour or two, but that release did not and could not excuse the outrage thus put upon innocent men and American citizens.

But the mass of these people were placed upon cars and taken to Wardner, and there imprisoned. Not one of them, so far as the evidence discloses, was ever tried for any offense, although many of them were held in prison for months. Such conduct can not be too severely condemned. It was an outrage upon the liberty of the citizen which has no parallel in the annals of this country. It is no excuse to say that General Merriam was requested to do this thing by the representative of the governor. It was his duty, as the commander of the troops, to know the law, and the law was and is that when a military commander is sent into a State to aid the civil authorities thereof he can not act unless those authorities are being resisted, and even if they are being resisted the civil authorities must be armed with proper and legal warrants before the military can aid them in the execution of their duties.

The general commanding the troops exceeded his authority, and was guilty of a gross violation of law when he sent a detachment of troops into the State of Montana for the purpose of arresting supposed fugitives from justice from Idaho. It can not be contended for a moment that General Merriam had any authority for this action. It is true four so-called deputies accompanied the detachment of soldiers, but the most ignorant citizen of the Republic knows that a deputy of one State has no authority to arrest citizens in another State unless clothed with authority given him by the proper authorities of the State into which he goes. The result of this invasion by General Merriam into the State of Montana was the arrest of a citizen of Montana by Lieutenant Lyon at St. Regis, Mont.

This man, without warrant of law, without even a hearing before a military court, was taken from his own State into the State of Idaho and thrown into prison. It is true that he was only held for a few days and then released, but that does not excuse the outrageous treatment to which he was subjected. It only serves to emphasize the inexcusable conduct of Lieutenant Lyon, acting under the orders of General Merriam, in arresting and imprisoning an entirely innocent man, taking him from his home and giving him no opportunity to show his innocence. The conduct of General Merriam in this matter is sought to be excused by him on the ground that the governor of Montana authorized the arrest of suspects in Montana without formal extradition papers; but this contention can not be sustained. The governor of Montana had no such power, and General Merriam should have known it.

Another instance of flagrant violation of law was the conduct of Lieutenant Lyon, acting under orders from his superior, in forcing men to work in the Tiger-Poorman mine by threats of violence. This conduct was inexcusable. These men were freemen. Their labor was their own, and no conditions justified Lieutenant Lyon in forcing them to work against their will. The excuse that the mine would have been destroyed is not tenable. If Lieutenant Lyon had seen fit he might have used his soldiers for the purpose of pumping the water out of the mine, but he exceeded his authority and violated the liberty of the citizen when he forced citizens to work against their will.

The suppression by Major Smith, of the Army, of the Mullan Mirror, a newspaper published at Mullan, in Shoshone County, can not be defended. It was a gross violation of law, wholly unjustified by any evidence which was given before this committee. The editor of the paper was put in jail without a warrant, kept there a long time without a trial and with no charges ever preferred against him, and his property destroyed and never returned to him.

The "permit system," approved by General Merriam and kept in operation to this day by the presence of the military forces of the United States, is an outrageous violation of the laws of Idaho and of the laws of the United States. Under this system no man is permitted to work in the mines of Shoshone County unless he obtains a permit from Dr. France, a representative of the governor of Idaho. The evidence before the committee is that this system could not be maintained without the aid and presence of the military forces of the United States. Under this system the miners of the Cœur d'Alene are absolutely under the control of one man, and their daily bread can only be earned at the will of an irresponsible officer, whose duties are defined in no statute and from whose acts and edicts there is no appeal. Such a condition of affairs has never before existed in any community in the United States, and that the Army of this country should be used for such a purpose is a disgrace to our civilization and a grave reflection upon those who permit such abuses to exist.

To sum up, the undersigned are satisfied from the evidence adduced before the committee that General Merriam was wholly mistaken as to his powers and duties; that he was ignorant of the laws of his country; that he failed to distinguish the difference between military law and martial law, and that his conduct has resulted in the gravest injuries to the liberty of the citizen and the rights of individuals. Innocent men have been kept in prison for months without a trial, and have been finally discharged without any charges being preferred against them.

The undersigned, to sustain the propositions of law above insisted upon, cite the following authorities: Ex parte Milligan (4 Wallace, 15; Federal Cases, case No. 8073; Cooley's Constitutional Law passim); Luther vs. Borden (1 Howard, Federal Cases, No. 9005).

We are aware that General Merriam defends his conduct in Shoshone County on the ground that he was carrying out the wishes and requests of Mr. Bartlett Sinclair, the civil representative of the governor of Idaho. It therefore becomes necessary to inquire into the legality of the appointment of Bartlett Sinclair, and to determine whether he was such State authority as General Merriam should have aided. It will not be denied that it was the duty of the commanding general to ascertain for himself and determine rightly who were the State authorities of Idaho whom it was his duty to aid. The State authorities of Idaho, those meant by the Secretary of War, were undoubtedly the legal State authorities, those constituted by the laws of the State.

If, therefore, the governor of Idaho exceeded his powers in appointing what he called his representatives, it was the duty of the commanding general to ignore the requests and wishes of any illegal representative of the governor. It was equally his duty to refuse to grant any requests of the governor himself unless they were valid and legal requests. Thus any request to arrest any citizen of the State without a warrant should have been ignored, because the military could only properly aid the State authorities when they themselves were acting in pursuance of law.

Now, as to the appointment of Bartlett Sinclair, it was plainly illegal and not justified by any law or statute of Idaho. There are statutes of Idaho (sections 7405-7407) which authorize the governor to appoint a civil officer to command State troops when called out to suppress an insurrection; but in this case there were no State troops; and it will not be contended for a moment that the governor of Idaho could appoint a civil officer to command United States troops or to act in conjunction with them. There is no law of Idaho which authorizes the governor to appoint any civil officer and to confer upon him the powers of a dictator, with the right to arrest men indiscriminately without a warrant, to appoint deputies, and to discharge all the functions of government.

The governor has not this absolute power himself, and surely he can not confer it upon another. The contention that this can be done under martial law will not hold in this case, because, while martial law was proclaimed, it, as a matter of fact, did not exist. It could not exist, because the courts were open and every State officer was discharging his functions without let or hindrance. A coroner's inquest, a grand jury, and all the machinery necessary to bringing criminals to justice had full sway. There was no disturbance of the peace, no destruction of property, no resistance to State authority.

At one time or another there were over 1,100 men in the prison at Wardner, known as the "bull pen." They were not tried, they were not charged with any crime, and they were held and guarded by the United States troops. It was the duty of the military commander on the ground and of the Commander in Chief of the Army to inquire into the causes and reasons for the detention of these men. No such inquiry was ever made, and this large number of American citizens was imprisoned without trial, and it is vain for the commanding general and his superior officer, the President of the United States, to justify this outrage on liberty by asserting that these citizens of the United States were held by the State authorities of Idaho.

It may be proper to state that the evidence discloses a conspiracy on the part of the officers of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, and of those who sympathize with them, o drive from Shoshone County all union miners by the device of the "permtt system," which system, it is admitted, can only be maintained by the use of United States soldiers.

There is a specific statute in the State of Idaho against employers of labor discriminating against employees by reason of their membership in or affiliation with any labor union, and when the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company gave notice in April that no union miner should remain in their employ, they violated the law of the land just as much as the men did who blew up the concentrator.

There is another statute in the State of Idaho providing specifically for arbitration in case of difficulty between employer and employee, and when the managers of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan refused to arbitrate, they were just as much guilty of breaking the law of the land as were the men who blew up the concentrator. In other words, the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company stood alone as lawbreakers in two specific instances before their employees and other employees of that community were guilty of the destruction of property.

Again, it is but fair to suggest that had the mine owners been law-abiding citizens themselves, and complied with the request of the governor for arbitration, or complied with the statute which prohibited discrimination against men belonging to labor unions, there would have been no violations on the part of the employees. A fair hearing of both parties to the difficulties in the Cœur d'Alene district forces the conclusion that those who provoked the crime of the 29th of April, 1899, were no less responsible for it, inasmuch as they were lawbreakers in two instances prior thereto, than were the men who actually committed the malicious destruction of property.

There is another phase of this serious and important manifestation of the social and military conditions of the country which must not be overlooked. Under the constitution and statutes of the State of Idaho the governor is authorized in cases of emergency to call the legislature in session on twenty days' notice. In this age of civilization, when a man is supposed to be free from arrest without due process of law, and free from imprisonment until he has been found guilty by a jury of his peers, neither the governor of the State of Idaho nor the President of the United States was justified in brushing away the constitution and statutes of the State of Idaho and the Constitution of the United States and establishing the arbitrary, despotic, and tyrannical imprisonment of men merely at the whim or caprice of an alleged representative or agent stationed in the Cœur d'Alene district. Common sense and common decency would have suggested to the governor of the State, as well as the President of the United States, that the legislature of Idaho should have been called at once in session, and their deliberations and decisions should have controlled the rights and the liberties of these thousands of men, women, and children in the Cœur d'Alene district.

It appears from the evidence taken that at no time from and after the morning of the 30th of April, 1899, has there been even the slightest resistance offered to any civil officer, nor has there at any time been wanting the services of county commissioners, a sheriff, a prosecuting attorney, a jury, and a judge, all selected substantially at the suggestion of the governor after conference and close communion with the managers of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company. Fairness and impartiality on the part of the governor would have suggested to him the calling of the legislature, that they might, in their collective wisdom, decide what was necessary and for the best interests of the State of Idaho; and prudence and a respectful concern on the part of the President of the United States for the rights of the labor unions of that district ought to have suggested to him that he demand of the governor that rather than resort to his arbitrary and despotic will he should call the legislature in session and let them determine what course should be pursued; and the President should have notified the governor that unless the ironclad and blacklisting system against the members of labor unions was abolished the United States troops would be immediately withdrawn. There appears in the evidence nowhere any necessity or justification for tolerating the use of the troops to enforce the permit system.

Section 4, Article IV, of the Constitution of the United States, under which we think the President was authorized to send the troops at the call of the governor of Idaho, not only provides that the President shall protect each State against domestic violence on the application of the legislature, or the executive when the legislature can not be convened; but it also provides that the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and we hold that the arbitrary and tyrannical power exercised in establishing the blacklisting system of union labor was not a republican form of government, nor even a civilized form of government, and we hold, as we believe all self-respecting citizens of America will hold, that the President of the United States is not and was not justified in sending the troops into the State of Idaho and leaving them indefinitely, or forever, in that jurisdiction without exercising any discretion or control over them.

We contend that the President of the United States can not relieve himself of responsibility nor for a day divorce himself from the deepest concern as to what the troops, of which he is Commander in Chief, are doing and are being used for. Neither law nor order, nor justice, nor equity, nor decency, nor humanity would tolerate the despotic system which perpetrated upon thousands of men, women, and children the brutality of the bull pen and the blacklisting system which has driven some 1,500 member of the miners' unions, together with their wives and children, from Shoshone County and denied them the privilege of earning a livelihood among their neighbors and their friends and has throw them upon the world as outcasts and tramps without even having so much as an affidavit or an indictment against them, much less a conviction for any offense, even of the petty degree of a misdemeanor. Let it be confessed with shame and humiliation that our Chief Executive and our Army officials have become so callous to the rights and liberties of labor that these things could have been perpetrated in this year of our Lord 1899 and 1900.

The undersigned recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the conduct of the President and of the military forces of the United States in Shoshone County, Idaho, has been reprehensible, violative of the liberty of the citizen, and totally unwarranted by the laws and Constitution of the United States."

WM. SULZER.
JOHN J. LENTZ.
N. N. COX.
JAMES HAY.
THOS. M. JETT.
JAS. L. SLAYDEN.
ROBT. F. BROUSSARD.

Recently my attention was called to a paragraph which appeared on the same day in all parts of the Union in scores of Administration newspapers, or, more properly speaking, libel sheets, venal and subsidized, and prostituting themselves to any use required by the political machine here at Washington. The paragraph is as follows:

Representative LENTZ has lost no time in entering upon the work of misrepresenting the testimony adduced in the Idaho investigation. But that sort of thing is decidedly Lentzesque.

It appeared in many papers on the same day—the 16th of May last—for instance, I find it in an Administration sheet, the Youngstown (Ohio) Telegram, as follows:

Representative LENTZ has lost no time in entering upon the work of misrepresenting the testimony adduced in the Idaho investigation. But that sort of thing is decidedly Lentzesque.

Also in another Administration sheet in Bowling Green, Ohio; also in the Logansport (Ind.) Journal, as follows:

Representative LENTZ has lost no time in entering upon the work of misrepresenting the testimony adduced in the Idaho investigation. But that sort of thing is decidedly Lentzesque.

Also in another Administration sheet in Morris, Ill.; also in the Guthrie (Okla.) State Capital, as follows:

Representative LENTZ has lost no time in entering upon the work of misrepresenting the testimony adduced in the Idaho investigation. But that sort of thing is decidedly Lentzesque.

Is this the advance agent of a campaign of libel and slander? Is it possible that the commandment "Thou shalt not lie" was not written for Republican editors?

Can a man in public life not expose a beef-trust administration or a Republican post-office robbing trust in Cuba without finding machine-made paragraphs of unmitigated falsehoods prepared in Washington and distributed throughout the entire Republic on the same day to vilify him?

Fie upon an Administration which prates about "national honor" and "duty and destiny," all the while carrying on a campaign of falsehood, libel, slander, and vilification against those who are merely trying to turn the light on the rats in the barn!

Will the editors of these libelous sheets dare to invite the public to read the complete record of the testimony in the Cœur d'Alene case, or will they conceal from their readers the fact that the Republican majority in Congress refused to permit the testimony to be printed and distributed to the people, as requested by the Democrats?

As in the past, so in the future, I shall present proof of my statements and challenge contradiction by the Administration cuckoos. And in addition to the views of the minority, I present the following extracts from the testimony of the witnesses who appeared on both sides of the controversy during the examination, and it will be noted by every fair-minded reader that the Republican members of the Military Committee prefer to presume in favor of the negro soldiers, no one of whom testified in the case, to contradict the testimony of Levi R. Miller, an old soldier and a member of the G. A. R.

In other words, the Republican party, as represented on the Military Committee, is willing to go on record that it will treat the testimony of Mr. Miller as that of a perjurer, rather than believe that the negro soldiers perpetrated the outrages to which Mr. Miller and others testified, concerning the treatment of himself and another G. A. R. man who was imprisoned in the same bull pen without any charge ever being preferred against them.

The Republican majority of the Military Committee have certified that the charges filed by me were not sustained, and had they been willing to publish the testimony in its entirety, as the Democratic membership of the committee requested, there might be some reason to believe that they had full confidence in their report; but their willingness to bury or burn the testimony justifies the suggestion that they are probably unwilling to have the public know the truth and the whole truth about the President's use of the Army in the Cœur d'Alene district of Idaho.

I incorporate the analysis and condensation of the testimony made by Professor Collins, which substantiates and proves every charge made, and I must confess that I was greatly surprised to find so much evidence in support of so many charges, because I had a right to assume that the charges as made in the newspapers might be exaggerated, whereas, in fact, an examination of the testimony here submitted will satisfy every liberty-loving citizen and every fair-minded juror that the truth has not been half told in any newspaper account of this first experiment of a Russian Siberia in the Republic of America.

MILITARISM IN IDAHO—WEYLER'S METHODS USED AGAINST UNION LABOR—IMPERIALISM ILLUSTRATED IN THE CŒUR D'ALENES.

[Abstract and comments by J. A. Collins.]

Upon a careful review of the testimony of record before the Committee on Military Affairs in this investigation, any thoughtful and patriotic man must be shocked by the realization of the imminent danger to our free institutions, and the innate rights of our people, so clearly demonstrated by this great object lesson. That the constitutional rights of the citizen can be trampled upon, that the established laws can be overridden, that the Constitution can be defied, that despotic power can be usurped and exercised, that innocent citizens can be seized without warrant and imprisoned without process of law, that such acts can be supported by the armed forces of this Republic, under the authority of the President, would be bad enough, indeed, in time of war or serious revolutionary emergencies; but that such a thing is even possible at all, in a time of profound peace, is startling in the extreme; yet we have here before us the indisputable proof that such is unfortunately the case. That such a thing is not only possible, but actually transpires to-day, in the very heart of our country, is too clearly demonstrated to allow us to overlook or ignore it.

This investigation has exposed and brought to our attention a condition of affairs so infamous, so despotic, so defiant of our Constitution and the spirit of our free institutions, that it seems a crime of the very highest magnitude, against the very life of the Republic. That such a crime is possible at all is an impeachment against the entire party to whom has been intrusted the guardianship of our institutions and our liberties; but that such an infamy should not only have been allowed, but been supported and made possible by the bayonets which were only forged to protect those institutions and those liberties, makes it mandatory that the power so perverted and debauched should be brought to strict account before the high tribunal of a free but outraged people.

In the very heart of this Republic, amid a peaceful, industrious, and prosperous citizenship, there has been established the methods of the military autocrat, the midnight arrest, the forcible entry and search of homes, the tramp of the soldier, the clank of arms, the shackle, and the Bastile. There the methods of Weyler, who shocked the civilized world by his inhuman atrocities perpetrated upon the suffering people of Cuba, have been put in operation by "the Weyler of the Cœur d'Alenes" (Captain Edwards), who persecuted innocent American citizens by confining them "incomunicado" in emulation of his Spanish prototype of the Moro at Habana, and inflicted brutal and degrading punishments upon innocent men, unconvicted of crime; treated as felons American citizens against whom not even a charge of any kind had or could be preferred. There another petty despot, Bartlett Sinclair, a political chameleon and adventurer, in emulation of the methods of the same illustrious "butcher," revived his infamous "reconcentrado" system in the bull pen.

In this mass of evidence are facts related that call up recollections of the prisons of Siberia, of the military arrests of Russia, of the inquisition of the dark ages. One imagines he can hear the echoes of the French Revolution, the moans from the Bastile, the rattle of the death carts, the prayers of the condemned, the thud of the guillotine, or the despairing wails from the dungeons of the Moro and the foodless huts of the starving reconcentrados.

All these grewsome sounds would be but a fit accompaniment to the saturnalia of persecution carried on in that devoted section of our land, and under the approval of the President, who asks now, at the hands of the people, to longer be intrusted with the direction of our destiny. But one is led to ask, How can these things be? How can it be possible that such conditions can exist, that such deeds can be enacted under the American flag? Ah! how? That is a question which it behooves every man to ask, and not only ask, but study earnestly, or the time may come to him when he himself will be the victim and live the very experiences which seem to him impossible. These deeds are not only possible but here is the unimpeachable proof, the evidence of credible witnesses who have themselves not only witnessed but suffered these outrages. But how was it possible that the people did not rise in righteous indignation and visit their just vengeance upon the guilty? Let us see.

This whole deplorable series of infamies originated in a conspiracy conceived by a trust combine, the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company, to drive out of the Cœur d'Alene district all union labor; it was a conspiracy against a particular class of citizens. They realized that the only defense possible to labor, in its struggle with combined capital, is in organization and united action. This they determined to prevent, in order that they might dictate their own terms and at the same time take what they pleased from the output of labor for their own share, while the laborer remained absolutely the slave of their dictation.

A controversy as to wages was inaugurated, violence was resorted to, and the governor was appealed to for assistance, but when the time came for him to perform his part in this diabolical plot he was either too sick or too cowardly to go in person among the outraged people he had betrayed into the power of this conscienceless combination, and he chose, illegally, from among his sycophantic dependents a fitting tool for such filthy service; a nobody from nowhere; a conscienceless adventurer, a typical sycophant, who, regardless of right, of justice, of common humanity, of the Constitution or the laws, would serve the ends of his master and perpetrate any infamy to further the purposes of his employers.

His first act was to consult with the instigators of the plot, the officials of the Bunker Hill Company. Having done this, he went direct to Wardner, chose from among the employees of this company his entire force of assistants of every description, his deputies, who were to serve as a technical cover for the United States soldiers used in illegally arresting citizens without warrant or charge, and in breaking into and searching the homes of the people. He made the company physician chief inquisitor of his star-chamber investigation. He made the company's attorney chief prosecutor, and another attorney of the company chief advisor and assistant to himself. The greater portion of his jury of inquest he chose among the dependents and employees of the company, and the rest from traders who depended on the patronage of the company for their support. He arrested and deposed, illegally and without cause, the duly elected and qualified civil officers of the county, and installed in their places the creatures and tools of the company. Even the warden and cook of his prison were taken from the rolls of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company. The entire community was put under surveillance of this coterie, and the will of this petty despot was the only law. The troops of the United States obeyed his slightest wish and enforced his every command. A reign of terror was inaugurated. The entire county was dragnetted, and whole communities thrown into prison without warrant or knowing of any charge against them—the sacred writ of habeas corpus suspended and denied.

There was no appeal from the decree of the dictator. United States soldiers stood watch and ward about the prison; the most trivial act on the part of the unfortunate prisoners brought swift and brutal punishment. The petty tyrant in the uniform of the United States Army acting as jailer vented his petty spite against the unfortunates who excited his resentment in punishments only dealt out to felons and the victims of an irresponsible autocracy or slaves. Free-born American citizens were humiliated and persecuted in the most inhuman manner, although no charge had ever been preferred against them; the law did not exist for them; the Constitution of their country could bring no defense; to them the flag of freedom was made a mockery and a lie. For them liberty and equality were but a dream, and the free institutions of their country a deception and a fraud; the dignity of their citizenship a burlesque and a farce. The will of the petty despot was stronger than the protecting arm of the country. The ægis of the Constitution could not protect them from the bayonets of its own soldiery. The President, to whom was intrusted the guardianship of their liberties, looked on their misery and wrongs the helpless creature of a corrupt oligarchy, which had compelled his aid in their infamous designs.

This illustration of imperialism is too realistic, too vivid, to allow it to be passed without calling to it the attention of the people whose liberties are so seriously menaced by it. This application of the methods of militarism is too startling, too tragic, to allow it to go unrebuked. The perpetration of these outrages on the liberty of the people and the spirit of our free institutions is too flagrant, too high handed and defiant, to be allowed to go unwhipped of justice. If such infamies are possible under existing conditions, what might be expected under a fully developed and thoroughly organized system of imperialism, backed and supported by a strong standing army, and directed and controlled by a cold-blooded, selfish, and mercenary power in the hands of the trusts and combines and various money influences, centralized to further their own vicious ends and pecuniary advantages?

If such tyranny and oppression can be perpetrated at this time, under existing institutions, what might we not anticipate with further power and extended opportunity and incentive? If it can happen now in Idaho, it is possible in another locality; if it can be perpetrated against one class of citizens, it can be against any other; if it could happen yesterday to those citizens, it can happen to-morrow against these.

All these infamies, all this defiance of the Constitution and ignoring of the civil law, these outrages upon the rights and dignity of citizenship, the establishment of this reign of terror and reckless exercise of despotic power was only possible through the aid and support of the United States troops, and for this illegal and despotic employment of the forces of the United States the President, as commander in chief, is unquestionably responsible.

This investigation has developed so many startling facts, revealed so many dangerous possibilities, is such a startling index to existing conditions and points so unerringly to the danger which threatens, that I would not feel that my duty had been performed if I should fail to set out fully the facts as developed. Therefore the charges in the resolution are set out separately and in consecutive order, with the facts testified to showing beyond question that every charge is well founded and fully sustained by competent evidence. I therefore set out a full review of the case as it developed, setting out each charge in its consecutive order, together with the proofs substantiating it.

The resolution charges as follows:

First. Troops have been sent into the State of Idaho in defiance of and contrary to the provisions of Article IV, section 4, of the Constitution of the United States, in that it was done at the individual request of the governor of Idaho, without the authority of the legislature, and at a time when there was no condition of insurrection or riot, and when the legislature could have been called together without danger or delay from any source whatever; and further, without even consultation with the sheriff of Shoshone County, where it was desired that the troops should be sent.

Article IV, section 4, of the Constitution of the United States, herein referred to, is in the following words:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

It is clearly shown by the evidence that the occurrence upon which the governor of Idaho based his demand for Federal troops was merely a momentary outbreak arising from a difference between one mining corporation and certain individual miners. It was in no manner a rebellion against the civil authorities of the State or county, nor has there been an instance proven of resistance to any civil process or defiance of the constituted authorities of the State. The occurrence seems to have been merely an ebullition of temper upon the part of a portion of the population in the locality, excited against a certain financial or industrial corporation, and in no manner arose to the dignity of an insurrection. At the worst it was merely a local riot, and the evidence shows clearly that the civil power of the State was amply sufficient to discipline and punish those guilty.

Even had the civil authorities been unable to cope with the situation the militia would have been amply sufficient, as there was no disturbance in any portion of the State outside of this extremely limited zone and the sparse population there located. There is no evidence to show that civil process was in any case resisted or the officers of the law defied. The evidence clearly shows that the riot was of momentary existence, and immediately upon its cessation the people returned peaceably to their homes and civil process could have been served without resistance or the least danger to the representatives of the constituted authorities. There is not a single case of resistance against any officer of the law shown. It has not been proven that any condition of insurrection against the constituted authorities existed in any part of the State which rendered the assembling of the legislature impossible or even dangerous. Indeed, it is clearly shown that the conditions throughout the State were normal, and that profound peace reigned everywhere after April 29, 1899.

It is clearly shown that in issuing his proclamation declaring a state of insurrection in Shoshone County that the governor acted arbitrarily and outside of any authority vested in him by the statutes of the State of Idaho, which statutes are a part of the record in this investigation (sections 7400–7408, Laws of Idaho), and will be found in the quoted evidence of Mr. F. C. Robertson.

In the issuing of his proclamation the governor failed to comply with any of the requirements of the statute. Section 7402 of the statutes was ignored and no call made upon the militia. There is no evidence that the requirements of section 7403 or 7404 were complied with by any civil officer. Indeed, not one of the statutes relating to this duty of the governor was in any way regarded. The entire statute is based upon the fact of resistance to the service of civil process, issued by the properly constituted authorities, and in no single instance has it been shown that such resistance had been made or that any rebellion against the civil authorities existed.

Even had a state of insurrection existed and an open defiance of the constituted authorities been developed, the only authority vested in the governor was to call out the militia of the State to aid and uphold the civil authorities. This he flagrantly failed to do, and without even an attempt to assemble the legislature, rushed to the President, appealing for Federal troops. It is shown by the evidence of Mr. Robertson, the governor himself, and many others that the largest number of men claimed to have been participants in the riot was 1,200, and yet the number of men in the State within the age limit for military service was at least 45,000, and still there was no call for their services.

The governor makes the lame excuse that the militia force was greatly depleted by the sending of men to the Philippines, and yet it is shown that only one company from the State militia was absent on such service, and he only asked for 500 United States soldiers. The application of the governor of Idaho by telegraph to the President, dated April 29, 1899, 11 p. m., asking for Federal troops, and setting out his reasons for such request (set out in the report of the Major-General Commanding the Army, and made a part of this record), is shown by the evidence to be misleading and untrue. The immediate compliance of the President, without inquiry or hesitation, as shown by his reply next morning, evidences a readiness which, to say the least, is surprising; and yet the flood of telegrams from corporation magnates throughout the United States, and made a part of this report, are indices that point to the influence behind the whole procedure.

These telegrams and letters from bankers, trust manipulators, and corporation magnates came from various money centers of the United States, far removed from the scene of trouble, and none of them from mine owners in the vicinity, except those from the management of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, showing clearly the character of influence brought to bear upon the President. The evidence shows that the dispatch of Governor Steunenberg was sent immediately after the disturbance had ended, and before any attempt could be made by the civil authorities to arrest any of the participants, and before he had any ground to charge a defiance of the civil authorities.

On May 4 General Merriam telegraphed to the adjutant-general:

One hundred and twenty-eight arrests made by State officials under military support. No signs of resistance.

All witnesses examined testified to a perfetcly peaceful condition as existing at all times after April 29, and not one instance of defiance of or resistance to the constituted authorities, even at Wardner, and no intimation is had of any reason why the legislature could not have been convened, or the military forces of the State used. No mines were threatened or interfered with other than the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, nor has any complaint been lodged by any other operators, and the whole deplorable affair is clearly shown to have grown out of the unjust and tyrannical action of this one corporation toward its own employees. The charged resistance against the State authorities has not only not been proven, but it seems from the evidence that the power and authority of the State was used to support this single corporation in its measures of oppression and injustice toward a certain class of citizens, although they themselves were the first lawbreakers.

The governor himself, in his statement, shows that he was appealed to by the managers of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine to lend his aid to that corporation as early as April 26, when they telegraphed to him asking protection and falsely stating that the civil authorities were unable to cope with the mob. At the same time it is stated by all the witnesses examined that there was no riot prior to April 29. The governor stated that he replied to the corporation manager, advising reference to the board of arbitration, as required by law, but the manager refused. The governor states that he telegraphed to the sheriff of Shoshone County asking information as to the situation, and in reply the sheriff sent the following telegram:

WARDNER, IDAHO, April 26, 1899.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Governor, Boise, Idaho:

Your telegram received. Am on the ground. All is quiet. No armed mob. Matters are orderly. Will do all in my power to preserve order. The county authorities were not applied to until 10 a. m. this morning.

JAMES D. YOUNG, Sheriff.

On April 27 the governor received the following telegram:

WARDNER, IDAHO, April 27, 1899.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Boise:

Trouble with Last Chance settled. Union men satisfied. No disturbance.

JAMES D. YOUNG, Sheriff.

This is all of the information received by the governor prior to April 29, and it was surely sufficient to satisfy him that there was no necessity for his interference in any way, and that the sheriff of the county considered that there was no necessity for any uneasiness as to his ability to control the situation. It is certainly evident from all the testimony introduced, including the statement of the governor himself, that the civil authorities were fully competent to control the situation, and that no riot, much less insurrection, existed. On April 29 the first information which came to the governor was not from any civil officer asking for soldiers, but from Mr. Burbidge, manager of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, who again appealed for protection. A. L. Mohler, president of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, also telegraphed the governor as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., April 29, 1899.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Boise, Idaho:

The armed force at Cœur d'Alene mines took possession of Northern Pacific engine and are using our tracks. Will you protect us against use and damage of our property?

A. L. MOHLER,
President, O. R. and N. Company.

The governor thereupon sent the following dispatch to the sheriff:

BOISE, IDAHO, April 29, 1899.

JAMES D. YOUNG, Sheriff Shoshone County, Wardner, Idaho:

Representations are made that you are not able to cope with those who threaten disturbance, and that railroad property has been forcibly taken possession of. Up to this time I have relied upon your power and ability to protect property and preserve order. Wire me the situation and any contemplated or actual violence, as reports seem to call for prompt and vigorous action by the State.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Governor.

At 4 p. m. on the same day, the governor received the following dispatch from President Mohler, after the riot was over. Observe that this dispatch is sent from Portland, Oreg., a point farther removed from the scene of disturbance than the governor himself was.

PORTLAND, OREG., April 29, 1899.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Boise, Idaho:

Message received. Conditions at Wardner could not be worse. Rioters have set fire to Bunker Hill Mill, which is now burning. As they previously loaded it with dynamite, presume its destruction is only a matter of a few minutes. Rioters have cut wires, have appropriated Northern Pacific trains, and have interrupted all business. It is reported there are 800 of these rioters who are masked and armed and propose driving out miners at Bunker Hill mine. I can not urge too strongly that you exhaust every means in your power to bring this matter to successful termination, and that not one moment be lost. Rioters have also taken possession of the lines of this company.

A. L. MOHLER.

Upon the strength of this sensational telegram, from a citizen of Oregon, hundreds of miles from the scene of disturbance, and without waiting for a reply or call from the sheriff of the county, who was on the scene, and without knowing what was being done by the civil authorities, or even giving a passing thought to the State military forces, the governor rushed to the telegraph office and wired the following dispatch to the President. This dispatch was sent at 6.30 p. m., April 29, after the disturbance had ceased and the men had dispersed:

BOISE, IDAHO, April 29, 1899.

The PRESIDENT, Washington, D. C.:

In pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, I, Frank Steunenberg, governor of Idaho, the legislature not being in session, and it not being possible to convene it, do hereby apply to the President of the United States, to call forth the military forces of the United States to suppress insurrection in Shoshone County, State of Idaho. This is sustained in the fact that all of the available Idaho National Guard volunteered for service in the Philippines, and said county is in a state of insurrection. I am of the opinion that at least 500 troops in the aggregate will be necessary, but smaller detachments should be ordered in as rapidly as possible.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Governor.

After having sent this appeal to the President, on the same evening the governor received the following dispatch from the sheriff:

WARDNER, IDAHO, April 29, 1899.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Governor, Boise, Idaho:

About 800 armed men took possession of train at Wallace and arrived at Wardner Junction about noon. They immediately marched to the Bunker Hill and Sullivan concentrator and destroyed it, together with the adjoining buildings, after which they returned on the same train to Wallace. A few cars were badly damaged by the explosion of the mill. One man was shot and killed, and two wounded. No one expects further trouble, so far as I can learn. I was on the scene during the trouble, but was unable to disperse armed miners. Have deputized several men, and think I can handle the situation.

JAMES D. YOUNG, Sheriff.

Now, this is the situation which existed on April 29, when the governor made his appeal for Federal troops, as the governor himself explained it. The riot had occurred and was over, the excitement had subsided and the people had returned to their homes. The sheriff declared himself able to control the situation, and it only remained to arrest and punish the perpetrators of the crimes committed. There was no report of any resistance to civil process or civil officers and none seemed to have been anticipated, and yet the governor reports to the President a state of insurrection which he himself shows did not exist. That no resistance was made to civil processes served by the properly authorized civil authorities is proven by the testimony of Edward J. Flannagan, a justice of the peace, who had issued warrants on April 29, which were served without resistance, and by William Powers, a constable, who on that day arrested alone eight men upon warrants and met no resistance.

Andrew J. Devlin testified that he was in Wardner on May 2, and there was no disorder of any description, or any instance of resistance to the civil authorities, but that men were that day arrested on warrants, charging them with complicity in the riot of April 29, and that the county attorney was proceeding with his duties of finding out and arresting suspected parties, with as much energy as possible, and in no case was he resisted or his process defied. Wilber H. Stewart, Thomas Heney, Moses S. Simmons, James R. Sovereign, F. O. Martin, L. J. Simpkins, George Cornell, Allen F. Gill, and many others, testified that there was no disorder in Shoshone County before or after the riot of April 29, nor was there ever any defiance of the State civil authorities or resistance of any civil process; consequently there was no state of insurrection or rebellion, and no reason why participants in the riot could not have been arrested and punished by the regular processes of the civil courts.

The only persons who claim that such a condition existed are the governor, who was 500 miles away, and the operators and owners of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, in whose interest this persecution was undertaken.

The county commissioners, it is shown by the evidence of Mr. Stimson and the governor himself, were not inquired of as to the situation, and the sheriff, as has already been shown, when asked by the governor, declared that all was quiet, and that he had the situation in hand and could control it; that is to say, that he feared no resistance to his measures for bringing the guilty to justice. The only element of disturbance appears to have been the soldiery, when they began the indiscriminate arresting of innocent and peaceable citizens, many of whom were miles away from the scene of disturbance and many had no connection whatever with the mining interests.

Second charge. The resolution charges in the second place that—

In defiance of section 9, Article I, of the Constitution, martial law was declared and the writ of habeas corpus suspended in Shoshone County in time of profound peace, when there was no condition of rebellion or invasion or any menace to the public safety.

Section 9, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States is in the following words:

The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it.

The constitution of the State of Idaho contains a clause identical with this, except with the added clause, "and then only in such manner as shall be prescribed by law."

This charge in the resolution is sustained by an overwhelming weight of testimony. On May 4, 1899, Governor Steunenberg issued a proclamation declaring the county of Shoshone to be in a state of insurrection and rebellion, which established martial law in said county, or was so interpreted by General Merriam, as is shown by his telegram to the officer commanding at Wardner, ordering arrests and notifying him of the declaration of martial law in Shoshone County. This telegram is dated May 3, and is embodied in the report of the major-general commanding the army, of record in the case.

The legislature of Idaho has never passed any law authorizing the governor to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, and the Supreme Court of the United States has construed the provision of the Federal Constitution to mean that the right to suspend the writ is vested in Congress, and not in the President of the United States, so that the right to suspend the writ of habeas corpus is a legislative rather than an Executive function. Decisions are in evidence to this effect.

The evidence shows that the effect of this proclamation was to suspend the writ of habeas corpus in the county of Shoshone and that General Merriam so understood it, and that with this understanding wholesale arrests began without warrant or any civil process. Even before the issuance of this proclamation the military began its espionage and the exercise of its arbitrary power, as is evidenced by a dispatch dated May 2 from General Merriam to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Report of Major-General commanding Army, to wit:

Troops concentrating at Wardner and Mullan will control outlets from mining camps. If not disapproved, I will scrutinize travel outward and detain suspected passengers. This is martial law, but no other course likely to secure rioters.

To this dispatch the Adjutant-General replied on the next day, May 3, in the following words:

Your cipher message received. Submitted by the Acting Secretary of War to the President, and I am instructed to say your action is approved.

H. C. CORBIN, Adjutant-General.

Here it is evident that martial law was declared by the general commanding the United States forces in Shoshone County two days before the proclamation of the governor was issued, and this action was approved by the President. On May 3, the day before the governor's proclamation was dated, the following dispatch was sent by Captain Batchelor, in command at Wardner, to General Merriam, at Walla Walla:

I arrived here yesterday at 2 p. m. and encamped. Situation quiet at present. Much apprehension apparent. Search for arms now in progress, which I am protecting. Arrests contemplated, which Sinclair thinks may lead to resistance. Walla Walla troops not in yet.

BATCHELOR, Commanding.

From this it is evident that quiet reigned on May 2, and the only apprehension which seemed to exist was of danger to the citizens from the troops and in the mind of Mr. Sinclair, and yet the next day the governer proclaimed a state of insurrection and rebellion, when not a single case of resistance to civil process had been reported, although many warrants had been issued and served.

From these facts it seems clear that martial law was first declared and initiated by the general commanding the United States forces in Shoshone County with the approval of the President two days before the date of the governor's proclamation. Immediately wholesale arrests began, and on May 4 General Merriam telegraphed the Adjutant-General:

One hundred and twenty-eight arrests. No signs of resistance.

On May 5, the day after the governor's proclamation was issued, 350 arrests were reported and not a single case of resistance, or disturbance of any kind (and this in the midst of a state of insurrection and rebellion so dangerous and aggravated that (in the opinion of the governor) the 45,000 able-bodied men composing the militia levy of the State, were unable to cope with it, and he was compelled to call upon the President for the irresistible force of 500 negro soldiers to hold the wild tumult in check and preserve the peace and dignity of the State.)

General Merriam himself states that—

The arrests of men suspected of complicity in the crime of April 29 began on the arrival of Captain Batchelor, May 2, and were continued in the different mining camps.

This evidence shows conclusively that the establishment of martial law was virtually the action of the general commanding the United States forces and was done under the approval of the President. That it was done in defiance of the Constitution, both of the State of Idaho and of the United States, there seems to be no lack of evidence to prove. General Merriam goes on to state in regard to the number and condition of prisoners:

As they were brought in, they were placed in a large building two stories high, used as a warehouse for the storage of hay and grain; it had no provision for fires and was without furniture, so that the prisoners were compelled to sleep on the floor. The prisoners were fed at the expense of the State, by a former boarding-house boss. Many of the prisoners were brought in without blankets, and they were not supplied until bedding was brought to them by their families or friends. It is probable that in this way some of the prisoners were exposed to the cold of the nights, and that some of the sickness was due to this exposure.

This was the mild statement of the general commanding, but he goes on with his statement and says:

After about May 5 the number of prisoners exceeded the capacity of the building (this in three days) and it became necessary to hold perhaps 200 of them quartered in box cars, side tracked near the Wardner Station.

In the meantime the State authorities had begun the construction of a prison, but the general says:

However, I became dissatisfied with the apparently slow progress made for their comfort, and on May 11 I sent the following telegram:

Governor STEUNENBERG, Boise, Idaho:

I am still holding nearly 500 prisoners in a barn and box cars. All are very uncomfortable, and with unsanitary conditions which will soon become intolerable. Something must be done to hurry preliminary examination and release of those not prima facie guilty. It is impracticable to make this large number of prisoners reasonably comfortable without time and expense. Can you not personally inspect the situation at once and bring help?

MERRIAM, Brigadier-General.

An anomalous condition is shown to have existed during the maintenance of martial law in the county of Shoshone. By the evidence of Mr. Alfred Frazier and a transcript of the records of the court presented by him and admitted to the record of this examination, it is shown that the civil courts were open, that the grand jury was in session, indictments were found and convictions had, sentence was passed, and Paul Corcoran was sent to the penitentiary, and no instance of resistance to the civil authorities is shown; and although the civil court was open and in session, yet no case of habeas corpus would be heard and no writ issued, under the plea of martial law.

This is proven by the testimony of Mr. Frederick C. Robertson, a practicing attorney of Spokane, Wash., and the attorney of certain of the prisoners held by the military and who presented the first application for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of the county commissioners who were arrested there—William Boyle and William Stimson. Mr. Robertson says:

I subsequently, in connection with other counsel not appealing from the order of the lower court refusing the writ, made an original application to the supreme court of the State of Idaho, putting in that application matter that we thought raised a Federal question and argued that case before the supreme court of the State of Idaho. Our application was there denied.

And yet during this time Paul Corcoran was indicted, convicted, and sentenced in the district court and no one offered any hindrance to the process of the court.

Mr. Robertson states that he presented the application for a writ of habeas corpus in the district court on the ground that his client was not incarcerated in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States; that he was not arrested upon any warrant charging him with any offense; that he had been denied the opportunity of giving bail, and that, in other words, his arrest was illegal. (This arrest was made about four days after martial law had been put in force.)

The judge said in his decision that the governor had acted in the matter and that he would not inquire into the legality of any of these arrests. He informed me that the application had been opposed by the attorney-general, who was there representing the governor and did represent the governor and subsequently, the lower court having denied the writ to us, we went to the supreme court of the State of Idaho and there renewed our application for a writ of habeas corpus in the Boyle case. The supreme court took practically the same ground that the lower court did, and did not discuss the legal right of these men to be released.

There is no statute of the State of Idaho in evidence which gives to the governor the power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, but under his proclamation of May 4 the court of the State refused to consider applications for such writ and declared it suspended. The attorney-general claimed that the declaration that the county was in a state of insurrection suspended the writ of habeas corpus and all laws, and so instructed the district court having jurisdiction in Shoshone County.

The Constitution specially declares that—

The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless * * * the public safety may require it.

There is nothing in evidence to show that the public safety was in any way threatened or in danger; nothing in evidence shows that there was any animosity against any portion of the public other than one single corporation, which was involved in a dispute with its employees, and the public had nothing whatever to do with the matter; nor was any threat or menace made against any other corporation or individual. Indeed, had the Bunker Hill and Sullivan management complied with the requirements of the laws of Idaho, as in evidence before this committee, there would have been an arbitration instead of a disturbance, and it is clearly demonstrated that the illegal action and defiance of the State laws on the part of this corporation was the prime cause of all the evils and injustice which followed as the result.

The whole matter was one for police survilleance, and in any properly organized municipality would have been controlled without serious results. The facts as stated by Mr. Robertson go to prove this to have been the case. On the 29th day of April, 1899, there were employed by the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine about 400 men. The Last Chance mine, which was an adjoining property, employed on that day about 200 men, and the other mines in the Cœur d'Alene employed 1,220 to 2,000 men. All of the mines in the Cœur d'Alene employed union miners (there were six other mines in operation at this locality beside the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, which was one corporation).

The labor disturbances between the Bunker Hill and Sullivan and its employees commenced on the 13th day of April, according to the findings of General Merriam and others. All of the mines in the Cœur d'Alene on the 13th day of April, 1899, paid $3.50 per day for miners, with the exception of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, which was nonunion and paid its employees $2.50 and $3, and so were paying to their men about $72,000 less a year than was paid by other mines in that district, and yet the Bunker Hill and Sullivan is considered to be the richest producer of lead and silver in the world.

The testimony of Mr. Burbridge, superintendent of the mine, and Mr. Birch, the foreman, as witnesses for the State in the Paul Corcoran case and of record in this investigation, shows that on the 13th day of April, there was a strike among the employees of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan; union and nonunion men all quit the mine and went out on a strike. There was no labor difficulty in any other mine in the district, because they were all satisfied. On April 13 the men having struck, a committee of union and nonunion miners (some of the nonunion men having joined the union) waited upon the superintendent of the Bunker Hill and asked for an increase in wages, to an equal amount paid by the other mines in the district, for the same services.

After taking the matter under consideration for several days, and the men becoming threatening and stopping the tramways, the management conceded the raise to $3.50 a day. Mr. Birch, in his speech from the office of the company, said that they would accede to the demand of the miners and pay them $3.50 per day, but that all union miners should apply to the office and get their time. This was in defiance of a statute of the State of Idaho, passed at the second session of the legislature. Approved March 6, 1893:

SEC. 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to make or enter into any agreement, either oral or in writing, by the terms of which any employee of such person or firm or corporation or any person about to enter the employ of such person, firm, or corporation, as a condition for continuing or obtaining such employment, shall promise or agree not to become or continue a member of a labor organization.

SEC. 2. Any person or persons or corporation violating the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not less than $50 nor more than $300, or be imprisoned in the jail for not more than six months, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Thus the management of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, by their illegal act and defiance of the laws of the State of Idaho, were the first law breakers, and by their arrogant assumption of power and tyrannical and unlawful oppression of their employees, excited the resentment which led ultimately to the disorders and crimes which later disgraced the State, and which it is sought to lay at the door of the people who had been wronged, and whose rights had been overridden and disregarded.

Nor is the management of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan alone responsible for this outrage upon constituted rights and the dignity of citizenship. The executive branch of the State government must bear its share of the onus in this outrage, for the reason that it not only neglected to enforce the law against this defiant and dictatorial corporation by proceeding against it under the law, but it allied itself with the corporation and conspired with it to further persecute and oppress the laborers it was its duty to protect and defend. The natural result of this arbitrary and dictatorial action of the management of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan was to incense the miners, and they naturally became more turbulent and defiant.

About April 25 the superintendent of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan telegraphed to the governor stating that the property was being threatened, and asked for protection. There is a statute in the State of Idaho, passed in 1897, which provides that where there is a difference between labor organizations and their employers, the difference shall be submitted to a board of arbitration. This statute is as follows:

EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEES.

Be it enacted by the legislature of the State of Idaho: SECTION 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to make or enter into any agreement, either oral or in writing, by the terms of which any employee of such person, firm, or corporation, or any person about to enter the employ of such person, firm, or corporation, as a condition for continuing or obtaining such employment, shall promise or agree not to become or continue a member of a labor organization.

SEC. 2. Any person or persons or corporation violating the provisions of section 1 of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not less than fifty or more than three hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

Approved March 6, 1899.

The governor, to save himself from the appearance of openly espousing the cause of those in open contempt of the laws of the State, telegraphed to the managers of the mine to submit the question to the board of arbitration. This Mr. Burbridge refused to do, and thus again openly defied a second law of the State.

These differences grew in virulence as they naturally would, until they culminated in the outbreak of April 29, four days after the refusal to arbitrate. This is the simple disagreement between employer and employees, which any intelligent and just manager or governor might and should have settled amicably in a few hours, had he shown a due regard for the law and the rights of his fellow-citizens; and yet, through arrogance and disregard of justice and the rights of others, greed and unreasonable resentment, this small disagreement has been allowed to develop into the magnitude of a national question, and developed a condition of oppression, injustice, persecution, tyranny, and arrogant and infamous defiance of the Constitution and the rights and dignity of American citizenship that is a burning disgrace to the nation and the civilization and liberty of which we boast.

As to the power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus the decision of Chief Justice Taney is cited in the celebrated Merriman case, in which the Chief Justice declared—

The President, under the Constitution of the United States, can not suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, nor authorize a military officer to do so.

In stating the case the Chief Justice says:

A copy of the warrant or order under which the prisoner was arrested was demanded by his counsel, and refused; and it is not alleged in the return that any specific act constituting any offense against the laws of the United States has been charged against him upon oath, but he appears to have been arrested upon general charges of treason and rebellion without proof and without giving the names of the witnesses or specifying the acts which, in the judgment of the military officer, constituted these crimes.

Having the prisoner thus in custody upon the vague and unsupported accusations, he refuses to obey the writ of habeas corpus upon the ground that he is duly authorized by the President to suspend it.

This is exactly a parallel case with those in Idaho. The Chief Justice continues:

As the case comes before me therefore, I understand that the President not only claims the right to suspend the writ of habeas corpus himself at his discretion, but to delegate that discretionary power to a military officer. * * *

I certainly listened to it with some surprise, for I had supposed it to be one of those points of constitutional law upon which there was no difference of opinion, and that it was admitted on all hands that the privilege of the writ could not be suspended except by act of Congress. * * * The great importance which the framers of the Constitution attached to the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus to protect the liberty of the citizen is proved by the fact that its suspension, except in cases of invasion and rebellion, is first in the list of prohibited powers, and even in these cases the power is denied and its exercise prohibited unless the public safety should require it. * * *

Congress is of necessity the judge of whether the public safety does or does not require it, and their judgment is conclusive. But the introduction of these words is a standing admonition to the legislative body of the danger of suspending it and of the extreme caution they should exercise before they give the Government of the United States such power over the liberty of a citizen. It is the second article of the Constitution that provides for the organization of the executive department, enumerates the powers conferred on it, and prescribes its duties; and if the high power over the liberty of the citizen now claimed was intended to be conferred on the President it would undoubtedly be found in plain words in this article; but there is not a word in it that can furnish the slightest ground to justify the exercise of the power. * * *

With such provision in the Constitution, expressed in language too clear to be misunderstood by anyone, I can see no ground whatever for supposing that the President, in any emergency or in any state of things, can authorize the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus or the arrest of a citizen, except in aid of the judicial power. * * *

The Constitution provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." It declares that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation," etc.

It provides that the party accused shall be entitled to a speedy trial in a court of justice. These great and fundamental laws which Congress itself could not suspend have been disregarded and suspended, like the writ of habeas corpus, by a military order supported by force of arms. Such is the case now before me, and I can only say that if the authority which the Constitution has confided to the judiciary department and judicial officers may thus, upon any pretext or under any circumstances, be usurped by the military power at its discretion, the people of the United States are no longer living under a government of laws, but every citizen holds life, liberty, and property at the will and pleasure of the army officer in whose military district he may happen to be found.

This is the opinion of one of the ablest jurists of the world and one of the highest rank in the annals of American judiciary. The constitutional provision is the same in the Idaho constitution as in the Federal, and yet the governor, by his mere proclamation, by the assumption of purely arbitrary authority, assumes to exercise a power which is denied to the President, and only granted to Congress under the most carefully guarded conditions. It is a most arrogant and insolent usurpation of arbitrary power without warrant, and in defiance of free institutions, and is an insult to the dignity of American citizenship, and if such insolent usurpation is tolerated the end of free government is arrived at.

A. J. Forney, the representative of the attorney-general in charge of the so-called coroner's jury (but actually a star-chamber inquisition), on his examination before the committee gave an illustration of the weak defense of the arrogant assumption of authority and arbitrary procedures on the part of the State and military representatives. In reply to a question by the chairman as to the authority under which the arrests of citizens confined in the bull pen were made, Mr. Forney said:

These arrests were not made by virtue of any process issued from our courts, or by any accusations filed against these men in our courts. These men were held by the authority of the governor, who had issued a proclamation declaring that county in a state of insurrection; these men were held by his orders, but were not held by virtue of any process of our court or by virtue of any accusation made against them in our courts.

The special attorney for the State thus virtually asserted and confessed the usurpation of dictatorial powers by the governor.

Mr. Forney further said:

The governor had appointed an agent to go there in his absence and take charge.

Thus the governor had delegated his power to another, an act which he had no authority to perform. Mr. Forney also quotes sections 7405 and 7406 of the statutes of Idaho as authority for the use of the military, but these statutes only authorize the governor to call out and use the military of the State to support the civil authorities.

Mr. Forney admitted:

Counsel did demand very strenuously to know not only who I had indicted, but also the evidence before the coroner's jury, but I asked the court to decline to make an order granting that information. * * *

That the appointment of Mr. Forney as special prosecutor for Shoshone County was illegal and in defiance of law was proven by the fact that Mr. Forney is a resident of Latah County.

Section 1810 of the statutes of Idaho says:

No person is eligible to a county office who at the time of his election or appointment is not of the age of twenty-one years, a citizen of the Territory, and for six months prior to the day of his appointment or election an elector of the county in which the duties of his office are to be exercised.

Here is an anomalous condition of affairs. A prosecuting officer commanding the arrest without warrant and imprisonment of citizens, denying them a knowledge of the charges on which they are held, denying them the benefit of counsel, denying the privilege of the sacred writ of habeas corpus, and at the same time himself criminally guilty of holding his assumed position in defiance of the laws which he pretends to uphold. Again, in the course of the examination Mr. Sulzer asked:

You testify there was martial law in Shoshone County to some extent. What do you mean by "to some extent"?

A. I said this, that a declaration of insurrection by the governor and troops going in there would put into effect martial law to some extent.

Mr. SULZER. Then there was martial law as against the members of the miners' union, but not martial law against the men in control of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine?

Answer. Martial law was declared. You might say it was in force to this extent against all who were aiders and abettors in this insurrection, and agitators.

Mr. SULZER. And those suspected?

Answer. I presume you might say suspected, or against whom there was some evidence.

Mr. SULZER. These men who were incarcerated in the bull pen were not permitted to give bail, were they?

Answer. No, they were not permitted.

Mr. SULZER. Some of these men you had no evidence against at all, and yet they were confined, and refused bail?

Mr. SULZER. You have been employed by the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, have you not, as a lawyer?

Answer. Yes; I am at this time.

As to the illegal declaration of martial law and suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, the following passage in the examination of Mr. Forney is illustrative. Mr. Hay said:

I wish, Mr. Forney, to call your attention to sections 7405 and 7406. Section 7405 is in these words: "When an armed force is called out for the purpose of suppressing an unlawful or riotous assembly, or arresting the offenders, and is placed under the temporary discretion of any civil officer, it must obey the orders thereto of such civil officer." That section applies only to the case of unlawful or riotous assembly, does it not?

Answer. Yes; or, I think, it would cover conditions of insurrection.

Mr. HAY. It does not say anything about insurrection, does it?

Answer. No.

Mr. HAY. Now, section 7406 speaks of insurrection, and is in these words: "When the governor is satisfied that the execution of civil or criminal process has been forcibly resisted in any county by bodies of men, or that combinations to resist the execution of process by force exists in any county, and that the power of the county as exerted has not been sufficient to enable the officers having the process to execute it, he may, on the application of the officer, or the district attorney, or the probate judge of the county, by proclamation to be published in such papers as he shall direct, declare the county to be in a state of insurrection, and may order into the service of the Territory such number and description of volunteer of uniformed companies, or other militia of the Territory, as he shall deem necessary, to serve for such term and under the command of such officer or officers as he shall direct."

Question. Now, I will ask you if that is not the only law of the State of Idaho which applies to a county being in a state of insurrection?

Answer. I think so.

Mr. HAY. And does not that apply entirely to such number and description of volunteer or uniformed companies or other militia of the Territory as he shall deem necessary to serve?

Answer. I think, in addition, it will cover Federal troops sent into the State.

Mr. HAY. Will you state what part of that section will cover Federal troops sent by the President, who is the Commander in Chief of the Armies of the United States?

Answer. That section does not cover in terms my position; but I think the implication would cover that.

Mr. HAY. You think, then, that the President can abrogate or delegate his powers as Commander in Chief in favor of the governor of the State?

Answer. Oh, he might do that temporarily. I think when he sends soldiers into a State they are subject to the orders of the officer in charge, appointed by the governor.

Mr. HAY. That is the very point I want to get at, because I will be perfectly frank in saying that after a very careful examination of the law I am satisfied that the President of the United States can not delegate his power over the troops of which he is Commander in Chief to any State officer. What I want is to have you or anybody else show me some law which would authorize the President to do that. You claim that this law of the State of Idaho does it by implication. Now, is there anything in the Revised Statutes of the United States that authorizes that?

Mr. FORNEY. I will read you the only section which I have been able to find bearing on the subject. It is in these words:

"In case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President, on application, if the legislature can not be convened, to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States, which may be applied for, as he deems sufficient to suppress such insurrection; or, on like application, to employ for the same purpose such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as he deems necessary."

Mr. HAY. Is there anything in that statute which would imply that the President could send troops there and place them under the civil officer of the State of Idaho, over whom he would have no possible control?

Answer. Oh, I do not think in sending troops into a State the President loses absolutely his control.

Mr. HAY. What I want to get at, though, is, who was really the responsible commander of those troops, General Merriam or Mr. Bartlett Sinclair?

Answer. General Merriam was the commander of the troops, but Mr. Sinclair was the commander, so far as the State was concerned.

Mr. HAY. Is there any law of the United States which would have given to Mr. Sinclair, or any other agent of the governor, or the governor himself, the authority to command United States troops sent by the President of the United States?

Answer. I do not think he could command them in the absolute sense, in that regard.

Mr. HAY. Do you mean to say that General Merriam, acting under the command of the President of the United States, was bound to take cognizance of the statutes of Idaho?

Answer. Well, I do not know, you might put it that way.

Mr. HAY. Was not martial law declared in that region?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. Is not martial law no law at all, except the regulations promulgated by the commander, who has charge of the territory, which is under martial law.

Answer. Practically so.

Mr. HAY. You agree with me then, in my interpretation of the law, or rather of the condition of affairs there—General Merriam was really the responsible commander, and was responsible for what took place as the commander put in charge in that region, which was then declared to be under martial law?

Answer. No; I do not think General Merriam was responsible.

Mr. HAY. Who was responsible?

Answer. The governor and his officials.

Mr. HAY. Then you mean that the governor and Mr. Sinclair, who, I suppose you mean by "officials," had control, and were in control of the United States forces?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. And you can not point me to any law of the United States which authorizes the President of the United States to abrogate or delegate his powers as Commander in Chief of the Army to any State officer. Would the general in command report to the governor of Idaho or to the President of the United States as to what he was doing and what he contemplated doing?

Answer. I presume he would report to his superior officers.

Mr. HAY. The Secretary of War and the President of the United States?

Answer. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Forney, you are not able to cite any law which provides that the President, when he calls out troops of the United States at the request of the governor of the State, abrogates his power over those troops, can you?

Answer. Oh, no; I know of no such law.

Mr. HAY. If the State officers were in command of those troops, what was the use of having those troops there? Could not the State authorities have called out a posse comitatus, or have enrolled a large number of deputy sheriffs, who could have controlled that situation as well as troops?

Answer. The State of Idaho had no militia at that time—they were in the Philippines. I presume that the governor thought that if he called out a posse, they would not be able to cope with the uprising.

Mr. HAY. Did he not have a large number of people there? A great many witnesses testified that they went along with the soldiers when the people were arrested?

Answer. Yes; they were deputies.

Mr. HAY. Do I understand that General Merriam put the soldiers under his command under the control of the State deputies, and permitted them to use those soldiers to arrest anyone they themselves might point out?

Answer. Practically, yes.

After continuing this line of questions for some time, Mr. Hay said:

It has been evident from the beginning of this investigation that the State authorities were responsible for everything that was done in Idaho. The point I want to bring out, and which seems to me is extremely pertinent, is this: That when the President of the United States sends troops to any State in response either to the request of the governor or of the legislature of the State, he does not, and can not, delegate his power to any officer of the State, nor can he abrogate his power in favor of any State officer. If in this case these troops were sent there by the President, whatever they did was done upon their own responsibility, and they can not hide behind the skirts of the governor of the State or of his representatives. What I wanted to bring out was, whether or not these troops commanded by General Merriam (who doubtless was instructed by his superior officers as to what his duties were) permitted men who could have no legal authority over them to direct their movements. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that it was the duty of the commander to ascertain what the law was and what his duties were and act accordingly.

Mr. LENTZ asked: Mr. Forney, who was in supreme control of the power or force which was put in operation in Shoshone County?

Answer. I think Mr. Sinclair, as the representative of the governor, and General Merriam.

Mr. LENTZ. Do you mean that Sinclair was the supreme force over General Merriam, or that General Merriam was part of the supreme force?

Answer. I think, Mr. Sinclair had absolute control, and General Merriam rendered him assistance.

Mr. LENTZ. Which one obeyed the orders of the other?

Answer. I presume General Merriam obeyed Mr. Sinclair's orders.

Mr. LENTZ. Then Sinclair was in supreme command of General Merriam and his armed force?

Answer. You may say that; I do not know.

Mr. LENTZ. I want to know who was the final authority—the man highest in power in Shoshone County—during this period.

Answer. I think Mr. Sinclair, as the representative of the governor, was the absolute authority.

Mr. LENTZ. Was he there as a military officer or a civil officer?

Answer. You might say he was both a civil and a military officer.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Forney, do you know of any statute in Idaho, or any decision of any court, which confers upon a man both civil and military authority at the same time?

Answer. Well, not in so many terms.

Mr. LENTZ. Do not the law and the constitution plainly and specifically separate the civil from the military power?

Answer. I think the civil and the military are separated. Our statute-section 7405, uses the words, "appoint a civil officer."

Mr. LENTZ. Now, then, if he appointed a civil officer, did Sinclair, by virtue of that statute, become a civil officer or a military officer?

Answer. The statute designates him as a civil officer. You might say, in one sense, that he was a military officer.

Mr. LENTZ. You say the statute says he is to be a civil officer?

Answer. Well, it does.

Mr. LENTZ. In one sense does the word "civil" mean "military"? Is that what you mean?

Answer. No, it does not mean "military."

Mr. LENTZ. Then, in what sense could the word "civil" become juggled into "military"?

Answer. In this way: Mr. Sinclair represented the governor and exercised considerable arbitrary power.

Mr. LENTZ. Does the law of Idaho give a civil officer "considerable arbitrary power;" is there any statute as to that?

Answer. Where there is an insurrection you might say that there was more or less arbitrary power; you might say in one sense that he was a military officer, because he was in command of the district which was declared to be in a state of insurrection.

Mr. LENTZ. The word "civil" also means "military" does it, in your judgment?

Answer. Well, in construing that statute——

Mr. LENTZ (interrupting). You construe the word "civil" to mean something else than civil; is that it?

Answer. The fact that he was there in charge of all the forces might make him, in one sense, a military officer.

Mr. LENTZ. In other words, is it not a fact that, having exercised military power, it is now necessary to distort the word "civil" so that it will have the additional meaning of "military?"

Answer. No; I do not think so. I think that that is a power which would follow the other.

Mr. LENTZ. In other words, in your judgment, the legislature did not know the meaning of the word "civil" when it used it. Is it not a fact, Mr. Forney, that only by interpretation, then, you can account for the military power exercised by Mr. Sinclair?

Answer. I would say that that power being given by the statute everything follows necessary under it in order to accomplish the object of the statute.

Mr. LENTZ. In other words the word "civil," in your judgment, by interpretation, is made to mean both "civil" and "military" in the statute?

Mr. LENTZ. Now, Mr. Forney, I shall read to you section 13, of article 4, of the constitution of the State of Idaho, and ask you whether this part of the constitution is still in force in Idaho and was in force at the time under consideration: "In case of the absence or disqualification of the lieutenant-governor, from any cause which applies to the governor, or when he shall hold the office of governor, then the president pro tempore of the senate shall perform the duties of the lieutenant-governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed." Is that section 13 of the constitution still in force, as you understand it?

Answer. I think so.

Mr. LENTZ. I will ask you to state whether section 9 of article 4 of the constitution of Idaho is still in force. It is as follows: "The governor may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the legislature by proclamation, stating the purpose for which he has convened it. But when so convened it shall have no power to legislate on any subjects other than those specified in the proclamation, but may provide for the expenses of the session and other matters incidental thereto. He may also by proclamation convene the Senate in extraordinary session for the transaction of executive business." Is that section still in force?

Answer. I think so; yes, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. You may state whether, under that section, it would have been possible for the governor to have convened the legislature at any time since April 29, 1899.

Answer. He could not have convened it at once; it requires twenty days' notice.

Mr. LENTZ. I did not say at once. I asked whether it would be possible for him to convene it.

Answer. It would have been possible for him if the conditions had arisen to call it.

Mr. LENTZ. An occasion upon which Sinclair and others were given absolute and supreme power for eight or ten months in succession would be an occasion which would have justified the governor in calling the legislature, if he so desired, would it not?

Answer. Oh, he might, but I think it was an optional matter with the governor, whether he called it or not.

Mr. LENTZ. Now, I will ask you to listen to section 4, article 4, and state whether this is in force, as a part of the constitution of the State of Idaho, and was in force throughout the time concerning which we are inquiring: "The governor shall be the commander in chief of the military forces of the State, except when they shall be called into actual service of the United States. He shall have power to call out the militia to execute the laws, to suppress insurrection, or to repel invasion." Is that still the law?

Answer. That is still the law.

Mr. LENTZ. Will you state where in the constitution or in the statutes of Idaho there is any power given to the governor to delegate his military power?

Answer. I think it would be perfectly competent for him to appoint a civil officer under the statute.

Mr. LENTZ. That is what the statute says, does it not? a civil officer——

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Now, is there any statute, to your knowledge, where it says that the governor may delegate his military authority to any individual?

Answer. No: there is no such statute.

Mr. LENTZ. Do you know of any part of the constitution of Idaho which gives the governor power to delegate his military authority conferred on him in section 4, article 4, of the Constitution?

Answer. I think section 7405 does.

Mr. LENTZ. And if that does not, then there is no power in the governor. Is that right?

Answer. That is the only statute I know of.

Mr. LENTZ. Section 7405 of the Statutes of Idaho contains all and the only authority of which you are aware?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Now, Mr. Forney, is it not a fact that in section 7405 the statute, in using the word "civil," must have meant that the civil officer would continuously be under the control of the civil courts?

Answer. No; I do not think so.

Mr. LENTZ. So long as he was a civil officer, and acted in the capacity of a civil officer, then, in your judgment, he had a right to violate or ignore or repudiate the order or decree of a civil court, had he?

Answer. I think that under that decision of the supreme court of Idaho that it was optional with him whether he would obey them or not.

Mr. LENTZ. Let me understand you. The statute could create him a civil officer, and then, by interpretation, he could eliminate himself from the boundaries or limitations of a civil officer, and repudiate an order of the civil court, could he?

Answer. Being in charge of that district, which was in a state of insurrection, he would be at liberty to ignore a civil process.

Mr. LENTZ. As a civil officer he would be at liberty to ignore it, would he?

Answer. No; in his military capacity.

Mr. LENTZ. In other words, he could put on the civil suit or the military uniform at will, could he?

Answer. Oh, I think the statute clothed him with both.

Mr. LENTZ. Does not the sheriff have power to control armed men under the statutes and the constitution of Idaho?

Answer. Yes.

Mr. LENTZ. Is he a civil officer or a military officer?

Answer. He is a civil officer, but he has not the power of a civil officer, appointed by the governor in an insurrectionary district.

Mr. LENTZ. Now, Mr. Forney, is it not a fact that, under the constitution of Idaho, sections 4 and 12 which I have read to you, the only possible individual to whom this dictatorial or military power could go was the lieutenant-governor of the State, and then only in the absence or disqualification of the governor?

Answer. I do not think so.

Mr. LENTZ. You think, then, that in spite of the constitution, which specifically reposes this power in the governor and specifically provides when it may pass to some other individual, and in the absence of any section of the code or any section of the constitution providing for the delegation of that power by the governor, the governor could, notwithstanding that, arbitrarily delegate it to any man he might select?

Answer. I do not think those articles apply to a case like the one in Shoshone County.

Mr. LENTZ. Then there are in Idaho a great many questions concerning a man's liberty, for which there is no constitutional provision, and yet, the constitution of Idaho is almost identical with that of the United States. In other words, there was a condition in Shoshone County, in your judgment, which was not covered by constitutional provision, as to invasion and rebellion, nor by code provision, as to riot and insurrection?

Answer. I think the governor was justified in acting under section 7405 of the statutes.

Mr. LENTZ. There is a provision in the constitution of Idaho, for the case of rebellion and the case of invasion, is there not?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. And in your opinion, unless the word "civil" in section 7405 of the code can be interpreted as to justify the exercise of military power, by Sinclair, then there is no code section, nor constitutional section, which specifically provides for that case?

Answer. That is the only provision.

Mr. LENTZ. And that is the only section you claim in either the constitution or the code?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Forney, is it not a fact that the grand jury was in session about a month in the months of May and June?

Answer. Only about a week.

Mr. LENTZ. Is it not a fact that you could have kept the grand jury in session substantially as long as you saw fit to bring charges before it against different individuals in that county?

Answer. Oh, as a rule the district attorney is not required to dismiss the grand jury before he gets through with the cases which he has to present to it.

Mr. LENTZ. Is it not a fact that the grand jury was convened about the middle of June and was in session about ten days, or, say, substantially the grand jury was dismissed about June 22. Is that right?

Answer. Approximately so.

Mr. LENTZ. Was Paul Corcoran indicted at the session of the grand jury?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. When did you begin his trial?

Answer. About the 5th of July.

Mr. LENTZ. How long did his trial continue?

Answer. Until about July 27.

Mr. LENTZ. Then did the court adjourn?

Answer. After the trial of Corcoran the court adjourned.

Mr. LENTZ. What did you do then?

Answer. I went home.

Mr. LENTZ. When did you return to Shoshone County?

Answer. About September 24.

Mr. LENTZ. When you returned did you try anybody?

Answer. No, sir; no demand was made upon me.

Mr. LENTZ. Were you not requested in open court by Mr. Robinson to produce and publish such indictments as you had against men in the bull pen?

Answer. Yes, sir; that is true.

Mr. LENTZ. Is it not a fact that you refused to make known any of the indictments to Mr. Robertson or anybody else?

Answer. Yes, sir; but I was not ready with the cases.

Mr. LENTZ. Did you serve notice upon any of the men in the bull pen that they were indicted?

Answer. No, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Have any of those indictments been published?

Answer. No, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. What were the indictments against Mr. Heney, Mr. Cornell, Mr. Flannagan, and Mr. Stewart?

Answer. None of those were indicted.

Mr. LENTZ. But they were all held in the bull pen for months, were they not?

Answer. They were held there by virtue of the State authorities, and not by virtue of being indicted.

Mr. LENTZ. In other words, they were punished by several months' imprisonment and interference with their ordinary liberty and their business, and prevented from the control and management of their property interests and from the use of their time and labor without an indictment. Is that the case?

Answer. Yes; they were held there by the State authorities, without indictment.

Mr. LENTZ. So far as you know, no indictment was ever formulated against either of these gentlemen?

Answer. I do not think there was.

Mr. LENTZ. Is it not a fact all three of the county commissioners, Boyle, Stimson, and Simmins, went through the trial for their removal under your management without either one of them having been shown to have been within many miles of the scene of the riot of April 29, 1899?

Answer. I do not remember the testimony in the case; I did not conduct it personally.

Mr. LENTZ. Is it not your recollection that neither of them were at Wardner on the day of the trouble?

Answer. I can not say.

Mr. LENTZ. Did you ever hear anything against the reputation of either of these men or his standing as a reputable citizen of the county?

Answer. I did not know that these men were in existence till I went up there.

Mr. LENTZ. Now, Mr. Forney, is it not a fact that Mr. Reddy, at the September term of the court, demanded of the court and of you that the indictments against these men, if you had any, be presented, or published or made known, and that trial be had; and if no trial was to be had, they be released from the bull pen?

Answer. I do not remember of his making such a demand.

Mr. LENTZ. What did Mr. Reddy, as attorney for these men, say; what did he demand?

Answer. He demanded I should publish the indictments in my possession.

Mr. LENTZ. Yes; and what did you or the court do?

Answer. I asked the court not to publish the indictments.

Mr. LENTZ. When were these indictments made?

Answer. They were found in June.

Mr. LENTZ. And you refused, even in September, notwithstanding the presence of the attorneys of the men in the bull pen, to proceed with the trial of those men?

Answer. Nobody demanded a trial.

Mr. LENTZ. Was not your refusal to make known whom you had indicted a practical refusal to proceed with the trial of any of the men whom you held under those same indictments?

Answer. No; I was not ready for trial.

Mr. LENTZ. Then it was of your own motion that these men in the bull pen were denied the right to give bail or bond, under the constitution of the State; or was that by reason of an order made upon you by General Merriam or Sinclair, or some other person who assumed authority?

Answer. Neither General Merriam nor Sinclair ever spoke to me about those cases.

Mr. LENTZ. Who, then, was responsible for denying these men the constitutional right of having their indictments preferred, and being given the privilege of giving bond or bail for their liberty?

Answer. There were none in the bull pen I was ready to try.

Mr. LENTZ. Suppose you were not ready. Is it not frequently the case that prosecutors and lawyers are not ready for trial, and that the men under indictment are given the privilege of bail and bond, as provided in the constitution, not only of Idaho, but of other States?

Answer. Oh, yes; if these men had not been held by virtue of the State authorities, I should have had them all up and required them to give bond.

Mr. LENTZ. You mean the military authorities, do you not?

Answer. Well, the State authorities.

Mr. LENTZ. Your interpretation, then, was that the military law, which was being exercised there, had absolutely deprived these men of the right to have their indictments made known to them and to give bail?

Answer. No; I was not ready for trial; they were held by the State authorities, and I did not propose to interfere with them.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Forney, is it not a fact that the only reason you had for refusing to make known the indictments against these men in the bull pen was that you knew they would step up with their attorneys and give bail, and secure their release until such time as you were ready for trial?

Answer. Oh, no; I might have demanded those men of the State authorities.

Mr. LENTZ. Would the State authorities have listened to you?

Answer. I do not know whether they would or not.

Mr. LENTZ. Would you have advised them not to?

Answer. If I had wanted a man there, I think they would have delivered him up when I demanded him; but I think if any of those men had been tried and acquitted, they might have been taken back to the bull pen on judgment of the military commander there.

Mr. LENTZ. That is, the military power that was being exercised there was such that even if they had been tried in the civil court and acquitted, the military officers could have them taken up and put them back in the bull pen anyway?

Answer. Yes; I think the military authorities were authorized to take up any man against whom they thought they had evidence of insurrection.

Mr. LENTZ. Were you a civil officer or a military officer?

Answer. A civil officer.

Mr. LENTZ. Were you under oath?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Was it not your sworn duty to see that these men in the bull pen recovered their liberty without an hour's loss?

Answer. No; I did not so consider it.

Mr. LENTZ. And yet you say that as a civil officer, had you preferred your indictments against these men, you have no doubt that you could have secured their release from the bull pen?

Answer. I could have secured their release so far as the trial of the party was concerned.

Mr. LENTZ. Suppose you had taken Mr. Hendy out on an indictment for blowing up a mill and he had given bail or bond, could the military authorities have rearrested him and put him back in the bull pen?

Answer. They might have done so; they were dealing with a different class of offenses from what I was prosecuting in the civil court.

Mr. LENTZ. With what class of offenses were they dealing?

Answer. With cases of insurrection.

Mr. LENTZ. Then for the offense of insurrection you imprison every one that Sinclair and a few spotters see fit to have arrested, and keep them in jail for many months, and then dismiss them without any warrant, without any charge, without any affidavit, and without any accusation. Is that your idea of even martial law as against an insurrection?

Answer. Yes; whenever they believe that they were engaged in acts of insurrection, they can arrest them in that way.

Mr. LENTZ. And that their mere temporary or prejudiced belief against certain individuals would justify them in locking up a man for six months and placing him beyond the reach of the privilege of having a charge preferred against him in writing, and having the right to appear in open court with his attorney and give such bail as the court might fix?

Answer. I think, under martial law, whenever the parties in charge of a district are reasonably satisfied (whether it is a fact or not) that a man is guilty of committing an act of insurrection, they have the right to imprison him.

Mr. LENTZ. Is insurrection an offense against the laws of Idaho?

Answer. Oh, it might be, if taken in one sense; not for the acts, I presume, for which they held them.

Mr. LENTZ. Is riotous conduct indictable under the laws of Idaho?

Answer. Oh, riotous conduct is a misdemeanor there.

Mr. LENTZ. Is riotous conduct indictable under the laws of Idaho?

Answer. Oh, it is a misdemeanor, and a man might be indicted for it.

Mr. LENTZ. Is insurrection a higher or lower offense than riotous conduct?

Answer. It might be, in one sense, termed riotous conduct. It is not an offense specified in our statutes.

Mr. LENTZ. Then if a man were indicted for riot he could be bound over by the court for trial, could he not?

Answer. Oh, he might be.

Mr. LENTZ. But if the grand jury sent down an indictment charging a man with insurrection, upon demurrer in your court the court would allow such a man to go free without trial. Is that right?

Answer. I do not think that being guilty of insurrection is designated as an offense in our statutes.

Mr. LENTZ. Insurrection is so small an offense that it is not even worthy of indictment by a grand jury, and yet so large an offense, on the other hand, that a governor, or a man by the name of Sinclair, can lock a man up for six months or six years, if he sees fit, without even allowing him to give bail or bond, or have a trial, or have the privilege of habeas corpus?

Answer. Yes; I think under declaration of martial law the authorities might hold him if they believed him guilty of insurrection.

Mr. LENTZ. But a man could be guilty of almost any crime in the State of Idaho, and find a penalty provided in the statute and a process for his arrest and trial, but by oversight the legislature of the State and the constitution of the State have made no provision whatever for the conviction and punishment of a man guilty of insurrection?

Answer. I do not think, technically, there is any such offense laid down in our statutes.

Mr. LENTZ. I will call your attention to section 7407 of the statutes of Idaho, which is in these words: "Any person, who after the publication of such proclamation, resists or aids in resisting the execution of process in any county so declared to be in a state of insurrection, or who aids or attempts the rescue or escape of any person from lawful custody or confinement, or who resists or aids in resisting any force ordered out by the governor to quell or suppress an insurrection, shall be punished by imprisonment in the present Territorial prison for a term of not less than two years." I will ask you whether that section of the code does not exclude any other punishment for riot or insurrection except that herein specifically provided?

Answer. Yes, sir; so far as the State courts are concerned.

Mr. LENTZ. Even assuming now that the governor legally and properly declared Shoshone County in a state of insurrection, and that he had put the county under martial law, and that he had made this charge against certain individuals, could he have done anything else in the way of punishment except to have the men accused subjected to the ordinary trial by civil court and jury, and then subject them to this imprisonment, provided after a conviction, on a proper trial?

Answer. None of the prisoners in the bull pen were indicted for riotous conduct; they were indicted for murder, arson, and conspiracy. The offenses the governor imprisoned for may have been a different class of offenses.

Mr. LENTZ. Murder, arson, and conspiracy are all statutory offenses, are they not?

Answer. Yes, sir; they are.

Mr. LENTZ. And persons could be indicted for them and give bail, could they not?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Had you any higher grade of offenses against those men who never were indicted, who were in the bull pen, than the crimes of murder and arson and conspiracy?

Answer. No, sir; those are the highest crimes under our statutes.

Mr. LENTZ. Can you conceive of any punishment that would be authorized or warranted, or legal, in the State of Idaho, outside of those which are provided in the statute?

Answer. Those prescribed in the statutes are the only crimes I know of cognizable by the court, but I understand that offenses which obtain when a county is in a state of insurrection are different under proclamation; that they are such offenses as the governor or his subordinates may conclude are against the peace and order of the community and not cognizable by the courts.

Mr. LENTZ. I wish you would name one of those offenses of which the court could not take notice.

Answer. I do not know for what offenses they were arrested. Generally, I was informed, they were arrested for offenses of insurrection, and against the peace and good order of the community.

Mr. LENTZ. That is the point I would like you to make clear to this committee. Some offense which was against the peace and good order of the community, which was not within the specific language of the statutes of the State. But Mr. Forney never did designate any such offense.

Mr. LENTZ. Now, Mr. Forney, I ask you whether, in your opinion, the mere declaration of the governor, in his opinion, the county of Shoshone was in a state of insurrection relieved the governor and civil and military authorities present in Shoshone County of the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which is as follows: "No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land and naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject, for the same offense, to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb, nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall property be taken for public use, without just compensation."

This was objected to and, on appeal from the Chair, the objection was sustained by a strict party vote.

Mr. LENTZ. I now read to you, Mr. Forney, the sixth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and ask you to state whether, in your opinion, the governor's proclamation placed him beyond the reach of this amendment and beyond the control of it? The article is as follows: "In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense."

This was objected to and sustained by a strict party vote.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Forney, is it not a fact that that community was in such a condition that any day after you got there any constable or sheriff could have taken into custody any of those men from their homes and brought them before the court or justice of the peace?

Answer. I don't know about that.

Mr. LENTZ. Do you know anything that would have prevented an officer taking these men by such a warrant from their homes or from their mines or from the streets, wherever they might have been found?

Answer. I don't know. The conditions were very strained for a long time between the union and nonunion men. That camp was not big enough for both of these people.

Mr. LENTZ. Do you know of any resistance to an officer from civil courts during the time you were in Shoshone County?

Answer. No; I know of no resistance.

Mr. LENTZ. What do you mean when you say that that place is not big enough for union and nonunion men; what place do you refer to?

Answer. The Cœur d'Alenes.

Mr. LENTZ. In other words, one or the other has to get out of the Cœur d'Alenes district; is that it?

Answer. That is about it.

Mr. LENTZ. It is your opinion that place is not big enough for union and nonunion men to live there at the same time?

Answer. No, sir; I do not believe it can be accomplished.

Mr. LENTZ. And it is because of this opinion in the minds of others that this system has been resorted to, to break up the unions in the Cœur d'Alenes district?

Answer. I do not know that that is the object.

Mr. LENTZ. What is the object?

Answer. To restore peace and order.

Mr. LENTZ. Had there been any disorderly conduct there the first week in May, 1899?

Answer. I do not remember.

Mr. LENTZ. Is it not a fact, Mr. Forney, that men who were not in the bull pen were called up by telephone and sent for by ordinary subpœna, and came before Dr. France and his court from different parts of the county and testified in that hearing that was carried on for weeks?

Answer. Yes; that is true.

Mr. LENTZ. And do you know of any person who was sent for, either by telephone, or by subpœna, or by an officer or deputy, who refused to come?

Answer. I do not remember of any instance.

Mr. LENTZ. You never heard of such a thing, did you?

Answer. No, sir.

Mr. HAY. Does martial law still exist in Shoshone County?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. Is there any reason why the governor could not have called an extra session of the legislature during the last six months?

Answer. No; that is a matter optional with him.

Mr. LENTZ. Is it not a fact that in the Paul Corcoran trial, when a man named Johnson refused to testify, that Judge Stewart said, "Take this man out and put him on bread and water?"

Answer. I think that was the order.

Mr. LENTZ. Was not this man taken back and put in the bull pen?

Answer. Possibly he was.

Third. It is charged that Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam, commanding the troops in Shoshone County, arbitrarily and without warrant of law, without informing the accused of the charges upon which they were arrested, and in defiance of the sixth amendment to the Constitution, arrested and imprisoned hundreds of citizens of the United States and of the State of Idaho, and held them prisoners under the most brutal and tyrannical conditions, denying to them their constitutional right to a speedy trial by an impartial jury of the State, which right the Constitution clearly guarantees. (Article III, section 2; amendments, article VI.)

The evidence in support of this charge is overwhelming, and the abuses and outrages shown are most disgraceful and infamous, sufficient to excite the indignation and resentment of any people not already reduced to the condition of serfs and brutalized by slavery. That the arrests of citizens without warrant was begun or at least authorized by General Merriam even before the issuing of the governor's proclamation is proven by the dispatch of General Merriam to the Adjutant-General, dated May 2, and the reply of the Adjutant-General assuring the general in command that his action was approved by the President. Also by the dispatch of Captain Batchelor of May 3 addressed to General Merriam and already set out in this report. The dispatch of General Merriam to the Adjutant-General, dated May 4, and already referred to, reports 128 arrests the first day.

The fact that he asserts the arrests were made by State deputies, supported by United States troops, is a mere subterfuge and attempt to shift responsibility too apparent to be given any consideration. It was the military power exercised which accomplished the wrong, the so-called State deputies merely serving the purpose of scapegoats for the military. It was through the military that the existing conditions were made possible. Dispatches of General Merriam, already quoted, make it clear that wholesale and arbitrary arrests were made day after day and that soldiers were constantly used in this service. General Merriam states in his testimony:

> The arrests of men suspected of complicity in the crimes of April 29, which began at once on the arrival of Captain Batchelor, May 2,
>
> (before the issuing of the governor's proclamation)
>
> were continued daily in the different mining camps, by deputies under escort of troops.

There need be nothing further than the statement of General Merriam himself to prove the truth of this charge, but there is no lack of proof from innumerable witnesses. A reign of terror prevailed among the citizens; no man was secure from arrest, and no man's home was safe from the invasion of the soldiers at any hour night or day. No man had any assurance when he retired to his bed that he would not be dragged forth by armed soldiers before the dawn and thrown into the prison pen among the hundreds of others who knew not what crime had been charged against them, and for whom there existed no source of relief or tribunal of appeal, all was at the mercy of the soldiery. But let us hear what reliable eyewitnesses have stated on this point. The evidence of one honorable citizen, a trusted and honored official of the county, a man against whom no kind of dishonor or wrong has ever been charged, is enough to make the American blood boil in the veins of any self-respecting man at the infamous tyranny and arrogant brutality with which he was treated, and that by men who wore the uniform of this free Government and acted under the approval of the President.

The statement reads as though it came from a victim of Weyler's diabolism in Cuba, from an incomunicado prisoner in the Moro at Habana, or from a Siberian pen of a former Russian autocrat, and yet it is the sworn statement of an honorable American citizen and a trusted official of his State, against whom no shadow of crime has ever been cast. The individual referred to is Mr. William R. Stimson, one of the county commissioners of Shoshone County, and his statement was made under oath before the committee making this investigation. The fact that such a thing can be possible in this enlightened land, and under our boasted free institutions, is so astounding that it is thought well to give the statement in full. It is as follows:

> On the 29th of April, 1899, I resided at Gem, Idaho, which is about 15 miles from the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mines. My occupation is that of a plumber, and on the 29th day of April referred to I was in Gem, and at no time during that day nearer to the scene of disturbance. I was a county commissioner and a member of the school board of district No. 16. On May 6 I was working at my bench in my shop and was arrested by a negro soldier and another man whom I did not know; I afterwards learned that the white man's name was Booth. When I was arrested I told Booth that I had procured an affidavit, for the reason that I had heard that an affidavit would keep a man from going to the bull pen, and I had no desire to go there. I showed him the affidavit and he said it was all right, but said, "Take care of it, because it may be of some value to you sometime, but I have special instructions to arrest you." He said, "You will have to go along." I told him, "All right." He then searched me, took everything out of my pockets—my pocketknife, rule, plumber's pliers, and everything I had in my pockets. He then left me with the soldier and went out about town. The soldier kept me in charge there all of the afternoon. About dark Booth came back and told the soldier to bring me where they were lining up the balance of the men who had been arrested. I was placed on the cowcatcher of an engine, along with this soldier and Booth, and we were taken to Kellogg. We arrived there about 10 o'clock at night. We got off the engine, and I understood Booth to speak to someone. I am under the impression it was General Merriam. I understood him to say, "General, there is a mistake somewhere. There is a man here whom I think should not be thrown in." That was all I could hear. Then I heard someone give orders to take me to Captain Batchelor's headquarters, and on arriving there the captain asked me if my name was Stimson, and if I was one of the commissioners. I told him I was. He ordered his orderly to search me. The orderly searched me very thoroughly, and then the captain took me to the guardhouse; he went there with me. He said to the sergeant of the guard, "Put this man in the corner and make him stay there; don't let him speak to anybody; don't let him smoke; don't give him any privileges of any kind." Then he went away, and the guard ordered me to lie down in my corner, and I did so. One of the guards asked me if I had any blankets, and I told him I did not; he gave me one of his blankets. As I laid down, I noticed someone lying there in the corner with his hat over his face. I could not tell who it was. There was also another man lying in another corner whom I could not recognize. This last person spoke to me, saying, "Hello, Bill." I said "I don't know who you are." "Why," he said, "Jim Young." "Oh," I said, "it is you, Jim?" Just then a big colored soldier came plunging in with his Krag-Jorgensen and said, "Here, by God, you fellows shut up; you have got to obey orders here or it will be damned hard with you." After that I kept still; I had nothing to say. The next morning we got up and stood around there. We had no right to speak to each other. Finally, Mr. Boyle, one of the county commissioners, the person who was lying in the corner opposite to me, said that he was getting very hungry. The guard stuck his head in at the door and said, "Here, none of your rag chewing goes in there; you have got to keep quiet; no talking goes at all." About noon they took us to a closet and then took us to breakfast at the bull pen, which at that time was a big barn. I was very hungry, but the provisions they had for our breakfast were a lot of hash—stinking, rotten hash—that had been hauled from the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine in a swill barrel. I was so very hungry that I undertook to eat some of it, but it made me sick. I could not eat it, so I went without my breakfast. I had had no supper the night before. After that all I undertook to eat was crackers and coffee; I lived on that for several days. Finally, a letter came to me, which was sent up by the sergeant to the captain's tent. The captain sent it down to the sergeant again by a deputy. The deputy gave me my letter and told me he would be obliged to read it. He said, "I have to read all these letters." He told me to open it, and said, "after you read it I will have to read it." I opened and read the letter and then gave it to the deputy. I think it was about four or five days after I had been down there that I saw Governor Steunenberg around the grounds one day. I asked the sergeant of the guard to let me go to the closet. He sent a guard with me, and on the way I got near enough to speak to Governor Steunenberg. I said to him, "Governor, this is rather a strange proceeding; I have been here now several days; I have tried to get a hearing and can not get anyone to pay any attention to my case, and I do not understand it." General Merriam spoke up and asked me who I had asked for a hearing. I told him I had asked Lieutenant Murphy; I had asked the sergeant of the guard several times to try and get me a hearing, and I had an affidavit in my pocket showing that I was not connected in any way with the riot, and that I was at home all day in Gem. The governor wanted to see the affidavit and I showed it to him. The affidavit was perfectly formal. He asked me about the different witnesses, and said he would take it to Sinclair and perhaps he would release me on it. I told him I believed that he was the governor of the State, and that I thought he had in many things more power than Sinclair, and if he could not release me on the strength of that affidavit I did not see how Sinclair could, and I did not care to lose my affidavit. I told him that I preferred to keep it in my possession because I thought it might be valuable to me some time. So he handed it back to me and turned and left me. A few days after that Mr. Boyle, myself, and Mr. Paul Corcoran, while eating our breakfast, were hurried off to the coroner's inquest. Some deputies came in and hurried us off. I was examined by Hugh France, the coroner, Attorney-General Hayes, and Mr. Lindley, the attorney for the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine. They examined me quite at length, and after they got through Attorney-General Hayes followed me to the door, and said: "Stimson, I believe there is a mistake somewhere; I do not think you ought to be in the bull pen." I told him I thought there was a mistake, too. I said, "I don't think I ought to be there." I then showed him my affidavit. He said, "I heard the governor speaking about it; I will speak to Sinclair to-night, and I think you will be released." But that was the last I ever heard about it. Before I was taken into the room where the inquest was held, Mr. Robertson, my attorney, attempted to speak to me, but the soldiers blocked the way and refused him permission. My wife had been on a visit with her mother in Butte, Mont., for a month or six weeks, and she, of course, learned of my incarceration through the papers and came home. The day she arrived at home she came down on the stage with the two babies to see me. On the way down the stage was upset, and my wife was quite severely injured, so badly that she could scarcely walk. She managed to get down to where my quarters were, and it was some time before she could get a hearing and permission to speak to me. We were not allowed to talk to anyone, unless a deputy was there to overhear our conversation. So a deputy (Edmonston) brought my wife up to where I was, and said, "You have got just five minutes to talk in here," and he insisted on hearing every word we said to each other. My wife was feeling very badly and could scarcely talk, but she told me that she was in a very delicate condition. She said: "I am in a very delicate condition and am afraid this injury is going to go very hard with me." That is about all she told me. I then asked the sergeant to take me to the captain's tent. He took me there, and I told the captain the condition my wife was in. I told him that she had been injured, and could not take care of the children, and that I wanted a chance to go home. The oldest boy is 2 years and 3 months old and the youngest 7 or 8 months old. The captain said he could do nothing for me. I asked him, then, if I could assist my wife in taking the children down to the train. He said no, but that he would send the orderly and that he could carry the children. This was done. I then called to one of the deputies—I don't know who he was—and asked him to take a telegram down for me, and send it to a doctor at Wallace. I wanted the doctor to meet my wife at the train and take care of her. The deputy did as I requested, and on his return stated that my wife was almost in hysterics. I asked him to see some official and try and get permission for me to go home. He said that the governor and Sinclair both had gone, but, said he, "I am going to see France, but I don't think he will do much for you. He is pretty cold-blooded," he said. "I don't think he will pay much attention to your case." The next day Dr. France passed by the guardhouse, and I called him over and said, "Doctor, my wife was severely injured yesterday in the accident to the stage; she is in a delicate condition, and you, being a doctor, understand the situation. I want to go home with my wife." "Well, I can't do anything for you," he said. "Sinclair and the governor are both away, and I have not the power to release you, but as soon as Sinclair comes back I will intercede for you." That was the last I heard of that.

Mr. Stimson remained in prison under these horrible conditions for over two months, and yet there was no charge against him. In answer to questions as to the conditions existing in the prison, Mr. Stimson made the following statements:

> At that time it was severely cold, and we had rain and snow the entire time. The guardhouse was built of rough boards, with a flat shed roof; whenever it rained the rain poured through and got us soaking wet; there was no fire. There was very little straw on the ground when we first went in, and eventually that straw was all tramped into the ground (there was no floor in the house). They used this same guardhouse for soldier prisoners, and whenever the negro soldiers got drunk and disobeyed orders they were thrown into the guardhouse with us. At times there would be ten or twelve drunken negro soldiers thrown in there with us as prisoners and it was so crowded that I became so stiff in my joints that I could scarcely walk. I got rheumatism from being exposed to the wet which came through the roof and lying on the bare ground, which gave me such misery that I could not straighten up or walk for several days. When they built the new bull pen, there were several bales of hay sent up there to make beds for the men in the bull pen. I told the sergeant of the guard that we wanted some of the hay to sleep on. He told me to go and get one of those bales. I went down and got it. Captain Leavell happened to see me, and calling to me said, "Drop that hay." I kept going and paid no attention to him. One of the guards stepped up and halted me, and the captain told the guard to make me drop the hay. Captain Leavell came up and said, "What are you doing with that hay?" I told him that we wanted it to sleep on. I said, "We are sleeping on the bare ground, and we want some hay." "Well," he said, "I have charge of that hay, and whenever I want you to have hay I will give it to you." But he did not give us any hay. When Captain Bachelor was there they had given strict orders not to allow us to smoke. Some of our friends had induced the sergeant to bring us in several boxes of cigars which they had bought us. They also sent us a lot of turkey and chicken, pie, cake, and such things, but, having no exercise, we did not care for them, and, having orders not to smoke, we did not need the cigars, so we set them out and told the guards to help themselves. One of the sergeants asked us why we did not smoke. We told him we had orders not to do so, and that we did not wish to disobey orders. "Well, now," he said, "boys, you go ahead and smoke, but don't let the officers see you." I was very anxious to smoke, and I smoked; but Captain Batchelor was walking by one day and he happened to see me standing in the guardhouse with a cigar in my mouth. He came over to me and said, "Corporal, take that cigar away from that man." So the corporal came up and I took the cigar from my mouth and offered it to him. He said, "Throw it down," and I threw it down. The captain said, "Corporal, I told you to take that cigar; now, I meant for you to grab it out of his hand and destroy it." He said, "Corporal, I will reduce you to the ranks if you make another break like that. I want you to be very severe with these men. I want you to treat them severely. I don't want you to be easy with them at all."

In reply to a question by Mr. JETT, as to whether he was arrested on a warrant, the witness replied, "No, sir; I never saw a warrant of any kind." Mr. JETT asked, "What charge was preferred against you?" The witness replied, "There was no charge of any kind; I never heard of any." Representative SULZER asked, "Who gave the order forbidding you to speak to your fellow-prisoners?" The witness replied, "Captain Batchelor gave the first order; after that, Captain Leavell. We heard them give the orders to the guard every night, when the new guard came on." The witness then made a detailed statement as to the filthy and unsanitary condition of the prison, but it is omitted here, as sufficient has been noted to show the animus and brutality of the officers in charge, and the infamous outrage upon the rights and liberties of innocent citizens, arrested without warrant, without charges of any kind being made, and the denial of a hearing by arbitrary decree of a dictator. Even the negro guards evidenced more humanity, more regard for justice and the rights of citizenship, than the officers who commanded them, who exhibited all the traits of petty tyrants and the arrogance and brutality that mark the tools of despots. The claim that the troops were only supporting the State authorities is a weak subterfuge; virtually they were the power in control and the deputies merely a technical cover for the atrocities perpetrated. This statement is a fair example of the volume of testimony, and is set out in order that a fair conception may be had of the actual conditions. Other witnesses, in large numbers, have verified and substantiated this one, and many have given details still more startling and alarming, when we consider the possibilities they indicate under existing conditions.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE CORNELL.

George Cornell, a boot and shoe maker, residing at Burke, in Shoshone County, Idaho, testified as follows:

Throughout the 29th of April, 1899, I was in Burke, 19 miles from Wardner. There was no riot or disturbance either that day or any subsequent day up to this time. I have no knowledge of any secret session held by any organization of any kind for the purpose of organizing a movement to blow up the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mill or any other property. I was arrested on May 4, without a warrant or being informed as to any charge against me. I was sitting at the table at the Tiger and Poorman boarding house, in company with John Frank, the superintendent of the Mercantile Company, and the fireman and engineer of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Some soldiers came in and said: "You men will have to get up and come on." John Frank said to them: "You don't want us, we are not miners. I am the superintendent of the Mercantile Company and these are two railroad men; none of us are the men you want." A soldier said "All right," and they left us. We stayed there probably two or three minutes longer and had about finished our dinner, when an officer with stripes on—I think he was a sergeant—came in and said: "You men will have to come on; my orders are to take everybody." We were driven out of the house and put in front of the soldiers. John Frank said: "I will go down to the store and square my proposition. You had better see the officers and get out of this." I started down to my place of business, and when I arrived there, there was a soldier just coming out of the door. I said to him, "Am I the man you are looking for?" He said, "Are you the proprietor?" I said, "Yes." He replied, "You are the man I want." I asked, "What are you going to do with us; where are you going to take us?" He said, "If there is anything in the house you want you had better go in and get it." I went in and put on my overcoat. When I came out I went over to where the other men were and was talking with them, trying to find out what was to be done with us. We then walked down the railroad track, near to a bridge that crossed a creek. A soldier, who seemed to be in charge, sat there in a chair taking down names, and I thought I would speak to him and see if I could not get released. I went up to him and he said, "Stand back." I said, "At least you will take my name." He replied, "I tell you to get back out of the way." I got back and we were held there until we were put on the train and taken to Wardner, where we arrived about 11 o'clock. Soldiers arrested us without any warrant, put us on the train and guarded us during the trip. At Wardner we were marched to an old barn and incarcerated about midnight on May 4. When the men came out of the mines, they were arrested in their mining clothes, which are very light, as it is very hot in the mines and they wear very little clothing, but, as it is cold at the surface in that high latitude at that season, they put on heavy clothing on coming out; but these men were not allowed to change their clothing when arrested, and many were almost naked except for their rubber and light underclothing. We had no blankets, no bedding, and no provision of that kind was made for us; no fire was lighted for us and it was very cold there at that season. We were compelled to sit around on bales of hay or on the floor or lie down on the floor to try to get a little rest. The next morning about 8 o'clock the doors were opened; but we were not allowed out of the building until 3 o'clock that afternoon. Then we were taken out in squads of 25 or 30 to eat, or try to eat. There was a big pan there, which was filled with stuff. The first man out was handed this pan, and the balance of the squad were told to follow him. They all had to get around, and take with their hands, out of that pan, what they could get to eat, and what they did eat. After we had eaten what we could of such food we were put back in the old barn. We were kept there the balance of that day and the next night under the same conditions as before. There had been no provision made for the men to wash even their faces and hands, and there was a large number who were just in the condition in which they had come out of the mines, their faces covered with the slime of the mines, and their hands and clothing the same, and it had dried upon them. They were calling for some means of washing themselves the next morning, but they got none. One of them who was fortunate enough to have a handkerchief would pass it from one to the other; and I saw men, for want of water, even spit upon that handkerchief, in order to wipe the grime out of their eyes. The next morning we were called out about 9 o'clock and fed in the same way as before. That was Friday. By that afternoon there were some blankets sent in by our friends. These were put in my charge and I distributed them, as nearly as I could, so as to allow one blanket to four men. The next morning (Saturday) we got some wash pans and towels—they came from our friends in Burke—and we got for the first time water to wash our hands and faces. That night about 10 o'clock I was one of the first to be attacked by cholera morbus or dysentery. We had all crawled into places for the night, to keep as quiet as possible, owing to the fact that we did not have room more than sufficient to allow the men to lie side by side. The floor was completely covered. The men could not get out. There was no possible way for a man at the back end of the barn to get out at the front without crawling on his hands and knees over these men, crawling right over their faces or any place he might happen to strike them, because it was pitch dark and one could see nothing. I crawled over these men in that way and went to the rear as they called it and returned. In a little while it was necessary for me to go again, which I did. The first time I went out it was about 9 o'clock and the next time it was about 10 o'clock. At this time the negro soldier on guard said to me, "Hurry up and get in there." I got back and the doors were closed. Rather than crawl over the men again and disturb them I sat down on a box near the door. I had been in that position nearly half an hour when some men came up to go out. They went to the door and rapped. No attention was paid to them. They rapped and kicked on the door again and the soldier told them to "Get away from there and quit that noise." The men replied, "We want to get out of here." The soldier replied, "Oh, well, you can't get out." Still the men kept coming until I should judge there were six or eight there at the time. Two of them especially seemed to be in a very bad condition. They had violent gripings, and were begging to get out. I went to the door and called to the soldier outside to send the sergeant to me. The guard paid no attention to me at the time, and I kicked on the door. The guard said: "You God damned son-of-a-bitch, if you don't get away from that door I will shoot through it." I was pretty well worked up by that time, and said: "I don't give a damn if you do shoot; we might as well die one way as another. I want to see the sergeant of the guard." The sergeant came out and opened the door, with a soldier on each side of him, and said: "God damn you, what do you want here, making so much noise?" I said: "Sergeant, I want you to look at that man there on the floor, rolling in agony because he is unable to attend to the call of nature." "I don't give a God damn if he is rolling in hell, he can't get out of here," was the reply. The man on the floor looked at me and said: "What will we do?" "Well," I said, "I'll tell you what I am going to do, and the rest of you can do the same. We can't dirty our clothing, and we've got to comply with the requirements of nature. Take your clothes down and do your work right here on the floor." They did so. I stayed there the balance of the night, and I am willing to say that there were not less than 25 men who relieved their bowels on the floor of that barn that night—possibly more than that—some of them two or more times. Toward morning the stench got to be something awful, and I got away from it as far as I could. The next morning I said to the corporal who was at the door, "Where is the sergeant of the guard?" He called him up, and I said to him, "Sergeant, I want to see General Merriam." "Oh," said he, "you don't want much, do you?" "No," said I, "I don't want much, but I want to see General Merriam." "Well," he he said, "I will see." In a short time he came back and said, "You can see lieutenant so and so," I don't remember his name. I said, "I don't want to see the lieutenant, I want the general." "Well," he said, "You can see the captain." Then he would go away, and the first time I would see him again I would make the same demand, until at last I said to him, "I have a right, I believe, to see the commanding officer here. I believe I have that right, and I demand to see him." This was early in the morning, and about noon an officer came to me and said, "There is General Merriam, standing right there now, if you are the man who wanted to see him." I stepped up to the officer indicated, and said, "Are you General Merriam?" He said, "Yes, sir." "Then," I said, "I have some things that I want to complain to you about." I want to make complaint against the treatment the men in that barn are receiving. There may be criminals among them, but I know there are dozens, probably hundreds, of men there who are just as innocent of any crime as you are. There are men there who are in the habit of conducting themselves just as well at home and live just as genteelly as you are in the habit of living when you are at home, and we at least have the right to demand fair and decent treatment, at least to be treated like human beings, instead of like animals and brutes." I then went on to relate how these men were refused permission to go out when they were sick, and the condition of filth upon the floor of the building, where they were compelled to sleep, which was the result, and that men coming to the door near morning, had walked into this filth with their stocking feet, and tracked it over the bedding and clothing, and even into the faces of those lying upon the floor. I said, "There is another thing I want to speak to you of while I am saying this, and that is the fact that these men have no place to eat. They have to sit on the dirty ground, which is getting filthy already. If they want to lay their bread or anything else down, they have no place to lay it; unless they take off what little clothing they have to lay it on they must lay it on the ground. There is a lumber yard not over a hundred feet from here; would it be asking too much that a few boards be brought to make some sort of arrangements for the men to have something, at least, to put their food on, instead of the filthy ground?" The general said to me, "Do you know the officer who was in command there last night?" "No, sir," I said; "he was a nigger, and all niggers look alike to me." He spoke to one of the officers near by and called him up. "Is this the man?" he said. I replied, "I think it is; at least he is the sergeant who was on guard last night." The general asked him what he had to say about this thing. He replied, "General, you know my orders were to close my doors at 10 o'clock." The general said something to him I did not understand, but he waived his hand and the sergeant went away. General Merriam then deliberately turned his back on me without giving me any reply, and I was put back into the bull pen. About 5 o'clock that afternoon I was lined up with several other men, and marched between soldiers to the gate, where we were told to go and not come back again. On going to the depot to get a ticket for home the agent refused to sell me a ticket without a pass from the military officials. I was told to go to Major Morton, which I did, and he gave me a written permit, which he signed, and on that I bought a ticket and went home at my own expense.

Mr. LENTZ. Now, Mr. Cornell, tell us of the incident concerning an old soldier whom you saw brutally treated by negro soldiers.

Mr. CORNELL. He was an old man, probably 65 years of age or more. He was coming back from the closet; they would only allow one man to go at a time. He was coming back rather slow. They always had a negro soldier following each man to and from this place. The soldier ordered the old man to hurry up; as he did not seem to walk fast enough to suit him, he jabbed him with his gun. He did that twice, possibly more; but twice that I am certain of. I know that he did that. The old man said, "That is right; stab the old man with the bayonet who fought four years to free you." The soldier said, "Oh, go on there, you old son of a bitch. I don't believe you ever fought to free anybody." This old man had a Grand Army button in the lapel of his coat, and just before he got back to the door he took the button from his coat and threw it on the ground, and came back, sat down in the barn and cried like a child. I went to the old man and tried to console him. I presume I felt as bad as he did. I thought it might have been so had it been my father, who still wears a Grand Army button. He gave me his name, which I put down in a memorandum book. The next day I was released. I never succeeded in finding out what became of him, and I can not remember his name without the book. This book was taken from me by Mr. Sinclair when I was arrested the second time, and I have never been able to secure its return.

(Mr. LENTZ made a demand upon Mr. Sinclair for the book.)

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Cornell, tell us of your second arrest.

Mr. CORNELL. On June 23, about 10 o'clock in the morning, I was sitting in my place of business with some friends when a man named Murphy (a so-called deputy) came in and asked me if I was busy. I said, "No, not particularly; why?" "Well," he said, "I would like to have you come and take a walk with me."

Mr. LENTZ. Is he the same Murphy who served a term in the penitentiary?

Mr. CORNELL. Yes; for cattle stealing. There were two of these men, Murphy, who did the talking, and a man named Marshall. We went out together and I asked him what he wanted. He said, "It don't make any difference what I want; you just walk right along. Walk ahead there; walk right up there." So I was pretty sure what was going on. He took me up and turned me over to the soldiers and told them to keep me. They kept me that night, and the next morning Murphy and one of the soldiers searched me, and took the book of which I have just spoken. In that book lay a circular letter that had been issued by Ed. Boyce, the president of the Western Federation of Miners, which had been given to me when I was in Butte City previous to this, to take over and give to the ladies of that town, and Gem and Mullan, which contained instructions as to how they should run the commissaries, which had been established to furnish necessaries for the families (who were destitute) of the men imprisoned in the bull pen. That typewritten circular was in that book. Murphy took this book and handed it to the sergeant and said, "You keep this until I call for it." The next morning I saw him take the book back from the sergeant, and that was the last I saw of it until I saw it in the hands of Sinclair, at Wallace. I had an interview at Wallace with Sinclair, and asked him what I was arrested for. About all that he said was that I was doing too much talking. He had given orders that no one was to talk to anyone of a carload of men who had been brought from Joplin, Mo., to take the places of the miners who were in the bull pen. Two of these men had come to my place of business one night after their arrival to see me on a matter of business concerning their membership of the fraternal order of Red Men, of which order I am the chief officer in the State of Idaho, and it was my duty to attend to this business. Some of Sinclair's spies had seen these men in my place of business and reported it, and for this reason I was arrested, as I have described. Sinclair charged that I was trying to persuade the men not to go to work. I explained the facts of the case to him, but he refused to listen and had me put in the bull pen. This was on July 24, and I remained in the bull pen until August 14. I was sick and kept in the hospital most of the time. Just before I was released I was called into the warden's office before Dr. France. He asked me, "Who were you arrested by?" I replied, "By Murphy." "What were you arrested for?" he asked. "For talking to two Missourians, I understand." "How long have you been confined?" "About fifty days longer than I ought to have been," I replied. He said, "I will look into your case and recommend your release to Captain Edwards"—not that he would release me himself. That afternoon the warden said to me, "Captain Edwards has ordered your release. You may go at any time."

Mr. LENTZ. Is it not a fact that no papers were allowed sold, or to be sent to you, except one (The Spokane Review)?

Answer. That is the only paper I ever saw allowed in the bull pen.

Mr. LENTZ. Were the prisoners compelled to do manual labor?

Answer. Yes, sir; we were compelled to work or else were punished for refusing.

Mr. LENTZ. At the town of Burke, were not certain men compelled by force of arms to work by a military officer?

Answer. Yes, sir; by Lieutenant Lyons. A meeting was called by the military authorities at the Miners' Union Hall. I went to it. F. R. Culbertson, the superintendent of the Tiger-Poorman mine, Lieutenant Lyon, and a man named Clary, were at the head of the hall. Lieutenant Lyon was in uniform, and as I went in this man Clary rose and said, "Lieutenant Lyon wants to talk to the men." Lieutenant Lyon then rose and said: "I am no orator, but I want to talk plain to you. I understand that there has been a committee who waited upon the men of the Tiger-Poorman mine ordering them to quit work. Now, I don't know whether this is a fact or not, and I don't know whether that was a committee order, whether it was a committee of Miners' Union men or not; but it is to be hoped for the good of you men that it was not. Now, I was sent here for the purpose of saving this mine from dynamite, from fire, or from water, and, by God, I will do it, if it takes myself and every man I have got; and now I will give you men five minutes to get back to work, and if you do not get back to work I will put you back at the point of the bayonet." Then somebody said, "That is too short a time for us to talk the matter over; we want more time than that." He said, "I will give you ten minutes." Someone asked for more time, but he refused. "Now," he said, "there dare not a man leave this hall; the soldiers are guarding the door, and I will give you ten minutes to decide this question, whether you will go back by force or without." Then Mr. Culbertson talked to the men, asking them to go back without any trouble. Then they (Culbertson and Lyon) went out. After the men were left alone, it was asked what these men quit work for, and it was stated that they quit the pumps and hoist machinery because they were informed that men had been secured to take their places, and quit of their own accord, rather than be discharged; but they decided there was no alternative for them; but they were compelled to go back to work. I went out myself and notified Mr. Culbertson that the men would go back to work under compulsion. Shortly after that those men were all discharged and not one of them is allowed to work to-day. They were used by force until other men were brought to take their places, and then they were discharged. Those men were working under military guard the whole time they were there.

Mr. LENTZ. Could not the civil authorities have made arrests at any time after April 29?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Were the citizens arrested by the military only miners, or of what class were they?

Answer. They were of all classes—hotel keepers, cooks, waiters, barbers, saloon men, clerks in stores, butchers, bartenders—all classes—everybody.

Mr. LENTZ. You may state what you know as to the condition of the families of the imprisoned men, and whether the State or the United States made any provision for supplying them with the necessaries of life while their providers were held in the bull pen.

Answer. There was no such provision whatever made by either authority. About 1,200 men were held in prison, and a large number of them had families dependent on their daily labor for their support. These families were scattered through the county. There was a very large number of women and children left entirely destitute, and there would have been terrible suffering from exposure, cold, and hunger had not the labor organizations throughout the county and humane citizens come to their relief. After I got out of the bull pen it was reported to me that there were many families destitute. One in particular, which I went to see, was a Mrs. Garrett. I found that she had a little piece of bacon and some crackers. That was all she had. I gave her some money to last her till I could make some arrangements. She was nursing a little baby, and needed nourishment. I went and talked with some of the men in Burke, and then two others and myself started to Butte City. We went to confer with the labor leaders there in regard to some means of raising provisions for these destitute women and children. In Butte, within five days, we raised several hundred dollars in money and a guarantee of a carload of provisions, donated by the merchants of Butte City, who agreed to turn them over to the officers of the Western Labor Union and the Western Federation of Miners, to be shipped to Wallace, and from there distributed in little stores called commissaries at the different mines. After I came back I was given instructions by the president of the Western Federation of Miners, in the form of a circular letter, telling how these stores were to be run. They were to be under the management of ladies, as they were less likely to be arrested than the men. If men had been put in charge they would have been arrested immediately. For that reason they were put in charge of women. The circular letter I spoke of as being in the book was the one given to me to distribute to these women who were to run the stores, instructing them as to what to do in regard to the distribution of supplies. I visited a great many labor unions, and not one subscribed less than $50 to $150. With this money provisions, clothing, and fuel were bought. These supplies were distributed by the women to the families of prisoners, and this was their only reliance for support. Neither the State or the United States did anything to prevent their suffering or starvation.

TESTIMONY OF ALLEN F. GILL.

Allen F. Gill testified:

I am 42 years of age on April 29. I was master mechanic of the Tiger-Poorman Mining Company, at Burke, Idaho, and had held that position for three years previous to that time. Prior to that I had been president of the board of public works at Spokane, and before that master mechanic of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, which extends through Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. As master mechanic of the Tiger-Poorman Mining Company, I had charge of all machinery and power connected with the mine, and the employment and the discharging of all men in that department. On April 29, 1899, I was at work at the mine with all the men, with the exception of one. I was in and at the mine till 10 o'clock at night; the men were at work all the time; no disturbance occurred either in town or at the mine. On April 30 I was at the mine as usual, as were all the men except four. Everything was quiet as usual. The men continued to work as usual until May 3 or 4, at which time a number of the men and myself were arrested. In the evening of that day, United States troops came to Burke, and passed through the upper end of the town, leaving guards across the street. It was nearly 6 o'clock—time for my men to change shift—and I observed that a number of the pump men and mechanics who were going to work were stopped by these sentries. I secured permission from a sentry, who had charge of the line, to go to where Major Morton, the officer of the day, was in charge, thinking I could probably get a pass for myself and men, that we might go back and forth and continue work. I met Major Morton and told him the position I occupied, and informed him that the manager of the mine was absent at the time, and that the responsibility rested on me, that I had numbers of men there, with a great amount of machinery, and it was necessary that the men should continue their work, and go back and forth, in order to keep the machinery in the mines working. Major Morton told me that he knew nothing about me, and that he would have to put me under arrest. I told him in that case it would be necessary for me, the manager being absent, to wire the manager or the president, and to inform him as to the most effective way of securing my release. The major informed me that this was martial law, and that the troops were in charge. I asked permission to wire Mr. Glidden to telegraph Major Morton to secure my release. He said he thought this was unnecessary, that I might go down to Wardner, and if I was all right I might be released the next day. "But," he said, "however, I think General Merriam will be in Wardner to-morrow." I remained in line, arrested about three hours. I was very close to Major Morton all the time. I was among the first arrested. I observed his actions and those of the soldiers. The place where I was arrested was opposite my own house, or very nearly so. The soldiers were arresting men and searching houses. I heard Major Morton direct a soldier to break into my house in these words, "Break into those houses and search them." The soldier went to my house (my wife was out at the time, and the door was locked). She was with some other ladies who were congregated together at the time. I watched the soldier turn the knob of the door; it was locked. He jammed it in (broke the glass) and went in and searched the dwelling. I observed a number of similar occurrences, and the arrest of men on the way down to the mill. I went down to the mill with the rest of the prisoners. The night foreman came out and the major arrested him. The foreman told him that the mill was running, and he had a number of men in the mill, and he would have to go in and make arrangements to shut down before he could go in line, as he did not like to have the machinery running without control. The major said, "Go in and get your men; I want to count them." The night foreman shut down the mill and brought out the men, 10 or 12 of them. The major said, "Get in line here, get in line." We went on a little farther, near the company's boarding house; here we met 30 or 40 miners, who had just come off shift, in their wet clothes, and they were placed in line. They were not allowed to change their wet clothes, although they requested to do so, but were put on the cars in that condition, although the night was cold. We continued farther down the railroad track, when the fire whistle sounded (it appears that one man had been left behind to take charge of the boilers). The system of waterworks at Burke is such that the water for the city is supplied by the mining company, and during the time that the company is using the water there is no fire pressure on the city mains, and there is no one in Burke except myself who understands the working of these valves; that is, who knew how to shut off the water from the company's works and turn it on the city mains. On inquiry, they learned this, and I was directed by the officer in charge of us to go with some soldiers and protect the property. I did this. I found that, instead of there being a fire, the water, in consequence of the shutting off of the machinery, had been allowed to back up in the large flume that supplied the power; and it had overflowed, and started a big landslide immediately back of the boiler house, which was already nearly filled up, and it was probable that the next slide would carry the house away. The firemen knew no other way to attract attention, and so blew the fire whistle. After setting things right I went back and took my place in line, and was immediately sent for by Major Morton. I went to him and he told me I might go back and take charge of the property. I told him I could not do so, as the works were practically shut down, all my men being under arrest. He gave me men, barely sufficient to keep the pumps going (about eight men). My name was entered in a book and I returned to the mine. I will state here a few observations I heard made by the soldiers while I was at the mine. I heard someone say they expected when they came there that they had a lot of desperadoes to contend with, and all of them said, "These men look all right, I believe two soldiers, one in the lead and one behind, could take all these men and put them in the box cars." That was my impression; there was no disorder nor had there ever been at that place. My opinion is that the military authorities, in coming there, defeated the ends of justice for this reason: That the miners who were guilty, or undesirable characters, had left Burke, and gone into Montana two days before the military came. Those who were innocent remained. If the civil process had been carried out, I have no doubt that these men would have been arrested and brought to justice, as I have no doubt they would have returned to work. The day after the arrests were made I went to Wardner. I had in my possession 27 affidavits certifying that certain 27 men had been at work throughout the entire day of April 29, and to my certain knowledge could have had no possible part in the blowing up of the mine. They were men who worked for me and with me, and I knew personally that they were at work, in the mine, at the time the disturbance occurred at the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, almost 20 miles away. They were men of unimpeachable character. I needed them, being skilled men, to put the machinery of the mine to work. I was told that Bartlett Sinclair would have to order the releases. I saw him and showed him the affidavits. He told me he did not desire affidavits to show the innocence of those men; what he wanted was affidavits to show their guilt. "However," he said, "your affidavits may be considered only as a presumption of their innocence, but it will have no effect on me, neither one way or another; but the release of these men will be brought about through my information and correspondence with them individually." I told him that my affidavits were correct, and that I was responsible for them, and that on investigation he would find out that those men had nothing to do with the blowing up of the mill, that I knew the men personally, that they were employed by me, and worked with me. None of the men were released then; they were kept in confinement for several weeks. I do not know that these men belong to any labor organization, as I do not myself, and have no means of knowing. I was told that all the men employed at the mine belonged to the union. I know those men were innocent, and made affidavit to the fact, yet they were held in the bull pen for weeks. When I was in Wardner, I went to the bull pen, and saw the men confined there, standing in a body. There seemed to be a very great number to be confined in so small a place. Many of those men were in their mining clothes; they were black and dirty, and miserable looking. Men with whom I was familiar I could not at first recognize. In the mine the temperature is about 105° about the pumps; at any portion it is uncomfortable. The men wear only an undershirt, and overalls, and a gum coat, in the mines, and are always as wet as possible to get. Outside, at that season, it is very chilly, and the men on coming out put on heavy flannel clothing. When they were arrested they were not allowed to change their wet, thin clothing, and suffered severely from cold, and many took pneumonia; one died from it. I remained in charge at the mine six weeks after I returned from Wardner. In regard to the time the pump men left work, I will state that I went down to the manager's office. He was there at the time and I reported to him that the pump men had stopped work and that the mine was filling with water. Lieutenant Lyon was there at the time and Culbertson said to him, "I have done everything I can do; what can you do?" Lieutenant Lyon did not reply to him at the time, but turned to me and asked if I knew whether any outside influence had been brought to bear on the men. I told him that I thought not; that I was in a position to know, and did not believe there had been. The position the men took was that they had been informed that men were coming to take their places and they preferred to quit rather than be discharged. Lieutenant Lyon went out and I remained with Mr. Culbertson; he said he thought Lyon would try to put the men to work by force and asked me if I thought anything could be accomplished by working men at the point of the bayonet. I told him I did not think there could, as it required all to work together at the best of times. Lyon went to the hall and soon after Mr. Culbertson went there also. I saw Lieutenant Lyon and a number of men go into the hall and went there myself.

Mr. Gill's testimony corroborated the scene described by Mr. Cornell and the speeches as stated by Mr. Cornell.

I went to my supper and then went to the mine, and took charge of the men who had reported there. The men said they had quit work because they did not propose to stay there and train men to do the work upon which they themselves depended for the support of their families. I never heard of any prearranged plan for destroying the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mill. I believe if the men working with me had known of any such conspiracy, they would have told me. The men were of exceptionally good character in that mine; they had held their positions for years, accumulated money, and most of them had families and homes of their own. They were superior as a class of citizens to the miners in any community with which I have ever had any experience. There was the most friendly relations existing between the men and the owners, and there never was any disorder in Burke.

TESTIMONY OF L. J. SIMPKINS.

L. J. Simpkins, a resident of Wardner, age 34 years, an electrical engineer, testified as follows:

I did not participate in the disturbance at Wardner on April 29, 1899, and knew nothing of it until it had transpired. I was arrested at my place of business on the morning of May 3 by four negro soldiers. They came into my room and said to me, "Come on here; we want you." They had no warrant, and refused to say on what charge I was arrested. They took me out into the street and placed me in line with five or six other men they had arrested. They marched us up to the Last Chance office, and kept arresting persons as we went on. They arrested every one we passed on the street. Two men who were strangers from Portland, Oreg., were standing on the street and a soldier said to them, "What are you looking at?" They replied, "Looking to see what you are going to do with those men." The soldier said, "You get in here; I will show you what I am going to do with them," and they threw them into line. The men had only come into the town the day before. There were about 150 employees of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine, running about with guns and acting as spotters, pointing out about every one they passed, and the soldiers arrested them. I knew a great many of these spotters. (Witness named a number of them and the positions they held in the Bunker Hill mine.) The soldiers took us to where Captain Batchelor had his headquarters at the baseball grounds, where we were searched and everything taken from us. Here we were kept until night; and the soldiers continued bringing in prisoners all day. At night there were over a hundred of us, all citizens of Wardner except the two strangers just mentioned. It was a cold, drizzly day, and at night we were marched by a guard of soldiers to Kellog's old stable and put in the loft. Captain Batchelor gave us to understand that he was not compelled to do this, that it was just an act of mercy on his part, to see that we were taken in out of the storm. They continued bringing in prisoners all night. The next day they brought a large number of men from Burke and put them on the lower floor of the stable. At that time we were so crowded that there was scarcely standing room. The men were getting sick; some of the sickest were allowed to sit on a board along the fence. One man, a Swede, was taken with a fit and began to jump around in a queer way. A soldier hollered, "Halt," but of course the man did not heed him, and the soldier struck him on the head with a gun and said, "God damn you, I will learn you to halt when I say halt." He had knocked the man down and called the corporal of the guard. The corporal came, turned the man over with his foot and said, "I guess you fixed that man all right." Then they threw some water on the man and he came to. Although it was raining and cold we had no blankets and no fire, and consequently we suffered very much. We were so crowded in this stable that only half of us could lie down at a time. Captain Batchelor came up and told us that he had given orders to the soldiers that if the stable caught fire and we attempted to escape to shoot us, so we would have to be careful about matches. Then we called a meeting and appointed men to watch continually to see that no one struck a match. At night we had two candles lit, so that we could watch and see what the men were doing. The corporal came up with four or five soldiers and said, "What are you God damned sons of bitches doing with these lights up here?" I was on guard at the time, and tried to explain to him that the lights were to enable us to watch the men. He said, "Well, you put those lights out; and the first son of a bitch that lights a light I will bore him full of holes." From that time we were in darkness. We had nothing to eat until the next day at about 4 p. m. When they fed us a man was given a pan with food and told to take 25 men with him to eat out of the pan. We had no knives, forks, or spoons, and the men from Burke were just as they came out of the mines, with their mining clothes on (or almost no clothes), and their hands and faces grimed with slime and grease from the mines. You had to dive in with all that filth and eat your mulligan and bread just like a lot of hogs. For three or four days it went on that way before we had a chance to wash, and then our friends brought us the basins, soap, and towels. In the meantime from the food and exposure many of the men were taken with diarrhea, and as only one man at a time was allowed to go to the closet, a great many could not control themselves and were obliged to relieve themselves on the floor. The stench was something terrible. One evening a man named McClellan went to the closet. I was watching him, as it was my time next. After he came out of the closet I saw the soldiers halt him, two of them. They made him hold up his hands, and went through his pockets and robbed him of his money. I saw them take the money—saw the bills in their hands. I asked him when he came in, and he said they had robbed him of ninety-odd dollars. On the third day I was there we were in the yard and two soldiers came up to me, and one said, "Is your name Simpkins?" I said, "Yes." He said, "We want you." "What do you want?" I said. He replied, "We will show you what we want; we will fix you; come on." They took me to a lumber yard back of the building and said, "Stand up there with your back against that building." I said, "What for?" "God damn you," they replied, "stand up there," and they jabbed me with the bayonet up against the building. One said, "Stand there, or we will fix you." They stepped off 10 or 15 feet and cocked their guns. Then Burch, the superintendent of the Bunker Hill mine, stepped up and wanted to know what I was there for, and I told him I would like to know myself. He said, "Well, do you realize the position you are in?" I said, "It is a pretty hard matter for a man to realize any position at this time." "Well," he said, "Simpkins, they have got enough evidence against you to hang you, but if the court is real lenient you might get off with fifteen or twenty years. Now," he said, "you have got a patent that is worth considerable money; what good is it going to do you if you are in jail fifteen or twenty years or if you are hung? I come here to give you a show for your life. Tell me who blew up the mine and I will see that you get clear." I told him I did not know who blew up the mill nor anybody connected with it. Then he wanted to know who the leaders were. I told him I did not know. Then he wanted to know where they were. I told him I should judge they were out of the country, as they had plenty of time to get out; that I neither knew who nor where they were. "Well," he said, "you wont tell me?" I said, "I can't tell you." He returned to the soldiers and said, "I am through with him; throw him back in the pen," and they put me back.

Mr. SULZER. "When the soldiers compelled you to stand up against the house and cocked their guns were you afraid they were going to assassinate you?—A. Yes; I expected to be killed.

Mr. SULZER. And while you were in this condition this man Burch, superintendent of the Bunker Hill mine, made those propositions to you?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULZER. What is this patent you have?

Answer. A patent on a rotary engine and waterway.

Mr. SULZER. What have you been offered for it?

Answer. Nineteen thousand dollars for a third interest.

Mr. SULZER. Did any other representative of the Bunker Hill mine approach you or make any offer to you?

Answer. Yes, there was a man named Jack Donaldson came and had me called to him. He said he was authorized by Mr. Forney to come and make me an offer if I would implicate two men in the blowing up of the mill. I asked him what offer he had to make, and he said he was authorized to offer me $10,000. He said it did not matter who I implicated, so that I implicated two men; one was Mike Dowd, the assessor of Shoshone County, and the other either Dan Kildee or Bill Kennedy, of Gem. These two were miners, and I had never met either of them, and of course knew nothing of them. He said somebody had to suffer for blowing up the mines, and they wanted to hang these men, or put them in the penitentiary, or run them out of the country. The Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company had had trouble with the assessor, because he had advertised the property for sale for nonpayment of taxes.

Mr. SULZER. How long were you incarcerated in the bull pen?

Answer. From May 3 to September 20; then I was taken to Wallace and put in the jail and kept over two months.

Mr. SULZER. Were you charged with any crime?

Answer. I could never learn what they charged against me; there was never any indictment shown or read to me.

Mr. SULZER. Did you ask for counsel.

Answer. I did, and it was refused me.

Mr. SULZER. Who had charge of feeding the prisoners?

Answer. A man named Tony Tubbs, the steward of the Bunker Hill mine. He has charge of their boarding house now, and has had for three or four years.

Mr. SULZER. Explain your treatment by the Federal soldiers.

Answer. Our confinement was very close; we had no room for exercise. Through the summer the heat was intense. Some of the men would cut holes through the boards for fresh air, and Captain Edwards would have them put in the guardhouse on bread and water for seven days for such an offense. If they did anything that did not please the cook or the deputies, they met the same punishment. If anybody entered a complaint against a prisoner, the unfortunate prisoner went to the guardhouse for seven days on bread and water. Two days of the week were set apart as visiting days, and when our friends came to see us we were called out and allowed from three to five minutes to converse with them, but there was always a spotter or soldier to listen to what we said.

Mr. SULZER. During the time you were there, was there much sickness?

Answer. Yes, sir; while I was there four or five men I knew died. The first three or four days they would not allow a doctor to come in; afterwards they did.

Mr. SULZER. Do you know of the death of Mike Devine?

Answer. Yes, sir; I nursed him when he was sick. We had a little hospital, about 10 by 12 feet. It had no floor, and the men laid on straw on the ground. It was raining and the water running through wet the straw and blankets. The night Mike Devine died it rained so that we had to keep moving his bed from place to place to keep him out of the water. It was so with the others there. The leaks from the roof, and the water running on the floor, kept them all saturated. The sides of the shed were so open that we had to put paper cones around the candles, to keep the wind from blowing them out. Devine died about 8 o'clock in the morning. I was giving him his medicine every hour, and toward evening I noticed the rattle in his throat that I have noticed in the cases of other dying men, and I told him I thought he was dying. He said he thought so himself, and asked me to do him a favor. I told him I would, and he asked me to go for a priest for him. I promised him to do so. I asked the guard to call the corporal, and told him I wanted to go to Captain Lavelle's office. The corporal took me to the captain, and I told him Mike Devine was dying and wanted to see a priest, and asked permission to send for one. Captain Lavelle said, "Neither Mike Devine nor any of the rest can see a priest or anybody else. Those are my orders, and they must be strictly obeyed." When I told Mike he could not see a priest, he wanted to see his partner, Bill Kennedy, who was also in the bull pen, as he wanted to tell him how to dispose of his property. Captain Lavelle refused this request also, and Devine died about 8 o'clock in the morning. He died of exposure; he was an old man, over 60, I should judge. His request was that he should be buried in the Miners' Union Cemetery at Wallace. The women of Wallace took the body and buried it themselves—all the men of the village were in the bull pen.

Mr. SULZER. Tell us of the death of McMillan, and what he said to you.

Answer. McMillan died from the result of exposure; he took cold, and his death was the result. He said he never had believed that a being in the form of a man could treat his fellow-man as he had seen men treated there by United States soldiers. He attributed his death to the treatment he had received, to the want of clothing, shelter, and decent food.

Mr. SULZER. Tell us what you know of the death of Johnson.

Answer. Johnson's mind had become unbalanced from the effect of the treatment he had received, and he believed that he was to be put to death. Johnson was ordered to be sent to the lunatic asylum, and Dr. France, with a guard of soldiers, took him to the depot. The bull pen stood on an elevation just above the depot. My attention was attracted by hearing some shots fired, and I went to the side of the building and looked through a crack. I could see the river quite plain. I saw a man in the river, and heard two or three shots fired. I saw the negro soldiers on both sides of the river running one way and another, and saw them go to a clump of bushes and pull a man out. A soldier by the name of White, who did the shooting, told me afterwards when he came on guard that when they got to the station Dr. France went into the depot and left Johnson with him. He said that he walked along the depot platform, and the first thing he knew someone called out, "There goes your man!" He said he looked up and Johnson was running across the street, and he followed him, and Johnson ran onto the bridge and jumped off into the river. He said Dr. France came running up and called out, "Shoot! shoot!!" and he shot. Johnson was taken out dead. A young Swede also died in the bull pen. He came in suffering from fistula, and the doctor said he died from exposure and bad food. On November 15 I was taken from the bull pen to the jail in Wallace. A deputy came to me and said, "I have orders from Captain Edwards to take you to Wallace. We have just three minutes to get to the train." I said, "I want to get my things." He said, "We haven't got time." So I went and left my belongings. He took another man named McKelvey, also. I said, "Well, boys, I will escape this bread and water racket anyway," but when I got to the jail, the jailor said he had orders from Captain Edwards to place me in solitary confinement on bread and water. I was kept on bread and water for nine days, and in solitary confinement in a dark cell for about 60 days. I was not allowed to see or speak to anyone for that length of time."

Mr. SULZER. What was the object of persecuting you in this way?

Answer. I have never learned; there was never any charges brought; I was told that it was the orders of Captain Edwards.

Mr. SULZER. Who is this Captain Edwards?

Answer. Capt. F. A. Edwards, Troop L, First United States Cavalry.

Mr. SULZER. Do you know why he persecuted you in this way?

Answer. I don't know; he never gave any reason.

Mr. SULZER. Do you know anything of the attempt to escape, by digging a tunnel, which was made by the men?

Answer. There was talk of our being held in the pen until January, and the men dreaded the cold winter in such a place, so they attempted to dig a tunnel with knives they had stolen from the cook's place. The tunnel was discovered about 4 o'clock on September 18 or 20, and the next morning a deputy came in and said Captain Edwards wanted us. The captain and his orderly took us out back of the bull pen, and said, "I want a ditch dug here." Buck Robertson was the first man he spoke to and said, "Will you dig that ditch? Robertson said, "No, sir." He said, "Strone, will you dig that ditch?" "No, sir," said Strone; and so he asked all five of us who were there, and all refused. He said, "Stand up there, facing the barbed fence, five paces apart; and, guard, if any of those men move, shoot them." Well, they kept bringing out the men, five at a time, and I began to get curious to see all who were coming out. I looked around, and Captain Edwards saw me. He said, "God damn you, Simpkins, right about face there. Guard, if that man or any other moves, shoot him in his tracks." So they kept on bringing out the men, and all refused to dig, until they had all the men on the line. We stood up all that day until night; some were barebended, and others in all sorts of conditions. We were not allowed to move; we were inside the barbed wire inclosure, and the soldiers in line in front of us. When all were brought out, Captain Edwards said, "I will see that you work; I'll keep you here till you rot—until I make you work." Some one said, "We haven't got any permit from Steunenberg to work." I don't think the captain understood the joke, or at least what was said; anyway he said, "You are a lot of damned cowardly curs. Damn you, anyway. Damn you all; I will make you work, or I will starve you to it." We were kept there till night, and then marched into the bull pen and searched; everything was taken from us. The straw was taken out of the bunks, and we had to sleep on the hard boards, which ran crosswise in the bunks.

Mr. LENTZ. State whether you heard the officers or soldiers use the term "sons of bitches" in addressing those in the bull pen.

Answer. That was a common expression used by the soldiers. One morning when we were being taken out to work there was in the line an old soldier, a Grand Army man, who drawa a pension. He had been badly wounded in the hip, and limped painfully, throwing his head and shoulders from side to side. One of the negro guards said to him, "Walk straight there, you God damned son of a bitch. What are you jumping around that way for?" The old man said, "I am a cripple; I can't walk straight." "Cripple be damned!" said the negro, "I'll cripple you;" and he struck him with his gun and knocked him down and kicked him. The old soldier's name was James. He was from Ohio. At another time we were being led out to be fed, and we had to go down a narrow plank way. They led us out 25 at a time to get our food in the pans I have described. The men were hungry and crowded forward, and the soldiers held them back with their guns held crosswise. Captain Batchelor said, "God damn them, knock them down, and explain to them afterwards," and he walked away. A negro soldier said, "You heard them orders, you God damned dynamiting sons of bitches; stand back there or I will put a bayonet through you." The expression was very common among them.

Mr. LENTZ. You said you went before Dr. France's coroner's inquest. Did you know any of the jury?

Answer. Yes; I know them all personally. They were all employees of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine. Their pay from the Bunker Hill Company was $4.50 per day, and they were also paid by the State. My counsel was not allowed to speak to me. He was kept away from me by the soldiers. I was released about November 15.

TESTIMONY OF LEVI P. MILLER.

Levi P. Miller, a resident of Burke, Idaho, age 55 years, and served the Union during the civil war, and on April 29, 1899, a watchman at the Tiger-Poorman mine, testified as follows:

On April 29 I was in the Providence Hospital, near Wallace, and I was convalescent. There was an hour or two of sunshine, and I walked up into town, 500 or 800 yards. It is only a small village. I walked down there to get a little exercise, and to get a paper. I did this when the weather would permit. On the 29th I was in the town before noon. There seemed to be a little excitement on the street, and persons were calling to each other, "Why, look up at the Northern depot, look at the people." It was said they were miners coming down from the mines. I saw quite a lot of people. They were climbing onto the car catcher and onto the cars. I saw one man coming up town. He had a mask and a gun. Well, that aroused my American spirit. I said I did not believe in that sort of thing; according to my views, a man would hide his face to do anything derogatory to the good name of American citizenship, and I had belonged to a miners' union. I went to the hospital after that and had my dinner. About 3 in the evening I walked over to the town again, and passed by the O. R. & N. depot. Mr. Lambert, the agent, was a very pleasant gentleman, and I asked him, "What is the news?" He said there was a telephone message to the effect that there had been some shots fired down there at Wardner. I said: "Mr. Lambert, that is terrible; if they start that way, there will be some terrible deeds committed there, which will reflect upon the whole country—not only on the miners, but on the whole community." He said he regretted it very much. I went on down town, and while I was there heard a report that an explosion had been heard, but I did not hear it. They said the Bunker Hill mine had been blown up. That seemed to throw a pall over the community; many people felt sad, and expressed their regret that such a thing should or could occur. After supper I went to the village again. But few people were on the streets and the saloons were closed. I saw the train going back with the men on it, when it stopped and pulled out again. On Tuesday the doctor gave me some medicine, and told me I could go home; if I would be careful and not get wet or take cold, I would get along very well. I went home that afternoon. On Wednesday I was choring around home. On Thursday there was still some snow on the ground, and I was cleaning it up, when about 12 o'clock the train came in with soldiers on it. They got off the cars and walked up the track, passing my house. I am a bachelor, and myself and brother live together, and I do the cooking. The soldiers posted sentinels above my house, but I did not go near them. About 5 o'clock my brother came from work; he was shift boss at the Tiger-Poorman mine, and he came to change his clothes. I asked him what was going on, and he said a number of men had already been arrested; I said, "Well, I will go up town and see what is going on." I got part of the way up, when I met Mr. Townsend, a messenger on the Northern Pacific Railroad, and he whispered to me, "You had better go back or they will gather you in and take you along." I turned leisurely, so as not to excite suspicion, and walked slowly back, so the soldiers would not think I was trying to run away. By this time my brother had changed his clothes, and I told him what I had learned. He said, "Well, I am going uptown anyway, and will get my supper there." Well, he went uptown, and was gathered in without his supper. The crowd kept drifting down toward me. I saw some civil officers coming down the wagon road, approaching my house. They went in the house above mine, where a widow, Mrs. Holloman, lived. I saw them coming to my house, and the thought struck me, "If they are going to search I had better get my purse," which contained $315 in gold, and I put it in my pocket just as they came in. They looked around and asked me, "Have you got any arms here?" I said, "No; I have not; you can look for yourselves." "Oh, no," he said, "we will take your word for it." They started to go out and I said, "Don't you want me?" He replied, "No." I stood in the door and saw a soldier talking to Mrs. Holloman. She told me afterwards he asked her, "Who is that man?" She said, "Oh, you don't want him, he's just out of the hospital." The soldier replied, "No; we don't want sick people." In the meantime the shift had just come out of the mine, and they were all taken, without supper or opportunity to change their wet clothing. The railroad crossed the creek just above my house, and a soldier standing on the bridge called to me, "Hello," and beckoned to me to come over to him. I said, "Do you want me?" He said, "Yes; come over here." I went in, locked the doors, and came out the back way. I went down the road crossing to the bridge and went over into the crowd. The crowd drifted farther down to the wagon bridge, where we were huddled together, while the soldiers continued to arrest everyone they saw. While standing there I spoke to some of the soldiers, and told them that I had been a soldier, and would like to speak to an officer, as I did not think they would arrest me. I had not the faintest idea that such things could be done under the American flag as I saw done afterwards; that a citizen of good character and standing could receive such treatment as I saw them receive. I was willing to obey any order, because I thought they were helping to further justice. They told me that there would be some little examination and that would be the end of it, and I thought the same. Finally there was an officer placed on the middle of the bridge and we were told to come up, one by one, and give him our names, and we did so. As they gave their names the men went over to the train and were put into the freight cars. I had to be lifted or pulled into the car. I was not able to get in unassisted. I saw another old veteran there—a man about .62 or 63 years of age—who was very lame, and another with an artificial leg. They also had to be lifted into the car. The train soon pulled out and we were soon at Kellogg or Wardner Junction. By this time it was quite dark, and raining and chilly. I had no overcoat, and nothing to put around me. We were taken out of the car and grouped together in the rain on the platform. After standing there in the rain for half an hour we were told to march, and we tramped through the mud and slush to a large building which afterwards proved to be a large barn. It stood in a sort of depression, and we halted in front of it. They would call out "Five of you step forward," and five negro soldiers would search them. Some of the men did not obey orders promptly, and the soldiers used some pretty bad language to them. One white officer said, "God damn you, we will teach some of you how to behave yourselves." I am sorry to say so, but this was said by a white officer. The only thing they found on me was two knives. I omitted to tell you that at Burke I called Mrs. Holloman to me and gave her my purse, and I was very glad I had done so. When we were searched we were told to go into the barn. It was dark in there and every little while some one would shout, "Get off of me; don't tramp on me." I groped my way about until I got my back against a beam, and sat in that position all night. I noticed when daylight came that there had been stalls in there which had been taken out, but some of the uprights were left standing, and it was against one of these that I was reclining. At about 4 o'clock in the morning I wanted to go out, and made my way to the door over the sleeping men. I found a great crowd at the door waiting their turns to go out. I pushed by them and told the guard I wanted to go out. He said, "Well, you can't go; get back there," and he put his bayonet against me. Some of the men called "Miller, Miller, come back." Finally the guard took me out, and on the way back he said, "Get along lively there; get along lively." I said, "Look here, my friend, be a little lenient with an old man; I can't walk fast; thirty-four years ago I was down South helping to free such people as you. You weren't born then. I have an honorable discharge from the United States service, something which perhaps you will never get."

He said, "I don't give a God damn what you've got; dis gun wants to smoke anyhow," and he threw a cartridge into his gun, and I turned and said, "Shoot, you black son of a bitch; I am old enough to die," and I have seen things since then, which have made me feel that I ought to have died right then. The corporal sang out and said, "Put the bayonet to him; put the bayonet to him." He put the bayonet to my back and pushed me along. When I got back to the stable there was some difficulty in getting in through the crowd, and I wanted to remonstrate with the corporal, but he pulled a pistol on me and told me to get inside and keep quiet. The men inside cautioned me to keep quiet and said, "For God's sake don't make such a row as that; you will make it worse for all of us." There were hundreds of them in there who were just as good as I am, or better, possibly, and were not dynamiters or anything of the kind. About 11 o'clock we were called out to get something to eat. That was the first meal we had had since we were arrested. I probably did not feel as badly as the rest of them, because all the men had been arrested as they came off shift, and had had no supper, and were held in their wet mining clothes, which they were not allowed to change. Eight or ten men were called out at a time, and each man was given a piece of boiled meat, a potato, a piece of bread, and a tin cup of coffee; then he would fall back anywhere in the yard, sit down on the ground, and eat as best he could. Mr. Whitney had sent me a pair of blankets for myself and a pair for my brother from home, and toward evening I located where I would camp in the hay on the floor and spread my blanket there. Many of us were fearful of fire and that the men would light matches to smoke, so we appointed Mr. Cornell to watch. That night, while trying to go to sleep, all at once I felt a lot of water coming down on me, and I heard others calling out about it. There were men above us who would have to attend to the call of nature, and it would run down through the cracks in the floor upon us below. I, myself, twice during the night, had to void urine alongside of my blankets, because I could not get out, and, after my experience of the morning, I thought it the easiest way out of the trouble. That day (Friday) some of the men had been smoking, and a negro corporal came in and pulled his pistol, as he walked in and carried it in his hand. He did some of the worst cursing I ever heard. He said, "God damn it, I want you fellows to understand that there is no smoking allowed here," and then he gave some other orders and said, "By God, I will shoot the first son of a bitch I find disobeying those orders." On Saturday at noon I was released. I was only in the bull pen two nights, but it was two hundred years too long. I protested against the inhumanity and brutality of the treatment as much as I dared.

Mr. LENTZ. State whether you saw any evidence of lawlessness or insurrection at Wallace, or Burke, or along the railroad, or elsewhere between May 2 and 4.

Answer. No, sir; it was the quietest time I ever saw in Burke, up to the time the troops came there.

Mr. LENTZ. Did you make a statement before the Industrial Commission?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Was your statement correctly reported?

Answer. No, sir; they sent me a copy, which was not at all what I had stated, and I made a great many corrections and sent it back, but my statement was published without the corrections. My statement as to my treatment by the soldiers was cut out entirely, not published at all; and I most certainly did testify to it. My whole statement was garbled and edited, and not at all what I testified to.

Mr. LENTZ. Were citizens arrested for talking?

Answer. Yes; there were some miners brought in from Missouri, and Sinclair issued an order to arrest anyone who was found talking to them. Several were arrested for that.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM R. SHIELDS.

William B. Shields, age 70 years, a traveling salesman, resident of Mullan, Idaho, testified as follows:

I left Mullan on April 30, to make a trip into Montana until about May 9. I was at a little station called St. Regis, in the State of Montana, about 32 miles from the Idaho line. I met there an acquaintance named Charles Francis, who was boarding at the restaurant and who told me he had been working for the St. Regis Lumber Company. He told me he had been there for six months. Upon the day of which I speak a train came down with some troops on it. Some of the troops were guarding some prisoners in a box car. The train stopped, and Francis walked up the track to where it stood, and it seems he recognized one of the prisoners and was talking to him. I could hear them. All at once a white man and five or six negro soldiers came out of the coach and told Francis "to get in there, we want you too." Francis said, "What do you want me for?" They said, "Well, just get in there; no more words." "Get on there;" and they put him on the box car. He was in his shirt sleeves at the time. I walked down, keeping, however, at a very respectful distance. I heard him say, "If you will give me a chance, I can prove that I have not been in the Cœur d'Alenes for six months." I suppose they had been accusing him. I did not hear what they said to him, but I asked him if he had any money, and he said "Not a cent." I said, I have a couple of dollars, and started up to give it to him (it was all I had). A negro soldier said to me, "Old man, you had better stand back, if you don't want to take a trip to Wardner." As I did not want to take a trip, especially on that train, I stood back. Francis said, "I have no coat." I said, "Well, I will step across to the restaurant and have them send your coat to you," and a negro soldier said to him, "Never mind, we will get his coat." So I took no further action, but the train left, taking him along without any coat. While the train stood at the depot they threw out some guards around the planing mill, but arrested no one else. I said to one of the negro guards, "Are you people arresting men in Montana?" and he replied, "Yes, we arrest the damned sons of bitches wherever we can catch them." I asked, "Who is in command of these troops?" He replied, "Lieutenant Lyon." I saw no warrant shown or read to Francis.

TESTIMONY OF WILBUR H. STEWART.

Wilbur H. Stewart, 32 years old, a newspaper publisher and a resident of Wallace, Idaho, testified as follows:

My paper was a sort of free lance, affiliated neither with the miners' union or any other organization, industrial or political. On the morning of April 29, 1899, I slept late, as the night before I had run off the issue of my paper, which occupied the greater portion of the night. About 9 o'clock in the morning of the day referred to my wife called me and said there was something going on in town, as there were so many men around she feared some one had been killed in the mines. I got up and went out to learn what the excitement was about. There had been no disturbance of any kind before this, nor was there any lawlessness at Mullan on that day, nor after that. I had been among the miners at Mullan a great deal and had never heard of any demonstration of any kind to be made either there or elsewhere. A train was at the depot with a large number of men on it, and a good many boarded it at Mullan and went to Wardner. I did not know for what purpose, and knew nothing of the blowing up of the Bunker Hill mill until after the occurrence. On the afternoon of May 25 Bartlett Sinclair and Major Smith came into my office and Mr. Sinclair said, "I find you have been publishing a seditious paper, inciting riot and insurrection, and have concluded the publication of your paper must cease." This charge was absolutely false, as no such article had ever appeared in the paper, as the files will show. Major Smith said, "You may consider yourself arrested and get ready to go with us." I asked the privilege of getting out that issue, as I had some legal matters, land office notices, applications for patents on mining claims, which required legal publication, but I was refused, and told all work must be stopped right there. Major Smith told me to come along, and not keep them waiting. I was taken to Wallace, and put in jail and kept over night. The next afternoon I was taken to the bull pen. Major Smith was in command of the troops of the First United States Cavalry at Wallace. I was taken to the bull pen on the evening of May 26, and arrived there just at the time the prisoners were having their afternoon meal. I had had nothing to eat that day, and was very hungry, but could not eat such stuff as I saw fed to the men, and under such conditions. It was raining, and the men were sitting around the inclosure, in the mud, eating from the pans. I was given a bunk in the shed, and slept on the straw. The first day or two I was compelled to do the most revolting and filthy work, carrying out garbage and the contents of privy vaults. It made me sick, and it was impossible for me to eat anything; besides, I was subjected to insults and indignities from the negro soldiers, on every hand, that were humiliating in the extreme, perfectly unbearable. I became so sick that I was ordered to the hospital—that was on Sunday. Sunday night I slept none, and about 4 o'clock Monday morning a negro soldier came up and shook me and said "Here, get up here, I want you." I asked him what he wanted. He said, "I want you to go out there and help empty those privy vaults." I said, "I am sick; I'm not able to go; I have been sick two days, and have been ordered to the hospital this morning." He said: "It don't make any difference, I want you to go and do this work." I told him I had been exempted from work, and was sick, and I would not do it. He said: "It don't make a damned bit of difference if you die, you have got to get up there, you white sons of bitches, you are getting too familiar around here, and we have got to put a stop to it." I called the corporal of the guard; he came and had quite a dispute with the guard. The private insisted that I should be made to work; that I was no better than anybody else, and that he would like to see such "sons of bitches" made to do a little work of that kind, as it would do them good. I told him if I went out they would have to carry me, and they finally left me. About 9 o'clock Dr. Stratton came and took me to the hospital, where I remained a week. The general treatment of the prisoners was something terrible, revolting to an independent American citizen at all times, at other times there was some very severe, uncalled for, and humiliating treatment and insults. The men were cursed and abused by the negro guards and the officers, and called the vilest names; the most abusive epithets were applied to them. I was in the bull pen just two months and two days; I was released July 27.

Mr. LENTZ. Were you ever given a trial of any kind?

Answer. No, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Were you allowed to consult an attorney?

Answer. No, sir. I repeatedly asked to see Mr. Jones or Mr. Reddy; in fact, I do not think a day passed that I did not make the demand, but I was never allowed to see an attorney.

Mr. LENTZ. After you were released from prison did Mr. Sinclair ever say anything to you about publishing a paper which would support him and his methods?

Answer. At the time of my release, July 27, there was an order sent down to Captain Edwards to release me to come to Wallace to report to Sinclair. My wife came to me and advised me to accede to all of Sinclair's demands to secure my release, as I was sick. I went to the hotel at Wallace, and my wife went out and found Sinclair. He came to the hotel parlor. There were some other parties in the room and he asked them to retire, as he wanted to talk to me privately. After they had gone, he asked me what I intended to do. I told him I did not know whether I would go back to the bull pen or not. He told me it would depend on circumstances whether I would be released or not, and went on to say that he hoped I would return to Mullan and resume the publication of my paper. I told him I could not, as the authorities held the material. He said, "I will see that it is returned to you." I told him it would be of no use, as the stuff was all pied, jumbled up, and useless. He said that he would have it returned, and said, "I hope you will conclude to come out on the side of law and order, and support the State and military authorities in the policy they are pursuing here." I told him I considered I had always been on the side of law and order, and would continue on that side, but I did not think I would continue publication under those conditions. He told me that I should remember if I did resume publication, and continue to pursue my former policy of attack on the authorities, I could expect to go back in the bull pen. For that reason I did not resume the publication. He told me that I should remember that in a fight of this kind, where the State took up the fight against an organization of laboring men or any other classof individuals, my judgment should show me, that the State would win; that there was no question as to which side would be victorious. He said, "It is only a matter of policy with you anyway whether you support the State or the labor organizations—a question of dollars and cents." He said, "If you will do as I suggest, we will see that you are nothing the loser; we will see that it will be to your financial benefit to do this."

Mr. LENTZ. Tell us what you know of the death of Johnson.

Answer. He was a foreigner, I believe, a Swede or a Finlander. He was taken before Dr. France's kangaroo court (as it was called) and examined. When he came back he told us they had told him they were going to hang him if he did not give the names of some men who were implicated in the blowing up of the mill; he talked of it for two or three days, and seemed to be thoroughly convinced that they would hang him. He was taken up the second time and after he returned, told us the same thing. They were erecting a guardhouse near the prison, and Johnson took up the idea that they were erecting a scaffold to hang him on, and that excavation was to be his grave. As I was going to the kitchen one time I saw him pounding himself on the head with an Indian club. This was taken away from him, and some of his friends took charge of him and prevented him from doing violence to himself, and reported the matter to the sergeant of the guard. That was about 2 p. m. About 7 in the evening, two soldiers came in and took Johnson out. The next morning I heard some shots fired outside. I was looking through a knot hole in the side of the pen, watching the soldiers drill. The shots were fired down towards the other end of the bull pen. I got up on the rafters and crawled to the window in the end of the barn. I saw from the window the soldiers running around, and heard other shots fired, but I could not see what they were firing at. I watched them till they went down to the river, and saw them run into the water to a little strip of land, a sort of island; they ran up that and into the water again, and after they left the water they picked up this man Johnson. It appeared to me that they picked him up out of the bushes. He was carried back and I saw him unloaded from an army wagon at the guardhouse, dead. I was told afterwards that he was shot through the head. I understood that he had been pronounced insane by a commission, and was being taken to an insane asylum when he was killed.

TESTIMONY OF EDWARD J. FLANNAGAN.

Edward J. Flannagan, age 41 years, a resident of Mullan, Idaho, for fourteen years, a justice of the peace, testified as follows:

At the time of the explosion of the Bunker Hill mill I was at the Northern Pacific depot at Mullan, ready to take the train to Wallace to attend to some private business; there was no unusual excitement at Mullan nor had there been. I know of no instance where civil process had been resisted, or any indication of insurrection or rebellion against the constituted authorities. I was arrested on May 6 by a State deputy and 3 negro soldiers; no warrant was served on me, nor was I informed of the charge, if any, held against me. The circumstances of the arrest were these: I was on the opposite side of the street from my office, and I saw that there was some one in the room searching. I have two rooms, my business office in one and the other I use as a sleeping room and have a folding bed, which stands near the window. On this day the folding bed was not closed, and from the opposite side of the street I saw some one raise the mattress off the bed. The building was guarded by soldiers back and front; I immediately went across the street and as I went into my office I saw the deputy take a buckskin purse out of my valise and put it in his pocket. I asked him what he was doing and he replied, "We want you, too." He turned to the negro soldier and said, "You take this man," and I went out in the hallway with the soldier. I asked the negro what the deputy had taken out of my valise, and said that I saw him take one article; the soldier said he had taken more than one. They took me to the lower end of town, where they had gathered a number of other citizens, and kept me till 6 o'clock in the evening, when I was identified, by acceptable witnesses, as having had nothing to do with the explosion of the mill, and released me. I went home and found the deputy had stolen from my valise a purse containing $12, two silk handkerchiefs, and a Colt's revolver valued at $26. These things I have never recovered, although I have demanded them from the authorities, nor has the deputy been prosecuted. Four days after this, I was arrested by a deputy from Wardner, on orders from Bartlett Sinclair, but without a warrant. I was taken to Wallace that evening and put in jail and kept there until the next day at 2 o'clock, when I was taken to Wardner. When I came to the bull pen, Edmonston, the famous permit man, said to me, "Your name is Flannagan?" I said, "Yes, sir." "Are you an American or a foreigner," he asked. "I am an American," I replied. "You can go in the bull pen," he said, and I went in. None of the civil officers ever asked me a solitary question about the explosion of the mill, or my personal connection with anything concerning it. I was there for eighty-seven days. The treatment of the men confined there was brutal and inhuman in the extreme; the food was vile, and not fit for human beings to eat, and the serving of it was filthy beyond expression. One man was kept in the guardhouse a week because he threw a pig's foot, which was putrid and unfit to eat, into the slop trough. On the 19th of September all the men in the prison were put on the standing line for refusing to dig a ditch, and kept all day, under the most torturing conditions. At this time I was sick, but nevertheless met the same tyrannical treatment that was meted out to my companions in misfortune. The circumstance was this: The men had attempted to dig a tunnel, as a means of escape, and it had been discovered, and Captain Edwards had determined to dig a ditch to prevent any further attempts of this kind. He called out the men in squads of five, and ordered them to dig this ditch. Every man refused, and was ordered to stand up in line. When my time came I told him I was sick, the doctor had given me medicine the night before, and had been treating me for three weeks for granulated eyelids. The captain told me to go and see the doctor, which I did, and he said, "You go on and go to work, and when you drop I'll get you excused." I went back and told Captain Edwards what the doctor had said; he asked me if I would work, and I told him no. He said, "Get out on the standing line." When all the men had refused and were on the line, Captain Edwards said, "I want you men to understand that I will keep you on bread and water for thirty days if you don't perform this work." One of the men said, for a joke on the permit system, "We have no permit to work." I think the captain misunderstood him, or did not see the point of the joke; anyway he turned around and said, "You are a God damned set of cowards and curs." He said to the soldiers, "If any man steps off the line, shoot him in his tracks," and during the day the soldiers threw down their guns on the men several times. The day was extremely hot, and a number of the men had not brought their hats, and, of course, were bareheaded. The force of the sun was terrific, and the men suffered for water; only one was allowed to go to the tank at a time, and it was over two hours before a man could get a drink of water. These men had worked under ground all their lives, and the exposure to the fierce rays of the sun was a terrible ordeal to them. It caused me much suffering with my eyes. The hay was taken from our bunks and burned before our eyes, and we were compelled to sleep on the bare boards for fifteen days, and were kept on sour bread and water as our only food and drink for nine days. For two weeks we were not allowed any tobacco, and between three and four weeks we were not allowed to see any visitors. The men were on the standing line from 8 o'clock in the morning until 4 in the evening, and were not allowed to move.

Mr. LENTZ. Was there any provision made either by the State or military authorities for the support of the families of the men who were confined in the bull pen all this time?

Answer. None whatever. The only resource they had to depend on to save them from starvation and destitution was the labor organizations, and they established supply depots in charge of women who looked after the families.

TESTIMONY OF THOMAS HENEY.

Thomas Heney, a miner, 40 years of age, a resident of Mullan, who worked upon his own mining property, testified as follows:

For the first few years I worked under ground; for many years past I have been working mining property of my own. I served two years as sheriff of Shoshone County. I am a property owner of Shoshone County; my property consists of real estate and mining claims. I own six buildings in Mullan and some lots in the town of Kellogg. On April 29 I was acting as deputy sheriff, guarding the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine. On the morning of the 29th the foreman came to me and said, "I am afraid there is going to be some trouble, the men in the Last Chance are not working." I said to him, "It does look a little suspicious; they have all been laid off." He said he thought we had better fix up some breastworks around the mine, as they would probably come up and try to run out the miners; he said, "There is a very bitter feeling against these men who are working here." So they run all of the ore cars they had out of the mine—some 30 or 40 of them. They piled them up around the edge of the dump, in front of the mine, and he sent several men down town to pick up what militia guns they could; they brought these up, and the men were armed and made ready to defend the mine. About 10 or 11 o'clock we heard that 700 or 800 men were coming from Wallace, Mullan, and Burke; and the foreman said, "I think the best thing I can do is to tell all of these men to get away from here"—there were about 90 or 100 men in the mine. I told him I did not know but that would be a good idea. He said, "If they come up here they can not do much harm, except to run these fellows out." He said, "I'm going to tell these men to look out for themselves and get away as soon as they can." So he gave that general order to the men, and they skipped out of there as fast as they could, some walking and some running. Every one about the mine left. They took their rifles with them and went down the gulch, not toward town. They were not in a body, but went in groups. There were 70 or 80 of these men, and they all had militia rifles. I did not remain at the mine, but went to town and closed up all of the saloons. I expected the men I had heard were on the road would come to Wardner. There was no force left to defend the mine, and I was left alone, so I did the best I could devise to protect the property. I thought the attack would be made on the mine and did the best I could to protect it, but they left the mine and went to the concentrator, which is about 2½ miles from the mine. When I returned to the mine the rioters were all gone. I was arrested on June 23 by 5 soldiers and a man named Rose, who represented himself as a deputy. At the time of my arrest I was an officer of the court. I had been appointed to serve some papers in a civil suit. The court was in session and I was arrested in open court. Five soldiers came into the court room with this man Rose—a corporal and 4 privates. Rose came over and tapped me on the shoulder and said, "We want you to come along with us; we are going to place you under arrest." I was a little surprised, and asked him what for. He said he did not know. I asked him if he had a warrant; he said "No." I asked him who ordered my arrest. He said, "I don't know; come along; no arguing here." This was on June 23, and I stayed in the bull pen until October 2 and no charge was ever preferred against me. The treatment of the prisoners was cruel and brutal in the extreme. (Witness corroborated many of the acts of cruelty testified to by the witnesses who preceded him.) I was put on the standing line already referred to and kept standing in the hot sun in one position from 8 o'clock in the morning till 4.30 in the evening. I heard the words of Captain Edwards when he swore at the men and called them cowards and curs. He was known among the prisoners as General Weyler. Captain Edwards told me one day that a pipe cutter was lost, and that he thought the men who cleaned up the yard had stolen it. He ordered me to find it. The men said they had not seen it and knew nothing of it. He ordered the two men who did the cleaning to be confined in the dark cell in the guard-house for seven days, and the day they were released the pipe cutter was found where it had been used a week before. A young man named Hassett was confined to the dark cell and his eyes permanently injured in consequence of the confinement. There were never any charges preferred against him and he was released in October without a trial. He had been ordered to move some hay by Lieutenant Smithers and did not obey promptly. The lieutenant threatened to have him tied up by his thumbs. On September 22 Mr. Sinclair came into the bull pen and sent for me. When I met him he asked, "Is your name Heney?" I said "Yes." "Well," he said, "we have investigated the charges against you and have decided to release you." I replied, "I am very glad of it, Mr. Sinclair, and now that you have decided to release me I would like to know what charges you had against me?" "Well," he said, "you were assisting in the defense of the Corcoran case." I said "That is not a fact, because I was arrested nearly a month before the Corcoran case came up, and I could not have had anything to do with it." He said, "Well, you are released by the State authorities. I will turn you over to Captain Edwards, here." The Captain said, "You report to me to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock." This was on Saturday evening, and I said, "Captain, I am sick and I would like to report this evening, so that I can get home, as I have been released by the State authorities. You know that I am innocent, and I don't want to stay any longer here than is absolutely necessary." He said, "I have been twenty years in the Army and I know my business; you report to me in the morning at 9 o'clock." The next morning at 9 o'clock I went to the guard and told him the Captain had ordered me to report at his quarters at 9 o'clock, and that I wanted to go there. He said, "I have nothing to do about that, I am on guard here." So I did not get out. When the guard was changed at 10 o'clock I tried again and failed, and again at 12, and kept on as the guard was changed throughout the day, but I did not get out. The Captain sent for me the next morning, and asked me if I wanted to go to work. I asked him for how long. "That ain't it," he said, "do you want to go out and obey my orders and go to work?" I told him I was sick and could not work. "Take him back," he said; and he kept me until October 1. We were on bread and water all the time, from September 22, when I was released by the State authorities, until October 1. So I was held purely by the military authorities without any charge against me for ten days, and compelled to do penal labor by the officer in charge.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES R. SOVEREIGN.

James R. Sovereign, 47 years of age, a farmer, formerly commissioner of labor statistics for the State of Iowa, and later general master workman of the Knights of Labor, testified as follows:

I arrived in Shoshone County, Idaho, on September 1, 1898. I went there under contract with the Democrat Publishing Company to take charge of the Idaho State Tribune, a paper published by that company. I assumed charge of the paper early in October and was in Wallace, performing my duties as editor, on April 29, 1899. I had no connection with the labor organizations other than editing their official organ. I was at a meeting of the Western Labor Union, at Gem, on the night of April 28, when it is charged plans were laid for the disturbances which occurred the next day. I remained at that meeting till most of the members were gone, about 11 o'clock. The Bunker Hill situation was elaborately discussed, but no intimation was made of any demonstration of any kind. The conclusion arrived at was that the strike was a failure, and that the Bunker Hill Company could operate their mine in spite of opposition by the miner's union, and that no further consideration would be given the matter. I went home to Wallace, retired very late. I neither heard nor saw any disturbance of any kind. The next morning I met the superintendent of the Standard mine, and he told me the mines on Canyon Creek were closed. The Standard was already closed, making repairs, and about 250 men were idle. I was on the street, in front of my office, soon after this when a man came along on horseback, and called out, "Sovereign, they are coming!" "Who is coming?" I said, and he replied "The Canyon Creekers," and rode on. In a minute or so I heard the train whistle, and saw it round the curve; it was filled with men. I thought there must be some kind of an excursion going on, and called those in the office to look out so they might see what was going on. I then thought, if anything was going on, as a newspaper man it was my duty to find it out, and I started down to board the train, but it pulled out before I reached it, and went on to Wardner, leaving me behind. No one in Wallace seemed to know anything of what was going on; some thought it an excursion, others a parade or meeting at Wardner, and others feared some violence was probable. This train went about 10 o'clock, and at 12 o'clock the regular passenger train came along, and I got on it and went to Wardner. There was not an unusual number of passengers, nor was there anything unusual to note on the way. I got off the train about 50 yards from the depot, and walked up; the train I had seen pass Wallace was standing at the depot. Just as I reached this train, the first explosion at the mine occurred. Two other explosions occurred in rapid succession. I was in full view of the mill at the time. It was probably a half a mile away. The train was filled with men at the time, and as I passed some one called out, "Here is Sovereign; pick him up and throw him on a box car." They did this, and I jumped off. It was instantaneous. I went and stood on the platform at the depot for a few minutes, when there began a promiscuous firing of rifles on the train, by way of jubilation, I suppose, as the guns were fired in the air. I thought it would be safer for me on the train, and so got on the engine. In about fifteen minutes the train pulled out and went back to Wallace. When we reached Wallace I got off the train and it went on to Burke. There was no disturbance then or afterwards. I never saw anything to indicate a state of insurrection or the least disorder or bad feeling of any description. On May 3 I received a telephone message from Dr. France, asking me to come to Wardner and testify at the coroner's inquest. This I did. Attorneys Lindley and Beale interrogated me. They are both attorneys for the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine. They did not question me at all in regard to the killing of the two men, or anything in regard to their death. While at Kellogg and Wardner, and on the way from Wallace, I noticed no signs of insurrection or disorder, and saw no necessity for the use of soldiers; the civil authorities, I think, could have controlled the situation without interference or resistance. As editor of the official organ of the miner's union I never wrote an article inciting riot or disorder of any kind. I always counseled peace and respect for the law and the constituted authorities. The files of the paper will bear me out in this. In October, 1898, a man named Conners was run out of the Cœur d'Alene by four masked men. This was charged against the miners' union, and I condemned the act in the paper very severely. The union took official action and passed strong resolutions condemning such acts and the men who perpetrated them, and offered the services of the organization in suppressing such acts and running down and bringing to justice the perpetrators of any lawlessness. The men engaged in this act were expelled from the union. I saw the men who were arrested at Canyon Creek, when they came down under guard, with their wet clothes on, shivering, in the box cars. I rode to the bull pen and saw the treatment of the men confined there. I sat in the saddle in front of it for an hour. At that time the soldiers on guard were all negroes, and they seemed extremely domineering and overbearing. While I sat there at that time, some one in the bull pen was calling roll and the men were getting into line for some purpose, and as they came into line in the rear they crowded the front ranks forward; the soldiers were very abusive to them. They said, "Stand back there, you God damned white sons of bitches; stand back." After I had heard this repeated a great number of times I rode up close to the gate and asked the men in the bull pen whether the words "son of a bitch" was the military countersign. Being asked if he thought there was more crime or lawlessness in the Coeur d'Alenes than in the city of Spokane, Wash., Mr. Sovereign replied: "I do not think there was as much; I think there has been more crime committed since martial law has prevailed than has ever been known prior to this in a corresponding length of time. There have been more dissipation, drunkenness, and street brawls, more murders; the gambling places are all carried on openly, in violation of the civil laws, and negro soldiers insulted and humiliated the wives and daughters of the men in the bull pen, sending them indecent proposals in writing, and even attempting to force entrance into their houses. In one instance a so-called deputy tried to force an entrance into the room of a lady whose husband was in the bull pen. She swore out a warrant for his arrest, and he was tried by a justice of the peace, who sentenced him to jail. For this the justice was arrested and sent to the bull pen, and the deputy released by the military authorities. So it came about that the justices were afraid to issue processes or attempt to try criminals for fear that they themselves would be thrown in the bull pen." Mr. Lentz asked: "Have you any knowledge of anything being done by any miners' union, anywhere in that region, with reference to the destruction of the property of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, or any other property, or with reference to any injury to any person?" Answer. "No, sir; I have not." Mr. Lentz. "State whether the labor unions are criminal organizations or whether it is even possible with their constitution or their membership to advocate or discuss the committing of a crime?" Answer. "No, sir; the miners' unions are not criminal organizations. One might as well expect to organize the lower House of Congress into a criminal organization to blow up the National Library under some real or imaginary grievance as to expect to organize a criminal organization out of a labor union. In the first place, it is a physical impossibility. The radical members always stand in fear and dread of the conservatives, and it only requires one or two conservatives to convict an entire membership if they propose a crime. There has never been a time to my knowledge in the Coeur d'Alenes when the mine operators did not have more or less cordial friends inside of the miners' organizations, and they were welcome friends. It would be impossible to organize a labor organization in direct conflict and in antagonism to its own test of membership, without some objector. I know it is charged that the conservatives in the Cœur d'Alenes yield through the fear of the radicals, and a long chain of crime is laid at their door. Now, there are criminals in all organizations; in the boards of trade, in the directors and officers of banks, in chambers of commerce, even in the churches; but that does not make the organizations criminal. You can go to New Orleans or Galveston and find in the court records crimes committed by longshoremen as great as have ever been committed in the Cœur d'Alenes, but to say these crimes were sanctioned by the union is absurd and preposterous. I desire to say, further, that a great number of the crimes instanced by the governor, in his appeal to the President for the continuance of Federal troops, are crimes that had no relationship to the existing conditions, or no relationship between employer and employees, or between miners' organizations and mining companies, but were a difference and contention between individual members of organizations.

Mr. LENTZ. Is there anything in the law, written or unwritten, of the labor unions which would require you, as a member of it, or any member of a labor union, to conceal the name of a criminal who happened to belong to it?

Answer. No, sir; no more than in the Masons, the Elks, or the church. The fact is quite the contrary. If any member knows of any criminal resolution or action passed by the union, he is at perfect liberty to make it public, just as much as any other law-abiding citizen would be. The unions are law-respecting organizations, and it is their duty and object to further and aid good government, law, and orderly conditions and further the maintenance of justice. The miners' union built and equipped a hospital in the Cœur d'Alenes at a cost of $35,000; they maintain this by an assessment on each member of $1 per month. The equipment is the best and most complete in the West. The unions also have a sick-benefit fund of $10 per week while disabled from work and a funeral benefit of $100. They also own a cemetery, where the members and their families are buried, and also own halls in Gem and Burke; all public meetings of every character are held in these halls—religious services, church entertainments, literary exercises, joint debates, etc. They have reading clubs, and distribute books and pamphlets among the members. They have debates upon economics and sociological questions. There are many improving and refining features connected with these unions.

Fourth. It is charged that Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam did, in defiance of and contrary to the provisions of the fourth amendment of the Constitution, subject the persons, houses, papers, and effects of citizens to unreasonable and arbitrary search and seizure. The fourth amendment herein referred to is as follows:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons and things to be seized.

The testimony of every witness examined shows the most flagrant and defiant violation of this provision, especially as it relates to persons and property. The testimony of Mr. A. F. Gill alone is fully sufficient to sustain this charge. Mr. Gill says:

I was very close to Major Morton all the time. I observed his actions and the actions of his soldiers. The soldiers were arresting men and searching houses. I heard Major Morton direct a soldier to break into my house (just in front of us) in these words: "Break into those houses and search them." The soldiers went up to my house (my wife was out at the time, and the door locked). I watched the soldier turn the knob of the door; it would not yield, and he jammed it in, broke the glass in the door, and went in and searched the dwelling. He had no warrant. I observed several other similar acts.

Mr. DICK. Did you understand that this order to break into houses was from the military commander or the State deputies?

Answer. I know the order was from Major Morton. I was standing near to him and heard him give the orders to the soldiers in a number of different cases. I saw a number of houses forcibly broken into by the soldiers. In some cases they broke the glasses out with their rifles and went in through the windows. I heard Major Morton order a soldier to break into the house of the foreman of the Hecla Mining Company. The soldier tried the door, and it was locked; he then went to the side window, broke it in with his rifle, and went in through the window. I was not more than 25 yards from the house at the time.

Mr. Gill states that hundreds of citizens of Burke, of all callings—preachers, school teachers, justices of the peace, merchants, etc.—were seized without warrant or charge of any kind, and they were men who would be considered good citizens here in Washington. Later than this there was some whisky and some glasses stolen from a saloon kept by a prostitute. A deputy named Murphy (an ex-convict, who had served a term in the penitetiary for cattle stealing) went, in company with this prostitute, and broke into and searched the residences of a number of respectable citizens on a pretense of looking for these glasses. When asked for his warrant, Murphy would put his hand on his pistol and say, "This is my warrant." In company with this prostitute, Convict Murphy went through the houses of the citizens in this way. In some cases they broke in; in others they pushed aside the persons at the door and forced an entrance. Captain Batchelor, in his telegraphic report to General Merriam, says he arrived at Wardner May 2, at 2 o'clock p. m., and began a search for arms. This proves, by admission, that the soldiers were searching the houses of citizens, without warrant, twenty-four hours at least before the proclamation of the governor was written.

Mr. Edward J. Flannagan, a justice of the peace, a resident of Mullan, testified that a deputy, with a guard of soldiers, entered his sleeping apartments, and made thorough search of all his effects, taking from a valise, and appropriating, money, his property, to their own use, and that he never recovered his property—they had no warrant or other civil process—and also seized him (Flannagan) and held him in durance. His testimony, under charge 2, sets out all the incidents in detail. Mr. Stimson, one of the county commissioners, testifies that when he was arrested in his place of business, the lodge room of the Odd Fellows, which is located in the same building, was searched. Mr. Stimson says in regard to this, "I recognized the deputy as an Odd Fellow, and I told him there was an Odd Fellows' room upstairs, and that there was a paraphernalia room there, and as I did not care to have anyone not a member of the order intrude there, I asked if he would not search that room himself, as I knew they were searching every house for arms. He searched the lodge rooms, and reported to Lieutenant Murphy, who said it would not be disturbed further. They showed no warrant or other civil process. Mr. Wilbur H. Stewart testified that his house was searched, and his printing material seized by Major Smith and Bartlett Sinclair without a warrant or other civil process, and its return upon a demand by writ of replevin refused, and that he himself was seized and imprisoned without warrant.

Fifth. It is charged that the military commander arbitrarily and in defiance of the civil law ordered the arrest of the sheriff of the county and the board of county commissioners, and subsequently deposed them from office on the unproved pretext of neglect of duty. This charge is fully sustained by the statement of nearly all of the witnesses, especially by Mr. William R. Stimson, one of the commissioners; by Mr. Forney, the prosecuting attorney; Mr. Flannagan, Governor Steunenberg, and Dr. France. There can be no denial of the full proof of this charge.

Sixth. It is charged that the military commander, immediately upon the arrival of troops, ordered the arrest of every man who was a member of the miners' union, and also of all citizens who were supposed to sympathize with the cause of organized labor. The proof of this charge is admitted by General Merriam in his telegram of May 2, when he said, "This is martial law." Every settlement in the mining district was dragneted by soldiers, and every miner and his friends, regardless of occupation or affiliation, was seized and thrown into prison. There were not enough men left in Gem, Burke, Wallace, or Mullan to bury their dead, and it was necessary for the women to perform this service. They were compelled to take charge of and distribute the supplies sent by outside labor organizations for the relief of the destitute families of the men arbitrarily held in prison without any charge preferred or any trial.

Although General Merriam denies that he issued a specific order to his subordinate officers to arrest all members of the miners' union, yet the fact remains proven that the miners' union was declared a criminal organization; and Governor Steunenberg testifies to the fact that he gave a blanket order to arrest everybody in Shoshone County whom Mr. Sinclair should desire arrested. Dr. France testifies, as well as Mr. Sinclair, that orders were given to arrest all union miners at the various mining centers, and it is conclusively proven that about 300 arrests of miners were made at Burke by soldiers under the command of Major Morton, and the same thing was done at Mullan. Indeed, there is no lack of testimony to prove that all arrests were made virtually by the soldiers, the deputies merely serving to point out individuals. Mr. Sinclair in his cross-examination was asked:

Mr. HAY. Could you maintain martial law without the aid of United States troops?

Answer. No; if the troops were withdrawn the governor would be compelled to declare martial law at an end.

Mr. HAY. Are not the troops ordered there by the President of the United States?

Answer. Yes.

Now the conclusion is obvious. All of these outrages are only made possible by the presence of the troops sent there by the President, and all of these outrages upon the Constitution, the laws, and the rights of citizens are the outcome of the acts of the President through the power exercised by the military officer in command in the district. All this pretense of State authority, of sustaining the constituted authorities, and the commissioning of deputies is a mere farce and subterfuge. The fact is patent that the management of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan dictate a policy in their own interest to a handful of so-called State representatives who serve their policy, and these, with the aid of Federal bayonets, impose any hardship, any injustice, any oppression they may desire upon a defenseless and helpless community, and worse still, these so-called representatives, and especially the chief of them, Sinclair, are a lot of transient interlopers, nonresidents, men of no responsibility or character in the community, and they dominate, oppress, and tyrannize over a community, residents for years in the locality, whose industry and energy have developed the resources of the locality, retrieved it from its primitive wildness, made there homes for their families, and surrounded them with the comforts of civilization.

Seventh. It is charged that these citizens were imprisoned in what is known as the "bull pen," a place unfit for human habitation, and that so brutual and degrading was the treatment inflicted on the prisoners by the United States soldiers under the orders of their commanders that one unfortunate man became insane, and upon being taken to the county jail he broke from his guard and jumped into the river, and a negro soldier, at the command of Dr. France, the physician for the Bunker Hill Mining Company, fired three shots at him and he was taken from the river dead; and that another unfortunate prisoner, dying in the "bull pen," begged for a priest, and his dying request was denied.

These facts are testified to by almost every witness put upon the stand; the special acts were stated by Mr. Simpkins, Mr. Stewart, and Dr. France himself. The brutality and inhumanity of the treatment is the theme of every witness, and the filthy and unsanitary condition proven clearly; the beastly manner in which the prisoners were compelled to secure and eat their food is revolting beyond expression.

Eighth. It is charged that the imprisoned citizens were denied the opportunity to confer with their counsel and members of their families, and were denied the right of speedy and impartial trial; were held in this vile and inhuman imprisonment for several months, without charge or indictment against them, although two sessions of the grand jury were held in the meantime, and during their confinement were treated by the officers and soldiers of the United States Army as convicted felons, and compelled to work at penal employment; were subjected to cruel and degrading punishments, such as being compelled to sleep on bare boards, were placed on a diet of bread and water for ten days, and compelled to stand seven hours each day (erect) in the hot sun, under penalty of death if they attempted to sit down or even move. These two latter unlawful punishments were inflicted upon them by the orders of Captain Edwards, United States Army, who amused himself by calling the prisoners "cowardly curs."

All of these charges are fully sustained by every witness examined, and there can be no question as to their truth. Reference is made to all the testimony under charge 3.

Ninth. It is charged that, by the use of the military power, the writ of habeas corpus was suspended for months in Shoshone County, and the right of free speech, free press, and peaceable assemblage were denied to the peaceable citizens of that community, without any excuse or justification whatever. Under this charge, it was proven that Mr. Cornell and others were arrested and imprisoned "for talking too much;" that men were arrested for talking to certain men from Missouri who came there to work in the mines; one man, even, in Montana, who had not been in Idaho for six months, was seized for merely talking to prisoners, and others were arrested for expressing their disapproval of the methods of those in power. Mr. Stewart's paper was suppressed, his material confiscated, and himself imprisoned, for alleged criticism of the authorities. Probably the most contemptible and puerile exhibition of petty tyranny and vindictive spite which has ever disgraced the annals of any community, in this or in any other country, since the days of mediæval slavery, was enacted by Bartlett Sinclair, in Shoshone County, Idaho, when by proclamation he denied the right of peaceable assemblage to the women and children, the wives and mothers and sisters of the men who at that time were held in duress under the bayonets of the Federal soldiers. This exhibition of bullying tyranny was perpetrated under the most aggravating conditions, which would make it contemptible and disgraceful even if it were not in open defiance both of the Constitution of the United States and of that of the State of Idaho. The circumstances are as follows:

There is located at Wallace a cemetery belonging to the miners' union, and there all deceased members are buried, and there the family of each member has a burial plat. It is customary annually, on July 11, for the various unions to assemble at this cemetery with their wives and children to hold memorial services for the dead and to decorate the graves with flowers. The occasion is similar to the Decoration Day ceremonies held throughout the Union, but purely local there. On July 11, 1899, almost the entire male mining population of Shoshone County was imprisoned in the bull pen, at any rate all the union miners, which of course precluded an observation of the day by them in the usual manner, and consequently the women of the community determined to carry out the usual custom, as far as they were able, and in pursuance of their intent caused to be published the following notice:

The Cœur d'Alene miners' memorial day, Tuesday, July 11, is to be fittingly celebrated. The wives, daughters, and sweethearts of the imprisoned men of Wardner, Mullan, and Canyon Creek, together with the women of Wallace, have arranged short commemoration exercises. No display or ostentatious demonstration will be attempted, but a fitting tribute will be paid to the memory of those who gave their lives to the labor cause in 1892.

This piteous endeavor of the weak and helpless to show their loving remembrance of their dead called forth the following heartless, brutal, and unmanly declaration on the part of the petty despots in power at the moment:

NOTICE TO ALL RESIDENTS OF THE CŒUR D'ALENES.

Whereas the authorities have been reliably informed that a number of residents of Shoshone County propose to celebrate on July 11 certain acts committed in violation of law and order, and to incite rioting and resistance to the laws of the State and United States: Now, therefore, this is to notify all persons that no such celebration in Shoshone County will be permitted. All persons giving encouragement by holding meetings, or giving contributions, or otherwise, and all persons taking part, or encouraging others to take part in such celebration, or permitting others to take part in such celebration, over whom, by reason of relationship, they exercise control, will be liable to arrest and imprisonment.

The peace officers of the county are instructed to deny the use of the public highways for all such disgraceful and unlawful exhibitions in commemoration of said criminal acts.

This proclamation was signed by Bartlett Sinclair, and silently acquiesced in by the military commander on the ground, and therefore constructively having his approval and support. On the cross-examination of Bartlett Sinclair, Mr. Robertson asked:

Question. Was it not generally understood that the miners' union men who could be arbitrarily arrested were not going to make a celebration?

Answer. That is what I heard, and for that reason I said in that notice that those who had control over those people by reason of relationship would be arrested.

Question. You did, then, intend to cause those to be arrested who permitted their wives and children to parade on that day?

Answer. That they would be liable to arrest.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You gave notice to that community that if those little children and those women attempted to carry out any programme on July 11 and used the highways they would be incarcerated?

Answer. That they would run the risk of it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, Mr. Sinclair, it has been testified to that on July 11 it was customary to decorate the graves of those men with American flags and flowers, and that peaceful memorial addresses were made over the graves of the dead. Did you think that you had the right to prevent the wives and children of those people from assembling and marching there in a body of one or ten thousand if they saw fit?

Answer. Not if it were for that quiet purpose and not to excite riot; but the minds of the people were very much inflamed, and it would take very little to bring about a concerted attack on the constituted authorities.

Mr. ROBERTSON. But you have testified that nearly all of the miners' union men were in prison, at least a large portion of them.

Answer. Yes; they must have been.

Mr. ROBERTSON. There were about 1,000 Federal soldiers there, the mining centers were filled with deputies armed with revolvers, and there was the sheriff and his deputies; yet, Mr. Sinclair, you would not permit these women and children to parade on that day because they would incite a riot.

Answer. It was not the women, it was the men.

Mr. ROBERTSON. But you have just testified that you knew the women and children would meet, and the men would not?

Answer. If the women did not meet, I felt sure the men would not; it was a celebration I would have prevented if in my power.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You would prevent anything which you did not like, possibly. Now, you said, "The peace officers of the county are instructed to deny the use of the public highways." Do you not know that the public have the right peacefully to use the public highways?

Answer. Yes; peaceably.

How did you have the right to anticipate, in advance of a meeting that was ostensibly called for a peaceable purpose, that they would unlawfully use the highways?

Answer. You see I conceived the notion that it was not to be a peaceful or law-abiding gathering. I wished to prevent anything leading to insurrection.

Now, do you not know that on July 4 all the mines on Canyon Creek, at Mullan, Gem, Mace, and Burke were closed, and celebrations held, and that only the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine was the only one which was not closed down?

Answer. I did not hear of it; it might have been the case.

Surely there is no further evidence necessary to prove the charge that the constitutional right of peaceable assembly was denied in the most tyrannical and arbitrary manner, and yet this testimony is corroborated by nearly every witness. Comment upon this act of petty despotism and puerile arrogance is unnecessary.

Tenth. It is charged that when the Industrial Commission sat in Wallace all union men who had been long residents of the county were in the bull pen, and had no opportunity to appear before the commission; others were arrested on their way to Wallace to appear before the commission, and thrown into the bull pen, until after the commission adjourned. The fact that all the union men were in the bull pen when the commission held its sitting, and that the commission never went to the prison, or asked for any of the prisoners to testify before it, is fully shown by the combined testimony of all the witnesses, as there is practically no denial that all the members of the unions were arrested, and that fully 1,200 men were held in the prison. That arrests of men were made on their way to testify before the commission is shown by the evidence of William Powers, a resident of Mullan, of which place he had been a resident for more than ten years. At the time of his arrest he was a civil officer of the county, a constable of the town of Mullan. Mr. Powers testifies:

On July 27 I was standing on the street, waiting for the stage, to go down and testify before the Industrial Commission. I was summoned to appear before that body on that day; and while I was waiting for the stage a man named Perrin, who up to that time had been in the employ of the Bunker Hill Company and at that time was a member of Doctor France's jury, tapped me on the shoulder and told me I was his prisoner. I asked him what charge he had, or what right he had to take me. He whipped out his gun and made a crack at me with it. I dodged the gun; and he struck with such force that his cuff button scratched my face as it passed, and the gun went about half way across the street, out of his hand. I grabbed his hands and got him a little foul. "Now," I said, "that is your charge and you have lost it. Now, what charge have you got?" He asked me if I was going to resist arrest. I told him, No, if he had any right to arrest me; but I intended to find out, if I could, what authority he had to arrest me or what papers he had directing him to take me. At that time a soldier came up and told me to consider myself under arrest. I said, "I am willing to submit to arrest to anyone who has authority to arrest me. Are you going to arrest me for not holding my head for that man to hit me with a gun?" He said, "No; I will take that man, too," but he said he would take me down first. We were both finally taken before the lieutenant in charge, and I said to him that I was on my way down to answer to a summons of the Industrial Commission, and that if it was possible for him to let me respond to that summons I would like to do so. He told the guard to take charge of me. I still wanted to get an answer from him, and he told me the less I had to say the better it would be for me. I was carried to Wallace and thrown into jail. I sent word by a friend to the members of the commission that I was under arrest, and would be glad to appear before them if they would send for me. My friend brought back word that they would come to the bull pen and get my testimony; that there were others there whose testimony they wanted to get, and they would get all at the same time. They never came down there at all, nor did they ever to my knowledge send for any man confined there to testify before them. Nothing was ever done with Perrin. I was detained ten or twelve days and released; no charges were ever preferred.

The further fact that the evidence given before them by Mr. Simpkins, Mr. Sovereign, Mr. Cornell, and others was so garbled and distorted in their report that it was not recognizable or recognized by the witnesses themselves proves that the so-called investigation was merely a perfunctory affair, intended to serve a purpose, and utterly regardless of justice, truth, or the rights of the people affected by it. Its report is unworthy of credence or the respect of the country.

Eleventh. It is charged that the following proclamation, in gross violation of the Constitution of the United States, and of the constitution and statutes of the State of Idaho, was issued and enforced by General Merriam, to wit:

PROCLAMATION.

Whereas the following notice has been served upon the mine owners of Shoshone County by the duly constituted State authorities, by whom martial law has been declared, to wit:

"To the mine owners of Shoshone County:

"Certain organizations or combinations existing in Shoshone County have shown themselves to be criminal in purpose, inciting and, as organizations, procuring property to be destroyed and murders to be committed, by reason whereof it has been twice necessary to declare martial law in Shoshone County.

"You are therefore notified that the employment of men belonging to said or other criminal organizations during the continuance of martial law must cease. In case this direction is not observed your mines will be closed."

Therefore, in order to carry into effect the spirit of the foregoing notice and restore the industries of the district as far as possible, it becomes necessary to establish a system by which miners who have not participated in the recent acts of violence, and who are law-abiding people, may obtain work, and, that order and peace may be established, the following is promulgated for the guidance of all mine owners and employees in the affected district:

All parties applying for underground work in any of the following mines will be required to obtain from Dr. Hugh France, the duly appointed and authorized agent for the State of Idaho for this purpose, or his deputy, at Wardner or at Wallace, a permit authorizing said person to seek employment in any of the following mines: Bunker Hill and Sullivan, Last Chance, Empire State-Idaho, Consolidated Tiger and Poorman, Hecla, Mammoth, Standard, Helena-Frisco, Gem, Morning, Hunter, and such others as may be hereafter included in the above list. Parties applying for such permits must be prepared: First, to deny all participation in the riots of April 29, 1899, in Shoshone County; and, second, to deny or renounce membership in any society which has incited, encouraged, or approved of said riots or other violation of public law.

Mine owners must refuse employment to all applicants for underground work who do not present a duly signed permit authorizing the same. Such permit will be deposited in mine owners' office subject to periodical inspection.

All parties now under employment by any of the mines above named will be required to procure, within ten days from this date, the permits above referred to as a condition to their remaining in the service of their respective companies.

By order of the governor and commander in chief:

BARTLETT SINCLAIR, State Auditor.

Examined and approved:

H. C. MERRIAM,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Army.

Dated May 8, 1899.

"The application for permits to seek employment which union men must sign is as follows:

"'APPLICATION FOR LEAVE TO SEEK EMPLOYMENT IN THE MINES OF SHOSHONE COUNTY.

"'To Dr. HUGH FRANCE, State Representative.

"'SIR: I hereby make application for issuance to me of a permit allowing me to seek employment in the mines of Shoshone County.

"'I am a ——— by occupation.

"'I am a native of ——— and am a ——— citizen of the United States.

"'I last worked at the ——— mine in ———

"'My shift boss was ——— ———.

"'Heretofore I have been a member of ——— Miners' Union.

"'I did not participate actively or otherwise in the riots which took place at Wardner on the 29th of April, 1899. Believing that the crimes committed at Wardner on said date were actively incited, encouraged, and perpetrated through and by means of the influence and direction of the miners' unions of the Cœur d'Alenes, I hereby express my unqualified disapproval of said acts, and hereby renounce and forever abjure all allegiance to the said miners' union, of which I was a former member, and I solemnly pledge myself to obey the law and not to again seek membership in any society which will encourage or tolerate any violation of law.

——— ———.

"'Dated this — day of ———, 1899.'

"The application which nonunion men must sign is as follows:

"'APPLICATION FOR LEAVE TO SEEK EMPLOYMENT IN THE MINES OF SHOSHONE COUNTY.

"'To Dr. Hugh France, State representative.

"'Sir: I hereby make application for issuance to me of a permit allowing me to seek employment in the mines of Shoshone County.

"'I am a ——— by occupation.

"'I am a native of ——— and am a ——— citizen of the United States.

"'I last worked at the ——— mine in ———.

"'My shift boss was ——— ———.

"'I have not been for ——— years a member of any miners' union.

"'I took no part, either actively or passively, in aiding, assisting, or encouraging the perpetration of the crimes committed at Wardner on the 29th of April, 1899.

"'I solemnly pledge myself to obey the law.

——— ———.

"'Dated this — day of ———, 1899.'

"At this writing no union men are permitted to work in the county; the meetings of the miners' union are prohibited."

General Merriam admits his participation in the composition and issue of this proclamation in his report, as he says:

Proof copies were furnished to me of the matter in the form of a poster. I thought an improvement could be made; Mr. Sinclair agreed to this and, at his request, I wrote an addition to the central paragraph. I authorized my name to be printed at the bottom of the poster, under the words "Examined and approved."

This makes the transaction the work of General Merriam, as much as if he had written the entire instrument. It was done under his approval after examination, and consequently becomes his act, and men were refused the inalienable right to earn an honest living by honest labor, except by permission, granted by an arbitrary, unconstitutional, illegal and usurped authority, under the most humiliating and tyrannical conditions.

In the cross-examination of Dr. Hugh France, the recognized executive of this infamous usurpation of power, and the man who assumed to deny to citizens of a free country the right to labor for a support for themselves and their wives and children, the following facts were brought out. Under the cross-questioning of Mr. Sulzer, Dr. France said:

I was present in the room when the permit system was first discussed. There were present besides myself General Merriam, Bartlett Sinclair, and part of the time Mr. Lindley (the attorney for the Bunker Hill Mining Company). Bartlett Sinclair drew up the proclamation, so far as I have any knowledge.

Mr. SULZER. Who deputized you to look after this permit system?

Answer. Bartlett Sinclair deputized me to see the permit system enforced.

Mr. SULZER. If any man went to work without your permit, he was arrested?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULZER. The permit system is still in force there, is it not?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULZER. And it has never been changed since May 8, 1899?

Answer. I believe not.

Mr. SULZER. How many permits have you issued since May 8, 1899?

Answer. About 7,000.

Mr. SULZER. Every man who is now working in the Cœur d'Alenes works now under your permission?

Answer. He is, so far as I have any knowledge.

Mr. Robertson then took up the cross-examination as follows:

Mr. ROBERTSON. You were never elected by the people of the State of Idaho or the county of Shoshone to the office you administer?

Answer. No, sir.

Mr ROBERTSON. The authority you exercise you got entirely from Bartlett Sinclair?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr ROBERTSON. Since receiving this appointment from Sinclair you have exercised the authority to arrest such persons as you deemed to have violated the proclamation of the governor?

Answer Yes, sir.

Mr ROBERTSON. And those persons you arrested without warrant and without complaint, upon oath of any person whomsoever?

Answer. That is correct.

Mr ROBERTSON. When men were working without a permit you directed them arrested?

Answer. I did; yes, sir.

Mr ROBERTSON. Was there any length of time specified in any proclamation, by any authority whatever, to which a person would be subjected for working without a permit?

Answer. Not that I am aware of.

Mr ROBERTSON. You held them for a certain length of time and terminated their imprisonment when you saw fit?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. What length of time did you have in your mind, as the term of your sentence, when you imprisoned these men?

Answer. I had not made up my mind on that subject.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In fact, you might keep them one hour or for six years; it was optional with you? Now Dr. France, did you not issue commitments on printed forms ordering the confinement of men, and deliver them to Mr. Edmonston and others, so that they could arrest whom they chose and enter the name afterwards?

Dr. France denied this.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Did you not incarcerate one Allen C. Austin on one of these commitments for working without a permit?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. A man who wants a permit must first apply for it, must he not?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And that written form contained a statement that the man applying had not participated in the riots of April 29?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So that the application itself was used as a means or method of ascertaining whether or not the applicant was qualified to obtain employment?

Answer. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, then, you compelled a man to disclose to you facts that would disqualify him from obtaining employment, in order to obtain employment?

Answer. That is correct, I believe. Therefore a man under this system must bear witness against himself and deprive himself of the right to earn a living.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If the rolls of the Canyon Creek mines showed that a man was not at work on April 29, was that not used by you as evidence tending to show that the man was an aider in the conspiracy?

Answer. That was one of the means used; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, on April 29, 1899, there was a statute existing in the State of Idaho which punished the crime of murder, one that punished arson, and another conspiracy. Is that correct?

Answer. I believe so, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And none of those statutes, to your knowledge, provided that, before conviction or incarceration, the person accused of any of those crimes should not be permitted to work, did they?

Answer. Not that I have any knowledge of.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So that this permit system, which was by you made to apply to all persons you deemed to be guilty, adopted on May 8, provided an additional penalty for such crimes, and that punishment was that such persons should not be permitted to earn a livelihood?

Answer. You might call it a punishment; they were not permitted to work.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Then, I will ask you if the inauguration of the permit system, having been devised subsequent to April 29, 1899, and after the crime it sought to punish had been committed, was not an ex post facto rule of law with reference to that crime?

(This question was objected to by a party vote as calling for a conclusion.)

Mr. ROBERTSON. Dr. France, did you not, on May 12, 1899, make a return into court that you had summoned a grand jury?

Answer. Yes, sir; I made that return.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, did you encounter any difficulty in serving the venire and summoning that jury?

Answer. I did not.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And from May 12, 1899, until they adjourned, you know they did investigate the crimes committed at Wardner April 29, and that they indicted Paul Corcoran and several others?

Answer. That is correct, I think.

Mr. ROBERTSON. After the indictment was found Judge Stewart proceeded to try Paul Corcoran for murder, and he was convicted by a jury and sentenced for murder in the second degree?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, so far as you know, was the State able to secure the attendance of witnesses and proceed to the trial of criminals without hindrance?

Answer. So far as I know; yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. About September 1 there was another term of the court held?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. During that term a soldier was tried for murder at Wallace, during the existence of martial law, and acquitted by a jury, was he not?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Did the State encounter any opposition in the prosecution of the soldier?

Answer. No, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. During these two sessions of the court, civil cases were also disposed of, were they not?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And about September 1 there was also a term of the Federal court held at Moscow, Idaho, was there not?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now could you not have delivered to the State or Federal courts any man you had in the bull pen just as you delivered Paul Corcoran and Mr. Butler?

Answer. I think so.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So that while the civil courts were open, in unobstructed exercise of their jurisdiction, you continued to hold men for an indefinite period, under martial law, without delivering them to the courts, or filing any charges against them at any time?

Answer. Those men were held by the governor and Bartlett Sinclair; I held them under their authority.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In January, 1900, you ordered the arrest of Charles Tilford for working without a permit, did you not?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And you committed him to the custody of Angus Sutherland, to hold as a military prisoner, for an indefinite length of time?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Was there a warrant issued for the arrest of Tilford?

Answer. No, sir; there was no warrant issued.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Do you not know that while Charles Tilford was in custody, arrested without a warrant and delivered without a trial, to be held until you should see fit to discharge him, he filed a petition in the district court for a writ of habeas corpus, and that it was refused, because he was held under martial law and the court could not release him?

Answer. I understand the writ was denied.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Tilford was held under your orders at the time this petition was filed, was he not?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not a fact that similar petitions were prepared on behalf of Lewis Dahl, A. J. Huff, and Joseph Gim at about the same time, all of these arrested by your order for working without a permit?

Answer. I do not deny that these men were arrested, but I do not remember the cases.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, as this permit system was inaugurated after the establishment of martial law, did not this legislative rule prescribing a crime not make yourself and those who were administering martial law in that locality the supreme legislative power during the continuance of martial law?

Answer. I do not know, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. No one else had any right to make that rule, that men could be arrested and held for working without permits, had he?

Answer. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Nobody could repeal that rule, except those who had inaugurated it, could they?

Answer. No one except Bartlett Sinclair and Governor Steunenberg.

Mr. ROBERTSON. They needed no legislative sanction to do it, after it was inaugurated, before it became operative, did they?

Answer. I think not.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So that as a matter of fact, you and Bartlett Sinclair and the governor did exercise in that county the supreme legislative control with reference to arresting persons for violating this proclamation?

Answer. I exercised certain authority under the governor.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That was supreme authority?

Answer. I don't know.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You took your orders from no one except the governor and Sinclair, did you?

Answer. That's all.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You received no orders from any prosecuting attorney or court, did you?

Answer. No, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So you did exercise, in effect, supreme legislative functions in that county?

Answer. I should not call them so.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now in making your judgments with reference to the guilt or innocence of a person for violating a rule of martial law, did you call to your aid any court or magistrate?

Answer. I did not.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And you did it without swearing any person?

Answer. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So that under martial law, you, Bartlett Sinclair, and the governor exercised the supreme judicial function of determining the guilt or innocence of a person for a violation of that rule, without interference from any other branch of government?

Objected to on party vote.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In exercising the judicial functions that appertain to material law, in the trial of these men, to determine their guilt or innocence, you, alone, decided upon the weight of evidence, the credibility of witnesses, and the right to release or imprison?

Answer. There was no trial.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Then you exercised those functions without giving the accused or suspected an opportunity to be heard?

Answer. I exercised them upon positive information.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You gave them no opportunity to produce evidence to show that you might have been wrongly informed?

Answer. I never prevented them from bringing such evidence.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In other words, you did not proceed even as courts-martial proceed in military organizations to try persons—by bringing them before a military board; you had no board or any other place where a man could be heard in his own defense, either with or without counsel? What kind of court was there, that gave any man any right to be heard in his own defense?

Answer. I never heard it called any kind of court.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In other words, when you got ready to arrest a man, you simply told a deputy to go and take him and put him in jail?

Answer. When I had information; yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, at the time you arrested these men without warrant, and without giving them a hearing, did you not know that the constitution of the State of Idaho provided that no person should be held to answer for any crime unless he was indicted or informed against according to the law of the land.

Answer. I was not holding them under the constitution, I was holding them under the authority of the governor.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So that you did not consult the constitution or its limitations in your acts?

Answer. I did not; no, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Doctor, if a man had no permit, he was arrested wherever he was working in a mine?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So that if he had no permit, he could not work upon any property, whether he was the owner or not; he was subject to arrest if he did?

Answer. That is substantially correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In the month of March I see what purports to be a list of permits issued by you. By occupation there were 231 miners; laborers, 168; mill men, 17; engineers, 12; blacksmiths, 7; machinists, 6; carpenters, 4; electricians, firemen, and cooks, 2 each; steam fitter, machinist, helper, blacksmith, painter, pipeman, and sorter, 1 each; so as a matter of fact you not only issued permits to miners, but to all classes of artisan labor?

Answer. No, sir; only in the mines.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If a man took out a permit as a laborer, he could get a job as a miner, or a stenographer, or anything else. That permit was sufficient, was it?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. It was simply a permit to work at any job he could get?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You say you have issued 7,000 permits to work?

Answer. Approximately.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Seven thousand men have been compelled to apply to you for permission to earn a support for themselves and their families?

Answer. Yes; to me or to the deputies.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So that you, to the extent of 7,000 persons at least, control the liberties of that number of citizens of the United States?

Answer. I do not consider that I control their liberties.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You control them to the extent of forcing them to obtain permits, or you arrest them if they work without?

Answer. That is practically the case.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So that you have the liberties of 7,000 men in your keeping in Shoshone County?

Answer. You may say that; yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not a fact that you uniformly refuse members of the Western Federation of Miners permits?

Answer. The members of the Cœur d'Alene Miners Union have been almost unanimously refused permits.

Mr. ROBERTSON. How many do you estimate these to be?

Answer. Perhaps 1,500.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So practically you have refused 1,500 men the right to earn a living in Shoshone County?

Answer. I refused a great many.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, Dr. France, if the permit system had been placed in the hands of a union man, he could have shut out all the nonunion men in the Cœur d'Alene, could he not?

Answer. I suppose so.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You were shutting out the union men, were you not?

Answer. The Cœur d'Alene Miners Union.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Doing yourself what you defined as criminal on the parts of the unions. Now, do you not know that many of the men of families were compelled to leave the Cœur d'Alenes, because they refused to sink their citizenship to the extent of making an application to you for a permit to seek honest employment?

Answer. I do not, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Did you not think you were doing wrong when you refused to men permits, who had wives and children in the community, who needed support?

Answer. I gave a great many permits; I don't believe there were over 100 members of the unions who applied for permits.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The majority of them you did not; practically all of them did not have permits?

Answer. Not more than 100.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Did you not think that the law which was established for the adjudication of men's rights by criminal punishments provided all the remedy that the State was entitled to resort to in suppressing that rebellion?

(Objection made and sustained by party vote.)

Mr. ROBERTSON. You think that permit system is now necessary in the Cœur d'Alene, and that civil law can not now, even with the presence of the military, protect the citizens there?

Answer. I think the civil law is protecting them now.
Mr. ROBERTSON. Which is in force there now?
Answer. I understand martial law is still in force there now.
Mr. ROBERTSON. But you say the citizens are protected in their rights by civil law, and now say that martial law is in force?
Answer. It does not interfere with the administration of civil law.
Mr. ROBERTSON. Martial law is superior to civil law, because you could arrest this man Tilford and hold him?
Answer. Yes.
Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, answer direct, if you can. Do you mean to say that, although General Merriam and the Federal forces have been in the county for more than ten months past, and martial law has been maintained during the entire time, that it would be unsafe for you to restore to the citizens the right to labor there?
Answer. I have no right to restore anything; I am only carrying out the orders of the governor.
Mr. ROBERTSON. Do you mean to say that you think it dangerous for the community for a man to labor in that community now?
Answer. No, sir; I do not think so.
Mr. ROBERTSON. You arrested Tilford for working in a mine?
Answer. Yes, sir.
Mr. ROBERTSON. And, according to your own testimony, if he had gone to Wallace and worked on the sewer you would not have arrested him?
Answer. The permit system had nothing to do with men working on a sewer.
Mr. ROBERTSON. In other words, you claim the right to arrest a man for working in a mine and immune from arrest those working on a sewer?
Answer. You may so state it.
Mr. ROBERTSON. In other words, you single out the profession of mining and submit it to the arbitrary control of the permit system. That is the proclamation. A blacksmith could work at his forge, a shoemaker at his last, a carpenter at his bench, a laborer could dig a sewer, and yet if a man worked for a mining company he was subject to arrest?
Answer. The proclamation was directed to the mining companies.
Mr. ROBERTSON. Do you not know that a law or a regulation which is not general in its application and does not apply to all classes of persons similarly engaged in business, whether of the same character or not, at least of the same grade, and attempts to discriminate against one class, is itself a violation of the Constitution of the United States?
(Objection made, and sustained by a party vote.)
Mr. ROBERTSON. Then if a man desires to follow mining, and nothing else, he would be subject to criminal arrest?
Answer. He would be required to secure a permit to work.
Mr. ROBERTSON. Do I understand that that requirement was made to prevent the members of the Western Federation from mining in that county, as well as nonunion men?
Answer. It was intended to prevent those who participated in the riot from working.
Mr. ROBERTSON. And you also did it to prevent the members of the Western Federation from securing work?
Answer. It was directed chiefly toward them.
Mr. ROBERTSON. So that it practically not only proscribed the 1,000 or 1,500 men in the Cœur d'Alenes from working, but the 100,000 miners of the West that belong to that organization?
Answer. It was directed against the unions of the Cœur d'Alenes.
Mr. ROBERTSON. I will ask you if six of the members of the coroner's jury [naming them] were not the same whose names appear upon the petition, introduced in evidence here, sustaining the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company in opening their mines at a lower rate of wages than the union rate?
Answer. The names are identical; the probability is they are the same individuals.
Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, Doctor, part of your finding is in these words: "We charge the murders of said Schmidt and Cheyne to have been perpetrated by the said miners' unions and their respective members who were present and participated in any of the deeds of that day. Said miners' unions and their members aforesaid were aided, abetted, and assisted by the said Sheriff Young and Moses S. Simmons, William Boyle, and W. R. Stimson, county commissioners." I will ask you if you do not know as a fact that after this coroner's jury pretended to brand as criminals the county commissioners, as well as Sheriff Young, the testimony taken before that coroner's inquest was sealed up, so that the falsity of the charges could not be proved by a resort to the evidence?
Answer. It was sealed by request of Mr. Forney.
Mr. ROBERTSON. So you did have a secret inquisition?
Answer. A secret investigation—yes.
Mr. ROBERTSON. And you prevented the counsel of those men from attending that investigation?
Answer. Yes.
Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Reddy was the counsel of those men accused of crime, was he not?
Answer. They were not accused of crime.
Mr. ROBERTSON. You arrested them because you believed them guilty of crime?
Answer. Yes.
Mr. ROBERTSON. You don't think you have a right to go out in the highways, and with a drag net, and bring in innocent citizens to jail?
Answer. I don't think so.
Mr. ROBERTSON. Do you not know that the powers you are exercising of arresting persons without warrants who are not charged with crimes are known as despotic powers, and that your action there is the power of a despot, so far as the liberties of the citizens are concerned?
Answer. I have no knowledge as to that, sir.
Mr. ROBERTSON. Do you believe that the policy which you and the military authorities are pursuing there in preventing those men from earning a livelihood will ultimately lead to bloodshed and rebellion, if unrestrained?
Answer. It is my opinion it will prevent bloodshed and rebellion.
Mr. HAY. What connection did you have with the United States troops? Was it to aid you in carrying out the permit system?
Answer. The troops did not aid me.
Mr. HAY. Then why was it necessary to have troops there to carry out the permit system?
Answer. In my opinion if they were withdrawn there would be resistance.
Mr. HAY. If that is true then it is the United States troops who are carrying out the orders of the governor and Bartlett Sinclair?
Answer. That is not correct according to my understanding.
Mr. HAY. If that is not correct then you can go along without United States troops?
Answer. I think if it were not for the troops the deputies would be overpowered and there would be rioting.
Mr. HAY. Then it follows, as night follows day, that the United States troops are carrying out martial law in the Cœur d'Alenes?
Answer. I should not put it that way.
Mr. HAY. There is no insurrectionary spirit there now, is there?
Answer. There is none now.
Mr. HAY. Can the presence of United States troops, if kept there for an indefinite length of time, produce any more quiet an appearance than there is now?
Answer. That would be merely my opinion.
Mr. HAY. You have been giving your opinion about nearly everything on earth; I would like to hear about that?
Answer. It is my opinion that it is their presence which keeps this insurrectionary spirit from manifesting itself.
Mr. HAY. When do you think this insurrectionary spirit will cease to exist—after you get all the members of the federation and miner union in that district out of the country; is that your idea?
Answer. I have no knowledge of that.
Mr. HAY. Was it not the object of the permit system to drive out of that country all members of the Western Federation of Miners.
Answer. We did not attempt to drive them out; we only denied them permission to work.
Mr. HAY. That is practically the same as driving them out; would you not consider it so?
Answer. Probably.
Mr. HAY. Then I say the purpose of this permit system is to get rid of these men who you say belong to these criminal organizations.
Answer. It is to prevent them from working in the mines.
Mr. HAY. If that is true, until you can get rid of those people you would think that troops ought to remain there?
Answer. I should say so; yes.
Mr. HAY. So that the matter resolves itself down to this, that until the members of the Western Federation of Union Miners are, by the permit system which prevents them from getting work, driven out of the Coeur d'Alenes, it is proposed to hold troops there. Is that the truth?
Answer. I do not know whether it is true or not.

This permit system is clearly shown to be unlawful in the case of Ex parte Garland & Cummings v. State of Missouri, in Fourth Wallace; also in the case of Parrott, 1 Fed. Rep., it is clearly laid down that the State had no right, under any condition, to prevent a portion of the residents of the State from freely working when opportunity offered; that attempting to deprive a person of the right to follow his chosen avocation by law as a punishment for a crime that had been theretofore committed was an ex post facto law, a bill of attainder, and neither the State through its constitution or its legislature nor the United States through the Congress of the United States could enact or enforce any law or regulation which directly or indirectly accomplished such ends. The deprivation of the right to labor deprives one both of liberty and property, and as this is now done in Shoshone County without any trial or procedure of court the citizens in that county have been and are now deprived of their property and liberty without process of law.

Twelfth. It is charged that during the months when a great portion of the male citizens of Shoshone County were thus unlawfully held in imprisonment by the U. S. troops, the wives and families of the said citizens were subjected to insult and outrages by the soldiers of the United States stationed in said county.

The evidence substantiating this charge is in the form of affidavits, which were forwarded to the President, and are now in his possession. The minority asked five separate times that the committee should request the President to furnish to the committee said affidavits, but this motion was refused by a party vote, consequently the evidence is not of record. However, copies of these affidavits have been secured, which fully prove the charge. The only case admitted to the record will be found in the evidence of James R. Sovereign, under the third charge in this summary.

Thirteenth. It is charged that the outrageous misuse of the military power of the United States, hereinbefore mentioned, was brought about at the instigation and in the interest of the owners of the Bunker Hill mines, who, it is also charged, are the owners and manipulators of other similar trusts.

This charge seems to be fully substantiated by a connected chain of evidence, setting forth the developments from a long time prior to the outbreak of April 29, 1899, and up to the present time. The incipiency of the trouble was prior to July, 1892, which was a contest between the miners' union and the mine operators in regard to wages. This disagreement culminated in a struggle on July 11, 1892, in which battle several men lost their lives on both sides, but the final outcome was that all the mines agreed to pay the union scale of wages, except the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, which continued to employ nonunion miners and pay a reduced rate of wages. Since that time there has been the most perfect good feeling and harmony between the mine owners and the miners' unions throughout the entire district, with the exception of the Bunker Hill Company.

In the spring of 1899 the same old quarrel between the Bunker Hill and Sullivan and the unions grew again to be very bitter, and on April 13 a climax was reached in the controversy, which was the starting point from which the deplorable conditions, now under investigation, developed. The details of the controversy between the Bunker Hill and the unions are fully set out in the testimony of Mr. Robertson.

Prior to April 13, 1899, the Bunker Hill and Sullivan seems to have been the one disturbing element in this section. All the other mine operators and owners seemed to have been perfectly satisfied, and perfect harmony existed between them and the union miners, who are now represented as such a turbulent, dangerous, and criminal class as to require the force of the United States Army to hold them in check, and yet, during the years from 1892 to 1899, under the industry, energy, and labor of these same men, the section has developed in a most phenomenal manner. Towns have been built, railroads constructed, mines developed, machinery put in operation, homes have been founded, millions of value have been dug from the earth, fortunes have been amassed by the very men who now seek to oppress and persecute those who raised them to affluence and put them in the position of power and influence which makes it possible for them to turn and rend the friends who made them.

But this is the true mercenary spirit, and the conditions now existing are the natural outgrowth of this mercenary spirit when encouraged by success. Not satisfied with a degree of financial success really phenomenal, the devil of avarice and mercenary ambition beckoned them on, and they desired to add more to their gains by taking from the meager share of those who delved in the darkness and danger that lurks in the bowels of the earth, who risk their lives in the slime and filth and deadly damps of the mines from day to day, from year to year, without hope of more than a meager existence. Their intent was to force the wages of the miners to the very lowest possible rate, to such an extreme that it would make existence a struggle and their employees helpless dependents upon their despotic will, cringing, servile vassals, mere chattel slaves, who would submit to any conditions imposed for the miserable boon of life. They wanted slaves, serfs, obedient to their every whim. They feared the manliness, the spirit of independence that is sustained by organization and combination among the industrial masses, which is the true American spirit. They wanted to import foreign serfs to usurp the opportunity and occupy the field created by this American labor for itself as much as for the owners. The field had been opened by this body of organized men, and now the operators hoped to occupy it for their own profit alone. That this is really true is shown by Governor Steunenberg's own statement in regard to the beginning of this trouble. Governor Steunenberg said on the 26th day of April, 1899, he received this telegram:

FAIRFIELD, WASH., April 26, 1899.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Governor, Boise, Idaho:

Armed mob stopped our men this morning and prevented them from working. We have raised wages, and men are satisfied and want to work, but are intimidated by miners' union, who seek to force recognition of their organization and to dictate terms and conditions here under which we shall work. County authorities unable to cope with mob, and we appeal to you for protection for ourselves and our men. Please answer—Wardner.

FREDERICK BURBRIDGE.

Now, here in this first move on the part of the Bunker Hill management there is a false statement of fact as to existing conditions. It fails to state that although wages had been raised, employment was refused to union miners, and such as had been employed were discharged. It fails to state that union miners had been discriminated against, and that the raise was a mere subterfuge to enable them to fill their mines with imported labor and then reduce the scale again. And again it is an arrogant assumption of authority upon the part of a man wiring from a point far removed from the scene of disturbance, in the State of Washington, that the county authorities were unable to control the situation. How could he know such to be the fact, and why should the governor believe him when he had no such information from the civil officers on the ground. The governor surely had no right to regard such information when it was in his power to communicate with the officers of the county, whose duty it was to call on him if they needed his assistance. The governor says that he wired Burbridge:

Matter stated in your telegram to-day will be speedily investigated. Your attention is further called to State law providing for arbitration of controversy or difference.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Governor.

At the same time he wired Sheriff Young at Wardner as follows:

I am informed that armed mob stopped men from working in mines at Wardner, and that county authorities are unable to cope with mob. Wire me immediately the situation.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Governor.

To this Sheriff Young, who was on the scene, replied:

Am on the ground. All is quiet. No armed mob. Matters are orderly. Will do all in my power to preserve order. The county authorities were not applied to until 10 o'clock a. m.

JAMES D. YOUNG, Sheriff.

Here is direct denial by the sheriff of the county, who was at the point of disturbance, and this clearly shows the animus of the man who sent the first sensational dispatch from a point far removed from the theater of trouble. The next day, April 27, the governor says he received the following dispatch:

WARDNER, IDAHO, April 27, 1899.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Governor, Boise, Idaho:

Trouble with the Last Chance settled. Union men satisfied. No disturbance.

JAMES D. YOUNG, Sheriff.

Here is further proof of the falsity of Mr. Burbridge's report, and the animus of the man is shown by his telegram in reply to that of the governor, advising arbitration, in which he said:

Nothing to arbitrate. I again renew my request for protection.

This was an open defiance of the statutes of the State and clearly illustrated the dictatorial bearing of the Bunker Hill management. Although the law required that they should submit to arbitration, they defiantly refused, and demanded that the power of the State be brought to bear to compel submission to their dictation. After having thus refused the suggestion of the governor and openly refused to submit to the requirements of the law, this dictator, on April 29, had the audacity to send this dispatch:

WARDNER, IDAHO, April 29, 1899.

FRANK STEUNENBERG, Governor, Boise, Idaho:

All miners on Canyon Creek have laid off to-day for purpose of coming to Wardner in a body to coerce our men. Apprehend serious trouble, and again appeal to you for protection.

FREDERICK BURBRIDGE.

Now, this man had it in his power by merely performing an act of justice to avoid and prevent any further trouble or controversy, and that act of justice would merely have been a compliance with a principle that underlies our free institutions. If he had merely agreed not to discriminate between individuals and give equal opportunity and recognition to union and nonunion men, there would have been no further difficulty; or had he been willing to submit to the law of the State and agree to arbitration, all would have been well; but he chose to defy the law and arbitrarily discriminate against a class of citizens in a country whose Constitution declares that all are equal and entitled to equal opportunity under the law.

On April 29 the dispatch from A. L. Mohler, president of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, referred to on page 4 of this report, reached the governor, and on the strength of such information at 6.30 p. m. on the same day, April 29, the governor made his appeal to the President for troops. Nor had the same influence which had been brought to bear upon the governor been idle in this field of authority. A flood of telegrams from bankers, corporations, and trust manipulators and money magnates from all over the country poured in upon the President. Among them the following dispatches are in evidence:

SEATTLE, WASH., April 30, 1899—12.33 p. m.

SECRETARY OF WAR, Washington, D. C.

An armed mob have taken possession of Bunker Hill and Sullivan property at Wardner, Idaho. Have destroyed the mill and very expensive works by blowing them up with powder. Local and State authorities have been appealed to for protection of life and property, but no relief can be expected from those sources. State militia in the Philippines.

D. O. MILLS.

Now, Mr. Mills is a corporation magnate, and one of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan owners. Where does he get his authority to appeal to the Secretary of War for troops? and, besides, his reference to the militia being in the Philippines suggests that he must have heard from the governor even at that early date, as it is the puerile excuse which he made use of; and as no one else would have conceived such a reason, it is probable Mr. Mills had been requested to use his influence. The following was sent to his friend, Secretary Alger, by one of the Bunker Hill Company, who confidently requests his friend, the Secretary, to please comply, not for any legal or official reason, but simply to oblige his friend, who considers he has a claim upon him.

WINNEKTA, ILL., April 30, 1899.

R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

Armed mob of strikers have destroyed our mill at Wardner, Idaho. Governor has appealed for Federal troops. Please comply and save immense damage and probable bloodshed.

JAMES L. HAUGHTELING.

How did Mr. Haughteling, away off in Illinois, know at that early date that the governor had appealed for troops; and if he did know, what influence did he expect his request would have superior to that of the governor of the State? Here is another:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., April 30, 1899.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY,
President United States:

As representative and treasurer of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Commany I earnestly indorse the request of the governor of Idaho to the effect that Federal troops be ordered to protect our property now in course of destruction.

WILLIAM S. CROCKER,
Banker, San Francisco.

And why banker? Is the title one which commands especial respect in the quarter it was intended to reach? Why should the indorsement of a banker be supposed to strengthen the legal and official request of the governor of a State? Is the title a talisman with the Administration? Mr. Crocker's financial interest in the mine and the fear of money losses might have led him to do an indiscreet, even a silly thing, but why should he have added the title of "banker" to his signature? Is there a mystery here?

Here is another confident appeal for aid purely through personal influence and interest, with no reference to legal or constitutional reasons, or in the interest of the common welfare and the maintenance of justice.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 30, 1899.

J. ADDISON PORTER,
Secretary to the President:

An armed mob has destroyed valuable property at Wardner, Idaho, in which Jack Hammond, James Haughteling, and others are interested. The governor has asked for Federal troops. Please lend your interest to this appeal with the President.

HERMAN B. BUTLER.

This appeal for Federal troops merely because property belonging to friends of the President is in possible danger is getting the conception of the power of the President down pretty close to the autocratic point, and yet this individual seems to have thought it sufficient reason for concentrating the Army of the United States. From all the facts it is evident that the influence brought to bear, both upon the governor and the President, was from the same source. There is no appeal from the constituted authorities of the county, no demand for protection from any class or body of citizens against the unlawful aggressions of any other body or faction; no appeal from the civil authorities, asking for military support.

There is no revolt against the authority of the courts or their officers, no resistance to the execution of any civil process, but only the appeal of a certain clique of speculators, of money controllers, for military force to compel submission to their dictation of conditions, which would influence and control the comfort, liberty, lives, and happiness of a large proportion of the people of that particular section, the product of which this combination desired and were planning to control for their own financial profit and benefit. The appeal is made for the protection of one class of property and the protection is extended to that by the practical confiscation, or rather the destruction, of another by the infamous permit system which would have been looked upon with horror, as tyrannical and inhuman if it had been resorted to by Weyler in Cuba. Indeed it is a parallel and companion piece to that "butcher's" reconcentrado oppression. The result was identical with that.

Anyone familiar with the rudiments of law knows that labor is property, and the right to dispose of this property is inalienable and innate. Upon this right the very right to live depends, and yet this fundamental right is prohibited and denied to one class, upon the pretense of protecting another class of property, the possession of which is less vital—of far less importance. Either the obtuse perception of both executives failed to recognize anything except physical and tangible possessions as property, or there was a total disregard of justice, and the innate rights of the citizens in the determination to further the pecuniary interests of a certain combination for special and unexplained reasons. Indeed, the entire transaction seems to point to a conspiracy on the part of the corporation, entered into by the governor, and backed up and supported by the President, to dominate, arbitrarily, a certain industry in that district, and in order to do this it was necessary to trample on the rights, persecute and drive out of the section, a certain class of citizens, who have not only shown that no charges could be sustained against them, or indeed were ever preferred, but those citizens have proven themselves to have been law abiding, industrious, and peaceful, in perfect harmony and on good terms with every other corporation operating in that locality, and further, that their organization was not only lawful and peaceable, but specially recognized and protected by statutes of the State which the Bunker Hill and Sullivan management openly defied and ignored.

Not only the conduct of the governor goes to prove this charge of collusion and conspiracy, but that of all his subordinates in the conducting of affairs in that locality, and their acts were only possible through the aid and support of the military of the United States, under the approval and authority of the President. This is not only proven but admitted by Sinclair, Dr. France, and the governor himself. After the demonstration of April 29 the governor did not, himself, go to the scene of disturbance, nor did he, as required by law, send the lieutenant-governor, who alone is authorized to represent him in case of emergency, but he deputized the State auditor, who was a political accident, virtually not a resident of the State, a sort of political nomad who had wandered over the entire continent and trained with every sort of political combination, in every section, in search of office, and to him he pretended to delegate his constitutional powers, both civil and military.

Under a severe cross-examination by Mr. LENTZ, the governor admitted that when he, himself, went to Wardner, in May, 1899, he held a consultation with Mr. Lindley, a California lawyer, who was the attorney of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan; Mr. Forney, who was also an attorney of the same company; Dr. France, the mine physician, to whom the company turned over $1 per month of each man's pay; F. W. Bradley, president of the company, and C. W. Beale, attorney for the company at Wallace; that the papers relating to the permit system were drawn by Mr. Lindley and Bartlett Sinclair, except as modified by General Merriam, and that this system was discussed and agreed upon. The governor further admitted that a meeting of all mine owners was called at Spokane about May 12, and at that meeting all of the mine owners of the Cœur d'Alenes were present, and that all protested against the enforcement of the permit system, except the representatives of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company.

All of the mine operators, with the exception of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan, insisted that they should be allowed to employ union labor; that their miners were the most skillful, and the best in the United States; but this permission was denied, and those owners were notified that they would not be permitted to employ union miners. In this way an injustice and outrage was perpetrated upon one class of citizens by denying them the right to work, and on another class by denying to them the right to employ whatever class of citizens they might choose to perform such service as they required.

Could any more arbitrary, more despotic, more infamously tyrannical act have been perpetrated than this? Why, the Sultan of Turkey could do nothing more despotic, and yet it was not possible for these conspirators to have accomplished what they did except through the support rendered by Federal bayonets, with the approval of the President. Bartlett Sinclair testified, on his cross-examination by Mr. Cox, that he went to Wardner upon the verbal authority of the governor, without any written commission or instructions limiting his power in any manner. Indeed, he went with instructions to act practically as he chose.

Nothing is developed as to what was discussed in the private interview between himself and the governor prior to his starting to Wardner. Indeed, the first act of Sinclair after receiving the governor's instructions was to stop at Spokane, on his way to Wardner, and hold a consultation with Mr. Bradley, the president of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company, Mr. Burbridge, the superintendent, and Mr. Beale, the attorney. After his arrival at Wardner he held consultation with the various officials of the Bunker Hill Company and, indeed, seems to have consulted them exclusively, and appointed almost his entire list of deputies from men in the employ of the company.

Dr. France, the physician of the company had charge of the investigation in a secret inquisition, over which he presided, and the entire jury, under his direction, was made up of employees of the Bunker Hill Company, or men who furnished them supplies, and was entirely under the control of that company. Mr. Forney, who was not a resident of the county and had been attorney for the company—indeed, he testified that he was such at the time—was appointed a special prosecutor, and Mr. Lindley, not even a resident of the State, but the attorney of the company, residing in San Francisco, was principal examiner and general director of proceedings in this inquisition.

About half of the jury were under pay of the company at the time they served upon this inquiry. Mr. Lindley was special adviser to Mr. Sinclair in all his so-called official acts, and is admitted to have drawn up the papers for the permit system. Whatever was desired or suggested by the Bunker Hill and Sullivan management was ordered by Sinclair, and carried out by the United States soldiers on duty there. The whole citizenship of the county was held by the United States soldiers at the mercy of these mine operators, and not only that, but the other mine owners were not only compelled to submit to their dictation but to ostracise and refuse employment to trusted and experienced servants, and to submit to financial loss and disturbance of their business, at the dictation of these conspirators.

Nor is this all that goes to prove the infamy of this diabolical and treasonable outrage. A petition was circulated in the disturbed district by parties interested in the conspiracy, especially the so-called deputies, asking the Secretary of War to continue the United States troops in the county, and indorsing and commending the action of State authorities and military. This petition was brought to Washington and filed in the War Department by the governor himself, and even before the petition reached the Secretary there was a flood of affidavits from citizens of the county declaring that the petition was a fraud; that many of the signatures were forgeries, and that others were obtained by duress. Indeed, there is no question that a great many signed this paper, presented to them by deputies, under fear of arrest and imprisonment in case of refusal, and a large portion of the names are written in the same handwriting.

The committee, upon a strictly party vote, refused to admit these affidavits in evidence, unquestionably fearing to expose the part taken in this diabolical outrage by the Administration, and by their various acts making the Republican party a participant in this outrage upon the constitutional rights of citizens of the United States. The connection of the President and the governor with this conspiracy was further demonstrated in a severe cross-examination of Governor Steunenberg by Mr. LENTZ, during which the governor tried by every means possible to conceal damaging facts, which were finally wrung from him in spite of his endeavors to evade the truth. The cross-examination shows plainly the realization on the part of the governor that both he and the Administration were in jeopardy, and it is unfortunate that it can not be given at length. Mr. LENTZ asked:

Governor, when you came here in October last, you brought with you a letter answering an inquiry made of you by the President, did you not?
Answer. Yes, sir.
Mr. LENTZ. Did you present the letter to the President when you saw him and conversed with him?
Answer. No, sir.
Mr. LENTZ. What did you do with the letter?
Answer. I presented it to the Secretary of War.
Mr. LENTZ. When was that letter delivered to the Secretary of War?
Answer. In the latter part of October.
Mr. LENTZ. Your letter was dated on the 10th of October, was it not?

Answer. About that time.
Mr. LENTZ. Why did you not mail that letter instead of carrying it here yourself?
Answer. Well, there had been so many statements made to the War Department in regard to affairs in Idaho that I considered misrepresentations that I thought, by coming in person, I could discuss the matter with the Secretary and probably impress him with the importance of the situation as I saw it.
Mr. LENTZ. How long were you here?
Answer. Two weeks.
Mr. LENTZ. You say that so many statements had been made to the Department that it was necessary for you to come down here and see the Secretary in person; to what statements do you refer?
Answer. Once I saw in the dispatches that Mr. Ed. Boyce had visited the Secretary or the President in person.
Mr. LENTZ. That is one statement. Who else made statements?
Answer. Well, that is enough.
Mr. LENTZ. I thought you said there were many statements; was that communicated to you by the President?
Answer. Yes, sir.
Mr. LENTZ. Did you meet Mr. Dick, Mr. Hanna, or Mr. Babcock when you were here on that occasion?
Answer. No, sir.
Mr. LENTZ. How did your answer, which you wrote in Boise, and which you brought down here, get into the Ohio campaign?
Answer. I do not know.
Mr. LENTZ. Did you not prepare that letter after you got to Washington?
Answer. No; the letter was sketched in a rough draft before I left Boise.
Mr. LENTZ. Now, where was the final draft made?
Answer. It was made at the Willard Hotel in Washington.
Mr. LENTZ. The letter was not written on the 10th of October at Boise, but here in Washington after you had some talks?
Answer. It was just as I have told you.
Mr. LENTZ. Is it a fact that you did not get to the Willard Hotel until about October 19?
Answer. Some time about that date.
Mr. LENTZ. How many times did you go to the White House?
Answer. I think twice.
Mr. LENTZ. How many times did you go to the War Department?
Answer. Three times.
Mr. LENTZ. Whom did you see at the War Department?
Answer. Secretary Root.
Mr. LENTZ. When did you first see Mr. Root?
Answer. The morning after I got into Washington.
Mr. LENTZ. When did you see the President first?
Answer. Not for several days after I got to the city.
Mr. COX. How long had you been in Washington before you finished and presented your letter?
Answer. It must have been four or five days.
Mr. LENTZ. You did not write this letter until about October 24 or 25, did you?
Answer. About that time.
Mr. LENTZ. You left a day or two after you delivered your letter?
Answer. That is my recollection.
Mr. LENTZ. Then you dated and signed your letter about fifteen days earlier than it was actually written?
Answer. Yes, sir.
Mr. COX. You had a talk with the Secretary of War before you put the finishing touches upon it?
Answer. Yes, sir.

Now the inference is too patent to require any suggestion. That this was a war against the union miners, waged by the representatives of the State authorities, is not only proven, but admitted. That it is aided and made possible only by the presence of United States troops is also proven and admitted by the chief inquisitor himself, Bartlett Sinclair; and that it is instigated by and in the interest of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Company and the money power behind this corporation seems sufficiently evident from evidence set out under this charge.

The influence brought to bear upon the President is clearly shown by the telegrams quoted to be the same which served to control the action of the governor and Bartlett Sinclair, who is, beyond the equivocation of a doubt, but the willing and irresponsible tool of combined capital to carry out its despotic policy, regardless of the Constitution, of the rights of citizenship, of statutes of the State; in contempt and defiance of the spirit of free institutions, and a fair illustration of the spirit of imperialism and centralization which is controlling the Administration and the party and influences which support and maintain it.

The President of the United States is the Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States, and although not personally present in the county of Shoshone is charged with the duty of superintendence and control of the military as the responsible head of the Army, and if General Merriam acted under instructions from the Commander in Chief, the President himself is responsible for the deplorable conditions existing in that district. If General Merriam has acted outside his instructions and has violated the authority by law vested in the military arm of the Government, then it is submitted to the War Department that General Merriam has proved himself to be incompetent under any emergency to control the Federal forces of the United States in dealing with labor disputes, and that such action be taken as the rules of the War Department require in such cases.

It is further submitted to the War Department and to the President that the troops of the United States have abused the liberties of individual citizens; that the constitution of the State of Idaho and of the United States have been suspended and ignored in the county of Shoshone, Idaho, for more than a year, and that the strong arm of the Army of the United States has been illegally called into action at the instance of the governor of a State who has confessed himself incompetent to control; that the President forthwith notify the governor of the State of Indho that the Federal forces can not be used to uphold the illegal acts of persons claiming to be deputies of the State of Idaho in arresting and retaining persons without a warrant of law. It is demanded that the Federal authorities, in so far as practicable, cause the permit system to be abrogated, the writ of habeas corpus to be restored, and that arbitrary and indiscriminate arrests under martial law shall be caused to cease.

There can be no dispute as to the fact that each and every charge as set out in the resolution has been fully proven and sustained, and that such action should be taken as will not only remedy existing evils, but prevent a repetition of such wrong and injustice forever in the future.

Late Representative Sydney P. Epes.

REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANCIS R. LASSITER, OF VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, March 24, 1900.

The House having under consideration the following resolutions:
"Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. SYDNEY P. EPES, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Virginia.
"Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.
"Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.
"Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased"—

At a later day—
Mr. LASSITER said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I was too close to him whom we mourn to write his epitaph or to pronounce his public eulogy. Just as we commit the final rites of our dead to hands less associated with his living form, so these ceremonial observances flow usually with more propriety from the lips of friends somewhat removed from his daily life.

We shared our hopes, fears, aspirations, successes, and defeats as naturally as what was often very nearly our last dollar.

From boyhood we walked in that clear light of friendship which only comes with youth, trusting each other so implicitly that one intuitively assumed the act or thought of the other.

I dare not touch upon his qualities, lest in asserting that I was admitted to his friendship I arrogate more honor than I own. Yet how often have the great of heart loved lesser men.

There is a consideration, however, which, while it loosens my halting tongue to-day, restrains the tears which would misbecome this presence. When death removed the mortal part of my friend, a part of his that was mortal fell to me. We had often talked, as youths do, of careers and things achieved.

One of his dreams already realized was worthily to represent the people of his beloved Commonwealth. He shared the youthful hope that one day I, too, might be called to this high estate. Alas! how prayers are answered, hopes fulfilled! Could we have imaged a Providence so fantastical that must cast across my mortal orbit the shadow of his immortal course?

Yet, in taking up a portion of his cares, I stand before you not less the friend of Sydney Epes, but the Representative of a generous and affectionate people, who expect of my official part an instrument to voice their sense of loss and grief.

When Senators and Representatives in Congress, senators and members of the house of delegates of his native State, the courts, public corporations, party committees and press of every county and city of his district have inscribed the record of his life upon their records or upon the public prints, nothing remains of the historical for the present occasion. It is for me to speak only of that record written in the hearts of this generation of his own people and lasting as the traditions of a free people, who remain free while they revere and remember the patriots who loved their native soil and served its children in their day and time.

Beneath the oak or the pine, under the manor tiles or cabin roof, throughout that tier of counties of Southside Virginia, which have in past days given so much blood and genius to the country, this memorial to SYDNEY PARHAM EPES has already been inscribed, without money and without price, the spontaneous offering of gratitude and love. He walked among us the perfect product of a civilization never equaled and perhaps never to be approached. In other lands aristocracies have been perpetuated by wealth and power, decaying when wealth decayed and too often characterized by the vices of power. Our friend was the representative of an aristocracy in the true sense of the word.

His ancestors from the first settlement of his native land were leaders of action and opinion, not by reason of landed estates or hoarded gains, though often they possessed both, but because of that heaven-given gentleness of character and integrity of thought which persevered in the blood and worked its sweet influences whether the individual wore velvet or ate his daily bread in primeval sweat. Thank God this civilization is still known as the civilization of old Virginia. We feel that in his death he realized the highest aspiration of his life—the reputation of a Virginia gentleman without stain.

And art thou gone, and gone forever?
And hast thou crost that unknown river,
Life's dreary bound?
Like thee, where shall I find another
The world around?

Trusts.

SPEECH

OF

HON. WILLIAM T. ZENOR,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, 1900.

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138), proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—

Mr. ZENOR said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The house joint resolution 138, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and House bill 10539 to amend an act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, having been reported by the Judiciary Committee, with special rules for their consideration, are now pending to be taken up, considered, and disposed of under a most extraordinary procedure, considering the importance of the questions involved. Mr. Speaker, the concurrent submission of these two important propositions at the very close of the present session of this Congress has not been the result, in my judgment, of accident. That two such important measures should be held up during this long session and not even reported to this House until after the majority had presented and passed a resolution fixing the date of adjournment within six days from the time of their submission, and then accompanying their presentation with most drastic rules, is in the nature of a deathbed confession, and is, to say the least, very significant and conclusive evidence that this is a part of a well-considered and deliberately planned scheme of the Republican party to secure some mean partisan advantage of the political situation. Not that they mean to be serious or in earnest in this effort to deal with the evils of monopoly, trusts, and their allied interests, but to square themselves, if possible, with the country upon this most important question.

It is perfectly obvious to the most unthinking that unless the party charged with the responsibility of the present Administration initiate some move—take some steps, raise some cry against existing trust evils—looking toward the control in some way of these gigantic law-defying institutions before the adjournment of this Congress, that they will have no answer to make to the rank and file of their party and the people of the United States when confronted in the coming campaign with the charge of their duplicity and subserviency. Hence this precipitate action upon the part of the Republican party, through its leaders, the majority of this House. In order, however, that it may be understood under what rules these measures are being considered and the arbitrary manner in which the minority are denied all right to present any kind of motion to amend, modify, change, or alter in any way the constitutional amendment pending, and to force a vote thereon in the exact form in which the majority has reported it, I desire to print in my remarks the rules as reported. They read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 273, have had the same under consideration and report the following as a substitute therefor:

Resolved, That House joint resolution 138, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, be made the special order in the House and taken up immediately on the adoption of this order; that general debate shall continue during the day and during a night session from 8 to 10.30 o'clock, and until 5 p. m. Friday, June 1, when the previous question on the resolution and amendments thereto reported from the committee to its final passage shall be considered as ordered, and the vote taken thereon without delay or intervening motion.

That the bill (H. R. 10539) to amend an act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, be made the special order in the House and taken up immediately after the disposition of said House joint resolution 138; that general debate thereon be limited to one hour, thirty minutes on each side, and that the same be then considered under the five-minute rule as in the Committee of the Whole until 4 o'clock p. m. of Saturday, June 2, when the previous question on the bill and pending amendments shall be considered as ordered and the final vote taken; that at the opening of the general debate on House joint resolution 138 the amendments to H. R. 10539, proposed on the part of the minority in their views as filed, shall be read from the Clerk's desk and considered as pending when the vote is taken on said bill H. R. 10539, the time occupied in such reading not to be taken from the time of any member; that all members have leave to print upon such measures or either of them within five days after final vote taken.

This rule shall not interfere with the consideration of conference reports.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has explained the object of the rules and the effect of their adoption. It will thus be seen that the design of these rules as reported by the committee and adopted by the majority vote of this House is to bring the House to a vote upon the amendment as presented by the majority of the Judiciary Committee, and deny to the minority or to anyone the right to offer any amendment thereto, although amendments have been prepared and presented, and if accepted by the majority or adopted by the House would doubtless secure the passage of this proposed amendment without opposition from the minority.

But it seems it does not suit the arbitrary purpose of the majority nor subserve their interests to permit any suggestions to be made by the minority in framing this important amendment. A proposed amendment to the organic law—the Constitution of the United States—which has up to this time been held so sacred that for more than one hundred years of our history it has not been deemed wise or expedient to amend, except to meet changed conditions, the result of a civil war and bloody revolution, and to secure the results of that civil conflict. It would seem to occur to ordinarily fair and conservative minds that a proposition of such transcendent importance to the people, and of such far-reaching consequences, that debate with the right of amendment should be most liberal, indeed should be given the widest possible range, with the the opportunity to exploit all vulnerable points and wisely and judiciously shape, strengthen, and perfect the same with a view to the promotion of the best interests and general welfare of the whole people.

If it be claimed that the session is drawing to a close and the exigencies of the public business will not admit of more time, then it becomes necessary to explain why it was that a matter of such vital moment should have been delayed until such a late hour or why this session might not be prolonged. No adequate excuse can be found. No reason can be assigned for such unreasonable action. But whatever excuse or reason may be offered, whether satisfactory or otherwise, the fact remains that we are now confronted with these two most important measures of legislation, and we are compelled to meet them. We do not shrink from the task. The good faith of Republicans has been challenged, if not by their own action, by the newspapers of the country of both political parties, as well as the independent organs. They understand the situation. The independent, as well as party organs, have all characterized the effort now being put forth by the dominant party in respect to this proposed amendment, and they all unite in saying the only object is to make and accumulate cheap political party capital. Your purpose is transparent and will fail.

Mr. Speaker, I undertake to say that if the Republican party think they can deceive the country by this pretense of hostile legislation against trusts they underestimate the intelligence of the American people, and instead of deceiving them they will deceive themselves. It will not be forgotten that when the present Administration was inaugurated, after the party now in power had won the contest of 1896 and elected their President upon the money question, as they claimed, they came into control of the Government on the 4th day of March, 1897, and since that day have had control of both branches of Congress. Within eleven days from that time the President convened Congress in extraordinary session for the avowed purpose, as set forth in the President's message, of repealing the then existing law and passing a new revenue law. Notwithstanding you had won at the ballot-box in the contest of the preceding year upon the monetary issue, yet that question was not put forward or in any manner referred to as important in that message, and Congress was convened to legislate upon the tariff.

The sole result of that session was the passage of what is known as the "Dingley bill." That legislation, in my opinion, has done more to breed, foster, and propagate trusts than any other one act put upon the statute books in our history. That was the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress. That entire Congress of three sessions passed out of existence and into history and not a single measure was introduced or step taken by the party to legislate in restraint of trusts or protect the country from their injurious effects. The present Congress assembled in December last and, more than six months having elapsed, now, in the expiring hours of the session, within six days of the date fixed for adjournment, the dominant party presents this body with a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution and a bill to amend the existing anti-trust law, known as the Sherman Act. This proposed amendment to the Constitution is embodied in the following language:

SECTION 1. All powers conferred by this article shall extend to the several States, the Territories, the District of Columbia, and all territory under the sovereignty and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to define, regulate, prohibit, or dissolve trusts, monopolies, or combinations, whether existing in the form of a corporation or otherwise.

The several States may continue to exercise such power in any manner not in conflict with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation.

It will thus be seen that the first section of this proposed amendment announces a new departure in the doctrine of constitutional law, a new rule of construction. Heretofore throughout all our history no authority has yet been found, and no necessity supposed to exist, to justify this new, novel, and extraordinary phraseology in a constitutional amendment declaring it should extend to operate and have effect in the several States, the Territories, the District of Columbia, and all territory under the sovereignty and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. Not until the exigencies growing out of the imperial policy adopted by the Republican party demanded, was this dangerous and revolutionary interpretation of the organic law ever thought to be necessary to exploit the force and effect of a constitutional provision. This theory, so cunningly devised and ingeniously framed in this proposition, is the reiteration of the same startling doctrine advanced by the dominant party in their contention in support of the Porto Rican tariff. It is the position the Republican party has assumed since it repudiated "our plain duty."

The majority of this House and the leaders of the Republican party in their rash and inconsiderate zeal to lay the foundation of a policy of European colonization by forcible annexation here in this country; to set the pace for subsequent legislation in relation to our new possessions, made the mistake of undertaking to convince the American people that the Constitution did not extend to our Territories of its own force; that this instrument only went where Congress said or might say it should go; that the Constitution and flag were inseparable parts of each other in the States, but that the flag was greater and possessed more vitality and expanding power than the Constitution; that it could go to Porto Rico, the Philippines, or anywhere beyond the confines of the States and remain there without Congressional aid or sanction, but that the Constitution remained at home under the guardianship of the Republican party and subject to its arbitary will, to be projected here and there as best subserved to the political whims or partisan caprice of that party; that under the views now held by the leaders of the Republican party—I say leaders advisedly, for I do not believe that the great mass of the rank and file share these un-American ideas—the supreme and paramount law of the land, the great charter of American liberty and constitutional government has no permanent abiding place, no fixed and definite meaning, no well-defined and clearly drawn limitations and restrictions upon the powers of the Congress of the United States; that under this fundamental and hitherto supposedly all-pervading law of the land, no obligations, no prohibitions or restrictions are imposed upon the right and power of Congress to legislate and govern territory lying beyond or outside of the limits of the organized States of this Union, or restraining power to guide and control the arbitrary will of Congress in the enactment of laws for the government of the people of such possessions. The assumption and exercise of such power was for the first time in our history employed in the Porto Rican tariff legislation, but recently enacted by this present Congress, by which it was demonstrated that under this Republican theory of the Constitution Congress can levy and assess tariff duties and taxes against our own people, if they have the misfortune of residing within a Territory or dependent possession, without their consent or representation.

Such a theory and doctrine was so revolutionary and revolting to the minds of men accustomed to reading the pathetic story of heroic sacrifice from Bunker Hill to Yorktown that the Republican party found itself in an attitude of hostility to the almost universal sentiment of the people. Finding itself in this situation, and realizing that something heroic must be done in extremis to recoup some of the advantages they had lost and realign their party with public sentiment, it is not and will not be a great surprise to the country, and the country will thoroughly understand it, that the alert and ever sagacious and masterful genius of Republican leadership should seize upon some favorable opportunity to create for their party some plausible excuse and justification for their course and failure to legislate for the relief of the country against trusts.

The apology they now offer is the suggestion of a remedy in which they have no confidence, and which they well know will never pass, and was not so intended when it was reported—a remedy by way of a constitutional amendment requiring a two-thirds majority in both branches of Congress to propose and three-fourths of the States to ratify before it can in any event become a part of the organic law. When it is remembered that the ratification by thirty-four States of the Union is essential to make effective the proposition now being considered, even admitting the possibility of its ultimate success, everyone who is honest and sincere, and earnestly desires the immediate application of some effective and wholesome legislation against trusts must admit that the remote and far-off remedy by constitutional amendment is not the remedy sought by the appeals of the trust victims of the country, if there exists any other.

Mr. Speaker, I contend, and the Democratic minority in this House contends, that Congress now has ample power under the Constitution to legislate effectively to destroy every trust, illegal combination, and monopoly that to-day menaces the public interests and threatens the public weal. There is scarcely an honest pretense made, and certainly no convincing arguments advanced by the proponents of this resolution, that all power under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution has been exhausted by the law enacted July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman anti-trust law—a law I desire to remind our Republican friends that was supported by every Democrat of the House who voted, as the records show. This is the much-vaunted Republican law that is now claimed to have exhausted the power of Congress to legislate against trusts, so frequently referred to in argument in this discussion, as the ground and only excuse our Republican friends have for insisting upon the necessity of this amendment. They claim that having gone to the full limit of Federal legislation upon this subject in the Sherman law, and the provisions of that law having proved inefficient to suppress trusts and afford the people adequate relief, that therefore they must have additional power, and this additional power must be granted by this proposed amendment, demanding of the States a surrender of all State jurisdiction over the subject and vesting in Congress absolute and exclusive power to deal with the questions involved.

This is a grave and serious proposition. Any proposition that involves the surrender by the States of the power and jurisdiction to govern and control their own domestic concerns and place that power beyond recall in the Federal Government, when addressed to a thinking and considerate man, must, it seems to me, cause him to hesitate and carefully pause before he can obtain his consent to commit himself to such a proposition and be willing to confer on Congress so vast a power. Such a vital and radical change in the organic law can only be justified, in my judgment, upon the clearest grounds of public necessity. It can never be excused or defended when sought in the interest of some partisan advantage or political maneuver. Believing as I do, and as I believe the leaders of the dominant party as well as the country at large do, that there exists no present urgent necessity for any enlargement of the powers of Congress to effectively legislate against trust evils and that this movement is an effort to shirk a pressing and imperative duty, I am therefore unable to give this resolution the sanction of my vote.

I firmly believe with the minority that Congress has ample power and jurisdiction under the Constitution as it now is, and if it will but employ and exercise those powers in the proper manner and right direction it will be enabled to legislate effectively to crush out of existence every unlawful combination, trust, and monopoly that now curses the land. If our Republican friends could be induced to recall a memorable utterance of their President, inseparably associated with the legislative history of this session and destined to project itself into the political literature and campaign parlance of the country in the near future, and would summon to their aid moral courage sufficient to obey its injunction, "it is our plain duty," they would find in this a speedy and ample remedy for all the evils with which we are now confronted growing out of trusts and criminal conspiracies. There are more remedies than one to meet these combinations.

Our Republican friends will not be able to divert public attention nor deceive the people by their clamor about constitutional amendments. They know, and the people understand, that these gigantic trusts and criminal conspiracies have been bred, fostered, and fed by class legislation, high protective tariffs, railroad rebates, financial laws, and bank monopolies. They know and understand that if the shelter under which they have been enabled to amass their mighty power and wealth is removed that it will prove a potential factor in their destruction. Under the present Administration and the operation of the Dingley tariff during the last three years there have been organized more trusts, aggregating more capital, than in all the previous history of the country. Up to November 30, 1899, there were organized over 200 corporate trusts and 65 principal, unincorporated trusts. During the present Administration six billions of property and "water" have been capitalized by different corporations, trusts, and combines.

Why, Mr. Speaker, it is said that in the single State of New Jersey, the home of the Attorney-General of this Administration, the fees and charges alone for recording and issuing certificates for the incorporation of these concerns have been sufficient to defray the entire expense of maintaining the public schools of the whole State of New Jersey. Not only the luxuries but most of the necessaries of life in this country are to-day within the grasp of some gigantic trust or combine. From the farmer's nail to the last article in his catalogue of supplies, from the swaddling clothes of the new born to the winding sheet of decrepit old age, all pay tribute and sacrifice to some mighty trust. Mr. Speaker, I have read in the public prints that during the last campaign in the State of Ohio a distinguished leader and chairman of the Republican national committee in some of his public addresses to the people of that State apologized for these trusts and excused their existence as the natural evolution of the phenomenal development of the business prosperity of this Administration.

The country, doubtless, well remembers with what luminous prophecy the campaign of 1896 abounded. Our Republican campaign orators from every stump fired the partizan zeal of their followers by portraying to the fancy in extravagant phrase and spectacular speech the marvelous transformation that would result from the success of their party. Surely the picture was not overdrawn if these political seers had in contemplation the abnormal growth and phenomenal development of criminal combinations, trusts, and conspiracies. If these were to be the symbols of Republican victory and types of that legitimate thrift, push, and energy that was to signalize the advent to power of the Republican party, then certainly the prophecy of our friends has been abundantly fulfilled. Nay, more. These hydra-headed monsters have by far outrun the most extravagant calculations of their friends, and have become so defiant, arrogant, and fearless that they now even threaten the overthrow of that party, unless some well-devised and tactical movement is initiated before the close of this session of Congress by its leaders to quiet the alarm and stay public sentiment.

To divert public attention from their failure to deal with this monstrous evil, and to deceive and delude the country, they now pretend that Congress has no further power to legislate to suppress these evils under the Constitution—as it now exists—and bring forward this proposition. They thereby hope to appear anxious and willing to do something for the relief of the people against trusts. They imagine that by proposing this amendment, however vicious and monstrous its provisions, the people will not stop to criticise or study their real purpose, but in their eagerness to rid themselves of the tyranny and oppression of the trusts, will array themselves in hostility to any party who may dare to oppose their suggestions or exploit their schemes. They hope to put—they imagine they will put their adversaries at a disadvantage before the American people by assuming an attitude of hostility to the trusts in such a way and manner that, however insincere and disingenuous they may be, and however impracticable and hopeless of success the methods employed, their opponents dare not challenge their sincerity or question those methods.

They forget that an intelligent, patriotic, and earnest people believe that in politics, as in everything else, "Honesty is the best policy;" and I believe I do not misjudge their sentiment and temper when I say that I can and do repose a supreme reliance in the ability of the American people to recognize and appreciate upright motives, and to detect, censure, and condemn all manner of deception and fraud by whomsoever practiced. They will easily see and understand, as the public prints have already suggested, that a vote for this proposed amendment is a vote in favor of doing nothing against trusts. They will readily comprehend that a vote for this proposed amendment is an admission of the validity of the claim now made by the dominant party in excuse for their failure and refusal to enact legislation throughout all these years against the trusts. Every intelligent citizen knows that this is not true. The party itself here and now openly confesses that this is not true. The pending bill (Littlefield bill, No. 10539), concurrently reported with the pending joint resolution by the Judiciary Committee, is a solemn confession by the Republican party that they have not yet exhausted all constitutional power to further legislate against the trusts.

This very bill now pending, and to be taken up and considered by this House immediately after the vote upon this resolution, proposes several amendments to and enlarges the power and scope of the present existing antitrust law of July 2, 1890. It is the judgment of many of the best-informed lawyers of the country, who have given this subject special study and attention, that the present existing antitrust law, with such additional amendments as is within the constitutional power of Congress to enact, will furnish ample and complete legal authority when exercised concurrently with the power of the several States, to oust every illegal combination, trust, and monopoly that now afflicts the body politic. I am firmly persuaded to believe, that with the additional legislation proposed in the Littlefield bill now pending and the amendments proposed thereto by the Democratic minority of the Judiciary Committee will, if passed by this House, furnish ample and complete Federal authority when supplemented by proper State legislation, to control and dislodge the trust combines. And there is no doubt of the passage of this bill; both parties and the members of this House, regardless of politics, will support it.

I heartily approve of the amendments offered to the bill by the minority of the committee, as I know my Democratic colleagues do, and we sincerely hope they may receive the support of enough members on that side of the chamber to adopt them. I trust this will be done because, in my judgment, they very much strengthen and render more effective the law. If, however, I and the minority of this House shall fail to realize our hope in this regard; if these amendments shall be defeated, I will then give my vote for the bill as the best that can be done at this time. But, Mr. Speaker, before I forget it, I wish to call attention to the further provision—section second of this proposed amendment. I have already alluded to the fact that a further and more serious objection to this proposition was the strong, emphatic, and sweeping language of this second section. For convenience I insert the full text of this amendment.

ARTICLE XVI.

SECTION 1. All powers conferred by this article shall extend to the several States, the Territories, the District of Columbia, and all territory under the sovereignty and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to define, regulate, prohibit, or dissolve trusts, monopolies, or combinations, whether existing in the form of a corporation or otherwise.

The several States may continue to exercise such power in any manner not in conflict with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation.

This language is much more comprehensive, perhaps, than would occur to the casual reader without pausing to weigh and measure its full significance and far-reaching effect. It was the evident purpose of its author to vest practically absolute power and jurisdiction in Congress over the subject-matter of the proposed amendment. This will more clearly appear when considered in connection with that other provision of the Constitution which declares that—

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof * * * shall be the supreme law of the land; anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

If, therefore, the proposed amendment as drawn shall become a part of the Constitution, no State could pass or enforce any law upon the subject of trust combinations and monopoly conspiracies not in harmony with the Federal laws, and State jurisdiction would be entirely subordinated to the Federal jurisdiction. This is the first time in our whole legislative history that it has been suggested, by way of constitutional amendment, to extend the Federal jurisdiction to the control of the domestic institutions of the States.

The first proposed innovation upon our dual system of government; the first demand made upon the States for a surrender of those rights hitherto guarded with such jealous vigilance and care; another effort put forth to centralize more power in the Federal Government at the sacrifice of the States. Before consenting to such a grave step—such a vital and fundamental change in the distribution of the legislative powers of our Government—conservative and thinking men and lawmakers may well pause and deliberately reflect. In my opinion a proposition of such doubtful propriety and questionable wisdom should not be entertained in the absence of the most overwhelming and convincing reasons. They do not now exist. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is my deliberate judgment, after the most careful thought I have been able to bestow upon this question, that the adoption of such a resolution as this, if otherwise desirable, would be to defeat the very purpose in view.

To withdraw from the States or destroy their power to legislate in aid of the suppression of trusts, and transfer that power exclusively to the Congress would, in my humble opinion, be welcomed by the millionaire and multimillionaire-trusts and combines of this country as the greatest concession ever yet made to their interests. The States are regarded by these interests as the most potential foes they have. They have up to this time, except in very few instances where they have completely surrendered to trust control as a matter of business, as in New Jersey, done more to restrain and cripple the trusts by their antitrust State laws and their honest and vigorous enforcement than all the Federal laws upon the statute book.

In the States of Texas and Arkansas they have literally rid their States of their operation and freed their people from their influence. No greater mistake could possibly be made than to deprive the States of their jurisdiction to deal with and control their own domestic concerns, including their power to regulate, control, and manage all corporations created under their authority and located within their respective boundaries; to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which foreign corporations may be permitted to do business within their jurisdictions. The trusts, their hired counsel and agents, are watching every move that is made. The people are impatient and demand some immediate, effective, and practical relief. Neither of these interests, in my judgment, believe any constitutional amendment necessary to accomplish the complete overthrow of the trust power. That if the power now vested in Congress is courageously exercised and appropriate laws passed within the scope of that power and vigorously enforced, it is the consensus of the most enlightened public opinion, in my judgment, that these public enemies of our country will be driven from their fields of operation.

It is not sufficient to answer that the Supreme Court has held that existing law does not and can not control manufacture or production except when and as they become a part of interstate commerce. The court was here discussing the distinction between manufacture or production and interstate commerce not only as abstract propositions but as related to each other and the point of time when an article passed from the control of the State and became a part of interstate commerce. In this very opinion rendered by Chief Justice Fuller in the Knight Case (156 United States, page 11) the court draws this distinction very clearly.

Doubtless the power to control the manufacture of a given thing—involves in a certain sense the control of its disposition, but this is a secondary and not the primary sense; and although the exercise of that power may result in bringing the operation of commerce into play, it does not control it, and affects it only incidentally and indirectly. Commerce succeeds to manufacture and is not a part of it. The fact that an article is manufactured for export to another State does not of itself make it an article of interstate commerce, and the intent of the manufacturer does not determine the time when the article or product passes from the control of the State and belongs to commerce. * * *

He says:

It is true that the bill alleged that the products of these (sugar) refineries were sold and distributed among the several States, and that all the companies were engaged in trade or commerce with the several States; but this was no more than to say that trade and commerce served manufacture to fulfill its function. Sugar was refined for sale, and sales were probably made at Philadelphia for consumption, and undoubtedly for resale by the first purchasers throughout Pennsylvania and other States, and refined sugar was also forwarded by the companies to other States for sale. Nevertheless it does not follow that an attempt to monopolize or the actual monopoly of the manufacture was an attempt, whether executory or consummated, to monopolize commerce, even though, in order to dispose of the product, the instrumentality of commerce was necessarily invoked.

This decision was made under the provisions of the present Sherman antitrust law of 1890. The court further says in this same opinion that—

It can not be denied that the power of a State to protect the lives, health, and property of its citizens, and to preserve good order and the public morals, "the power to govern men and things within the limits of its dominion," is a power originally and always belonging to the States, not surrendered by them to the General Government, nor directly restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and essentially exclusive.

The relief of the citizens of each State from the burden of monopoly and the evils resulting from the restraint of trade among such citizens was left with the States to deal with, and this court has recognized their possession of that power even to the extent of holding that an employment or business carried on by private individuals, when it becomes a matter of such public interest and importance as to create a common charge or burden upon the citizen; in other words, when it becomes a practical monopoly, to which the citizen is compelled to resort and by means of which a tribute can be exacted from the community, is subject to regulation by State legislative power. On the other hand, the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several States is also exclusive. The Constitution does not provide that interstate commerce shall be free; but, by the grant of this exclusive power to regulate it, it was left free, except as Congress might impose restraints.

He also says:

That which belongs to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the United States, but that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State.

And—

The argument is that the power to control the manufacture of refined sugar is a monopoly over a necessary of life, to the enjoyment of which by a large part of the population of the United States interstate commerce is indispensable, and that, therefore, the General Government, in the exercise of the power to regulate commerce, may repress such monopoly directly and set aside the instruments which have created it. But this argument can not be confined to necessaries of life merely, and must include all articles of general consumption.

Doubtless the power to control the manufacture of a given thing involves in a certain sense the control of its disposition, but this is a secondary and not the primary sense; and although the exercise of that power may result in bringing the operation of commerce into play, it does not control it, and affects it only incidentally and indirectly. Commerce succeeds to manufacture and is not a part of it. The power to regulate commerce is the power to prescribe the rule by which commerce shall be governed, and is a power independent of the power to suppress monopoly. But it may operate in repression of monopoly whenever that comes within the rules by which commerce is governed or whenever the transaction is itself a monopoly of commerce.

In this same case, on page 25, Mr. Justice Harlan remarks:

But a general restraint of trade has often resulted from combinations formed for the purpose of controlling prices by destroying the opportunity of buyers and sellers to deal with each other upon the basis of fair, open, free competition. Combinations of this character have frequently been the subject of judicial scrutiny, and have always been condemned as illegal because of their necessary tendency to restrain trade. Such combinations are against common right and are crimes against the public. To some of the cases of that character it will be well to refer.

And at page 24 says:

If it be true that a combination of corporations or individuals may, so far as the power of Congress is concerned, subject interstate trade, in any of its stages, to unlawful restraints, the conclusion is inevitable that the Constitution has failed to accomplish one primary object of the Union, which was to place commerce among the States under the control of the Common Government of all the people, and thereby relieve or protect it against burdens or restrictions imposed, by whatever authority, for the benefit of particular localities or special interests.

And again he says:

In my judgment the General Government is not placed by the Constitution in such a condition of helplessness that it must fold its arms and remain inactive while capital combines, under the name of a corporation, to destroy competition, not in one State only, but throughout the entire country, in the buying and selling of articles—especially the necessaries of life—that go into commerce among the States. The doctrine of the autonomy of the States can not properly be invoked to justify a denial of power in the National Government to meet such an emergency, involving, as it does, that freedom of commercial intercourse among the States which the Constitution sought to attain.

And again, at pages 44 and 45:

We have before us the case of a combination which absolutely controls, or may at its discretion control, the price of all refined sugar in this country. Suppose another combination, organized for private gain and to control prices, should obtain possession of all the large flour mills in the United States; another, of all the grain elevators; another, of all the oil territory; another, of all the salt-producing regions; another, of all the cotton mills; and another, of all the great establishments for slaughtering animals and the preparation of meats. What power is competent to protect the people of the United States against such dangers except a national power—one that is capable of exerting its sovereign authority throughout every part of the territory and over all the people of the nation?

Mr. Speaker, according to the views expressed by Judge Harlan, he does not seem to be in harmony with the position assumed by the majority of this House. He seems to think that the General Government is not placed by the Constitution in such a condition of helplessness that it must fold its arms and remain silent while capital combines, under the name of a corporation, to destroy competition, not in one State only, but throughout the entire country, in the buying and selling articles that go into commerce among the States. This eminent judge does not question the power of the General Government under appropriate legislation to cope with the trust problem. He makes no suggestion of the necessity of a Constitutional amendment to confer additional power upon Congress to accomplish the desired end. Hence I take it that no such resort is demanded.

But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call brief attention to the situation with reference to House bill 10539, proposing amendments to the Sherman antitrust law of July 2, 1890, and the attitude of the minority of the Judiciary Committee and of this House in relation to the same. It seems the committee divided somewhat along political lines, it is true, not upon the main propositions involved, but the difference has arisen as to the extent and scope of the proposed amendments. The majority assert that the bill reported by them with amendments which they recommend go to the full limit of their constitutional authority upon this question, while the minority contend that such bill and amendments do not exhaust the full power of Congress over the subject, and report and recommend the adoption of several additional amendments making the law still more sweeping and drastic in its provisions.

Now, while I am not fully prepared to determine with absolute confidence the merits of this contention, yet I am fully prepared to say that I am perfectly willing to go to the utmost limits of constitutional power in amendments to this law to meet the emergencies of the present situation, and no gentleman upon this floor will in my opinion be excused or escape just censure from the people for doing less. If anything was needed to emphasize the importance of the situation and the imperative duty of this hour, it is the universal demand coming from every quarter and section, from every home and hamlet, from every business avocation and enterprise throughout the land, calling for substantial, effective, and immediate relief from the remorseless grasp of these heartless and soulless monsters of commercial greed and organized robbery, who stalk the streets of our great commercial centers and highways of trade as fearless and arrogant as they are soulless and heartless. I, for one, shall not stop to split hairs about nice technicalities of constitutional power in dealing with this subject, as our friends upon the other side have not done upon several other occasions in dealing with Porto Rico and our newly acquired possessions. I am willing for once to join them in going to the doubtful verge, and if they are as courageous in this emergency as they have been in the recent past to suppress this all-pervading evil, I have but little fears that this House will adopt all these amendments. I fear, however, they will not follow in this instance where duty and patriotism lead, for already the leaders upon that side of the chamber are giving out evidences of their failing courage as they face the real thing.

It seems one thing to defy constitutional limitations when you come to deal with a helpless and impotent people across the waters, and quite a different thing to deal with organized greed and trust magnates on this side. Here you are strict constructionists of the old-fashioned Democratic school; there you are latitudinarians of the most pronounced and dangerous type. I shall support these amendments offered by the minority, and if the sincerity of our Republican friends is equal to their pretended zeal in fighting the trusts, they too will support them, and thereby make this law what it ought and should be. If defeated in this, I will, as suggested, still support the original bill with the majority amendments. That these minority amendments may be understood and their merits judged of, I wish to insert them as part of my remarks. They are as follows:

Amend the new section 9 as reported by the committee as follows: Strike out all after figure 9 in said section and amend it so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That every corporation, association, joint-stock company, or partnership formed or made, or managing or carrying on its business, in whole or in part, for the purpose of controlling or monopolizing, or in such manner as to control or monopolize, or tend to control or monopolize, the manufacture, production, or sale of any article of commerce or merchandise intended for interstate commerce or commerce with foreign countries, or for the purpose of controlling or increasing or decreasing the cost or price of the same to the purchaser, user, or consumer thereof, for the purpose of preventing, or in such manner as to prevent, competition, or of preventing competition in the manufacture, production, or sale thereof, is, for the purposes of this act, hereby declared to be illegal and a monopoly; and all such corporations, associations, joint stock companies, and partnerships, and their officers, agents, managers, and attorneys, are hereby forbidden and prohibited from shipping or putting in transit any such article of commerce or merchandise to any State, Territory, foreign country, or place, outside the State, Territory, or place in which it was manufactured or produced, and from selling or offering to sell any such article or merchandise to be so shipped or put into any such transit, unless for the private or personal use of the consignee; and for any violation of this provision shall be deemed guilty of an offense against the United States, and on conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and by imprisonment not less than thirty days nor more than six months.

"All such corporations, associations, joint-stock companies, and partnerships as above declared illegal shall be, and hereby are, forbidden and prohibited the use of the United States mail in aid or furtherance of any such business or purpose, and all laws now in force for the prevention of the fraudulent use of the mails, so far as the same may be applicable, shall apply in the execution of such prohibition.

"Any such corporation, association, joint-stock company, or partnership may be proceeded against at the suit of any person or persons, or corporation, or association, or by and in behalf of the United States, and perpetually enjoined and restrained from doing or carrying on any interstate or foreign commerce whatever, either with the States or the Territories of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any foreign country; and no article of commerce produced, or manufactured, or owned and dealt in by any such corporation, association, joint-stock company, or partnership so organized, formed, managed, or carrying on business, shall be transported or carried without the State or Territory in which produced or manufactured, or in which same may be, or without the District of Columbia if produced, manufactured, or found therein, by any individual, corporation, or common carrier, in any manner whatever. All such articles of commerce, shipped in violation of the provisions of this act, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized by any marshal or deputy marshal of the United States, or by any person duly authorized by law to make such seizure, and when so seized shall be condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law."

SEC. 11. That every contract, combine, device, trust, or combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, tending to create a monopoly in the manufacture, production, sale, exchange, transportation, or dealing in any article of commerce or merchandise, entering into trade or commerce among the States or with foreign countries, or designed to create impediments to, or resulting in restrictions to, such trade or commerce or aids to commerce, or to limit or to control the manufacture or production of such articles or merchandise, for the purpose of increasing or decreasing, or operating in such manner, or with such result, as to increase or decrease the price of such article or merchandise to the user or consumer, for the purpose of preventing competition in the manufacture, production, sale, exchange, transportation, or dealing in such articles or merchandise, or to give power to charge unreasonable prices for merchandise or articles produced or manufactured to be bought, sold, exchanged, dealt in, or transported in such trade or commerce, or for the purpose of imposing, or in such manner as to impose, unjust or onerous restrictions upon, or impediments to, the lawful business of any person, company, or corporation engaged in the production or manufacture of such merchandise or articles, is hereby declared to be illegal and a monopoly within the meaning of this act, and every person who shall make, or enter into, or engage in, any such contract, combine, device, trust, or combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, or shall be a promoter thereof or officer or agent therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 and not exceeding $5,000 and by imprisonment not less than six months and not exceeding one year.

A new section 12, as follows, viz:

SEC. 12. That whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the price of any commodity or article of merchandise has been enhanced in consequence of any monopoly as defined in this act, he shall issue his proclamation suspending the collection of all customs duties or import taxes on like articles of merchandise or commodities brought from foreign countries. Such suspensions shall continue as long as such enhancement in price of such commodity or article of merchandise exists, and until revoked by the proclamation of the President.

A new section 13, as follows, viz:

SEC. 13. That whenever any State or Territory shall, in any law against trusts, combines, combinations, or monopolies, provide that no foreign corporation, association, joint-stock company, or partnership, or stockholder, member, or officer belonging to or interested in any such trust, combine, monopoly, or combination of any kind, shall be permitted to carry on or do any business, or have any office or place of business, in such State, or shall make provision to regulate or suppress the business of any such corporation, association, or partnership, or prohibit the sale or offering for sale in such State of any article or merchandise produced by it, every such corporation, association, or partnership carrying on, or attempting to carry on, or do any business or have any office or place of business therein, and all its articles or merchandise carried thereto, shall be subject to the operation and effect of such law, to the same extent and in the same manner as though it had been incorporated, organized, or formed in such State and such articles or merchandise had been made and not brought therein; and no such law shall be regarded as in any way trenching upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States or with foreign nations: Provided, however, That such articles or merchandise may be shipped and transported into any such State or Territory for the personal and private use of the consignee.

A new section 14, as follows:

SEC. 14. That every corporation, association, joint stock company, or partnership in the United States, or any Territory thereof, or in the District of Columbia, whether organized or formed under and pursuant to the laws of the United States or of a State or of a Territory, owning or controlling any plant or business, or a majority of the stock in any plant or business, similar to its own, in any other State, Territory, or place outside of the one in which it was first chartered, organized, or formed, shall, before being permitted to ship, consign, take, carry, or transport, or sell or deliver for shipment, to any other State or Territory, or into or from the District of Columbia, or any foreign country, any article of commerce or merchandise of its own production or manufacture, or receive consignments or shipments of articles of commerce or merchandise, manufactured or produced in any other State or Territory, or in the District of Columbia, or any foreign country, file in the office of the Secretary of State of the United States a certified copy of its articles of incorporation, association, or partnership, together with a duly verified statement showing the article or articles or merchandise manufactured, produced, or dealt in by it or intended to be manufactured, produced, or dealt in by it; a copy of its by-laws, rules, and regulations; the names and places of residence of its officers and stockholders; the amount of its capital stock and the amount thereof actually issued; the amount thereof actually paid in in cash; the nature and value of the property owned by it, and also a full statement of all its debts and liabilities; the number of its employees and wages paid; the dividends paid, if any; the amount of its surplus, if any; the character of additions and improvements made each year and the cost thereof, and a statement of its operating and other expenses, together with a balance sheet showing its profits and losses; and shall annually thereafter file in said office a report, verified by a majority of the directors of a corporation, or by a majority of the members of an association, joint stock company, or partnership, showing the same facts as then existing, and shall, before shipping, or offering or attempting to ship, or sell or deliver for shipment, or put in the way for transit, to any other State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any foreign country, any article of commerce or merchandise manufactured, produced, or dealt in by it, plainly and conspicuously stamp thereon, when susceptible of being so stamped, and also on the outside of packages, boxes, or tanks containing the same, the name of the article or merchandise, and the name of the corporation, association, joint stock company, or partnership manufacturing, producing, or dealing in the same, and the place from and to which it is to be shipped or transported.

Every such corporation, association, or partnership as referred to in this section, and every officer, agent, or attorney thereof, that shall ship, or offer or attempt to ship, or sell or deliver for shipment, or put in the way of transit, to any other State or Territory, or to the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any article or merchandise dealt in, manufactured, or produced by it, or shall violate or fail to comply with any of the provisions of this section, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 and not exceeding $5,000, and by imprisonment of not less than six months and not more than one year.

Mr. Speaker, section 12 offered as one of these amendments will give the relief that has been contended for several years should be given, not only by Democrats, but by many independent Republicans and some of the ablest and most influential of the Administration newspapers of the country. I quote upon this question an editorial of the Washington Post of March 23, in which it makes a short quotation from the Hartford Courant, both supporters of the present Administration and high protection in politics. The Post editorially uses this language:

[From the Washington Post, March 23, 1900.]

CONGRESS AND THE TRUSTS.

When the elections of 1898 had assured Republican ascendancy in both Houses of the Fifty-sixth Congress, the Post mentioned as one of the important duties that would devolve upon that body the accomplishment of some practical antitrust legislation. It was evident then, and it has become more apparent every day since that time, that the trusts would be one of the leading issues of the Presidential campaign. The Post suggested then, and has ever since persistently urged the necessity of depriving monopolistic combinations of any chance for shelter behind tariff schedules. As a consistent advocate of the doctrine of protection, the Post has protested and will continue to protest against its abuse. Attention has been called in these columns to trade combinations in protected industries that were and are stifling competition while paying large dividends on enormous overcapitalization. Testimony given before the Industrial Commission by managers of such combines convicts them of exploiting almost fabulous amounts of fictitious stock. Similar testimony shows that such combines sell their products all over Europe at lower prices than are charged for them to domestic consumers. These facts we have from time to time pointed out, and in the interest of the great principle of protection to which our marvelous development and splendid prosperity are largely due, the Post has advocated the reduction, not in all cases the destruction, of schedules thus outrageously abused.

What is Congress going to do in order to put the Republican party in good form for the campaign? The President has called the attention of Congress to the trust evil and left to that body the duty of devising and applying such remedies as are in the scope of national legislation. It is admitted on all sides that some of the trusts are beyond the reach of national authority. It is admitted by all fair-minded men that there are some trade combines which have by legitimate means reduced the cost of production while increasing wages and not increasing prices. No indiscriminate warfare on trusts is called for. But against the sort of combines that are taking advantage of protective duties to prey on the public there is a remedy at hand, and every Congressman knows what it is.

The Post has long looked and hoped for Republican cooperation in its effort to induce the Republicans in Congress to apply that remedial agency. There has been any amount of general denunciation of trusts in our Republican contemporaries, but until this date we have waited in vain for them to join us in advocating the only immediate and practicable plan for relief. At last, however, we have the excellent company and good-fellowship of the Hartford Courant, a leading Republican journal in a State devoted almost exclusively to manufactures. That paper refers to and pointedly condemns the proposition of Judge RAY, of New York, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, to amend the Constitution in a new spot by tacking upon it an article delegating to Congress "the power to regulate and repress monopolies and combinations, to create and dissolve corporations, and dispose of their property."

This attempt to utilize Mr. Bryan's abandoned thunder finds no favor with our Hartford contemporary. After cauterizing with ridicule, the Courant squarely plants itself alongside the Post with this plain declaration:

"But if Judge RAY wants the strongest and heartiest support the Courant can give him, let him induce his friend and colleague, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, to bring forward a bill striking from the Dingley tariff every protective duty behind which one of the vicious trusts is known to be snuggling and bloating. That's a practical remedy, right at hand. Such a bill, if Judge RAY and his associates put their shoulders to it in earnest, can be rushed through the House and sent to the Senate before the end of next week."

The antitrust amendment device is too shallow to deceive anybody with sense enough to decline an invitation to buy a gold brick or go out as bagholder on a snipe-hunting expedition. The Post is bound to credit Judge RAY with such intelligence and general information as must render it impossible for him to believe that his edition of the Bryan recipe has a ghost of a chance for adoption. Where is there a single State that would be willing for its legislature to vote for it? But the tariff-reduction specific would reach the disease promptly. It is of the kind that "attend strictly to business and don't go loafin' round." Will Congress apply it to those enemies of protection, those rapacious ingrates whom the tariff shelters?

This, Mr. Speaker, is but a sample of many other able editorials appearing in the columns of Republican organs throughout the country; and yet in the majority report of the Judiciary Committee reporting this bill, as well as by the distinguished chairman of that committee, Mr. RAY, of New York, and my distinguished colleague, Mr. OVERSTREET, from Indiana, upon the floor of this House, denounce and characterize this proposition as a vicious and malignant Democratic assault upon the protective system, and would, if adopted, ruin the business industries of the country. Such a proposition, they say, would not only afford no relief against the trust evil, but would establish free trade and prove disastrous to our industrial system.

Again, our friends lose their nerve and grow less and less heroic amid the conflict of contending interests. In the presence of an evil which they charge upon the floor of this House has outgrown the power of the States to successfully cope with, and which they denounce in the most unmeasured terms, it will hardly be accepted as satisfactory by the great body of intelligent citizens of this country to say that, notwithstanding the manufacturer of an article that has become the subject of a trust under the operation of the protective "Dingley bill," it will not do to strike from the law the duty upon that article, because, perchance, it might strike a blow to a pet political system of the Republican party. As between an incalculable good to the great mass and a theoretical injury to the favored few, the Republican majority of this House do not hesitate to side with the favored few. A day of reckoning will come, and in the crucial test of public opinion you will be weighed and measured. It may be then that you will regret the decision you now make and the company you now choose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this struggle is on and the contest will not cease until it shall be determined whether the people of this country are the sovereigns or the money power, trust combinations, and organized greed are to prove themselves masters. A free people will not willingly yield up their liberties and obsequiously consent to trusts and financial serfdom. They have already borne much with patience and may yet endure, but these, of all times, are full of wholesome warning to the rich and powerful not to abuse their wealth and power, but to obey and respect the laws of the land and aid and assist in their enforcement. No class of people have so much of interest in the maintenance and enforcement of law and order as the men of wealth and fortune. Upon the integrity of our legislative bodies, courts, and administrative officers depend the safety and security of person and property. As an evidence of the spirit of unrest and the trend of thought, even among the magnates and princes of Wall street, concerning the present situation, I quote what Mr. James R. Keene, of Wall street fame, is reported to have said a short time since:

The people of this country must arouse themselves. The coming election is of more importance, from the standpoint of a pure and true Americanism, than any that has transpired since the second election of Lincoln. Money is in the saddle; it is riding down the institutions of this country with a confident insolence that tells of its firm belief in its own invincibility. It is running the Government to-day in its every branch and arm.

If money's power in molding public affairs goes forward for four years more as it has for four years past, the name of American liberty will only be worth a recollection as a matter of history. Money is pressing the people backward step by step. What is to be the end? If it goes on, there are, as matters trend, but two solutions. One is socialism, and the second is revolution. The American people must defend themselves from money just as they once guarded their forest frontiers from the savage. Unless they come solidly shoulder to shoulder for their rights, and come at once, Bunker Hill will have been a blunder, Yorktown a mistake.

Mr. Speaker, we believe we are right upon the question of this constitutional amendment. We believe that our friends upon the other side of this Chamber have not been candid, open, and frank in their advocacy of it. To show the lack of sincerity of some of the gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber, I will print as part of my remarks a clipping from a prominent newspaper what the distinguished leader and reputed mouthpiece of the Administration, Mr. GROSVENOR of Ohio, had to say just prior to the assembling of the present Congress in reference to the sufficiency of our antitrust laws, and the jurisdiction of the several States upon the subject of the control and restraint of trusts and corporations. It would seem from this published statement of the venerable statesman from Ohio that he at least would have been found joining hands with us in this controversy. Here is what the distinguished gentleman is reported to have said at that time:

A REPUBLICAN VIEW.

[By CHARLES H. GROSVENOR.]

The Fifty-sixth Congress comes together under peculiar circumstances. The Republican majority is commissioned by the voice of the people to do certain things in any event, and to do certain other things if found to be wise and judicious.

As to the things which the Republican majority has been commissioned to do:

First, and most conspicuous of all, it has been delegated to revise the statutory financial condition of the country; that is to say, it has been decided by the people of the country, in the election of McKinley and the upholding of the platform at St. Louis, that the unwritten law of the Treasury, which for twenty years has paid gold upon every obligation of the Government, shall be now ordered by statute to continue that process. This is simply to enact into law the declaration of the Republican platform, which ordained the existing gold standard.

When Congress shall have approved of this measure, either in the form it comes to the Senate or in such form as may afterwards be agreed upon, there will be no free and unlimited coinage of silver in this country for the next eight years in any event, because the Senate is absolutely sure to be against it during that period of time.

While the Dingley bill has produced a great and gratifying return of revenue to the Treasury, there is yet, nevertheless, a demand that must be heeded, that there shall be economy in the public expenditures, needless expenditures must not be made, and many needful things must be postponed to a later and future day.

As to trusts and combinations, it is my judgment, and I so said to a reporter of this paper some days ago, that the Sherman law of 1890, which was a Republican measure and which has now been put into full force and effectiveness by the Republican Administration, gives all the remedy needful in the control and overthrow of illegal trusts and harmful trusts which can be made by the action of Congress.

This legislation, thus upheld by the Supreme Court, covers the whole ground of Congressional action, and all other laws should be enacted by the legislatures of the several States. I repeat what I said before: I am opposed to any interference by Congressional action with the right of the States to organize, create, control, limit, and regulate their own corporations in their own way, and for Congress to impair it by limitation upon the operation of State corporations other than that which was enacted in the interstate-commerce law would be such a violation of the right of States that it is not to be thought of for a moment.

Again, the Washington Post, while perhaps not a Republican organ, yet, as a general rule, supports the Administration, in an editorial appearing in its issue of May 31—the very day this measure was taken up in the House—had this to say upon the subject of this amendment and the Democratic position in relation thereto:

By supporting this constitutional amendment Democrats would have deliberately connived at the permanent retirement of the trust issue, withdrawn it from the campaign, and thereby robbed their party of one of its most powerful engines of war.

I will publish the editorial as a portion of my remarks.

DEMOCRATIC POSITION ON TRUSTS.

Our Democratic friends in Congress are to be congratulated upon the attitude they have assumed toward the constitutional amendment proposed by the House Committee on the Judiciary, of which Hon. GEORGE W. RAY, of New York, is the chairman. Mr. RAY's proposition is obviously impracticable, and, as many believe, was intended to be so. By supporting it the Democrats would have deliberately connived at a virtually permanent retirement of the trust issue, withdrawn it from the campaign, and thereby robbed their party of one of its most powerful engines of war. They express their utter disbelief in the sincerity of any representative Republican effort to curtail the power of the trusts. It would have been, therefore, suicidal on their part to commit themselves to an arrangement most palpably calculated to serve the alleged purposes of their antagonists.

There was still another serious objection, which is set forth in clause 3 of the resolution adopted by the Democratic caucus on Tuesday night:

"3. We oppose and urge Democrats in Congress to vote against the constitutional amendment proposed by the Republican majority of the Judiciary Committee, unless amended by striking out section 1 thereof and adding thereto, in section 2, in lieu of these words, 'The several States may continue to exercise such power in any manner not in conflict with the laws of the United States,' the following: 'Nothing in this article, nor any act of Congress in pursuance thereof, shall operate to abridge or impair any of the rights or powers held by any of the States prior to its adoption.'"

It seems to be the case, therefore, that the Democrats regarded the Ray proposition not only as a scheme to postpone, perhaps indefinitely, all governmental action against the trusts, and incidentally to entrap the Democrats into withdrawing the issue of the campaign of 1900, but also, in case the amendment should be finally adopted, as an abridgment of the rights and powers of the States. Certainly, holding such opinions, they could not have taken any course other than that referred to. Their present position, in this matter at least, seems to be unassailable.

Mr. Speaker, the present session of this Congress is now rapidly approaching its close. In looking back over the history of its seven months of legislation nothing will be found in the shape of relief to the great body of the people from the burdens of taxation, while the appropriations have grown and the expenses increased almost beyond calculation. Notwithstanding the country was assured by the late distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Dingley, that the war-revenue bill, enacted as an emergency measure, would be repealed as soon as the war was over and peace declared, and notwithstanding that war ended now nearly two years ago, and many hundreds of petitions and memorials have flooded members of Congress from all parts of the country, praying for a repeal or modification of this onerous tax, and many bills have been introduced and referred to the proper committees, where they are still buried, asking for a repeal of this tax, in whole or in part, no sign or indication has ever been given of any hope or expectation of securing such repeal.

If no relief can be had by repeal of the war taxes, if the burdens of the people can not be lightened by any form of reduction in the exactions of taxation, let us at least go to the extent of performing a long-neglected duty, and place upon the statute book of the nation a law that will equalize in some degree the opportunities in life to meet these burdens—a law that shall be framed in the interests of the people, the whole people, adaquate and sufficient in every respect to meet, overthrow, and outlaw in whatever phase or form they may present themselves every trust, combine, and conspiracy operating in restraint of trade and commerce and to the prejudice of free and open competition and the rights of the great mass of consumers throughout the country, and we will have then atoned for many sins of omission in the past. Not only this, Mr. Speaker, but when the law is ingrafted on the statute book let it be understood by those in authority that it is meant to be and must be enforced.

Much of the existing condition of things in relation to the growth, power, and insolence of these trusts is due to inefficient, corrupt, or subservient officials charged with the duty of prosecuting these dignified and well-to-do violators of the law. It requires no ordinary amount of legal ability and moral courage to face this class of criminals in a court of justice with a vigorous criminal prosecution. They are usually able to command, in addition to their high social and business standing in the community, not only the very best legal talent of the country, but too often the influence and sympathy of the political party of which they are members, especially if they have been permitted to enjoy the satisfaction of having rendered campaign tribute to that party for their special rights and privileges. And thus the difficulties and embarrassments multiply to overawe and prevent a successful prosecution.

This, Mr. Speaker, is no fancy. It is but what has often happened in many instances. Loud and bitter complaints have been heard all over the country of the fact that, if a poor unfortunate wretch is overtaken and brought within the punishing power of the law, though his offense may have the mitigating element of having been committed to appease his own hunger, or maybe that of his wife and little ones, he is certain to suffer the full penalty of the law, while the rich and well-to-do—the man who can organize a gigantic conspiracy to fleece and rob a nation—the Government official who can filch from the public a thousand, a hundred thousand, or maybe a million of dollars according to his opportunities, challenges public sympathy, if not favor, and places himself in the "heroic rôle," and is often able to baffle and defeat the law; and if perchance he is arraigned at the bar of justice, if not acquitted, secures a comparatively light sentence—with the almost certain assurance of executive clemency and pardon, after short imprisonment if that should be a part of his punishment. This sentiment, while much at fault, is not entirely without some grounds of support. Confidence in the courts and public officials charged with the responsibility of administering the laws of the country has ever been the chief reliance of our people for security and protection. It is one of the highest duties of government to faithfully execute all the laws—to exert all its legitimate functions to secure an honest and upright administration of justice, in a spirit of the utmost fairness and impartiality to all. That this has not been done with reference to our antitrust laws by the Republican party goes without saying.

If proof of this fact was needed, I would not have to go further than the State of Ohio, the President's own State, and the home of Senator HANNA, his campaign manager and most trusted friend. I would only have to recall the heroic struggle of the late Republican attorney-general, the Hon. Frank S. Monnett, in his efforts to enforce the antitrust laws of that State against the Standard Oil Company. General Monnett happened to be one of those Republicans rarely found in public office, who believed that the pledges made in the platform of his party meant what they said. He was elected in that State to the office of attorney-general upon a platform strongly denouncing trusts, and especially the methods of the Standard Oil Company, within his State. He at once set on foot a vigorous prosecution against the Standard Oil Company, and honestly and faithfully pressed that prosecution with a view to the enforcement of the law and the suppression of the trust. What success and encouragement he met at the hands of his party and party organs can best be told in the language of General Monnett himself in a recent interview published in one of the prominent and reliable newspapers of the country. Here is what he himself says about his party and the newspapers of his party in relation to his efforts to administer the law against trusts in the State of Ohio:

M'KINLEY MAY LOSE OHIO.

Ex-Attorney-General Frank S. Monnett, of Ohio, in an interview on the 19th instant, says Ohio will be lost to the Republicans this fall.

"I do not see how the Republican party can escape punishment this fall," said he.

"The platform of the Republican party in Ohio strongly condemns the trusts and their unlawful methods. I was elected as attorney-general of Ohio on such a platform, and as the officer of the State and the representative of the party I carried out as best I could the platform of the party. Yet I was not supported in this by many of the leaders, and the party organs criticised me for doing just what the platform of my party pledged me to do. Newspapers of the State, about 110 of them, printed paid articles criticising my actions, and they, too, party newspapers.

"This is not all. The legislature which has just adjourned killed the Russell bill and the maximum freight bill, and that too by almost a strict party vote. Will not the people punish the party for such actions upon the part of its servants? The party, as such, is not in sympathy with such methods. Although the Russell bill was bill No. 10, it was side-tracked by the trust lobbyists and held back until near the adjournment and then over the protest of some of the best men of the party, and almost all of the Democratic members, it was defeated. This was a repudiation of the party platform and the sentiment of the party. I can not believe that we will escape punishment, and I believe it will come this fall. Why should not the party be punished when the men who control its actions disregard the will of the people?"

The opinion thus so freely and frankly expressed by General Monnett is shared generally throughout the country. If the Republican party feels hampered through obligations, sympathy, or filial duty to these legitimate offsprings of Republican policies; if, Mr. Speaker, it is compromising to the Republican party to enforce these antitrust laws, as it appears to have been in the case of General Monnett; if the attempt to redeem your platform pledges and carry out your solemn promises to the people sounds the political death knell of your honest and faithful public servants and prosecuting officials, as seems to have been the case with General Monnett, then we ask you in the name of the great masses of the common people of this country, in the name of law and order, in the name of the army of unemployed, the great labor organizations, and the millions of victims everywhere of these grinding and remorseless monopolies, to turn the control of this Government over to Mr. Bryan and the Attorney-General he will place at the head of the Department of Justice, and we promise you that without the aid of further constitutional amendments the Democratic party will not fail to observe "our plain duty," and will speedily employ and honestly put into full force all the legitimate powers and agencies of the Government to terminate the existence of these enemies of the national weal.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to print as an appendix to my remarks a list of trusts and combines in the United States—list prepared for Commercial Yearbook by Byron W. Holt—together with the names, where incorporated, location, and capitalization, to May 27, 1900, and the amount of "common" and "preferred" stock of each:

Present name of trust.[2]	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.[3]
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
Adams Express Company	New York	New York City	[5]$12,000,000
American Automatic Weighing Machine Company (three companies—all in U.S.)	England	New York (?)	£135,000	£135,000
American Axe and Tool Company (16 plants)	Kentucky	New York City	$3,872,500
American Beet Sugar Company			15,000,000	$4,000,000
American Bell Telephone Company (owns American Telephone and other telephone companies).	Massachusetts	Boston	25,886,300
American Birch Company (to control New York market)	New Jersey		4,000,000	6,000,000
American Brass Company	Connecticut	Waterbury	20,000,000
American Bridge Builders' Association (trust forming 13 firms)	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia	[1]30,000,000
American Caramel Company (all export trade of United States)	do	do	1,000,000	500,000
American Car and Foundry Company (railroad cars)	New Jersey		27,600,000	27,600,000
American Cereal Company (much larger company forming)	Ohio	Chicago	3,400,000
American Cotton Oil Company (123 properties)	New Jersey	New York City	20,237,100	10,198,600
American District Telegraph Company[4]	New York	do	3,844,700
American Electric Heating Corporation		Boston	10,000,000
American Express Company (not incorporated)[1]	New York	New York City	18,000,000
American Felt Company (nearly all companies in United States)	New Jersey	do	2,500,000	2,500,000
American Fisheries Company (menhaden oil, 15-18 companies)	do	do	8,000,000	2,000,000
American (Window) Glass Company (majority in United States)	do	Pittsburg	20,000,000
American Glucose Sugar Refining Company (opposition company)	do		3,000,000
American Glue Company		Boston	1,400,000	700,000
American Hay Company	Michigan		[2]5,000,000
American Ice Company (forming; to control ice output of Maine)	Maine		60,000,000

Present name of trust.[a]	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.[a]
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
American Indies Company (gas, electric, etc., new colonies)	New Jersey		$13,000,000	$5,000,000
American Jute Bagging Manufacturing Company			2,800,000
American Lamp Chimney Company (one-third total United States)	West Virginia		500,000
American Last Company	Ohio		2,000,000	250,000
American Linseed Oil Company (82 plants; 85 per cent of all in country)	New Jersey	Chicago	14,250,000	1,500,000
American Lithograph Company	do	New York	8,000,000	14,250,000
American Machine Company (sewing)	Ohio	Cleveland	[b]10,000,000	3,500,000
American Malting Company (30 companies; nearly all in United States)	New Jersey	New York City	13,750,000	12,540,000
American Ordnance Company (guns, projectiles, etc.)		Washington	2,500,000
American Pegamoid Company			5,000,000
American Pipe and Foundry Company (5 plants in South; bigger trust forming)			[b]10,000,000
American Potteries Company (forming; nearly all in United States)	New Jersey	New York City	17,000,000	16,000,000
American Powder Company		Chicago	1,500,000
American Preservers' Company	West Virginia	do	2,500,000
American Radiator Company (4 companies; 75 per cent United States product)	New Jersey	do	5,000,000	3,620,000
American Saddle Company (bicycle saddle consolidation)	do		1,000,000	800,000
American Screw Company	Rhode Island	Providence	3,250,000
American Sewer Pipe Company (forming, with 51 big companies)	New Jersey (?)	Pittsburg (?)	12,500,000	12,500,000
American Silk Manufacturing Company (silk thread)	Connecticut	New London	7,500,000	5,000,000
American Skewer Company (all manufacturers in United States)	Indiana (?)		300,000
American Soda Fountain Company	New Jersey	New York	1,250,000	2,500,000
American Spirits Manufacturing Company (whisky; 18 distilleries)	New York	do	28,000,000	7,000,000
American Steel and Wire Company of New Jersey (controls wire industry, etc., in United States).	New Jersey	Chicago	50,000,000	40,000,000
American Steel Casting Company	do		4,200,000
American Stove Board Company (7 manufacturers)	West Virginia	New York	81,100
American Strawboard Company (19 plants)	Illinois	Chicago	6,000,000
American Sugar Refining Company	New Jersey	New York City	36,968,000	36,968,000
American Telegraph and Telephone Company (controls long-distance lines)	New York	do	25,000,000
American Thread Company (13 cotton-thread companies)	New Jersey		6,000,000	6,000,000
American Tin Plate Company (231 mills—95 per cent of all)	do	Chicago	28,000,000	18,000,000
American Tobacco Company (plug business sold in 1898)	do	New York City	21,000,000	14,000,000
American Type Founders' Company (23 companies in United States)	do	do	4,000,000
American Whip Company (20 manufacturers)	Massachusetts	do	250,000
American Woodworking Machinery Company (14 firms)	New Jersey		2,000,000	2,000,000
American Woolen Company (men's woolens—mills in New England; forming)		New York City	30,000,000	20,000,000
American Wringer Company	Rhode Island	Rhode Island	850,000	1,650,000
Ammunition Manufacturers' Association (cartridges)		New York City	[b]4,000,000
Anaconda Copper Mining Company	Montana		30,000,000
Associate Wine Dealers (agreement with California Winemakers' Corporation		San Francisco	[b]5,000,000
Association of Boat Oar Manufacturers of United States; (agreement on prices)			[b]500,000
Association of Fire Underwriters for Arkansas (44 companies)[g]	Arkansas	Little Rock (?)	39,694,226
Atlantic Dynamite Company (giant powder, etc.)	New York	New York City	[b]2,500,000
Atlantic Passenger Steamship Pool (renewed in 1899)			[b]100,000,000
Atlantic Snuff Company (all but 2 companies)	New Jersey	Nashville	2,000,000	8,000,000
Atlas Tack Company	Massachusetts	Boston	700,000
Atwood-Morrison Company (consolidation of 3 silk and cotton machinery companies).	New Jersey		300,000
Baltimore Electric Light Company (3 electric companies of Baltimore)			5,000,000
Barber Asphalt Paving Company (pools with other companies)[c]		New York City	5,000,000
Bay State Gas Company (several gas companies in and near Boston)	Delaware		100,000,000
Bessemer Ore Association		Cleveland	[b]20,000,000
Bolt and nut (several associations—carriage, stove, tire, etc.)			[b]10,000,000
Booth, A., & Co. (fish and oysters; 43 concerns)	Illinois	Chicago	3,000,000	2,500,000
Borax Consolidated, Limited (absorbing Pacific Borax, etc., Company)			£2600,000	£800,000
Boston Fruit Company (4 companies, controlling output from West Indies)		Boston (?)	[b]10,000,000
Boxmakers' Combine (of California-Oregon)		San Francisco	1,000,000
Brass Foundry and Machine Company (iron and brass castings)	New Jersey	Jersey City	6,000,000
Brooklyn Rapid Transit (most streets, ways, elevated and Brooklyn)		New York	45,000,000
Brooklyn Union Gas (7 companies)	New York	Brooklyn	15,000,000
Brooklyn Wharf and Warehouse Company[c]	do	do	5,000,000	$7,500,000
Broom Manufacturers' Association of United States (regulates prices)		Chicago	5,000,000
Broom Twine (selling combine)			[b]500,000
Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company (billiard tables, etc.)	Ohio	New York City	1,500,000
Buffalo City Gas Company (4 companies; consolidated with People's Gas in 1898).[c]	New York	Buffalo	5,500,000
Buffalo Traction Company (consolidation pending)		do	5,370,500
California Raisin Growers' Association (2,000 growers and 60 packing houses; controls 95 per cent of crop).			[b]5,000,000
California Winemakers' Corporation (allied with California Wine Association)[c]	California	San Francisco	10,000,000
Cambria Steel Company (owns Cambria Iron Company; plants in five counties in Pennsylvania).	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia	16,000,000
Cedar Shingles Manufacturers' Association (Washington State; limits production).			[b]5,000,000
Celluloid Company	New Jersey	Newark	3,000,000
Central Coal and Coke Company (selling agency)[c]	Ohio	Columbus	500,000
Central Coal and Coke Company of Kansas City, Mo.[c]	Missouri	Kansas City	1,500,000	1,500,000
Central Electric Railway of Kansas City, Mo. (all companies)		do	500,000
Central Lumber Company of California[c]			[b]$70,000,000
Central New York Brewing Company	New Jersey		2,200,000	1,800,000
Central Union Telephone Company (consolidation of Bell Telephone in Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, except certain cities).			6,605,300
Central Union Gas Company (17 gas and electric lighting companies in Ohio and Indiana).	Virginia		5,000,000	9,000,000
Central Walnut Association (California; fixes prices)			[b]2,000,000
Chain Manufacturers' Association (trace, wagon, etc.)			[b]3,000,000
Charleston (South Carolina) Consolidated Railway, Gas and Electric Company (forming with all in city).			1,500,000
Chemical (Pharmaceutical Manufacturers') Combine		Philadelphia	[b]50,000,000
Chicago and Northwestern Granaries Company (agreements with other companies).		Chicago	£120,000	£120,000
Chicago City Railway Company (cable, electric, and horse lines)		do	$14,000,000
Chicago Consolidated Traction Company (8 suburban companies)	Illinois	do	14,400,000
Chicago Edison Company (absorbed 4 companies)		Chicago	4,975,900
Chicago Junction Railway and Union Stock Yards Company (meat packing and cattle; consolidation 3 companies).	New Jersey	do	6,500,000	$6,500,000
Chicago Milk Company (forming to supply three-fourths of city's milk)		do	3,000,000	3,000,000
Chicago Packing and Provision Company (Limited)		do	£200,000	£200,000
Cincinnati Gas-Light and Coke			$9,000,000
City of Chicago Brewing and Malting Company (English and American companies).		Chicago	£625,000	£625,000
Cleveland and Sandusky Brewing Company (11 breweries)			$3,000,000	$3,000,000
Colorado Fuel and Iron (connected with Colorado Coal and Iron Company)	Colorado	Denver	11,000,000	2,000,000
Columbia Electric Car Lighting and Brake Company	New Jersey		10,000,000
Columbia River Canneries Company (fish packers; re-forming, 1899)		Portland	[b]2,000,000
Columbia Spring Company	Ohio	Cleveland	2,000,000
Columbus (Ohio) Gas-Light and Heating Company (will own 2 big companies)	West Virginia	Columbus	1,700,000	3,300,000

Present name of trust.[2]	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.[2]
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
Commercial Chemical Company, United States (paris-green manufacturers form selling agency).	.....	New York City	[5] $2,000,000	.....
Commonwealth Electric Company (12 companies; pools with Edison)	.....	Chicago	3,000,000	.....
Consolidated City Water Company (3 companies, Los Angeles, Cal)	.....	Los Angeles	2,480,000	.....
Consolidated Gas of Baltimore City [6]	Maryland	Baltimore	10,770,968	.....
Consolidated Gas Company of Newark, N. J. (all gas companies between Passaic and Elizabeth).	New Jersey	Newark	6,000,000	.....
Consolidated Gas of New York City (all but New Amsterdam Company)[6]	New York	New York City	9,078,000	.....
Consolidated Gas of Pittsburg (5 companies in west Pennsylvania)	.....	Pittsburg	4,000,000	$2,500,000
Consolidated Ice (10 or 12 companies in New York and Maine)[6]	Maine	New York City	6,500,000	3,500,000
Consolidated Packing Companies (Beef)	.....	.....	5,000,000	.....
Consolidated Smelting and Refining Company (forming with 11 big companies in United States and Mexico).	New Jersey	.....	27,000,000	27,000,000
Consolidated Street Railway Company	.....	Grand Rapids	1,600,000	1,419,000
Consolidated Traction of New Jersey [6]	.....	Newark	15,000,000	.....
Consumers' Ice Company (all dealers of Indianapolis)	.....	Indianapolis	[6] 1,000,000	.....
Continental Cement Company	New Jersey	.....	5,000,000	5,000,000
Continental Tobacco Company (7 plug companies and plug interests of American Company).	.....do	New York City	30,000,000	30,000,000
Copper Sheets and Bolts, Manufacturers' Association (fixes prices)	.....	Pittsburg	[5] 5,000,000	.....
Denver City Tramway Company (consolidated street lines)	.....	Denver	5,000,000	.....
Denver Union Water Company (complete plant) [6]	Colorado	.....do	5,000,000	2,500,000
Derby Hat Pool (4 big companies sell together)	.....	.....	[5] 3,000,000	.....
Detroit Citizens' Street Railway Company [6]	.....	Detroit	2,050,000	.....
Detroit City Gas (all natural and artificial gas companies in city) [6]	Michigan	.....do	4,560,000	.....
Diamond Match Company (mills all over United States)	Illinois and England	Chicago	11,000,000	.....
Dry Dock Trust (Philadelphia syndicate) [6]	.....	.....	1,000,000	.....
Dynamite Pool (3 big California companies)	.....	San Francisco	[5] 2,000,000	.....
Eastern Burial Case Association (big trust forming in 1899)	.....	.....	[5] 4,000,000	.....
East Jersey Electric Company	.....	.....	1,000,000	.....
Edison Electric Illuminating Company of Boston	New Jersey	.....	3,744,000	.....
Edison Electric Illuminating Company of New York [6]	.....	New York City	9,200,000	.....
Electric Boat Company	New York	.....	5,000,000	5,000,000
Electric Company of America (gas and electric companies just outside of Philadelphia).	New Jersey	.....	25,000,000	.....
Electric Storage Battery Company (absorbed other companies in 1895)	.....do	Philadelphia	8,500,000	5,000,000
Electric Vehicle Company	.....do	.....	5,000,000	1,000,000
Electrotypers, New York city and vicinity [6]	.....do	New York City	[5] 5,000,000	.....
Erie Telegraph and Telephone Company (controls 4 telephone companies in 7 Western and Southern States).	.....	Cleveland	5,000,000	.....
Factory Insurance Association, 29 companies ††	.....	Hartford	34,655,000	.....
Federal Steel Company (owns many mills and properties)	.....	New York City	46,484,000	52,767,000
Fire-Proofing (9 Ohio companies sell together)	New Jersey	.....	[3] 3,000,000	.....
Five States Milk Producers' Association (farmers to keep prices of milk up, as against the trust.)	.....	.....	[20] 20,000,000	.....
Fox River Birch and Tile Company (consolidated 15 birch yards in Wisconsin)	Wisconsin	.....	200,000	.....
Francis Gowdy Distilling Company (combination Eastern gin companies)	Connecticut	.....	100,000	.....
General Chemical Company	New York	.....	12,500,000	12,500,000
General Electric; pools with other companies	New York	Schenectady	18,276,000	2,551,200
General Electric Company of Minneapolis; light, heat, and power	New Jersey	.....	2,100,000	.....
Glucose Sugar Refining Company; nearly all in United States	.....do	Chicago	24,027,300	12,619,000
Granite Ware Trust; 4 companies combining	.....	.....	[20] 20,000,000	.....
Grape Growers' Pool; agree on prices in northern Ohio	.....	.....	[2] 2,000,000	.....
Havana Commercial Company (Cuban tobacco, etc.)	New Jersey	.....	10,000,000	6,000,000
Havana Electric Railway; electric, gas, telephone, etc	.....do	.....	5,000,000	.....
Hawaiian Commercial and Sugar Company	.....	.....	2,312,755	.....
Hecker-Jones-Jewell Milling Company [6]	New Jersey	New York City	2,000,000	3,000,000
Herkimer County Light and Power Company; companies in 3 cities in county	.....	Herkimer (?)	400,000	.....
Herring-Hall-Marvin; reorganizing	New Jersey	New York City	1,650,000	1,650,000
Illinois State Board of Fire Underwriters; 72 companies [3]	.....	.....	49,430,760	.....
Indiana League of Fire Underwriters; 27 companies [3]	.....	.....	10,028,568	.....
Indurated Fiber Industries Company	New Jersey	New York City	1,000,000	.....
International Air Power Company; plants in Massachusetts and Rhode Island	.....do	.....	6,400,000	600,000
International Cement Company; forming	.....do	.....	25,000,000	25,000,000
International Heater Company; 4 companies	New York	.....	900,000	900,000
International Paper Company; 25 news and printing paper manufacturers east of Chicago.	.....	.....	16,040,400	20,530,700
International Silver Company; 24 companies—75 per cent silver plate companies	New Jersey	.....	11,000,000	5,000,000
International Steam Pump Company; 5 biggest companies in United States	.....do	.....	12,500,000	15,000,000
Kansas City (Mo.) Gas Company	Missouri	Kansas City	5,000,000	.....
Kentucky Distilleries and Warehouse Company; 57 "bourbon" plants	New Jersey	.....	18,500,000	10,500,000
Kings County Electric Light and Power Company; all electric companies in Brooklyn except one.	.....	Brooklyn	1,968,000	.....
Knickerbocker Ice Company, Chicago; 28 companies, all in Chicago	.....	Chicago	4,000,000	3,000,000
Kodak Limited Company; consolidated English, French, German, and American companies.	.....	.....	£1,000,000	£600,000
Laclede Gas Light Company;[4] controls all in St. Louis since 1880	Missouri	St. Louis	$7,500,000	$2,500,000
Lake Carriers' Association; 3 lines; pool prices	.....	.....	[6] 10,000,000	.....
Lake Dredgers' Association; 123 owners of dredges on Great Lakes	Illinois	.....	$5,000,000	.....
Lake Superior Consolidated Iron Mines [6]	.....	New York City	28,450,000	.....
Lanyon Zinc Company	New Jersey	.....	1,000,000	$2,000,000
Lexington (Ky.) Railroad; 4 companies	.....	.....	800,000	.....
Linen Thread Company; selling agency 3 manufacturers	New Jersey	Paterson (?)	[5] 4,000,000	.....
Lumber Carriers' Association; vessels on Great Lakes	.....	Detroit	[6] 6,000,000	.....
Manhattan Spirit Company; wood alcohol	.....	.....	5,000,000	.....
Manufacturers' Paper Company of Chicago; selling agency for many mills	.....	.....	[5] 10,000,000	.....
Maple Flooring Manufacturers' Association; fixes prices	.....	.....	[5] 2,000,000	.....
Marsden Company of Philadelphia (cellulose trust)	.....	.....	30,600,000	1,500,000
Martin Kalbfleisch Chemical Company	..... York	New York City	1,450,000	.....
Maryland Brewing Company; 17 brewery companies of Baltimore	.....	Baltimore	3,250,000	3,250,000
Mass Consolidated Company; 5 copper properties in Michigan belt	.....	.....	2,500,000	.....
Metropolitan Street Railway Company [6]	.....	Kansas City	5,586,800	.....
Metropolitan Street Railway; most in New York city	.....	New York City	40,000,000	.....
Metropolitan Tobacco Company; selling combine	New York	.....do	500,000	500,000
Michigan Salt Association	.....	.....	[5] 4,000,000	.....
Milk Combine of Scranton, Pa.; entire supply	.....	Scranton	[5] 1,000,000	.....
Milwaukee and Chicago Breweries Company; English and American companies	.....	.....	£775,000	£775,000
Milwaukee Electric Railway and Light Company; all in city	.....	Milwaukee	$5,494,500	.....
Minneapolis General Electric; plants in city	New Jersey	Minneapolis	1,500,000	$500,000
Minnesota and Dakota Fire Underwriters; 53 companies [3]	.....	.....do	45,119,740	.....
Mississippi River Steamboat Pool; 3 companies pool	.....	.....	[6] 10,000,000	.....
Missouri Edison Electric Company [1]	Missouri	St. Louis	[5] 4,000,000	.....
National Abrasive Manufacturing Company; controls corundum and other abrasive materials.	.....	.....	1,000,000	.....
National Association of Axle Manufacturers	.....	Pittsburg	[15] 5,000,000	.....
National Biscuit Company (90 per cent of large bakeries in United States)	New Jersey	Chicago	29,000,000	23,000,000
National Carbon Company (all companies in United States and three-fourths in world).	.....do	Cleveland	5,500,000	4,500,000

Present name of trust.[2]	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.[3] Common stock.	Preferred stock.
National Casket Company		New York City	[4]$10,000,000
National Electric Car Lighting Company			2,000,000
National Enameling and Stamping Company (consolidation of 4 principal companies in United States).	New Jersey		20,000,000	(?) $500,000 10,000,000
National Harrow Company (spring-tooth harrows)	New York		[7]2,000,000
National Lead Company (28 white lead, etc., plants)	New Jersey	New York City	14,905,400	14,904,000
National Mirror Manufacturers' Association (40 companies; fix prices, etc.)			[5]5,000,000
National Rice Milling Company	New Jersey	New Orleans	1,867,000	1,320,000
National Salt Company of New Jersey (forming to control salt interests in the East).		New York City	[5]5,000,000
National Saw Company (controlled by Diston)	Kentucky	do	[2]2,000,000	600,000
National Shear Company	New Jersey	Newark	1,500,000	1,500,000
National Starch Manufacturing Company (20 plants; price agreement with other companies in 1898)	Kentucky	New York City	3,233,000	4,066,200
National Tin Plate and Stamped Ware Company (opposition to National Enameling Company).	New Jersey		10,000,000	10,000,000
National Steel Company; expects to control 20 plants	New Jersey		32,000,000	27,000,000
National Tube Company; forming with 17 companies	do	Pittsburg	30,000,000	30,000,000
National Wall Paper Company; 28 companies in 1892, absorbing 2 or more in 1899; forming.		New York City	27,931,500	7,500,000
New Amsterdam Gas Company; consolidates 3 companies in New York City		do	12,000,000	9,000,000
New England Gas and Coke Company of Boston; all in Boston except Bay State.[6]	Massachusetts	Boston	14,000,000
New England Dairy Company; milk companies	New Jersey		600,000	250,000
New England Telephone and Telegraph Company		Boston	11,986,400
New England Insurance Exchange; 84 fire-insurance companies[8]		do	58,537,167
New Orleans Water Works Company[6]		New Orleans	2,000,000
New York and New Jersey Telephone		Brooklyn (?)	4,662,400
New York Arch, Terra-Cotta Company; allied with other companies	New York	New York City	[4]2,000,000
New York Gas, Electric Light, Heat and Power Company of New York City	do	do	36,000,000
New York Suburban Gas Company (5 companies in Westchester County)	do		1,500,000
Nicholson File Company; 5 plants—70 per cent product		Providence	[6]2,000,000
North American (owns street railways and electric companies)	New Jersey	New York	39,733,600
North Carolina Pine Timber Association; fixes prices			[5]20,000,000
North Jersey Street Railway Company; consolidated trolleys and 2 ferries	New Jersey		5,000,000
North River Light, Heat and Power Company	do	Hoboken	300,000
North Shore Traction Company; controls railways around Boston	do	Boston	4,000,000	2,500,000
Oilcloth Pool (table, enamel, etc.)			[5]1,500,000
Oil Well Supply Company	Pennsylvania	Pittsburg	1,000,000
Omaha Street Railway Company[6]		Omaha	5,000,000
Otis (Passenger) Elevator Company; 13 companies—85 per cent of product	New Jersey		6,000,000	4,000,000
Pacific American Fisheries Company	do	Chicago	5,000,000
Pacific States Telephone Company; 4 telegraph and telephone systems of Pacific coast.			[5]10,000,000
Paducah (Ky.) Railway and Electric Light Company; all railway and electric-light plants of Paducah.			200,000
Paterson and Passaic Gas and Electric Company; consolidation of 4 companies	New Jersey		5,000,000
Pennsylvania Central Brewing Company; 12 breweries in Wyoming Valley	Pennsylvania		2,800,000	2,800,000
Pennsylvania Manufacturing Light and Power; all electric companies of Philadelphia.[6]	New Jersey	Philadelphia	15,000,000
People's Gas Light and Coke Company of Buffalo; consolidated		Buffalo	4,975,000	3,025,000
People's Gas Light and Coke Company of Chicago; took in new Chicago companies in 1898.[9]	Illinois	Chicago	28,750,000
People's Light and Power Company; 14 companies in New Jersey		Newark	20,000,000
Petersburg, (Virginia), Railway and Electric; consolidation of all companies		Petersburg	500,000
Photographic Paper; 24 companies, manufacturers of sensitized paper			2,000,000
Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Company (Limited)	Minnesota	Minneapolis	£500,000	£500,000
Pittsburg Brewing Company			$6,500,000	$6,500,000
Pittsburg Plate Glass Company		Pittsburg	9,850,000	150,000
Postal Telegraph Cable Company		New York City	15,000,000
Pressed Steel Car Company; consolidates Fox and Schoen companies and has a monopoly.	New Jersey	Pittsburg (?)	12,500,000	12,500,000
Print Cloth Pool; 30 mills; restrict production and fix prices			50,000,000
Pueblo Traction and Electric Company; owns 3 electric light companies of city	California	Pueblo	500,000
Reading Company (Anthracite Coal Trust)			[5]150,000,000
Refrigerator Trust; 36 firms; 80 per cent of trade			[6]8,000,000
River Coal Operators' Company; Pittsburg to New Orleans			[7]11,000,000
Royal Baking Powder Company; consolidation of all companies	New Jersey	New York	10,000,000	10,000,000
Rubber Goods Manufacturers' Company; consolidation of mechanical goods companies.	do	New York city	25,000,000	25,000,000
Saginaw Valley Traction Company; consolidation of 4 companies		Saginaw	700,000	400,000
San Francisco Breweries, Limited (agreement with other breweries)		San Francisco	[6]20,000,000
Santy-Kalsomine Company (Plaster Trust)	Michigan	Grand Rapids	[5]3,000,000
Sash and Door Combine; 26 companies; fix prices		Chicago (?)	[5]15,000,000
Shelby Tube Company; weldless tubes		Shelby, Ohio	5,000,000
Shot and Lead Manufacturers' Association; fixes prices			[5]2,000,000
Shovel Makers of United States and Canada; international agreement			[6]6,000,000
Southeastern Tariff Association; 67 fire insurance companies[8]		New Orleans (?)	$41,424,318
Sperry Flour Company; California	California		10,000,000
Spirits Distributing Company; selling agency for American Spirits and Southern Distributing companies.	New Jersey		3,675,000	3,676,000
Springfield Coal Association; 10 companies	Illinois	Springfield	[5]4,000,000
Standard Distillingland Distributing Company; whisky	New Jersey	New York City	16,000,000	8,000,000
Standard Oil; controls petroleum refineries, etc., in United States		do	97,250,000
Standard Rope and Twine Company; sells through Union Selling Company	New Jersey	do	12,000,000
Standard Sardine Company			5,000,000
Standard Telephone Company; bought Central Missouri Company in 1898	Missouri (?)	Kansas City	[5]10,000,000
Steel Beams Association; fixes prices		Pittsburg	[5]20,000,000
Steel Rail Manufacturers' Association; all big companies agree			50,000,000
Steel Steamers; forming with all manufacturers on Great Lakes			[5]15,000,000	15,000,000
Steel Tired Car Wheel Company; 6 or 7 car-wheel companies		Trenton	2,000,000
Swift and Company (beef)	Illinois	Chicago	20,000,000
Syracuse Rapid Transit Railway Company; all in Syracuse		Syracuse	2,750,000	1,250,000
Temple Iron Company; consolidated 7 anthracite coal companies in Pennsylvania.
Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company; plants in Tennessee and Alabama		Birmingham	20,000,000	1,000,000
Theatrical Trust; 50 big ones work together			[5]30,000,000
Tidewater Oil Company; consolidation of 4 companies	New Jersey	New York City	5,000,000
Torrington Needle Company			1,500,000	1,500,000
Trenton Gas and Electric Company; 4 companies		Trenton	[5]2,000,000
Tubular Dispatch Company; consolidated 2 companies			2,100,000
Twin City Rapid Transit; all street railways in Minneapolis and St. Paul[6]	New Jersey	Minneapolis	15,000,000	2,462,200
Umbrella Hardware Company	do		2,000,000
Underwriters' Association of State of New York; 72 companies		Syracuse	56,428,711
Union Bag and Paper Company	New Jersey		16,000,000	11,000,000
Union Carbide Company (acetylene consolidated)	Virginia		6,000,000
Union Light and Power Company; 4 companies of Salt Lake and Ogden, Utah.	Utah		4,250,000	300,000

Present name of trust.[2]	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.[3]
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
Union Switch and Signal Company; consolidated with National Switch and Signal Company.	.....	.....	$997,950	$397,000
Union Tobacco Company; absorbed Durham Company	New York	New York City	12,000,000	7,350,000
Union Traction Company; all trolleys in Philadelphia[6]	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia	30,000,000	.....
Union Typewriter; 5 leading companies	New Jersey	New York City	10,000,000	8,015,000
United Breweries Company; 13 breweries, Chicago	....do	Chicago	5,463,000	.....
United Electric Company of New Jersey; to unite all companies in North, New Jersey.	....do	.....	20,000,000	.....
United Gas Improvement Company	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia	15,000,000	.....
United Ice Cream Company; 4 companies in Chicago	Illinois	Chicago	300,000	.....
United Lighting and Heating Company; 8 companies; oil lighting interests of United States.	New Jersey	.....	6,000,000	6,000,000
United Paper Company (tissue)	....do	Paterson	1,500,000	1,500,000
United Railways and Electric Companies of Baltimore; all in city	Maryland	Baltimore	24,000,000	14,000,000
United Shoe Machinery Company	New Jersey	.....	8,625,000	8,625,000
United Traction Company; controls all electric roads in Reading, Pa	.....	Reading	1,400,000	.....
United Traction and Electric Company; all roads in and near Providence[4]	New Jersey	Providence	8,000,000	.....
United States Cast Iron Pipe and Foundry; 13 companies, practically all in South and West.	.....	.....	12,000,000	12,000,000
United States Dyewood and Extract Company; to unite all in United States	New Jersey	.....	4,000,000	6,000,000
United States Elves Trough and Conductor Pipe Association	.....	Pittsburg	[5] 2,000,000	.....
United States Envelope Company; 10 companies; 90 per cent product in United States.	Maine	.....	750,000	3,750,000
United States Express; not incorporated	New York	New York City	10,000,000	.....
United States Furniture Company (school; enlarging and reforming in 1899)	.....	Chicago	[5] 10,000,000	.....
United States Glass Company; flint glass	Pennsylvania	Pittsburg	3,458,100	600,000
United States Leather Company	New Jersey	New York City	62,854,600	62,254,600
United States Oil Company	.....	Boston (?)	1,250,000	.....
United States Playing Card Company; allied with 3 other companies	.....	Cincinnati	3,000,000	.....
United States Rubber; controls boot and shoe output of United States	New Jersey	New York City	23,666,000	23,525,500
United States Varnish Company; organizing with all in United States	....do	.....	18,000,000	18,000,000
Vermont Marble Company[6]	New York	New York City	3,000,000	.....
Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company; 27 fertilizer factories	.....	.....	4,363,900	5,085,000
Virginia Electric Company of Norfolk; consolidated all companies in city	Virginia	Norfolk	450,000	.....
Virginia Iron, Coal, and Coke Company; properties in Virginia	.....	.....	7,500,000	.....
Welsbach Commercial Company; owns Welsbach light; 3 companies	Colorado	Philadelphia (?)	3,500,000	3,500,000
Wells-Fargo Express	.....	.....	8,000,000	.....
Western Elevator Association; 40 leading in Buffalo	.....	Buffalo	[5] 15,000,000	.....
Western Factory Insurance Association; 23 companies[3]	.....	Chicago (?)	23,802,500	.....
Western Live Stock and Land Company	Colorado	New York City	408,000	.....
Western Strawboard Company; plants not in American Company	.....	.....	2,500,000	2,500,000
Western Union Fire Insurance Association; 59 companies in Western and Southern States.[8]	.....	Chicago	47,902,398	.....
Western Union Telegraph; consolidated other companies in 1881, 1887, and 1894.	New York	New York City	97,370,000	.....
Westinghouse Air-Brake Company; bought American and Boyden companies in 1898.	Pennsylvania	.....	10,950,000	.....
Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company; pools with General Electric and owns United States Electric Locomotive Company and Walker companies.	....do	Pittsburg	8,987,950	.....
Wholesale Druggists' National Association; 25 firms.[9]	.....	Philadelphia	[5] 25,000,000	.....
Wholesale Grocers of New England.[10]	.....	Boston	[5] 75,000,000	.....
Window Shade Manufacturers' Association; nearly all in country	.....	.....	[5] 2,000,000	.....
Wire Cloth Manufacturers' Association of America; 12 firms agree on prices	.....	.....	[5] 5,000,500	.....
Writing Paper Trust; forming with 35 mills in Connecticut Valley	.....	.....	[5] 40,000,000	.....
Yarn (cotton hosiery) Manufacturers; fix prices	.....	Philadelphia	[5] 3,000,000	.....
Yellow Pine Company[6]	New Jersey	New York City	2,500,000	.....
Totals	.....	.....	4,247,918,981	870,575,200

[2] A few of the trusts included in this list are not at this particular time in full force. In most such cases new agreements are pending, and it is unlikely that, having realized the benefits of combination, capital in these industries will long continue to compete with itself. Some trusts, like the Michigan Salt Association, are renewed every five years, or at other regular or irregular periods. The Paris Green Combine is likely to make its appearance during, or previous to, the potato-bug season.

[3] When a trust is incorporated the amount of capital reported as issued is usually taken, though it is often far above or below the actual capital employed. When not incorporated, the capital employed in the allied concerns is estimated.

[4] Unincorporated trusts pay no dividends, though they often make profits to the constituent companies. Sometimes the rate of dividends on preferred stock is averaged for two or more kinds of such stock. In bonded indebtedness several kinds of bonds are often grouped together.

[5] Estimated.

[6] Only typical trusts are taken in these industries. Such trusts are duplicated in many other cities or sections of the country.

[7] This association maintains prices of proprietary medicines by refusing to handle goods sold to wholesalers who cut prices. Similar local associations cover all sections of the United States and regulate prices of most leading articles. Jobbers and retailers have similar combinations in States, counties, and cities.

[8] Wholesale grocers' associations exist in all parts of the country. By means of rebates, etc., they assist the manufacturers of sugar, starch, baking powder, and of hundreds of other leading articles in maintaining uniform prices.

ADDITIONS TO TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS.

The following are some of the industrial trusts formed and projected since about the middle of March to May 27:

Present name of trust.	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
Amalgamated Copper Company; to acquire copper properties	New Jersey	.....	$75,000,000	.....
American Agricultural Chemical Company; 23 fertilizer plants	Connecticut	.....	17,000,000	$17,000,000
American Bicycle Company; 100 plants—85 per cent in country	New Jersey	.....	45,000,000	35,000,000
American Chicle Co.; forming with 6 chewing-gum plants	....do	.....	6,000,000	3,000,000
American Gas and Electric Lighting Fixture Company; forming with 14 plants	....do	.....	9,000,000	6,000,000
American Hide and Leather Company; 30 companies—85 per cent upper leather output.	....do	.....	40,000,000	30,000,000
American Plow Company; forming—17 agricultural implement manufacturers, Chicago.	.....	Chicago	[5] 65,000,000	.....
American Plumbing Supply and Lead Company; 45 companies	.....	.....	25,000,000	10,000,000
American Railways Company; to control electric railway companies in United States.	New Jersey	.....	25,000,000	.....
American Railway Equipment Company; forming—18 freight-car equipment companies.	....do	Chicago	9,730,000	7,730,000
American School Furniture Company; school and church furniture	....do	.....	10,000,000	.....
American Shipbuilding Company; shipbuilding, etc., on Great Lakes	....do	.....	10,000,000	10,000,000
American Smelting and Refining Company; controls many big companies[1]	New Jersey	.....	27,400,000	27,400,000
American Steel Hoop Company; 10 hoop, tie, and band companies	....do	.....	19,000,000	14,000,000
American Stoneware Company; forming—25 potteries companies east of Mississippi River.	Delaware	Akron	2,500,000	.....
American Window Glass Company; forming to control 80 or 90 per cent of all	.....	.....	30,000,000	.....

Present name of trust.	Where incorporated.	Location principal office.	Capitalization.
			Common stock.	Preferred stock.
American Writing Paper Company; forming with 21 mills in Massachusetts[2]	.....	Holyoke	$12,500,000	$12,500,000
Automobile Machine and Screw Company; forming—9 screw manufacturers in United States.	.....	.....	6,000,000	4,000,000
Boston Breweries Company; forming—6-10 breweries	New Jersey	Boston	3,250,000	6,500,000
Carnegie Steel Company; forming—includes 15 Carnegie & Frick iron, steel and coke companies.[3]	....do	Pittsburg	125,000,000	125,000,000
Central Hudson Steamboat Company; 9 Hudson River boats[4]	....do	.....	1,000,000	.....
Consolidated Street Car Company; 5 of largest manufacturers	....do	.....	10,000,000	8,000,000
Chamber Furniture Manufacturers' Association; 50 manufacturers of sideboards, etc.; fixes prices.	.....	.....	[1]10,000,000	.....
Chicago Laundry Combine; forming with 75 steam laundries	.....	Chicago	[1]4,000,000	.....
Chicago Sash, Door, and Blind Company; 35 Chicago companies	New Jersey	.....	3,500,000	2,500,000
Columbian Car Lighting and Brake Company; 3 companies	....do	.....	10,000,000	.....
Consolidated Ice Company; all artificial companies in Pittsburg	.....	.....	2,000,000	2,000,000
Continental Cotton Oil Company; 7 Southern companies	New Jersey	.....	3,000,000	3,000,000
Continental Packing Company; with Standard Company; controls sardine output.	....do	.....	3,000,000	.....
Cotton Yarn Combination; forming—7 mills in Massachusetts	.....	.....	8,460,000	.....
Encaustic Tile Company; to control all companies	.....	.....	4,000,000	3,000,000
Federal Sewer Pipe Company	Delaware	.....	10,750,000	10,750,000
Hot Air Furnace Manufacturers' Association; fixes prices	.....	Pittsburg	[1]5,000,000	.....
International Automobile and Vehicle Tire Company; 3 rubber-tire companies.	New Jersey	.....	1,500,000	1,500,000
Ledger Paper Combination; forming with 4 Massachusetts companies	.....	.....	[1]1,000,000	.....
Macbeth-Evans Glass Company; forming—5 chimney concerns, all in the United States.	.....	.....	2,000,000	.....
Manufactured Rubber Company; to control output	New Jersey	.....	5,000,000	1,000,000
National Association of Wagon Manufacturers; fixes prices	.....	.....	[1]40,000,000	.....
National Car Equipment Company; forming in California	California	.....	10,000,000	.....
National Carpet Company; forming—nearly all mills in United States	.....	.....	[1]50,000,000	.....
National Dining Table Association; 39 firms; fixes prices	.....	Chicago	[1]2,000,000	.....
National Glass Company; 17 flint bottle, etc., companies	.....	.....	4,000,000	8,000,000
National Screw Company; forming—includes American and 13 other companies.	.....	.....	10,000,000	.....
National Strawboard Company; forming; will act with American Company	New Jersey	.....	2,000,000	2,000,000
Pacific Coast Biscuit Company; forming with 7 big companies[5]	....do	.....	2,500,000	1,500,000
Patent Leather Combination; forming; 95 per cent of United States product	.....	Newark	[1]23,000,000	.....
Pittsburg Laundry Company	.....	.....	1,750,000	1,750,000
Puget Sound Packers' Association; 8 big salmon packers; fixes prices	.....	Seattle	[1]1,000,000	.....
Republic Iron and Steel Company; all bar and forge iron companies, etc	New Jersey	Chicago	30,000,000	25,000,000
Soapmakers' Combination; most of big Western companies	.....	.....	[1]25,000,000	[1]25,000,000
Southern New England Brick Manufacturers; trust forming	.....	.....	[1]5,000,000	.....
Springfield (Mass.) Breweries Company; 4 breweries[7]	.....	.....	1,150,000	1,150,000
Standard Metal Company; forming—10 companies, car-journal bearings, etc	.....	.....	4,000,000	1,800,000
Standard Chain Company; forming—95 per cent machine-made chains	.....	.....	3,250,000	3,250,000
Union Steel and Chain Company; forming	Delaware	.....	30,000,000	30,000,000
United Fruit Company; 10 big companies; tropical fruits	New Jersey	.....	20,000,000	.....
United Power and Transportation Company; to control street railways in Pennsylvania.	....do	.....	12,500,000	.....
United States Dry Paint Company; forming—mineral paints	New Jersey	.....	[1]3,000,000	[1]4,500,000
United States Flour Milling Company; forming—19 mills ††	.....	.....	3,500,000	5,000,000
United States Glue Company; forming to control glue product	New Jersey	.....	15,000,000	10,000,000
United States Worsted Yarn Company; forming to unite 19 largest mills	....do	.....	20,000,000	16,000,000
United Zinc and Lead Company; to unite mills in Missouri and Kansas	....do	.....	5,000,000	1,000,000
Western Drug Jobbers; forming—Western combination	.....	.....	[1]15,000,000	[1]15,000,000
Total	.....	.....	962,740,000	490,830,000

[1] Estimated. [2] $2,133,000 bonds. [3] $17,000,000 bonds. [4] $100,000,000 5 per cent bonds. [5] $500,000 bonds. [6] $1,500,000 6 per cent bonds. [7] $1,150,000 bonds. [8] $7,500,000 6 per cent bonds.

In the above list only the capital stock and bonds actually issued or proposed to be issued at once are given, when known. Some of the trusts in this list include trusts in the main list. Thus the United Fruit Company includes the Boston Fruit Company; the United States Flour Milling Company includes the Hecker-Jones-Jewell Milling Company, etc. Some of the trusts are under different names, since being formally organized. Thus the Chicago Sash, Door, and Blind Company probably includes but little more than the Sash and Door Combination; the American Shipbuilding Company is the incorporated name of the Steel Steamers Combination. Some of the trusts marked "forming" are so far advanced that retraction is hardly possible. Others have simply secured options on plants and are attempting to float the bonds and stocks.

Trusts.

SPEECH

OF

HON. TOWNSEND SCUDDER,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, 1900.

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SCUDDER said:

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not probable that the people of this country will be misled by the crafty tactics of the majority into believing that an honest, sincere attempt to restrict trusts was the actuating motive of the Republican leaders on the floor of this House when they conceived and brought forth this proposed constitutional amendment "to define, regulate, control, prohibit, or dissolve trusts, monopolies, or combinations." It has been ably pointed out by my Democratic colleagues how apparent is the trickery behind this political maneuver of our opponents.

The Republicans have been in power four years without taking any steps to regulate and curtail the greed of unlawful combinations and trusts. Now, just six days before the end of this Congressional session, when time is lacking for deliberate and intelligent consideration and action, this important legislation is sprung upon the Congress and the people.

It will require a two-thirds vote to pass the amendment. This number you know you can not muster in your own ranks, gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber; your majority is not sufficiently large, notwithstanding your successful efforts to increase it by unseating Democratic members; and while you were engaged in that unholy business I have no doubt you would have gone further and unseated more and sufficient had you entertained serious intention to enact this legislation.

Your lack of the requisite vote in your own party you think will make it possible to charge the defeat of this anti-trust bill to the Democratic party if it does not vote with you on the proposition as submitted by you without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t," and with no opportunity afforded to improve the bill by amendment.

For one, I believe your scheme will miscarry. The people are vigilant; they have not forgotten that the trust evil was occupying their attention during the life of the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses, and that during the sessions of those Congresses you had larger majorities than you have now. Drawing, then, from your own ranks alone you could have come much nearer mustering the necessary two-thirds vote than you can now, and yet you took no steps to suppress the evils of trusts, though the chances of success were good and all the credit was within your grasp. The credit you would have enjoyed, but it came too high. You knew it would cost you a shrinkage in the contents of your strong boxes and cut down your campaign contributions.

On this side of the Chamber the most serious objection to the passage of this amendment lies in the fear of our Southern brothers that its adoption into the organic law will deprive the States of certain rights. In the light of history this objection is entitled to respect, and can not be construed as springing from any desire to favor or foster trusts on the part of these Southern friends. On the other hand, my friends of the majority are well aware that their amendment can not be passed by the requisite two-thirds vote except these Democrats, who feel they can not vote for it, brush aside their scruples or prejudices, as you may be pleased to call them, and give to it their support.

No injustice is done, Mr. Speaker, by the statement that if the Republicans had a two-thirds majority in the House to pass such an amendment to the Constitution, they would not propose it. They are now moving to do what they know they can not do, and what they would not move to do if they could do.

It is your purpose and hope, gentlemen, to point to a solid Republican vote in favor of an impossible proposition and to Democratic opposition, in the hope that a large proportion of unthinking citizens will conclude that one party opposed the trusts and the other party befriended them. Children do that sort of thing, but in their case their innocence and youth is the excuse that they do it sincerely, impulsively, and unintelligently. When grown-up men do the same thing insincerely, deliberately, and with a clear realization of its emptiness, the action may be called politics, but it is better entitled to be named humbug.

The worst of it is that the trusts are an economic issue of very grave importance. The public welfare demands an enlightened and just solution of the problems their existence presents. We are groping for the solution, trying to devise restraints that shall protect the people against the extortions of criminal monopolies, yet not interfere with the salutary activities of corporations that benefit the consumer by lowering the cost of production and the selling price of their products.

We have not yet hit upon the just way. Twenty-seven States have passed laws of great severity that if enforced would destroy the good and the bad trusts alike. The executive power hesitates to enforce laws that would work such business havoc. In their sober second thought the people, represented in their legislative bodies, or in the Congress, will enact juster and more discriminating laws. But this dishonest and hypocritical use of the trust issue for partisan profit puts off the day of sober thought.

Trusts are the result of the tendency in business to combine resources for the purpose of increasing power and of decreasing the friction and cost of avoidable competition. The application to the field of mechanics of the same faculties of the mind from which trusts have come in business resulted in the substitution of machinery for hand labor, by which substitution types are set, fields plowed, grass and grain mowed, shoes made, fabrics woven, and the like, in the manner in which they are now done.

The advent of machinery was resisted by the men and women in hand industry just as the advent of combination in business has been resisted by the representatives of small establishments. The incoming of machinery displaced many hand artisans, but infinitely multiplied employments in which they found work. The course of combination in business has driven out of business many small dealers, but has also had the tendency in many instances to multiply and cheapen products, diversify occupation, and magnify employment.

I make this assertion advisedly and on account of the many sides this great subject presents. I deplore the headlong speed and irrational impulse which forces its inadequate and unintelligent consideration at this time and in this manner.

I am not a believer in the theory that through legislation the progress of commercial combination can be stopped any more than I believe that legislation can check the progress of mechanical invention, but legislation can and should throw conditions and safeguards of publicity, equity, and humanity around these combinations.

But, Mr. Speaker, this is a work in which there should be no partisanship and in which none should be attempted. This proposed amendment is a mere political pretext: it was not meant to be adopted; it was proposed on the eve of the approaching campaign as a trick—and a cheap one at that—that appearance of fighting the trusts might be to the credit of the Republican party and cause it to escape the storm of popular indignation that threatens to smite it in the coming elections. Gentlemen of the majority, the people of this country are not backward; they know as well as you know whence you draw your sinews of war, and they know that willingly you would do nothing to cut off your base of supplies.

You may be fortunate in your professed antitrust attitude on account of the willingness of many Democrats to destroy the effect of their advocacy of stringent antitrust legislation by voting against this proposed amendment because it does not satisfy them, but I honor them for standing by their convictions notwithstanding that it may be good politics to vote for the amendment, and thereby avoid being placed in the position of opposing a proposition to do something to restrict and cure the abuses of trusts.

I regret that they are forced to lose the opportunity this situation affords them to vote with practical unanimity for this amendment and thus avoid playing, as I fear they are, into the hands of our crafty opponents. It is clear the Republicans will claim in the approaching campaign that they tried to do something against the trust evils and that the Democrats were obstructionists and defeated the only adequate remedy for the evil. With the unthoughtful our charges of Republican insincerity will not avail us as they should. It is unfortunate that our party must be placed in a position where explanations are necessary. It is doubly so at this time, with the outlook for its success so bright, but in this particular case much comfort can be had in the knowledge that this party sacrifice springs from honest conviction and a willingness to suffer for principle and sense of right.

I do not agree with my colleagues, that this amendment is dangerous to the States, I see no good reason why trusts should not be controlled by the Federal Government. Centralization so far as trusts are concerned I believe will be an improvement and benefit the country by bringing them more under the control of the people than ever before.

May not the natural desire of some States to lighten the burdens of direct taxation of their inhabitants prove an effective barrier to concerted, harmonious legislation by the States having for object an equitable control and supervision of trusts? They afford a tempting means of collecting revenue which it may not be easy to resist. That it may be known how rich a field in that direction liberal corporation laws afford—perhaps I could characterize them better by the use of the words loose corporation laws afford—and therefore how great is the temptation to enact laws which will be attractive to those interested in the organization of trusts, I point to the record of the State of New Jersey, which has found a gigantic profit in trusts.

This year that State's income from this source will be increased over last year by $652,848, and the total amount it will collect on the stock of its capitalized trusts will amount to $1,554,126.

Why, the fees and charges alone collected for recording and issuing certificates for the incorporation of these combines the past year have been sufficient in amount to defray the entire yearly expense of maintaining the public schools of the whole State of New Jersey.

Have we not reason to fear that if the control of trusts is left to the legislatures of the several States, some other States may be induced to enter into competition with the State of New Jersey with a view of breaking up its monopoly in the trust-creation business and sharing the profits with it?

But if there be no just cause for fear in this direction, is it not possible, even probable, that these several legislatures of the several States will fail to enact harmonious laws and the lack of harmony in their laws will afford loopholes through which the trusts will effect their escape? For one I do not feel the country has any cause to be proud of the treatment this great subject is receiving at the hands of its Congress; but I have confidence that this great American Congress, if the power be vested in it that is carried by this amendment under discussion, will rise to its great opportunity and high responsibility, and for one I am willing to intrust it with the duty of solving this national problem.

Should Congress fail the people, the people will know how to reach Congress and care for the delinquents; therefore I will vote in favor of the constitutional amendment giving to Congress the power to define, regulate, control, prohibit, or dissolve trusts, monopolies, or combinations. [Applause.]

Trusts.

SPEECH

OF

HON. MITCHELL MAY,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 2, 1900.

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—

Mr. MAY said:

Mr. SPEAKER: It was indeed a surprise to me when a few days ago I learned that it was the intention of the Republican party to offer a bill and a constitutional amendment to the members of Congress to be voted upon, and which bill and constitutional amendment it was contended and advertised would result in the cure of the baneful trusts which rest so heavily upon the people of our country. It seemed a radical innovation on the part of that party which has been recognized and known throughout this country as being the patron and supporter of these gigantic institutions which have developed into such an abnormal size during the past few years, but more especially since the enactment of that much-heralded panacea for the tariff ills, the Dingley bill. It seemed more surprising to us on this side of the House in view of the fact that the platform adopted by that convention which nominated the present incumbent of the Executive chair as its candidate failed to insert therein any means whereby, at least, those evils which have developed so enormously could be curtailed in their workings and in their actions. It seemed surprising in the light of the fact that in the two planks adopted by the Republican party in 1888 and 1892 there was set forth clearly, emphatically, and unequivocally the opposition the Republican party claimed to have against the trusts, and the proposition on their part to use their best endeavors in the limitation of the workings of these organizations.

There seemed though, during the course of the campaign of 1896, a reasonable explanation why such a plank had been omitted in their platform; and on further thought and deeper study that explanation not only seemed warranted but justified, in view of the actions and the conduct of the Republican party since their success at the polls in that year. It was rumored about, and has since been ascertained to be the truth beyond peradventure of a doubt, that the great campaign fund used by the Republican party, the like of which has never before been known, reached its abnormal size by reason of the paternal interests, as it were, that these large instruments of torture had in that party. We have been waiting patiently while the trusts have been thriving, not slowly, but quickly and effectively, until to-day they are a full-developed evil, an evil whose ill effects reach almost every homestead of the poor, and which lays a heavy hand upon the independence and the spirit of the workingman. But we have waited in vain, and as we look at the kind of legislation the Republican party offers us we find that the expected, the hoped-for and promised legislation has not come. We were promised a substantial present; we find on closer acquaintance that the large, substantial present was a load of pig iron.

There can be no doubt in the mind of any reasonable man that the sole object and purpose of the Republican party in offering for the consideration of Congress measures labeled anti-trust legislation were to overcome, if that were possible, the record of the present Administration in dealing gently and kindly with these octopuses. Their object was to eliminate that question from the present campaign, because they knew that the attitude and the conduct of the present Administration could not bear the light of day, nor the investigation of a much-tried, patient, and intelligent people. The Republicans waited and waited until the last day of the session, when suddenly, with all the magnanimity for which they are known, and which is so characteristic of their every action, they offer us this something in the nature of a contemplated amendment to the Constitution. When they were anxious to pass a measure, as, for instance, the Porto Rican tariff bill, they waited not until the curtains were about to be drawn upon the Congress, but in due season and in good time they enacted that legislation so it might go out to the world. It is not my intention now to criticise that act; suffice it to say that it was a violation of trust, of confidence, and of a promise. The same attitude that the Republican party takes in this measure they took regarding the reduction of the obnoxious war taxes. There was no man within the length and breadth of our great country who raised his voice or used his efforts or objected to the enactment of that legislation which was necessary for us in order to support and uphold the dignity, the honor, and the soldiery of our country.

But that time has long since passed. There is no occasion, there is no emergency which requires that this baneful tax should be kept upon the people of the country. What do we get? What we expect. At the last moment almost the Republican party with all kindness and generosity offers a resolution granting permission to the Ways and Means Committee to meet during the coming summer, in order to enact legislation tending to the reduction of these war taxes. It requires neither the brain of a genius nor the eye of an eagle to understand and to see that the only idea that the Republican party had in view in the submission of such an apparent compromise resolution was to eliminate also that subject from the present campaign. They must have deluded themselves into the belief that the American people are composed of ignoramuses or fools, and their attitude now in adopting the same course of procedure as regards trust legislation seems to indicate that there is a firm impression in their minds that the people are, if anything, worse than fools.

I have always believed, and there is nothing now that can make me doubt, that the American people have their eyes open to the things which so vitally, materially, and closely interest and affect them. I believe that they are wide awake to the situation as it exists at present, and that they know the difficulties they are laboring under, the difficulties which surround and apparently surmount them, and which if continued in the same line of progress as during the past few years will ultimately result in their becoming vassals and serfs. There was a period in the history of Rome when the people were divided into what were designated as patricians and plebeians. It was that system which ultimately brought to ruin the great Roman empire, the history of which in many ways has taught us lessons and showed us a course whereby those pitfalls and snares which threaten destruction might be avoided, and those obstructions in the channel of progress might be escaped. Are we coming to that now in this great country, whose greatest pride is that all men are created equal, that before the law every man has equal rights and privileges, that under the Constitution no man can be deprived of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law?

Have we arrived at that period when we are going to overrule, override, and overcome all those things which the fathers have taught us, the principles which have aided in making us the greatest Republic in the world, and become a nation of classes, a nation where royalty and peasantry exist side by side, but where the line of demarkation is so strong that even he who runs can see it? Have we concluded that a government of, for, and by the people is a failure? This measure shows to what extent, to what means, a party caught in the snares will resort to. That the Republicans have the temerity to proffer the most scandalous kind of legislation will occasion no astonishment; but that they, at this time, should attempt to impose upon the credulity of the American people by offering them a gold brick as a universal cure for all ills of a Republican government is proof of the saying that "Necessity is the mother of invention." While the Republican party fooled the people in 1896, I believe they have in the last four years learned a lesson which has opened their eyes. They are willing to receive their medicine from the hands of reliable, trusted physicians, but they all know that the remedy which is advertised to cure the corns and bunions of the body politic, even though it should succeed in that direction, would scarcely be of value in reaching an ailment so deep seated that it affects the very heart. But such trifles seem not to affect them.

They have offered to our people a cure, and they have labeled it "Antitrust," with directions to use liberally and at all hours of the day. They have proclaimed aloud that it could be taken either by the teaspoonful or by the gallon, and that no harm could possibly follow, but a cure was bound to be effected. They offered us a bottle, however, that was tightly corked, with strict instructions not to open and examine until the same had been accepted and paid for, as premature investigation might result in a serious explosion, making the contents valueless. They further insisted that the label be not removed, as the light of intelligence or the rays of investigation would materially alter its composition and it would be seen to have changed its color and its general appearance; and, therefore, in order to prevent damage arising to the great American people, they maintained their secrecy, and at the moment of dissolution of Congress they spring this proposition upon an unsuspecting people, hoping that an opportunity would not be afforded to make a careful analysis of the subject.

The suddenness, while bewildering because unsuspected, caused little astonishment in comparison with the confusion created by the statements of the Republican party, even though late, to do something affirmative to relieve the people from the weight, the burden, and the oppression of the trusts. Yet they labeled their compound "Antitrust." They inscribed directions on it; they proclaimed the benefits to be derived from its use; but oh, my friends, contrary to their expectations, their hopes, perhaps their very prayers, the Democratic party was not to be stifled into submission, was not to be overwhelmed by cajolery nor deceived by mere idle words or idle sentiments. They placed this "Antitrust" panacea under the microscope of experience; they analyzed it in the light of the past; they submitted it to pressure, and lo! behold, their conclusion left no doubt that what was first expected was found to be true: It was a "fake." This decoction, wrapped up so carefully, advertised so extensively, and which, it was promised, would meet the trying conditions which now confront us, was neither more nor less than sugared water.

Let any intelligent man sip this magnetic, this marvelous antitrust cure, and it will require not more than one dose to convince him that while sweet to the taste it is sour to the stomach.

The proposition that it requires a constitutional amendment to successfully combat the evils of the trust is without foundation. While it may be true with an amendment properly drawn to meet the present emergency much might be accomplished by reason of the greater power and latitude given to Congress, we who have given the question thought and attention have arrived at the conclusion, of which there can be little doubt, that there exists at present sufficient law to permit us to overwhelm the forces of these great combinations. While it is true that the Democratic party would lend itself to the enactment of any legislation which would accomplish the defeat of the trusts, thereby affording opportunity for individual work and individual independence, nevertheless it would be a stultification of itself were it now, if only by a negative act, to consent to the proposition set forth in the constitutional amendment offered us.

It seems surprising, nay astounding, that anybody could have the audacity to offer an amendment to the Constitution drawn, conceived, and proffered as was this one. We all realize that the amending of the Constitution is one of the most serious problems; that it is one of those things which require the greatest care, the greatest deliberation, and the utmost investigation, for that Constitution has been found in all emergencies to meet the requirements of our country. We have seen how our country has grown and expanded from a little nation of a few millions to the mightiest republic of the world, and yet, in all its history, with all the changes which have marked the past century, there never has been any occasion when our Constitution was not able to cope with all the difficulties which surrounded us.

It probably is true that occasions will arise in the future when by no other way can a difficulty be met than by an amendment of the Constitution in some single instance. But we have seen that it is a difficult matter to impress upon the American people the necessity for the same.

But once in the past hundred years has it been amended, and it was only at that time effected through streams of blood and by the sword. Those amendments were the results of that struggle which at one time threatened to dissolve our Union and be a death blow to republican institutions. That was a time when the blood of man was heated, when all were brought face to face with problems so difficult, intricate, and complex that nothing short of such an amendment would meet the conditions of that period.

Once in a hundred years, I have said, was the Constitution amended, and then, while the problems were, in a sense, of no more vital importance than the question of trust legislation is to-day, there were no other means left at the disposal of the Republic to continue in the course which destiny seemed to have marked for it; while to-day, if the laws now on the statute books are carried into force and effect, they will be found to have all the efficacy and power of any constitutional amendment.

Who ever heard of a proposition of this kind, with all that it means to the people of our country, not being submitted to a close, careful, and direct examination by all parties? Who ever heard of a party offering an amendment to the Constitution without even granting permission to anyone to change, alter, or modify it in any one particular, especially when one considers that such amendment was conceived and drawn by one of the great political parties and upon the eve of an election? If the Republican party were true to the people, if it were earnest in the determination to grant effective legislation, it would have granted the Democratic party, even if not taking that party into its confidence, a hearing on the subject. It is rather an innovation that any part of any committee of the House of Representatives should have conceived and constructed legislation without conferring with the rest of that committee. In this instance the Republican members of the Judiciary Committee, without consultation with their Democratic confreres and without accepting any suggestions on their part, drew this proposed constitutional amendment.

And further than this, when the question was submitted to the House, they, being in the majority, drew the rules under which this question was debated and argued, and under which they would submit to nothing which would modify or alter this amendment in any single particular, and they substantially informed us that we would have to take what they gave us or take nothing at all.

It requires no searching investigation to discover that the only object in view was to construct something which appeared to be or bore a resemblance to antitrust legislation, but which, by reason of its faulty and pernicious arrangement, must be so obnoxious in the eyes of all well-meaning individuals, be they Democrats, Independents, or even Republicans not bound body and soul by the organization, that they could not honestly and consistently support it.

They framed it so that it would be impossible for the Democratic party or the members in the House of Representatives on that side to support or to uphold it, and then they shouted aloud to the world that the Democrat was again a party obstruction and in the way of legislation which would remedy current evils. Again they must have acted under the supposition and belief that the American people were blinded either by ignorance or by mere idle sentiments which mean nothing.

And what would this proposition have involved, in the event that it passed by a two-thirds vote of the House of Representatives? It would have required its submission to the Senate for passage there, and nobody, as far as I have learned, would have the termerity to say that that august body would for a moment have considered it seriously.

But let us accept the view that it would have passed successfully both Houses of Congress. It would require then that it be submitted to the legislatures of the forty-five States of the Union, three-fourths of which would have to indorse and ratify it. When we stop and reflect about the mighty power and great influence wielded by these trusts, it would be simplicity itself for us to understand how a little influence here and there would tend to defeat the final enactment of such a proposition as a part of the organic law of our country. In the first place, under the most favorable auspices and with everything working harmoniously, it would require a period of at least ten years before that proposition would finally be incorporated in the Constitution. In the interim the Republican party would say to the world that they had done all that lay in their power to overthrow these institutions, but that nothing could be done until the Constitution was amended.

In the meantime the people would continue to suffer more and more, and the greater the possibility of the eventual enactment of this constitutional amendment, the greater would be the efforts of these trusts to grind the people in order to make hay while the sun shone. Should we stand idly by for such a period of time, and more especially when the likelihood of the enactment of such legislation is not apparent? We know what the Republican party would do against the trusts. No better illustration could be afforded than the work accomplished by them in the State which prides itself in its sons, William McKinley and Mark Hanna, "the power behind the throne."

The State of Ohio enacted laws which would meet the requirements of the case sufficiently if properly carried into execution, and was fortunate in the possession of an attorney-general who not only was capable and intelligent enough to carry the laws into effect, but who had the will and the determination to enforce them; but scarcely was he placed in position to afford some relief to the downtrodden people before he started the machinery of the law in motion with all the vigor and energy of a young, honest, and efficient servant of the people. Nothing could daunt him. Bribes so large that even the most upright and honest of men might be tempted were no obstruction in his path of duty.

This was one of the instances where the Republican party had submitted, by reason of the awful clamor of the people, to the enactment of suitable legislation, possessed, however, with the idea that these would be mere statutes upon the books to be overlooked and to remain quiet and passive. They failed to consider that even some of their own officials would not permit themselves to be lashed into quiet submission by the organization and be bound by its demands. They failed to consider that there might be some Republican whom they had elevated to office who was too honest for their purposes. The Republican party seeing that their attorney-general, Frank Monnett, was not to be swayed in his determination to enforce the laws without fear or favor, took the only initiative remaining to them and relegated him into political obscurity.

It were idle for me to discuss further the state of affairs in Ohio. It is a part of the history of the past few years, well known to the reading public, and I would be unnecessarily taking up the time of the members in discussing it. But it is only one other link in the chain of evidence tending to prove that the Republican party harbors and supports the trusts.

Before many days have elapsed, the question of the constitutional amendment will be known to the American people. It will be easy for them to see through this "confidence game," and they will demand from the Republican party an explanation. The American people are quiet and submissive, and at times, in order to effect good results, they close their eyes to the failures of legislation when small things are affected; but at all times, when great forces are tearing at their very heartstrings, they are not wont to sit idly by and do nothing, or permit themselves to be deceived by the acceptance of "sugared water."

Let us analyze for a few moments the different propositions contained in this constitutional amendment, and it will not take us long to lay bare its faults, weaknesses, uselessness, and its dangers. In the paragraph marked "1" there is what might be termed, hidden in its very link, a little "joker." It says that this amendment shall apply to the States, Territories, the District of Columbia, and the Territories under the sovereignty and jurisdiction of the United States.

Some time since the Republican party, false to the promises it had made and in violation of all laws of decency and morality, enacted tariff legislation affecting the island of Porto Rico. We all remember the time the American forces under General Miles landed there; how the people welcomed and embraced our soldiers; how they accepted us as their saviors and benefactors; how they promised allegiance to the American laws, and how gratefully and honestly they submitted themselves to our care. We were all filled with pride at that time, and more especially when we read of the promise made by General Miles, in behalf of the United States, that all the privileges and benefits of our country would be afforded to Porto Rico. We applauded that course and, further, the position taken by our President that the island should be afforded the same privileges as all the States and Territories of our country. But we were seriously shocked when, within a short period thereafter, the Republican party formulated laws which had for their object the advancement of the proposition that that island was not under the Constitution and was not a part of the United States.

This position was so contrary to the spirit of American institutions that it revolted within us. The Democratic party contended for the rights of these people who had willingly placed themselves under our guidance and care, and not only because they had submitted without force or pressure, but because we recognize that wherever our flag flies there liberty holds forth; that wherever the hand of America rests there freedom flourishes, and that wherever the American Government was in control there the Constitution followed.

The Republican party, swept away by the knowledge of its strength and power, took advantage of the situation they found themselves in and enacted that tariff legislation which is obnoxious in the eyes and abhorrent to all good, loyal Americans who love their country and their Constitution.

The proposition contained in this first article of this amendment has for its object the indorsement of the position taken by the Republican party that none of the territories under the sovereignty and jurisdiction is a part of the United States and under the Constitution, and that consequently it had the power to tax the starving inhabitants of Porto Rico. Even accepting that position as true, we can see the utter futility of incorporating such an amendment in the Constitution. If the Constitution does not cover the territories under our jurisdiction, then Congress has full power to deal with them as it sees fit, and it requires no Constitutional amendment to grant them such power.

If it required a constitutional amendment to do so, then it would have required a constitutional amendment for us to enact that odious tariff law against that island. Then, if that be the case, what other object could the Republican party have in view? It was not mere idle thought or fancy that these words were placed in that amendment; it was done with care and deliberation and with malice aforethought; it was done to prevent the Democratic party subscribing to that proposed amendment; it was done because it knew that if it were indorsed or supported by the Democratic party it would practically mean a stultification of the Democratic party and place it on record as indorsing the actions of the Republican party in violating the laws of decency and morality in placing this tariff amendment upon the statutes.

It was contended by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], who in his manly fight against the Porto Rican tariff so nobly stood out in the cause of the right, when in support of the Constitution he not only opposed by his vote but by his eloquence and logic the proposition that the Constitution would not follow the flag. The attention of all America was called to the man who had the strength and the courage to oppose his party's wishes in a matter of right, which in his mind could admit of no doubt. How different his present attitude! While still maintaining his former position that it was unnecessary to incorporate this in the Constitution, he took the ground that even he, great as he was, might be mistaken, and when the question was put to him by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], why, if that were true, there was any necessity for the placing of these words in the amendment, since in that case Congress would of itself have power to deal adequately with the Territories, he failed to answer. I knew if there was any excuse that could reasonably be offered there was no man on the other side of the Chamber who could do it so well as he. And I was in hopes that he would be able at least to make some attempt at supporting his present position, but the result proved that the position was unsupportable. And look at the anomalous position this enactment would occupy in the Constitution. It would, in effect, mean that while the whole of the Constitution affected the States, the Territories, and the District of Columbia, that only 1 per cent of it would apply to the territory under the sovereignty and jurisdiction of the United States. Instead of the Constitution being a source of pride to the American people, it would be held up as a laughing stock to the whole world.

Nothing would have caused more terror in the ranks of the Republican party than to have had this measure receive support at the hands of the Democratic party. It may seem strange in view of the fact that by such action it would be a recognition of the position taken by them in the Porto Rican matter. But they knew if that question ever came before the American people it would appear so transparent and flimsy a makeshift that anybody having the audacity to present it for the purpose of hoodwinking them would at the polls be eliminated from the political world for all time. Their only salvation lay in the defeat of the measure, and in order effectually to dispose of it they placed this obnoxious clause in the first paragraph.

If the Republican party had admitted of an amendment or a change in one or two particulars in order to make the same effective, and in order to open a way whereby the evils of the trusts could be remedied and, if possible, absolutely defeated, the Democratic party would have gladly welcomed such an opportunity. But no! Such a change the Republican party could not dare to afford, because the moment that effective legislation against the trusts became a law, that moment it lost its most effective and best financial backers; that moment would see the dwindling of the Republican campaign funds into an insignificant sum; that moment would see them with no financial weapon to meet the conditions of the next Presidential election.

Our requests were spurned, our demands were ignored, and the result is that the people will continue to suffer until they place in the hands of other official servants the power to do away with these pests so inimical to the free institutions of America.

The real gist and substance, however, of this amendment lies in the second paragraph, which gives absolute power to Congress to define, regulate, etc., the trusts, monopolies, and combinations. No one could object, possibly, to the enlargement of the powers of Congress in this particular, but at all events there should be some limitations placed upon it. The idea that one body should have the absolute, unrestricted right to define a combination!

It has been contended by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] that the word "combination" must be taken in conjunction with its surroundings, and in the light of a trust or monopoly. In some instances that probably were true, and if the word "defined" had been omitted, the probabilities are that it would have been true in this case, but when Congress is given an absolute right to define what a combination is, who is there to curtail that right? Can the Supreme Court do it? The answer, though we might regret it, must be no. That would grant permission to Congress to ruin any partnership, any combination of two or more individuals doing any business enterprise, to interfere with and destroy and disorganize legal organizations, and would afford the opportunity for the greatest scandals in the history of the Republic.

Does any one doubt that these trusts would place hundreds of thousands, aye, millions of dollars in two or three vulnerable places to prevent any effective legislation which would or might tend to interfere with their actions? The result would be that the most corrupt place known would be the Congress of the United States.

But it may appear strange that a Member of the House of Representatives should oppose enlarging the powers of Congress. It is done, not because we question any individual, not because we doubt the sincerity or honesty of the present Congress, but because it means that temptations threaten us so large and so apparent that there would be many weak ones who might stumble by the wayside. "Lead me not into temptation" were better to be borne in mind.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not tire you by a recital of the great influences wielded by the trusts, the great harm done to the spirit of independence, the great interference with personal ambition, or the serious evils which result from their growth. There is scarcely a man outside the pale of these organizations who has not felt the hands of the trusts at his throat. There is hardly to be found one who finds that it does not interfere with his progress in this world. And so it were idle for me now to make any further statements about them. We deplore the fact that they exist, and there is a duty devolving upon us as servants of the people to do something, and that immediately, whereby their evil aims can be frustrated.

Sir, I should lend my aid to any legislation which, in my humble judgment, would have the slightest tendency to meet these crying evils. I believe that no stone should be left unturned, that no work should be too great to stop their further advancement, and I regret the fact that under the rules adopted by the Republican party we are not permitted to avail ourselves of an opportunity to strike an effective blow at these combinations.

I had hopes when I entered as a member of this Congress that one of the first pieces of legislation that would be offered for our consideration would be in the nature of antitrust legislation. But, as days and weeks passed by, my hopes changed to distrust, and when I was confronted with the proposition now before the House I knew that I erred not in my opinion and judgment of the Republican party that it was the friend and supporter of trusts.

I have no fear that the American people are not able to see through this weak attempt to deceive them. I have no fears that they will be deceived by a label. I have no hesitancy in saying that the mere words "antitrust legislation" convey to them nothing, but that sincere antitrust legislation means everything to them. They well know what is best and good for them, and when they have fully studied, as they will, the questions involved in this constitutional amendment, they will show by their votes on next election day their detestation of that party that would stoop to such deception, and so low and petty a trick.

I shall vote against this amendment, although, as I have previously said, I would be only too willing to vote for any measure which would result in the curtailment of the powers of the trusts, but I would be untrue to my principles, untrue to my people, untrue to my country and to myself, were I to support or indorse or ratify a proposition, which, if anything, would aid in the strengthening of these great combinations.

Favorable Credit Conditions Handicap the Trusts.

SPEECH

OF

HON. GEORGE P. LAWRENCE,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 2, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10539) to amend an act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890—

Mr. LAWRENCE said:

Mr. SPEAKER: One of the issues which has been made by some of the members of the opposition party in this debate and elsewhere, bearing upon the subject of trusts, has had reference to the issue of money and the extension of credit by national banks. The charge has been made by the leaders of the opposition party in the last Presidential campaign that the grant of the note-issuing power to national banks, with comparative freedom from restrictions, gives to the banks a greater control over credit and the volume of currency than if the issue of currency were under the direct control of the Government. The State platform adopted this spring by the Democrats of Nebraska, demanded "the retention of the greenbacks as they now exist and the retirement of national-bank notes as rapidly as greenbacks can be substituted for them." It was not set forth in the platform how these greenbacks were to be substituted for bank notes. If it was proposed that the Government should print the greenbacks, constituting an obligation of the Government, and pay them out in exchange for bank notes, the latter being an obligation of the banks which issued them, I am sure that such liberality would be cordially welcomed by every national banker.

I do not believe the Republican party is prepared to go to such a length of generosity to the national banks as this project seems to imply. What we might properly do, however, in order to place credit on the lowest terms within the reach of every solvent business man, is to remove the fetters from banking operations as far as can be done consistently with the rules of safety and uniformity which constitute the great merit of the national banking system. I am not afraid to face the proposition that giving greater freedom of action to the banks tends to create a banking trust. I believe the exact contrary is the fact, and that it can be demonstrated to the satisfaction of any candid man who will give the subject a half hour's consideration. What is proposed in increasing the liberality of note issues is only to take away from the banks the excuse for charging high rates of discount and refusing loans, upon the ground that they are hampered by the restrictions of the national banking law. Comparative freedom of note issues only throws the field wide open to competition and takes away what there may be of the character of monopoly in the present system of issuing notes.

If the more than thirty-six hundred national banks of the country could be gotten together in a great conspiracy to cut their own throats by refusing accommodation to business, freedom of competition would enable anyone who had negotiable capital to take out a charter, hire temporary banking quarters, and destroy the conspiracy by offering to loan our notes freely at low rates to the business community. I do not believe that such a conspiracy is possible or probable under any conditions. If it is conceivable, however, it would be infinitely more easy for a group of trust magnates in New York to get together and corner the currency under existing conditions than if reasonable freedom of note issue prevailed. They would know at the outset just how much currency and what kinds they had to deal with under fixed Government issues. They would not know this under a system which permitted any group of citizens to form a note-issuing bank when a business demand existed for its operations.

I do not propose to discuss this problem at length, but only to point out the folly of the charge that giving proper elasticity to our banking system would encourage a banking trust and the cornering of money. It must be remembered that the banks have the power now to refuse loans and contract credit, subject to the two conditions that it is not for their interest to lock up money without return and that they are always at the mercy of their depositors, who would withdraw their deposits in full if they found that they were being refused reasonable accommodation in respect to loans. What is proposed by those who advocate a little greater elasticity in note issues is only to remove the needless fetters from a single form of credit. There are few restrictions imposed upon the issue of checks and drafts by national banks. They are negotiable forms of credit, and the bank note is only another form of such credit. It differs chiefly from checks and drafts in a higher degree of transferability. It differs, therefore, in being more convenient for use in parts of the country removed from the banks and where the use of checks and drafts has not become a habit of the people.

Freedom of competition among all who have negotiable wealth, the bringing to the country by bank notes of the same facilities for exchange enjoyed by the great cities through checks and drafts, the consideration of the interests of the borrower as well as the lender, the promotion of our foreign trade by making credit as low and convenient to our manufacturers as to those of Europe, and consequently the continued employment of labor at remunerative wages in production for the foreign market—these are the great objects of a well-secured but flexible bank-note currency, such as I believe should be provided to gradually take the place of the bond-secured currency, as the supply of bonds ceases to be adequate for the needs of our expanding trade.

This subject has been so fully and carefully discussed in its bearings upon our foreign trade and the interest of the farmer and the laborer, in an article prepared by my friend, Mr. Charles A. Conant, of Boston, that I propose to include it in my remarks. Mr. Conant has spent many years of study upon this subject, and is the author of a well-known work on "The History of Modern Banks of Issue." The article to which I refer was printed in the New York Bankers' Magazine in February and March last, and has been widely circulated as a monograph. Its text is as follows:

THE BENEFIT OF A BANK-NOTE CURRENCY.

Having sketched the origin and development of bank notes and defined their functions and qualities,* it is proper to consider their benefits to the community. Some of these benefits are those which naturally arise from the banking function in concentrating and distributing capital without the power of note issue. This power, however, greatly quickens and promotes the process of bringing capital into active use, especially in communities where credit is not well developed, and where a sparse population renders banks less accessible than in commercial centers. The bank note economizes the use of metal, and to this extent diminishes the amount of real capital required for the circulating medium. Bank notes issued under such conditions constitute a loan from the public to the banker, but compensate the lenders by affording a convenient medium of exchange. The benefits of the public are not limited to the mere convenience of the paper in comparison with coin, but include a share in the lower discount rates and greater facilities extended to commerce by the capital saved for productive purposes by the economy of the metals. The note-issuing function, moreover, affords a method of introducing other forms of credit, and thus by degrees extends to an undeveloped country all the benefits of the modern credit system. These advantages of bank-note issues may be set forth with more precision and detail under the following heads:

1. Economy of the precious metals.
2. The accumulation and distribution of capital.
3. The reduction of the rate for the rental of money.
4. The adjustment of the currency to business needs.

I.—ECONOMY OF THE PRECIOUS METALS.

The issue of bank notes, even where they are protected by large metallic reserves, results in a considerable economy in the use of the precious metals and in the cost of handling money. In so far as a paper medium of circulation will do the work of money, without involving any question as to its safety and exchangeability, the community gains by the amounts of the metals thus economized. A gold currency is a costly investment, which can be afforded only by countries having saved capital beyond the amount required for maintaining the machinery of production, the purchase of raw materials, and the expense of distribution. The law of marginal utility will almost inevitably reduce a poor country to the lowest minimum of metallic money required for exchanges and even below the minimum of convenience, because its available capital will be required for the material and machinery of production.

To reduce this argument to its simplest terms, it is obvious that a primitive community, which was barely able by all the efforts of its members to obtain their necessary food, could not employ any part of its energy or set aside any part of its products for the purpose of obtaining clothing and shelter. When there came to be a margin of producing capacity, which gave additional purchasing power, clothing and shelter would be the first objects for which this power would be exerted. In a more advanced community a medium of exchange would be found highly desirable, but if such a medium required the expenditure of labor, like the mining of gold or silver, the labor required would be devoted to this purpose only after the necessary requirements for food and the minimum requirements for clothing and shelter had been complied with. In a community still further developed, where organized industry existed, the necessity for a medium of exchange would be so pressing that a small portion of its capital would probably be invested in this direction, even while the machinery of production and distribution was incomplete. There would be, however, a constant tendency to reduce this medium of exchange to a minimum and to part with it to other communities in exchange for the tools of production and the comforts of life. By the law of marginal utility the individuals of the community would exchange the products of their labor, first, for the most necessary articles, and then by a graded series of steps for articles having successively lower degrees of utility.

An alternative resource is open to communities whose producing power is on the margin of the capacity for investing capital in a metallic currency. This resource is the employment of paper credit. The tendency to devote saved capital to the increase of the goods necessary for comfort and for effective competition with other communities, is so persistent that in a community whose saved capital is close to the margin necessary for these purposes, there is a constant substitution of paper credit for metallic money up to the margin of safety and even beyond this margin. This tendency is aided by the demand for notes as a tool of exchange, which keeps them in circulation even when the security for them is not of the best. This is the explanation of the abuse of banking credit in comparatively poor communities. How this condition was brought about in the early history of the United States is thus set forth by Professor Newcomb:†

"In new countries, where the rate of interest is high and the demand for loans great, the temptation is much stronger than elsewhere. Thus arose the 'wildcat' banking which was so prevalent in our new States during their early history. When a 'wildcat' bank was established its practice was to loan its own notes on interest. The banker knew that there was little immediate danger of these notes coming back in great numbers, because the community was too much in want of them as money. He was, therefore, tempted to loan them on insufficient security, especially as good security was difficult to obtain under the circumstances. If he could induce his customer to carry the notes to a great distance, the danger of their being returned for payment became still less. So long as people would take his notes he was thus enabled to draw a high rate of interest on a very small capital."

Vide "The Principles of a Banking Currency," Bankers' Magazine for May and June, 1899.

†Principles of Political Economy, p. 171.

The safeguard against such abuses is the adoption of a prudent banking policy, either by union among bankers or by the mandate of law, which shall not permit the metallic resources of the country to fall below the margin of safety. There is no reason, when this margin is ascertained, with a proper excess for emergencies, why the economy of paper credit should not be availed of to the entire amount consistent with this condition. Such a policy has the advantages of affording a country the most effective and economical use of its saved capital. The bank note, although it has been the most useful form of paper credit in poor communities, is the only form which has become a subject of serious controversy, because it has not always been employed with moderation and skill. In its essence, however, the bank note involves no greater danger in use than checks and deposit accounts, and still less danger when surrounded by the safeguards which have been provided in modern commercial States in order to permit its circulation as a substitute for money.

BENEFITS OF AN EFFICIENT CURRENCY IN FOREIGN COMPETITION.

It is not merely a local advantage that a country should have an economical circulation. It may directly affect the competition of one nation with another. Assuming that this rivalry is reduced to the closest conditions, it is obvious that the economy of the currency may play the same part in facilitating competition as economy in any part of the machinery of production. A nation which used old and cumbersome wooden machinery could not successfully compete in the world's markets with one which used the most modern and efficient machinery. Other things being equal, a nation which unnecessarily invested a large part of its capital in a costly and cumbersome tool of exchange, could not compete upon favorable terms with one which adopted the most economical means of exchange. Undoubtedly the most economical means includes the safest means, but this safety need not be carried to excess in respect to the currency any more than in the case of machinery, which might be made unnecessarily cumbersome with the object of preventing breakdowns. The disadvantage which might result from an excessive investment of capital in currency becomes obvious if one considers how much capital would be required if the United States or any other country should decide to abolish all forms of banking credit as well as note issues. If every transaction had thus to be settled in coin instead of by checks and commercial bills, the entire savings of the country for several years would have to be applied to the acquisition of a sufficient supply of metallic money to the impoverishment of every other part of the machinery of competition. It is obvious that the country adopting such a policy would soon cease to be a serious competitor of the well-organized industrial nations.

So far as note issues exceed the metallic reserves held for their protection, they may be considered as an economy of capital. This economy is multiplied many times when the cost of the original investment in a gold currency is supplemented by consideration of the annual interest charge upon it. The cost of maintaining £95,000,000 in gold, silver, and copper money in circulation in Great Britain in 1876 was estimated by Mr. Jevons at £2,972,000 ($14,500,000) annually, of which £2,850,000 was for interest upon the principal at the rate of 3 per cent.* The annual average circulation of European banks of issue in 1898 was 14,668,000,000 francs, which was protected by a gold reserve of 8,182,000,000 francs, leaving an uncovered circulation of about 6,500,000,000 francs ($1,200,000,000). The interest upon the latter amount at 3 per cent would amount to $36,000,000 a year. This is a material saving of capital for application to productive industry. The excess of uncovered note issues was much larger a score of years ago than at present, but the great surplus of saved capital in recent years, and the extension of other forms of credit, by the growth of banks of discount and deposit, have permitted a large investment in the gold supply from the mines without a corresponding extension of credit in the form of notes.

A considerable saving is obtained from the use of a bank-note currency in a more modest way, even where the volume of notes does not greatly exceed the metallic reserve. This saving results from the fact that the use of paper certificates in ordinary circulation avoids the wear of the metallic pieces. The loss by wear upon a gold currency is very considerable where it is in actual use as a medium of exchange. The coins surrendered by the Bank of England to the British mint for a period of about four and a half years, from March, 1893, to September 30, 1897, included coins under the legal limit of weight showing a loss of 134,294.8 ounces, or at the mint value a loss of £522,910 ($2,500,000). This represents a loss of about $500,000 per year upon the coins passing through the Bank alone.† A portion of this loss is paralleled by the cost of printing and handling a paper currency, but on the other hand a small gain accrues to the issuers by the losses of such currency.

Bank notes do not cease to have a high degree of usefulness, even in communities which have an ample supply of saved capital for investment in a metallic currency. The extent of the use of notes under such circumstances depends to some extent upon the customs of the community, but the notes are more readily transferable than coin, and when exchanged in large amounts between banks and their correspondents cost much less for carriage.‡ The practical benefits of handling notes instead of coin were set forth in a forcible manner in a letter written in 1841 by Roger Aytoun, esq., manager of the Renfrewshire Bank at Greenock, at the time of the proposals to abolish notes for £1 in Scotland. Mr. Aytoun said upon this point:§

"At present the business of the Highlands is transacted by means of bank notes of £1, with some larger notes on occasions, and that with the greatest facility. Cattle dealers and all others having to pay away money to any amount in small sums to a number of people, as in the instances mentioned, prepare themselves by a mixture of notes, some large and some small, accompanied by a few pounds of silver, and everything goes on well. These notes are preferred by the country people before gold, both because they are unable to distinguish between the genuine and base metal and because coins are more liable to be lost from their pockets than notes; and they have no reason to repent their confidence in the stability of those banks whose notes they have been accustomed to receive for so many years in their transactions. But if small notes are superseded and gold substituted it is not easy to see how the supply of gold is to be kept up to carry on the business and transactions of this country. Should a quantity of it be received into the circulation, it would not remain long, but find its way into the banks, who will not give it out again in bills as they do their notes, and it will immediately become a scarce article in the country. A person, then, having to pay in small sums will on every such occasion be obliged to send his large notes to the bank that issued them, perhaps a hundred miles off, to receive gold and silver in their place to answer his purpose."

II.—THE ACCUMULATION AND DIFFUSION OF CAPITAL.

One of the great benefits of a banking currency is its service in the accumulation and distribution of capital. This benefit is in some degree the consequence of all banking operations, which attract into the custody of the banks the scattered savings of the community. The progress in this concentration of saved capital in hands which render it productive has been marked within the past century. The savings of capital themselves have greatly increased, partly as the result of the increased productive power derived from the use of machinery, but largely also from the stimulus to saving afforded by modern banking methods. The savings banks and stock exchange securities have become to a large extent the reservoirs of these savings. These institutions are not closely related to the functions of note-issuing banks, but the preliminary education in the use of banking credit which led to savings deposits and investments in securities was afforded by these issuing banks. The bank note is the form of credit which under certain conditions is most convenient and performs most efficiently the work of saving the use of metallic money. To quote from the exposition of the Monetary Commission (page 16):

"A borrower at a bank will usually ask for that means of payment which his situation and the business habits of his community demand. If he can not get it in that form, his loan is ineffective. Hence the habits of the community determine which form of liability the bank will make use of; it is not determined by the will of the bank. If the latter is not able to conform to the business habits of its customers it can not loan in that district. In the interest of borrowers, therefore, a proper banking system should be so ordered that it can adjust itself to the needs of its constituency. If banks are given perfect freedom in conducting their business, whether they issue notes or not is a question merely of convenience to their customers; to a large city bank the privilege of issuing notes is of almost no advantage."

Banks having the power of note issue have been, therefore, the pioneers of credit in their respective localities. They have made the owners of capital familiar with the note-issuing system, which required only passive action, and have paved the way for other systems of credit which appealed to the direct initiative of the small capitalist. The operation of this tendency is thus described by Professor Leroy-Beaulieu:*

"It has been demonstrated by experience that the issue of bills, when they have been made under regular conditions, has served in a notable manner to render a banking system popular and to spread banking operations among the public, not so much by the advantage resulting to the banks by the absence of interest on the sums which they procure with their issues, as by the general notoriety given to their establishments, the confidence which the public place in them when they hold their obligations, and the habit which they acquire of recurring more and more to their aid for the various operations of payment and collection."

The issue of notes which pass into general circulation permits an extension of credit in a community which might not be possible if there was only a metallic currency. The manufacturer who is able to borrow notes from a bank in the course of his commercial business, which are accepted by his employees and pass into general circulation, thereby aids the bank in borrowing the capital of the community without obtaining it by direct deposit. The holder of a bank note under such conditions has in a sense lent his capital to the bank in return for a printed promise to pay money, but he is not a loser by the transaction, since the promise serves all his purposes as a medium of exchange with the same efficiency as metallic money. If he considers the substitute less efficient, it is within his power to demand the fulfillment of the promise by presenting the note for redemption in standard coin. The holder of the note, indeed, so far from suffering by lending his credit to the bank, is a partner with the whole community in the benefits derived from a larger medium of exchange than would be available if bank notes were not permitted and in the increased activity of business transactions which such a medium of exchange allows.†

This increased activity of business transactions is one of the natural results of the transferability of capital which is promoted by the banking system. The power to issue notes increases the ability of the banker to aid new industries and to keep production in useful channels. It is the banker largely who determines the direction of industry by his willingness to make loans to industries which are profitable because they are meeting a demand and by his withdrawal of loans from industries which are ceasing to be profitable because of overproduction and diminished demand. How this process operates is thus set forth by Mr. Bagehot:‡

"It is the money lender in a primitive community whose capital is first transferred readily from occupation to occupation. Suppose a new crop, say cotton, becomes suddenly lucrative; immediately the little proprietors throng to the money lender to obtain funds to buy cotton; a new trade is begun by his help, which could not have been begun without him. If cotton ceases to be a good crop, he ceases to lend to grow it."

ADVANTAGES OF A BANKING CURRENCY TO THE WAGE EARNER.

The freedom of bank-note issues is of more direct advantage in some respects to the wage earner and small trader than to the manufacturer and capitalist. The latter classes are able to conduct most of their operations by means of other forms of credit and with only a limited use of bank notes. Their individual credit is of such a character that their checks and promissory notes serve the purposes of a medium of exchange in their larger transactions. To this extent these instruments take the place of credit in the form of notes, because their credit is well known and commands sufficient confidence among those to whom these instruments are tendered. The bank note, as Leon Say declared in a debate in the French Senate in 1884 on the renewal of the charter of the Bank of France, "is the deposit account of humble citizens and small merchants. The rich obviate the use of money by taking a check book; the humbler citizen deals in a sort of deposit account on the bank by taking its bills."§

The essential benefit of a bank note to the wage-earner or farmer over other forms of credit lies in the fact that he can exchange it almost anywhere for what he wishes without discount. A wage-earner who is paid weekly or monthly earnings in a single check often has difficulty in converting it into money in a community where currency is scarce, even though the maker of the check is well known and of unquestioned credit. A small commission is likely to be charged by any storekeeper to whom the check is tendered in payment for the necessaries of life. The situation is still worse for the wage-earner if he obtains only an open credit at the store, whether in return for a check or whether the

---

*"Investigations in Currency and Finance," p. 206.

†London Economist, July 15, 1899, LVII, page 1012. The British Government, by the coinage act of 1891, established a coinage fund of £400,000 to cover the cost of the restoration of the gold currency. This fund with the accumulated interest, was nearly exhausted by the operation of 1898, but was increased by a further charge upon the public revenues under an act of 1893.

‡It is a regular practice of the interior banks of the United States to direct the deposit of gold by their New York reserve agents with the subtreasury of the United States in New York, in exchange for the shipment of notes from Washington to the interior point where they are desired. This method is always preferred to the shipment of gold from New York, because the express rates upon gold are nearly double the rate upon notes. The bankers' express rate, for instance, from Washington to St. Louis in 1899 was $1 per $1,000 on gold, while the rate on currency was only sixty cents per $1,000. Such shipments of currency against deposits of gold in New York were $19,718,000 in the fiscal year 1898.

§Gilbart, The History, Principles, and Practice of Banking, II, page 222.

*"Traité d'Économie Politique," III, p. 474.

†"The entire community is enabled to profit by that which tends to facilitate exchanges and circulation. If the founders of a bank are the first, perhaps, to benefit by their creation, the durable success of such an establishment is possible only so far as the public finds an advantage in it, as the bank responds to a real need and well fulfills its office."—Horn, p. 440.

‡"The Transferability of Capital," Works, V, p. 297.

§Arnaune, p. 524.

store is kept by his employers. He is by this mechanism deprived of freedom in the expenditure of his earnings, and has to pay whatever prices are charged him for goods. By this process country stores and company stores are likely to collect what is really a banking charge, where regular banking facilities are deficient, but which is much larger than would be collected by an organized bank.

The absence of proper credit facilities, including especially the issue of bank notes, has imposed heavy charges upon the farmers in the southern parts of the United States and in other countries. The lack of credit facilities has even changed the direction of agriculture in many of the Southern States and has depressed the price of cotton. Cotton is the most negotiable commodity of the Southern farmer, because it is the most certain crop and can always be sold at a price, even when prices are depressed by the excessive supply. When the Southern farmers at the close of the civil war found themselves without money to buy seed and tools for resuming production, they obtained advances from the storekeepers and merchants in the market towns upon their growing crops, but these advances were made only upon cotton crops. The farmer thus bound himself to the storekeeper to buy everything at one place without regard to the price, and bound himself to raise cotton, however excessive the supply and however much the price might be depressed. The process is thus described by a writer who has investigated the subject:*

"The merchant consented to advance to the farmer, be he owner or tenant, the provisions, implements, seed, farm animals, and other requisites for making a crop, provided the farmer would consent to plant his cultivated land in cotton, to give to the merchant a mortgage or lien on his crop to the extent of his purchases, and pay for these supplies in cotton when the crop was harvested. The cotton prices of the merchandise thus advanced were usually from 20 to 60 per cent higher than the cash prices of the same articles. But for the farmer there was no alternative. He was glad to accept credit upon even such unfavorable terms, trusting that a high price of cotton would enable him to repay his indebtedness and free himself from the necessity of securing loans in the future."

THE EMANCIPATION OF THE FARMER.

This seridom to the storekeeper would have been remedied to a large extent if the first loan had been made with bank notes which gave their holder the power to make purchases wherever the notes might be accepted. A sufficient supply of circulating notes in a community means that the man of small means, whose transactions are mostly for cash, escapes the payment of high commissions to storekeepers, because he receives compensation for his goods or services in a form of credit which is readily exchangeable. If the use of capital is obtained in any form by the individual, it is desirable that it should be in the form most useful to him. For the rich man, as pointed out by M. Say, the check book constitutes such a medium; for the wage-earner and man of small means the bank note is more convenient, useful, and beneficial. The same distinction lies to a large extent between the city man and the countryman. As stated by Mr. Hammond:†

"The city dweller is content to have his loan in the shape of a transfer of credits on the bank's books in such a way as to permit him to check against the account. He has no use for currency except to make minor payments. But the average farmer does not use checks to any considerable extent. He desires cash in exchange for his produce and he expects to pay cash when making his purchases."

The fact that the bank note constitutes a loan from the public to the bank is sometimes made the basis of the argument that the profit derived from this loan should go to the Government, representing all the people, rather than to an individual banker or corporation. This argument ignores the utility of the banks in affording reservoirs of credit and channels for its distribution and in meeting the costs of providing the medium of exchange.‡ The Government can not distribute credit except through the instrumentality of a bank, and most governments have failed disastrously when they have undertaken to do a banking business.

III.—REDUCING THE RATE FOR THE RENTAL OF CAPITAL.

The economy in the use of precious metals, and the concentration of small private capitals which result from a liberal system of bank-note issues, yield an important profit to the community. This profit would inure in the first instance to the banker, who by the note-issuing system obtains the use of private savings at small cost, if he was not compelled to share it with the entire producing community under the law of competition, which tends to bring to a level the profits in all enterprises. Under the operation of this law the profit resulting from the economy of the metals and an adequate medium of exchange is distributed in such a manner that hardly any member of a producing community fails to receive some share. This is the case with any mechanism which saves labor and capital, even where the device is a patented monopoly. Such an article can not be disposed of for profit unless the price affords a saving to the users of it. Much more is this the case when competition is open to all comers having circulating capital, as under the operation of a liberal banking law.

It is worth while to examine somewhat more minutely the process by which a bank-note currency benefits the banker and reduces the cost of management of all industries. The banker who keeps afloat a given volume of notes borrows the amount without interest from the public. He can grant applications for loans only by the possession of capital or the control over it. If he receives large deposits, they provide sufficient capital for making all the loans which are asked of him. If deposits are not received in any considerable amount, either because of the lack of surplus capital in the community or the lack of education in the use of banking facilities, the banker is without any resources for making loans beyond the amount of his original capital. If, however, he has the power to issue notes which are accepted by the public, he can extend his loans to the limit of his power of note issue under the law or under the rules of prudent banking. Such notes only represent another form of credit from that brought to the bank by the producer or trader in the form of commercial paper. It is when the trader is able to pay out these notes for capital or services that they are converted, in a sense, into a loan of capital from the public to the bank.

The community by the process of bank-note issues obtains the use of a sufficient supply of the tools of exchange without sending abroad capital to the full amount of these tools. It is able by this means to exchange its products for others which are more beneficial than coined money. The amount which might originally have been invested in a metallic currency remains permanently available for increasing the machinery of production, acquiring a larger supply of raw materials, and producing a larger quantity of finished goods. The paper medium of exchange thus affords a sufficient currency, where one could not be obtained in the form of metallic money, or could be obtained only by serious sacrifices. The tool of exchange is the vital representative of circulating capital. The circulating capital of the community is enlarged by the issue of bank notes—not because bank notes are the creation of capital, but because they give mobility to capital which would otherwise remain in fixed form, or be in such minute subdivisions in the hands of individuals as not to be available for the processes of production. Thus, at low cost, the bank appropriates to its use the scattered capital of small holders and places it at the disposal of the community. How essential it is that this should be done under the fewest possible restrictions is thus pointed out by Professor Nitti:*

"If the credit circulation partially replaces the metallic circulation, it is because it costs less. If the cost of production is artificially enhanced, the advantage which might result from it is reduced or suppressed. It is so much the more harmful, since it is the mass of the users of credit—that is, the mass of the public—who benefit by every reduction."

If an adequate mechanism of exchange is obtained for one-quarter or one-half the investment of capital which would be required for a metallic currency, it is obvious that a material saving has been made. This saving is likely to prove in practice, even if the proposition can not be demonstrated mathematically, much more important than an equal saving in any other form of capital. The tool of exchange is so important to the successful workings of the other parts of the industrial mechanism that a deficiency of it is likely to hamper all branches of industry and a sufficiency to stimulate them into increased producing capacity.

When, therefore, a bank-note currency permits an increased offer of the tools of exchange to those who desire to obtain them, the effect upon the rental value of money is plainly felt. This value is determined by the comparison of the supply of the medium of exchange with the effective demand. The effective demand consists of the commercial paper whose owners can afford to pay the rental prices of money, as expressed by the discount rate. This demand must necessarily be shut within narrow limits where the discount rate is so high as to detract materially from the profits of commercial operations. The holder of commercial paper may prefer to go without the quantity of the tool of exchange which would be useful to him rather than pay the rental price fixed by the supply. His rates of commercial profit may not enable him to pay for a sufficient supply of the medium of exchange when the amount is small and the price is high.

The rental price of money responds, like the price of other goods and services, to the law which Ricardo applied only to the products of agriculture, but which has been found to be an almost universal law of economics—that the price of the entire product or service is fixed by the price at which the last increment of the goods can be produced or the last increment of service rendered at a profit. Competition among the owners of the supply of money attracts borrowers to those offering money at the lowest rate, in just the same manner as competition among dealers in wheat attracts purchasers to those offering wheat at the lowest price. The effort to maintain a higher price in either case than that fixed by the average profits upon invested capital, other elements in the problem being given due weight, would attract many competitors, but would in the case of money tend to dry up the sources of banking business.†

Competition leads each banker who controls a part of the supply to underbid his competitor in order to earn a profit by putting his commodity to use. The fact that this competition is closer and more acute in the case of circulating capital, as represented by the tool of exchange and the command over credits, than in the case of most other commodities, is indicated by the rapid changes in the rates charged for money in organized money markets. These rates sometimes rise in periods of stringency to 30 or 40 per cent a year, but fall within a few days to 4 or 5 per cent when the demand is relaxed and the supply increases. Each owner of circulating capital or each banker who controls it begins to lower his rental price when he finds that his supply is not absorbed by the effective demand at prevailing rates.

It is obvious, therefore, that with a given demand in the form of commercial paper and other legitimate appeals from borrowers an increase in the supply of circulating capital by a device which converts into such capital the scattered resources of individuals must produce a marked decline in its rental price. If this increased supply brings down the rental price to a point which greatly increases the demand, one of two classes of benefits, and probably both, must result for the community. If producers and traders are able to borrow who were not able to do so before, their productive capacity will be materially increased and their benefits will be distributed over the whole community through the payment of wages, increased purchases of materials, and the exchange of their products for increased quantities of foreign products.

If, on the other hand, it be assumed that no new class of borrowers comes into the field, and that the increased supply of the tools of exchange is available only for the use of the original number of borrowers, they will obtain the use of the medium at a greatly reduced cost. Their productive power and profits will be so increased that a portion can be spared for investment in a metallic currency, if it is needed. The more probable result, representing the leveling effects of several causes, is that industry will be stimulated, that the reduced rental for circulating capital will afford the means of production upon a larger scale to an increased number of borrowers, and that the enlarged profits of the community will afford a surplus for obtaining sufficient metallic currency to form the security of additional note issues to meet the expanding needs of business, without the sacrifice which would be involved in the attempt to maintain a currency consisting purely of metallic money.

Circulating capital is the most mobile form of wealth. According to the maxims of political economy, it should flow so freely from the point where its rental is low to the point where its rental is high that only trifling differences should exist in any part of the world. This absolute fluidity is not realized in fact because of the friction which attends the movement. There are different degrees of safety in making loans in different communities which affect the rental price of money, there are costs of transportation, and there are differences in the notoriety of credit even where the credit itself is equally good. Perfect freedom of movement on the part of circulating capital is hampered also by customs laws, by commissions and profits charged by brokers and bankers, and many other influences. Between two organized markets the difference in the rental price of money should vary only by the cost of transferring gold, but even this difference is subject to modification by losses of interest in transportation, the alarm of confidence caused by political events, the hopefulness or doubts of lenders, and by the facility for converting fixed into circulating capital.

NEEDLESS RESTRICTIONS ON BANKS ARE TAXES ON THE PEOPLE.

These differences in the rental price of money are greatly increased when that freedom which is often assumed for the operation of economic laws is hampered by legal restrictions upon the issue of credit. If the use of checks was taxed 10 per cent in the commercial centers, and no other forms for transferring the titles to money were equally convenient, the rental price of circulating capital would be increased and its movements would be greatly hampered. Prohibitions upon note issues destroy in the same manner the most convenient mechanism of credit in country districts, where the deposit system has not obtained a footing or where banking offices are not conveniently at hand.

That the absence or the severe restriction of the note-issuing function has increased the rental price of money is plain from comparison of the banking his-

*M. B. Hammond, "The Southern Farmer and Banking Reform," "Sound Currency" (December 1, 1898), V, p. 379.

†"Sound Currency" (December 1, 1898), V, p. 378.

‡Professor Nitti says of the note-issuing banks, "not only do they carry on gratuitously a great part of their operations, not only are they exposed to the risks and losses of ordinary banks of discount, but, if their organization is not perfect, they run much more considerable risks, considering their large scale of operations."—Revue d' Economie Politique (1898), XII, p. 593.

*Revue d'Économie Politique (1898), XII, p. 821.

†"If the money obtained by discounts was obtained at a price superior to the mean of the profits of all transactions, there would logically be no more commercial transactions, or rather there would cease to be recourse to the bank. Hence in an ideal régime of the economy of credit the maximum limit of the rate of discount is determined by the average of profits."—Nitti, Revue d'Économie Politique (1898), XII, p. 377.

tory of different countries. In England, where the restrictive policy was adopted in 1844, the discount rate was changed 330 times from 1844 to 1890, while at the Bank of France it was changed only 110 times.* The autumn months called almost invariably for an advance in the rate of the Bank of England because of "the dispersion of money in wages during the summer, and the absorption of money and capital in buying up the produce of the harvest."† No provision for relieving this demand by note issues is made by the English banking law, and every unusual demand for currency has to be met by an increased investment in metallic money, often at heavy cost to the producers of the country. In Germany high discount rates became the rule at the Imperial Bank as soon as the business of the country grew up to the limit of note issue fixed by the law of 1875. The average rate was under 3½ per cent from 1891 to 1895, but rose to 3.66 in 1896, 3.806 in 1897, 4.267 in 1898, and 4.93 in 1899. Much worse is the situation in the United States, where the rates in the rural districts have often stood at 10 or 12 per cent. That this is not a necessary condition of new countries is shown by the conditions in Canada, which possesses an economical banking currency.

The fact that the returns upon circulating capital differ so widely in different communities seriously impairs the efficiency of the whole economic system. A high rate for money in a given locality indicates that not all of the circulating capital which could be profitably employed is obtainable. The community is not able to invest the capital required in a costly tool of exchange and is not able to pay the rental price for borrowing an adequate supply. Industry is therefore hampered, because its tools are abnormally costly. The differences between the compensation earned by different industries and between different communities indicates a lack of efficiency in the distribution of industry, a deficiency in the maximum product which might be obtained under a proper organization, and a disadvantage in competition with better organized communities. As the proposition is reasoned out by Professor Von Wieser:‡

"Uniformity in the percentages of increment, and a uniform rate of interest, are, where they exist, proofs, economically speaking, of a well-balanced distribution and disposal of capital. They are proofs that the economically indicated limits of the employment of capital are everywhere equally respected; that nowhere is there any falling short, and nowhere any overstepping of them. In the principle which demands that the employment of capital shall be guided by the rate of interest, and that all employments which fail to return the customary interest be left alone, we find the marginal law brought into one common expression as regards all the different forms of capital."

IV.—The Adjustment of the Currency to Business Needs.

The greatest benefit of a banking currency, derived in some measure from the functions already ascribed to it, in the economy of the precious metals and the accumulation of credit, is in keeping the volume of currency constantly adjusted to the requirements of production and trade. This adjustment to business needs, coupled with the necessary condition of security, should be the object of every sound monetary system. A bank-note currency is especially fitted to fulfill this object, because it is based upon business transactions. A bank note, when issued in pursuance of legitimate banking business, is the offspring of a credit operation. The issue and retirement of notes is the consequence of business transactions and not the cause.§

Let it be assumed, for the sake of simplicity, that there are no other forms of credit than the discount of commercial paper by the banks and the issue of bank notes, and that all business is done by means of discounts, bank notes and coin. If a loan is made to a trader, which is issued to him entirely in bank notes, he is compelled upon its maturity to find a sufficient amount in bank notes to pay back into the bank the sum borrowed. If there were but few transactions the fluctuations in the volume of notes in circulation would respond visibly to the loans and the payments as they occurred. When a bank is making loans daily to a great number of persons, the effect of a single loan may not be obvious and striking upon the number of notes in circulation. The notes pass into many hands, but if notes and standard coin constitute the sole medium of making payments, a merchant having a loan to repay must surrender to the bank as many notes as he originally obtained or an equal amount in coin. In the one case, the outstanding debts of the bank are reduced by the withdrawal of the notes, which are the printed promises of the bank to pay coin on demand. In the other case—payment in coin—the outstanding debts in excess of the reserve are reduced by the deposit of a quantity of coin fully covering the amount of the loan and capable of redeeming in full the notes which may be still outstanding.

The operation of a banking currency under such conditions results in the automatic adjustment of the amount to the needs of the business. If the number of business transactions is large, many bills of exchange are brought to the bank and many notes are issued. A large volume of business transactions usually implies increased employment for labor and larger payments for wages and in retail purchases, requiring an increased supply of the circulating medium. A larger volume of notes is absorbed at such times than in times of dull trade. If business transactions become less numerous, the paper presented to the bank for discount becomes less, fewer notes are issued, and the retirement of the outstanding notes takes place as traders having commercial bills to meet from day to day pay notes for them into the bank. With many transactions consummated daily, the volume of a banking currency is thus kept in close relations with the needs of business. If the number of notes in the hands of the public becomes excessive, they may prefer to exchange them for standard coin by presenting them for this purpose to the bank. They will be led naturally to make such exchanges if the excess of the circulating medium operates to increase the supply of loanable capital, to depress interest rates, and thereby to attract money to other countries. Metallic money is the only money acceptable for export, and it would be necessary to present notes for redemption in coin in order to meet the demand for exportable currency.

When the deposit system is introduced, another element enters into the regulation of the volume of bank notes. If the supply of currency in the hands of the people becomes large, they begin depositing both notes and coin to their credit in the banks. Notes thus received on deposit are retired and are not reissued unless there is a demand for discounts. An excess of currency in circulation is thus rectified by the reduction of the notes in the hands of the public. The deposit constitutes an obligation of the bank, the same as the notes, and requires a sufficient cash reserve to provide for its payment on demand. The conversion of the note liability into a deposit liability prevents further issues of notes, if the reserve has been reduced nearly to the minimum limits required by law or by sound banking policy. This is usually the case when note issues tend to become excessive. Thus, in any given community, a combination of causes operates to keep a redeemable bank-note currency within the limits set by the requirements of business at any particular moment. An expanding volume of trade results in an expansion of note issues, in the form of loans, while a contracting volume of trade brings notes daily into the bank in payment of obligations which are not renewed. A contracting volume of trade also relaxes the demand for currency and increases the accumulation in individual hands, from which it is promptly carried to the banks to be deposited.

The automatic operation of a banking currency not only keeps the circulation within a country within limits adapted to business needs, but affords the means of keeping its commercial operations in harmonious relations with those of the world. The operation of the foreign exchanges comes into play when there is a greater accumulation of circulating capital in one community than another. The market for such capital is governed by the discount rate. If there is, for instance, an excess of capital upon the London market, the offerings exceed the effective demand, and under the law of supply and demand the rental price of circulating capital falls. Such conditions create an inducement to transfer capital to other markets, where a higher price is paid for its use. This transfer (under the supposed conditions of the absence of other banking credits) would have to be made in metallic money. The banks are the reservoirs of metallic money, and, if other means of transferring capital had been exhausted, their notes would be presented for redemption in gold, until the point was reached where there ceased to be any excess in the supply of capital at home over that in foreign markets, and discount rates again tended to become uniform. The volume of the notes in circulation in the exporting country would thus be reduced by the amount returned to the bank to obtain metallic money for export.

The conception which has occasionally prevailed, that bank notes may be issued in excess of the requirements of the community and may expel coin from circulation, is based upon the losses which have been suffered where bank notes have not conformed to the essential conditions that they shall be redeemed in coin on demand and be secured by commercial assets. The issue of notes upon any other basis than commercial assets tends to separate them from commercial business and to deprive the bank-note currency of the elasticity which it derives from such a connection. Professor Price, in answer to the question, "In what numbers will convertible bank notes circulate?" makes this answer:*

"The answer is the same as that which has already been given to the parallel question respecting coin. So many bank notes as the public has a distinct want for will circulate, and no more. It is the universal law of all commodities in use, the law of demand and supply. Neither bankers, nor Parliament, nor suspensions of the bank act, nor the need of borrowers, but the wants and convenience of the public, its willingness to hold bank notes, the number and amount of the specific payments which bank notes accomplish, with a certain spare stock as for all articles in use, can determine how many convertible bank notes will remain in circulation, and not be returned upon the bankers for payment. This is the truth of truths for a convertible paper currency. This is so obvious a consequence of the fact that bank notes are tools, and that their quantity will be regulated by the specific work which there is for them to do, that it almost seems a platitude to proclaim it."

The basis for the argument of Professor Price lies in the fact that notes are issued in exchange for commercial paper, which is the result of actual business transactions. It is the volume of these transactions which constitutes the primary demand for bank notes, not the bank notes which create transactions.† The notes constitute the supply of circulating capital which responds to the demand. The note is rarely created without demand and thrust upon the market to find an investment. The note, therefore, does not constitute the demand for loans; it is the loans which constitute the demand for the note. The most speculative demands for currency and credit are born on the stock exchanges, and they are satisfied by loans from deposits rather than from the power to create notes. The fault lies in the creation of fictitious and speculative loans rather than in the creation of bank notes. The correct reasoning upon the subject is well expressed by Professor Courcelle-Seneuil.‡

"When attentive study is given to the principles of the monetary circulation which have been set forth, the conviction remains that one or several banks of circulation, operating upon a market and committing no faults in their discounts, are never able to issue too many bills, whatever may be their efforts toward this end, because their issues have a natural and necessary limit. It may be concluded directly and absolutely that if banks commit faults it is always in their investments and never in their borrowings by notes or otherwise."

The greatest danger of excessive speculation is found in a rigid currency issued by the Government rather than in redeemable notes issued by banks. A Government paper currency is nonexportable and does not respond, either by expansion or contraction, to the requirements of trade. When the demand for currency is great, such money is often inadequate; when the demand relaxes, such money is excessive in volume and is either employed by its holders in speculation or presses heavily upon the whole volume of the money of the country, with the result of expelling the surplus by the export of gold. The same lack of responsiveness to the needs of trade is the characteristic defect of a bank-note currency secured by Government bonds or other securities which are not commercial in their character and of short terms of maturity. Such a form of security has only an indirect relation to the essential character of the notes as contracts to deliver money. To fulfill such contracts, as Prof. J. B. Say well says, "It is necessary that the bank have in its possession not merely securities of thorough soundness, but those always available and convertible instantly into money; for a holder of bills who thinks himself likely to be paid in lands or houses will not consent to receive the bills as cash."§

The issue of bank notes upon convertible commercial assets affords, therefore, the best means of giving elasticity to the currency and keeping it adjusted to the requirements of trade. What is meant by this elasticity is well set forth by Professor Dunbar:¶

"It means responsiveness to present increase or diminution of demand—the power of adaptation to the needs of the month, the week, or the day, whether rising or falling. * * * Elasticity implies the operation of counter forces, in a currency as well as in a steel spring. That a currency may be responsive to demand it is necessary that the forces tending respectively to expand or to restrict should be forces at work in the daily business of the bank, where it is brought into contact with the community by the stream of loans, deposits, and payments."

THE BENEFITS OF ELASTICITY.

Elasticity is one of the most important qualities of a good currency. This elasticity must be derived either from such a movement from place to place of a fixed volume of currency as provides the amount required at every given point or from such a capacity for increase or decrease in volume as meets the changing needs of trade. Experience has shown that a fixed volume of currency is not always equal to the demands put upon it and causes unnecessary advances in the rate for the rental of money. In every country there is usually a much greater demand for currency at certain periods than at others, and this enlarged demand happens to be almost simultaneous in several of the chief civilized countries which deal with each other as reciprocal producers and consumers of food products and finished goods. This special demand is most intense in the autumn, when the cereal crops and the cotton crop are harvested and taken to market. At such times there is not only unusual activity in the money centers, but a pressure for currency in the producing sections, which requires an enlarged supply of the circulating medium if reasonable wants are to be fully supplied.

*Nitti, Revue d'Économie Politique (1898), XII, p. 383.
†Jevons, "Investigations in Currency and Finance," p. 172.
‡"Natural Value," p. 146.
§"The issue of bills in connection with loans for short terms and made rigorously convertible is only the effect of transactions and not the cause of these transactions."—Juglar, p. 211.

*Currency and Banking, p. 54.
†Every market having to provide for a certain quantity of exchanges has need only of a certain quantity of instruments of payment.—Leroy-Beaulieu, Traité d'Économie Politique, III, p. 567. An increased equipment of the tools of exchange will eventually stimulate the volume of exchanges, but the notes can only be issued as demand for them arises.
‡Traité des Opérations de Banque, p. 224.
§Traité d'Économie Politique, p. 306.
¶"Quarterly Journal of Economics" (October, 1897), XII, p. 14.

There are other periodical demands for currency which affect banking accounts in a considerable degree, but the movement of the autumn is the most widespread and prolonged. Mr. Jevons, although an opponent of a true banking currency, admitted the periodical character of this pressure in England in an article on "The frequent autumnal pressure in the money market and the action of the Bank of England."* A largely increased volume of exchanges requires an increase in some manner in the medium of exchange. This increase may be obtained either by the mechanism of the deposit and check system, by the borrowing of money by one bank from another, or by the issue of bank notes. In the case of a demand for an increased medium of exchange upon the occasion of special financial operations in the cities, like the issue of a new loan or the payment of dividends, the medium of exchange furnished by deposits and loans is usually sufficient. How this system operates is thus set forth by the monetary commission:†

"The deposit currency by means of which the largest part of our commercial transactions is effected is particularly elastic. It expands and contracts automatically with every change in demand. If additional currency is wanted in a strictly commercial community for any of these extraordinary demands—by a railroad, for example, to provide for the payment of interest on its bonds—it is secured from an existing deposit, or by means of a loan granted in the form of deposit currency against which checks for the interest are drawn; and to the extent to which those to whom the interest is paid likewise make use of the check and deposit system, the whole transaction is carried through without the least trouble or friction."

While the deposit currency thus serves the purpose of the commercial centers, experience has shown that it is not acceptable and sufficient for the needs of the rural districts, and especially the producing and laboring classes. In most countries the bank-note circulation expands automatically to meet the demand for a larger means of conducting exchanges. This is not the case in the United States, because of the restrictive character of the note-issuing system. The country banks borrow regularly from the banks of New York and other reserve cities, and are thereby compelled to divide with these central banks the profits of the autumn business and to charge higher rates than would be the case if they could from their own resources provide the medium of local exchanges. The accounts of the country banks show a regular increase in the autumn in their loans from other banks, which almost disappears in the spring.‡ During January and February the country is usually emptying its idle money into New York; in March there is a slight reaction, lasting only a few weeks, and from May till August the tide again flows strongly toward New York. With August the turn comes, and the movement to the interior is again strong and continues until December.§

The effect of the withdrawal of capital from the reserve cities is often disastrous to financial operations in these cities. This demand has to be met mainly in currency, which the New York banks are required to hold as a reserve to the amount of 25 per cent of their deposits. Their losses of currency reduce their reserves, and at periods of the greatest strain have often reduced them below the legal limit.‖ This need not have occurred if greater freedom of note issue had been given to the national banks. They would then be able to meet demands for currency as they are met in Scotland and Canada, without the impairment of their reserves or the undue increase of their discount rates. The manner in which the note issues of the Scotch banks respond to the necessity for a larger medium of exchange is thus set forth by Mr. Gilbart:¶

"In Scotland the lowest point of circulation is in March and the highest in November. The advance, however, between these two points is not uniform, for the highest of the intervening months is May, after which there is a slight reaction; but it increases again until November, and falls off in December. The reason of the great increase in May and November is that these are the seasons for making payments. The interest due on mortgages is then settled, annuities are then paid, the country people usually take the interest on their deposit receipts, and the servants receive their wages. There are frequently large sums transferred by way of mortgage. It is the custom of Scotland to settle all transactions, large as well as small, by bank notes—not by checks on bankers, as in London. It is remarkable that these monthly variations occur uniformly every year, while the amount of the circulation in the corresponding months of different years undergoes comparatively little change.

"The circulation of Scotland is at its lowest point in the month of March, is higher in July, and reaches its highest point in November. In the corresponding months of different years there is but little deviation in the amount of the circulation. These facts prove that the circulation of Scotland does not produce any effect upon prices, nor, consequently, upon the foreign exchanges. It is hardly necessary to adduce evidence in proof of the fact that the prices of commodities do not go on increasing from March to November in every year; and if they do not, they can not be regulated by the currency."

The Canadian bank-note system is also directly responsive to the demands of production and exchange. Its fluctuations are thus set forth by Mr. Root:

"As surely and as regularly as the autumn months come round and the inevitable accompanying demand for additional currency begins to manifest itself, does the circulation of the banks automatically respond; the expansion ordinarily continues until about November, when a maximum, some 20 per cent in excess of the nominal circulation during the summer months, is reached. In consequence of this prompt and adequate response to every legitimate demand of commerce for more of the media of exchange, the conditions in Canada are quite different from those to which we, in this country, are accustomed. As a prominent banker has recently stated it, 'Panics for fear of stringency are thus unknown. The Canadians never know what it is to go through an American money squeeze in the autumn.'"

The proof of this responsiveness of the Canadian currency to the needs of business is afforded by the figures of the circulation. While the Canadian banks are permitted to issue circulation to the amount of their capital, which was $63,241,533 on December 31, 1898, their note issues rise during the period of special demand for a circulating medium and are promptly reduced again under the operation of the redemption system when this demand declines. The circulation varies by 20 per cent in the course of the year. This was the case in 1892, when the minimum circulation of May was $31,383,000 and the maximum circulation of October was $38,688,000, only to fall in the following May to $31,927,000. The circulation touched even lower points under the influence of the dull business of 1894 and 1895, but rose on October 31, 1898, to $42,543,446 to fall again on March 31, 1899, to $38,409,227.

THE "CURRENCY" AND "BANKING" PRINCIPLES.

The question has been raised by a number of economists whether the saving of capital due to the employment of a bank-note currency is not obtained at the sacrifice of safety and the real economic interests of the country where such a currency is employed. The fact that systems of bank-note issues have in many cases proved defective has led to the conclusion that the theory of a banking currency was itself unsound. The subject was discussed with great warmth in England during the first half of the present century and the lines of battle were then drawn between the advocates of what was called the "currency principle" on the one hand and the "banking principle" on the other. The advocates of the currency principle laid down the proposition that bank notes should not be issued beyond the amount at which they would fluctuate exactly as a metallic currency would fluctuate. This limit they found in the issue of notes simply as certificates, fully covered by coin, or only in such amounts without a metallic cover as would constitute the minimum amount below which the circulation was never likely to descend. It was contended that credit is unduly stimulated by the issue of paper notes as a substitute for metallic money, and that in such cases "the whole money of the country, paper and gold, indistinguishably, is depreciated in comparison with the money of other countries."*

It is necessary in order to sustain an indictment against the value of a bank-note currency in promoting the convenience and the real economic interest of a community either to show that all credit is in itself injurious to the community, or that bank notes so far differ from other forms of credit that they threaten a peculiar and excessive danger. The first point hardly calls for serious discussion. The abolition of all forms of credit in business transactions would mean the arrest of the mechanism of modern exchange and the restriction of production within very narrow limits. The consummation of every transaction for cash without contracts for future delivery would require an immense volume of money, and would mean also that the prices of all commodities and services would be governed by the demand and supply of the moment instead of by sound judgment as to future supplies.

Contracts to pay money for future production would become impossible, and prices and wages would fluctuate violently under the influence of temporary causes, without the steadying effects which would be given by the ability to make contracts for future performance. Nearly all forms of credit are in the nature of contracts to deliver money at some future time. This is the nature of a bank note, a deposit account with a bank, a bill of exchange, and a promissory note. The first two forms differ from the others in the fact that the holder of the contract has the power to demand performance at any time, at his pleasure, instead of on a date fixed by the maker of the contract.

That there are certain risks involved in modern credit transactions can not be denied. Production, where it is carried on in anticipation of future demand, may be carried further in certain cases than if it were carried on only in response to immediate orders; but all such risks are controlled and reduced to a minimum by the regulating force of prices throughout the world and the existence of organized markets, especially on the produce and stock exchanges. Gen. Francis A. Walker, one of the most intelligent and candid of the opponents of a banking currency, dismisses the possibility of risk where paper is reasonably secured by the following comparisons:†

"Yet, though the issue of bank notes on a partial basis of specie under the doctrine of chances is always, in the nature of the case, at a certain risk, this does not constitute a fatal objection to paper-money banking, if it be otherwise desirable. Men and communities rightly take the necessary risk of collisions and boiler explosions for the sake of the saving in time and the gain in power which they derive from the use of steam cars and steamboats. So it might be with disasters to which, from the fault of managers or through causes that could neither be controlled nor anticipated, paper-money banking should be found subject."

Dismissing, then, the proposition that all forms of credit should be abolished in a modern industrial community, it becomes necessary to examine the proposition that bank notes constitute a form of credit involving peculiar dangers. The question was disputed in the discussion over the English bank act during the first half of the century, whether a bank-note currency fluctuated in exactly the same manner as a metallic currency. Some of the advocates of such a currency contended that its fluctuations were regulated by precisely the same laws and in precisely the same manner as a metallic currency—that an excess in the volume of currency would correct itself by the presentation of bank notes for redemption and the exportation of the surplus in the precious metals. Other advocates of a banking currency contend that it acts as a cushion for the violent fluctuations in the supply of money caused by abnormal demands for the precious metals—that, in fact, a bank-note currency need not and ought not to fluctuate, as expressed by Mr. Nicholson, "exactly as a currency composed of coin only would have fluctuated under similar conditions." The contention of the opponents of a banking currency has been that it would not fluctuate in response to the movements of the precious metals and that such fluctuations were necessary in order to apply the corrective influence of the foreign exchanges to excessive issues of paper.

There are elements of truth in the position taken by each side in this controversy. It is highly desirable that a bank-note currency should be responsive in some degree to the play of the foreign exchanges and to the volume of metallic money. Entire absence of such responsiveness would result in the same dangers as issues of inconvertible paper money. It does not follow, however, that a bank-note currency should be governed absolutely by the movement of the precious metals in the same degree as if the paper notes were themselves coined money. The law of marginal utility sends the notes where metallic money might not go, thereby equipping a country more efficiently with the tools of exchange, and the demands for metallic money are so peculiar and specific in their nature that they are often influenced by causes which ought not to be permitted to operate at once and with full effect upon the domestic circulation of a country and in fact do not thus operate upon a properly regulated bank-note currency.

Nearly all the various forms of banking credit are contracts to deliver metallic money. They are promises to pay money at some future time. Professor Jevons, an able advocate of the currency principle, says:‡

"Every one who promises to pay gold on a future day thereby increases the anticipated supply of gold, and there is no limit to the amount of gold which can thus be thrown upon the market. Every one who draws a bill or issues a note, unconsciously acts as a 'bear' upon the gold market. Everything goes well, and apparently prosperity falls upon the whole community, so long as these promises to pay gold can be redeemed or replaced by new promises. * * *

"But foreigners will not hold such promises on the same footing; and, if the exchanges are against us, the metallic, not the paper, part of the currency will

*Investigations in Currency and Finance, page 160.

†Report, page 311. Statistics of payments of interest and dividends on railroad bonds and stocks in the United States in 1897, furnished to the Monetary Commission by the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, showed such wide variations as $67,000,000 in January and $14,500,000 in February.

‡The national banks located in the Southern States have an aggregate capital of $68,680,000. On October 6, 1896, they had borrowed largely from banks in the East, to assist in handling the cotton crop, $13,548,000. On March 9 following these loans had been reduced to $2,516,200. They succeeded in borrowing for a part of their needs, but commercial necessities required more. With proper banking facilities the necessity for such borrowing now existing would be reduced to a minimum.—Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury (Lyman J. Gage) on the State of the Finances, 1897, page 78.

§Report of the Monetary Commission, page 320.

‖Thus Mr. A. D. Noyes says in regard to the pressure of 1893: "On the New York banks the strain was particularly violent. During the month of June the cash reserves of banks in that city decreased nearly twenty millions; during July they fell off twenty-one millions more. The deposits intrusted to them had been loaned, according to the banking practice, in the Eastern market; their sudden recall in quantity forced the Eastern banks to contract their loans immediately."—Thirty Years of American Finance, page 191.

¶Principles and Practice of Banking, II, page 216.

Canadian Bank-Note Currency, Sound Currency (December 15, 1894), II, page 322.

*F. A. Walker, "Money," p. 430.

†"Money," p. 411.

‡Money and the Mechanism of Exchange, pp. 315-316.

go abroad. It is at this moment that bankers will find no difficulty in expanding their issues, because many persons have claims to meet in gold, and the notes are regarded as gold. The notes will thus conveniently fill up the void occasioned by the exportation of specie; prices will be kept up, prosperity will continue, the balance of foreign trade will be still against us, and the game of replacing gold by promises will go on to an unlimited extent, until it becomes actually impossible to find more gold to make necessary payments abroad."

These propositions contain some truth. The difficulty is that if they constitute fatal objections to bank-note issues, they also constitute objections to all other contracts for the delivery of metallic money. The condition assumed by Mr. Jevons, in which notes would continue to replace gold until no more gold remained for export, would occur only if reasonable reserves were not kept against bank-note issues. The situation would simply be that more contracts for the future delivery of money had been made than could be fulfilled. The money market would be in the same condition as the wheat market, when demands for the performance of contracts for future delivery exceeded the capacity of brokers to make delivery. In the case of money, however, the difficulty of creating a corner would be infinitely greater than in the case of wheat or any other single commodity, because the supply of money in the world is subject to narrow fluctuations and is distributed among many commercial centers, where it is held subject to rental at a price. Sound banking and sound methods of credit undoubtedly require that reasonable regard should be had in the issue of instruments of credit to the ability to fulfill the contracts which are made. This is equally true of other commodities as well as instruments of credit. There are special reasons why the State is justified in requiring guarantees of solvency from those who deal in money, but it is not necessary that these conditions should go so far as to forbid contracts in the form of bank notes for the future delivery of money.

Mr. Jevons criticised those who advocated the adoption of a true banking currency in England, upon the ground that if they wanted currency they might obtain gold by giving up capital for it. He declared:*

"This metal, again, is only to be had, in the absence of gold mines, by that state of foreign trade which brings it and does not drain it away again. The principal currency, in short, must be regarded as a commodity, the supply of which is to be left to the natural action of the laws of supply and demand. The unrestricted issue of paper representative notes produces an artificial interference with these natural conditions."

The words "natural" and "artificial" have no place in such a discussion. The issue of paper instruments of credit is just as "natural" an element of modern commerce as the evolution of stamped disks of gold as the sole standard of value. It is true that the use of paper credit modifies to some extent the movement of the precious metals which might take place if no such instruments existed, but the one influence is no more "natural" or "artificial" than the other. It is because the use of such instruments permits economies in the use of gold, and therefore interferes with "the natural action of the laws of supply and demand" for gold that these instruments are of value to the community. The opening of railways interfered with "the natural action of the laws of supply and demand" for seats in post coaches, but that constitutes no argument for the retention of the "natural conditions" of the old mode of conveyance.

Mr. Jevons appears to share the opinion of General Walker, that the power to borrow notes from a bank is an encouragement to speculation. They reason, more or less unconsciously, as though the entire profit derived from the economy of note issues went to the borrower of the notes, instead of being spread over the whole volume of banking operations. The borrower of notes has to pay for them in the form of discount. If the public, in a period of speculation, is willing to pay for the use of currency by high discount rates, they will be able to obtain it in the form of gold. There is nothing in the possession of a gold currency which prevents the wildest speculation. Gold can be obtained at a price, if it is required, in any country where the speculative spirit runs high, and experience has shown that other forms of credit are quite as useful in promoting speculation as the issue of bank notes. The rental price of gold might be slightly higher than the price of bank notes, so far as either was required in speculative transactions, but the difference would hardly be such as to check the demand for money during a period of speculation.

Bank notes may facilitate speculation just as other forms of credit may. The proposition that credit should for this reason be suppressed has already been dismissed with the consent of General Walker. As a matter of fact, it is generally admitted, even by critics of a bank-note currency, that notes are not the primary cause of speculation. It is simply contended that they provide it with a convenient tool. But deposit accounts, the check system, and certified checks also provide such a tool of a much more efficient character and in much greater volume than bank notes.† These other instruments of credit constitute the mechanism of modern wholesale transactions and speculation upon the produce and stock exchanges. Money, even where bank notes are included under the definition of money, forms but a trifling percentage in the settlement of these transactions. The issue of bank notes, therefore, can not contribute in any material degree to promoting speculation in the great commercial centers as credit is at present organized.

What then is the true law of the operation of bank notes upon credit, and the movement of the precious metals? If bank notes do not contribute materially to sustaining speculation, what aid do they give to the business community? The answer to these questions is derived largely from the law of marginal utility, which, under the clear reasoning of the Austrian and German economists, has solved with precision so many economic problems. Bank notes do not respond directly and precisely to the movements of the precious metals, because they find their employment to a large extent upon the margin and beyond the margin of the utility of metallic money. If, for illustration, notes may be issued upon a reserve of 50 per cent in coin, the community gets the use of twice the amount of currency which it would otherwise obtain at the same cost. A community capable of investing its capital in money to the extent of say $50,000,000 would thus be able to command the use of $100,000,000 in well secured circulating notes. If the law required a reserve of 50 per cent against note issues, and the notes outstanding were constantly at the maximum allowed by law, a demand for gold from abroad might lead the paper currency to fluctuate exactly as the metallic currency over its whole volume.

The usual conditions of banking and credit, however, even where fixed metallic reserves are required, do not involve the issue of notes to the utmost limit allowed by law. Such issues occur only in the poorer portions of the community, where the demand for a tool of exchange exceeds the amount of capital available for investment in such a tool. In the great commercial centers there is usually a surplus of metallic money, whose movements backwards and forwards from country to country do not necessarily involve a corresponding reduction of the domestic circulation. The domestic circulation, especially in the districts removed from the commercial centers, remains unimpaired, while the portions of the community which are engaged in great speculative movements surrender gold or borrow it back, according to the decisive question whether the price they get in the one case corresponds to the disadvantage of being without it, or the price they pay in the other corresponds to the advantage of having it. In these transactions a fraction of 1 per cent may decide the question whether gold shall move from one commercial center to another. There may be a sudden call in one of these centers for the execution of contracts to deliver gold. There is no reason why these conditions should affect the domestic circulation of the country, except so far as they indicate that the entire structure of credit has been unduly expanded. In that case the pressure will be felt upon all the issuing banks and a contraction of note issues will follow.

It has to be borne in mind that the transfer of the precious metals is not governed purely by the state of trade. The problem of international exchanges is no longer the simple shipment of gold to cover an excess of importations of merchandise. Securities often take the place of gold as payment, bills of exchange are sent to the country, where they mature or are held in the creditor country pending maturity, according to the rate of interest in either country, and gold itself is loaned on credit where its rental is highest. This being the case, a special demand for gold is created on the one hand, which is not dependent upon the domestic transactions of any one country, and a necessity is created on the other hand for a domestic medium of exchange which is not controlled absolutely by these temporary and almost arbitrary movements of the precious metals. Every community ought to take measures to maintain its solvency by retaining a certain minimum supply of the precious metals. This is a matter of sound banking policy or of government regulation, but it is very far from involving the requirement that the bank note shall be destroyed as an instrument of credit and that the surface of the domestic circulation shall be swept by every tempest upon the stock exchanges which affects the rental price of gold. The steadying and beneficial operation of a bank-note currency in these respects is thus set forth by Professor Cauwes:*

"The entire community profits by issue, at first because the circulation of bills relieves it from the purchase of a great quantity of metallic money, and then because a mixed circulation (of bullion, coin, and paper) is better regulated, according to the movements of foreign commerce, than a circulation exclusively metallic. If gold and silver were the only money it would result that every time the importations of foreign goods were in excess of the exportations, money going out of the country would subject the domestic market to a crisis having the consequence of a sudden rise of prices. Paper money, acting as an auxiliary to metallic money in quantities varying according to the needs of business, averts the monetary crisis which the operation of the foreign exchanges might otherwise occasion, and thus gives more stability to commerce."

The movements of a bank-note currency, therefore, do not and need not correspond precisely to the movements of the precious metals in order to insure healthy financial conditions. The advantage of such a currency will often be found in this very divergence from mathematical relations to the supply of metallic money. In one community the demand for tools of exchange, perhaps for only a temporary purpose, may strain the note-issuing power to the maximum limit of safety. In such a community the power to issue notes will be of the highest value, because the desired service to trade can be rendered for a fraction of the cost of bringing coin or bullion into the community for the full amount of currency required. In another community the lethargy of transactions or the preference for other forms of credit may reduce the volume of outstanding notes to nearly the level of metallic reserves or even below that level. Such a condition may permit the surrender of coin or bullion to a community where the supply is insufficient, but without destroying the power to expand the note issue within reasonable limits when there is an increased demand for the medium of exchange. The greatest use and highest value of the note-issuing function will be found on the margin where coin can not go because it is too costly. If the blanket of a metallic currency will spread over only those portions of the community well equipped with surplus capital, the use of the note-issuing function will spread a useful fringe of benefits over a wider area and protect the entire community against the inconveniences of a sudden contraction of the metallic cover.

VALUE OF NOTE ISSUES IN NEW COUNTRIES.

There are two classes of conditions under which the privilege of issuing bank notes under the minimum of restrictions is of great service. The first class of conditions are those prevailing in comparatively undeveloped countries, where the supply of capital is not equal to the demand for it for creating the machinery of production and means of transportation, and where banking offices are widely separated. So pressing is the need for an economical paper currency under such conditions that it has sprung into being beyond the law and outside the law where no legal provision has been made for it. One of the most interesting cases of a successful currency of this sort, which was maintained for several years in the face of hostile legal enactments, was that known as "George Smith's money," an episode in the early history of Wisconsin. Wisconsin, in 1838, like most of the newer Territories of the United States, was without a sufficient metallic currency and without an organized system of banks of issue. The creators of the new money were two Scotchmen, George Smith and Alexander Mitchell, who had been educated in the efficiency of bank-note issues in their native country. George Smith obtained from the Territorial legislature of Wisconsin a charter for the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance Company. The bill became a law on February 26, 1839, and authorized the company to "make insurance upon life or lives, and employ such capital as may belong or accrue to said company in the purchase of public or other stock, or in any other moneyed transaction or operations for the sole benefit of the said company." There was a general clause, usually incorporated in charters, that "nothing herein contained shall give the said company banking privileges." This clause was practically ignored and the banking feature of the business done by the company soon overshadowed the insurance feature.

The company advertised to "receive money on deposit and transact other moneyed operations, in which, by their charter, they are allowed to engage." Certificates of deposit were issued in sums of $1, $3, $5, and $10, in the form of bank bills. These certificates met a popular want and they were soon found in people's pockets all over Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, and Michigan. They were redeemed in specie at the central office in Milwaukee, and in New York exchange at the current rate through agencies in Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, Galena, Cincinnati, and St. Louis. The success of "George Smith's money" was so great that the jealousy of other bankers was incurred, and repeated efforts were made to break down the bank. There was a fight running over several sessions of the Wisconsin legislature to have the charter forfeited or repealed, but in these debates no question was raised in regard to the solvency of the institution, and it was asserted without contradiction that its notes were as "good as gold."

When the other banks, the day after Thanksgiving in 1849, attempted to force the bank to suspend specie payments by gathering and presenting for redemption all the notes they could find, Mr. Mitchell directed that the bank be kept open until a late hour of the evening and that depositors and note holders be paid as rapidly as they presented themselves. Every note presented was redeemed even before the reserve supply of cash arrived which was ordered from Chicago. The issues of certificates at this time had reached about $1,000,000, having steadily grown in amount from the organization of the bank. The people of Wisconsin voted down a constitution which prohibited bank-note

* Money and the Mechanism of Exchange, p. 312.

† The practice of certifying checks where the maker of the check had not even a sufficient banking credit to cover it attained considerable development in New York during the decade from 1860 to 1870, and became an efficient aid in stock speculation. The legislature of New York passed a law to govern the subject in 1869 and the Federal Congress in 1882 imposed penalties for "overcertification," but neither of these laws sought in any way to restrict certification where the maker of the check had a legitimate credit for the amount.—Vide Bolles, "Financial History of the United States," III, pp. 365–367.

* Cours d'Économic Politique, II, p. 309.

issues in the State, largely because of their sympathy with the Mitchell bank. When finally Wisconsin was admitted to the Union in 1848, a general banking law was passed, under which the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance Company reorganized. The advantages of this currency, the spontaneous outgrowth of business needs, have been graphically set forth by Mr. Root: *

'It is obvious that 'George Smith's money,' which played so large a part in the early settlement of the Northwest, took the place of other kinds of money, and especially of specie, for which the products of the country would have otherwise been sold. On condition that the currency should always be redeemed in specie, this was a good thing for the holders of Smith's money as well as for Smith; that is, it was an advantage to the public. It was an advantage because it was more convenient to handle and carry and count, while it performed all the local exchanges equally well. It introduced the principle of barter on a large scale. Whatever work bank checks would do in the city of Milwaukee, George Smith's money would do over the greater part of Wisconsin, Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa. It enabled the local exchanges to be carried on without specie. * * *

"In the fall, when the crops began to move, there was no lack of money for legitimate trade, because it was as easy to put out these certificates at one time as at another. In the winter, when lake navigation was closed, the certificates answered all the purposes of a local circulating medium. In the spring, when the steamboats began to move, bringing new settlers and cargoes of goods, the certificates came back to headquarters mainly for the purchase of New York drafts, after which they took their usual round again."

A like device for escaping the restrictions imposed by a too narrow note-issuing system is that of the Cheque Bank in England, which was instituted after the bank act of 1844. Money was received by this bank on deposit, and books of checks were issued for even denominations, which might be filled in for less than the denomination, but not for more. The face value of the checks issued did not exceed the depositor's credit, so that the receiver of such a check had the assurance of the bank that the depostor's account was not overdrawn. Such checks were made payable by the Cheque Bank only through some other banker and not at the counter of the bank, thereby escaping the prohibition of the law against promissory notes payable to bearer on demand.

The checks passed between individuals for cash, and the Cheque Bank established relations with some 1,500 domestic and foreign banks which agreed to receive and cash its checks. Professor MacLeod expressed the opinion that these checks, if not a violation of the letter of the law, were at least a violation of its spirit, and if not interfered with would open the door wide for any amount of issues of checks capable of circulating as money, by any bank in the Kingdom.† In this view he is correct, and such a device would undoubtedly have been widely adopted if the education of the English people in the use of other forms of credit had not made it comparatively unnecessary. The success of the Cheque Bank well illustrates the principle that the real needs of a community will usually find spontaneous relief along the lines of least resistance and will often circumvent repressive laws.

The issue of bank notes under the minimum of restrictions is of peculiar value in periods of panic, even in countries otherwise well equipped with the mechanism of credit. The demand on such occasions is for some article which is readily exchangeable and which will be accepted in the fulfillment of contracts to deliver money. Such contracts under normal business conditions are so generally cleared against each other that their fulfillment is not often demanded. These conditions change when confidence is impaired, because a great void is then caused in the usual mechanism of credit which bank notes are called upon to fill. The issues of bank notes which then occur are abnormal in their character, are not required beyond the period of accute pressure for currency, and may be issued by a sound institution without much regard to the exact proportion of notes to the metallic reserve, so long as the reserve is sufficient to meet all demands and inspire confidence in the solidity of the institution.

It is the recognition of the peculiar character of this demand for currency in periods of panic which led to the provisions of the charters of the Imperial Bank of Germany, the Austro-Hungarian Bank, and the Bank of Japan, that notes might be issued without the increase of the metallic reserves when they paid a tax to the Government at the rate of about 5 per cent a year. The undue restriction of the normal note-issuing function in these countries has compelled resort to this power on many other occasions than those of actual panic,‡ but upon all these occasions the power to issue notes, even under a heavy penalty, has proved useful to the business community.

The utility of the power to issue bank notes without fixed limits in meeting the abnormal demand of a panic has been clearly shown on all of the occasions of crises which have swept the London money market within the present century. The Bank of England was strong enough, only a short time after its resumption of cash payments, to stay the panic of 1825 by the free issue of its own notes. The display of stacks of £1 notes upon the counters of the Gurneys at Norwich was sufficient to arrest the run upon their bank.§ The bank came to the rescue of the money market in a similar manner in the crisis of 1847, again in 1857, and again in 1866. There never was a question on any of these occasions of the value of the notes of the bank as the equivalent of money. The only question which arose under the charter of the bank after the restrictive act of 1844, was the authority to issue a sufficient amount of notes to meet the demands of the commercial community.

The bank act greatly hampered the issue of notes, but authority was given to the bank by the Government on each of these occasions to disregard the limits of the law and issue as many notes as might be required. The mere fact that the authority to issue notes was given, and that currency could be had by solvent borrowers, was sufficient to stay the tide of panic in 1847. Notes which had been hoarded, under the impression that the limit of issues fixed by the law would soon be reached, came pouring from their hiding places, gold which had been stored in deposit vaults was returned to the banks for deposit, and both the metallic and banking reserves of the Bank of England rapidly rose to safe proportions. A similar experience accompanied the crisis of 1857, when £2,000,000 in notes were actually issued above the legal limit. The crisis of 1866 was met in a similar manner. The Bank of England could hardly have continued to meet its liabilities for another day if the chancellor of the exchequer had not announced in the House of Commons on the evening of May 11—"Black Friday"—that the Government had addressed a letter to the bank authorizing the suspension of the note limit.‖ The panic was again checked by the knowledge that a medium of exchange could be obtained by solvent borrowers.

The power to issue notes without a rigid limit, even if they are restricted to a fixed relation to the metallic reserve, is of value in periods of panic. It usually inspires confidence at such times for the great note-issuing banks to borrow gold from abroad. This was done by the Bank of England on the occasion of the Baring failure in 1890, when £3,000,000 was obtained from the Bank of France upon the security of exchequer bonds, and £1,500,000 was obtained from St. Petersburg. The crisis of 1890 was prevented from degenerating into a panic by a combination among the leading banks,* so that there was not much special call for currency to fulfill money contracts, and there was no tendency to withdraw deposits from the banks because of distrust. If such a panic had occurred, accompanied by a demand for deposits from the banks, the importations of gold would have proved a defective as well as insufficient resource for meeting the demand. It would have been otherwise if the gold had been availed of under such circumstances as a reserve against note issues to the amount of twice or three times its value. The potency of the gold would then have been doubled or trebled in amount and its real efficiency would have been increased in a much greater ratio by reason of the general preference for notes over coin.

CHARLES A. CONANT.

* "Sound Currency" (April 15, 1898), V, p. 129. All the facts given are from Mr. Root's paper.

† "There can be no possible doubt that these instruments, these crossed bank notes, are an utter and complete violation of the manifest purpose and intention, not only of the bank charter act, but of all our monetary legislation for the last century. For what is easier than for the bank and its customers to agree to make these checks for £1, and put them into circulation? Then we have at once £1 bank notes. So also the checks for 10s. and 5s. are the old silver notes back again. If the Cheque Bank may do this with impunity, why may not every other bank in the Kingdom do the same?"—Theory and Practice of Banking, II, p. 376.

‡ In Germany notes were issued subject to the tax during sixteen weeks of 1898, and such issues stood on December 31, at 282,955,280 marks ($70,000,000).

§ MacLeod, Theory and Practice of Banking, II, p. 118.

‖ Gilbart, II, p. 354. One of the representatives of the joint-stock banks is reported to have said to the representative of the Bank of England, at a meeting of the leading bankers just before midnight, before the limit of note issue was removed, "I can draw a couple of checks to-morrow morning which will shut you up at once."

* Mr. Lidderdale, the governor of the Bank of England, secured an agreement among the joint-stock banks of London, the leading provincial banks, and the joint-stock banks of Scotland to guarantee the liquidation of the Baring indebtedness to the amount of £15,000,000. Vide MacLeod, Theory of Credit, II, p. 836.

Civil Government for Alaska—This conflict will continue until justice prevails and the rights of the people are respected.

SPEECH

OF

HON. J. H. DAVIDSON,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 28, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes—

Mr. DAVIDSON said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: At the closing hours of this session we find many things undone which ought to have been done. That we have enacted important legislation upon a variety of subjects there is no question, but whether our sins of omission exceed those of commission remains to be seen. I do not at this time intend to comment upon the things done, but to call attention to one of the things which thus far has been left undone. I refer to the proposed legislation (H. R. 3717) intended to more thoroughly regulate and control the sale of oleomargarine.

This proposed legislation is of vital importance to the dairying interests of our country; to those who produce butter from cream and milk and who do not believe it is just or fair to compel them to compete with a substitute produced from the fats of hogs and steers, this substitute being colored to resemble butter and placed upon the market and sold as such in direct competition with the genuine article. The use of animal fats as a substitute for butter was first discovered by a French scientist named Mege during the siege of Paris in 1870 and 1871. Experience and invention have resulted in the production of a substitute for butter which now so closely resembles the pure article in color, flavor, and odor that it is difficult to detect the difference.

The marvelous increase in the amount of oleomargarine annually manufactured and sold is of especial interest to many people. The manufacturer of the article is interested and pleased because of his increased profits. The dairyman is interested and alarmed because of this undue competition. The consumer is interested and curious to know how much of this substance he has unwittingly consumed.

The present law regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine was enacted in 1886. At that time, owing to the increase in the sale of colored oleomargarine, twenty-two States of the Union had passed laws intended to regulate its sale. These were found deficient, and Congress, in response to the appeal from the people, enacted a law imposing a tax of 2 cents upon each pound manufactured, and in addition required of each manufacturer the payment of a license fee of $600 per year; of each wholesale dealer $480 per year, and of each retail dealer $48 per year.

When the proposition was first presented a higher tax was desired but finally the tax was made less in consideration of another provision in the law, which was supposed to be its most important part, namely, the provision for the branding and marking of each package. It was believed then that this branding feature would compel this substitute for butter to be sold for what it was and upon its merits. Had that result been accomplished this proposed legislation would not now be necessary. Experience has proven, however, that the branding feature of that law has been of no particular value. There is abundant evidence to show that its provisions are not only violated but are avoided in many different ways.

No matter how thoroughly a package may be branded when it passes from the manufacturer to the wholesale dealer and thence to the retailer, it is not a difficult matter to remove the brands and place this substitute upon the market as butter and sell it as such. By reason of such deception the dealer is able to realize enormous profits on the money invested, although in so doing he not only defrauds the consumer who asks for butter, who pays the price of butter, and who thinks he is receiving butter, but he perpetrates a fraud upon the great dairy interests of the country. Against such deception and rascality the dairy people now ask for protection.

I submit herewith a table which shows the amount of oleomargarine produced each year since November, 1886, when the present law went into effect:

	Produced.	Revenue paid.
	Pounds.	Dollars.
On hand November 1, 1886	181,090
During the fiscal year ended June 30—
1887 (from November 1, 1886)	21,513,537	723,948.04
1888	34,325,527	864,139.88
1889	35,664,026	804,247.91
1890	32,324,032	786,291.72
1891	44,392,409	1,077,924.14
1892	48,364,155	1,266,326.00
1893	67,224,298	1,670,643.50
1894	69,632,246	1,728,479.90
1895	56,958,105	1,409,211.18
1896	50,853,234	1,219,432.46
1897	45,531,207	1,084,129.60
1898	57,516,186	1,315,708.54
1899	83,130,474	1,956,618.56
Total	647,610,476	15,942,101.43

It will be noticed from this table that the production of this article has steadily increased, and especially is this true during the last year, when the increase was more than 50 per cent over the production of the year previous. Of the 83,141,081 pounds actually produced last year, 79,702,288 pounds were shipped to and disposed of by dealers in the several States of the Union, and, in my judgment, at least 90 per cent of this was colored in imitation of genuine butter and was sold as such. Others may say this is not true, but I think the late disclosures at Philadelphia show beyond question that this is true. In that city newspaper reporters opened a store and engaged in the business, and they state under oath that every pound they sold was sold as butter. They advertised it as butter; they represented it to be butter, and they sold it at the price usually paid for butter; and this was done under an arrangement with the wholesalers or agents of the manufacturers, by which, in consideration of an additional payment of 1 cent per pound, they were to be protected from the State authorities.

At the beginning it should be well understood that this legislation is not directed against oleomargarine as a product standing by itself and sold upon its merits, but is desired solely for the purpose of preventing the sale of oleomargarine as butter when colored in imitation thereof.

Thirty-two States, containing a population of more than fifty millions of people, have passed laws forbidding the sale of oleomargarine when colored in semblance of butter.

I submit here a list of these States, with the population of each as shown by the census of 1890:

	Population.		Population.
New York	5,997,853	South Carolina	1,151,149
Pennsylvania	5,228,014	Nebraska	1,058,910
Illinois	3,826,351	Maryland	1,042,390
Ohio	3,672,316	West Virginia	762,794
Missouri	2,679,184	Connecticut	746,258
Massachusetts	2,238,943	Maine	661,086
Michigan	2,093,889	Colorado	412,198
Iowa	1,911,896	New Hampshire	376,530
Kentucky	1,858,635	Washington	349,390
Georgia	1,837,353	Oregon	313,767
Tennessee	1,766,518	Vermont	332,442
Wisconsin	1,686,880	South Dakota	328,808
Virginia	1,655,980	Utah	207,905
Alabama	1,513,017	North Dakota	182,711
New Jersey	1,444,933	Delaware	168,496
Minnesota	1,301,826
California	1,208,130	Total	50,117,440

The States and Territories which have not passed laws forbidding the sale of oleomargarine colored in semblance of butter are:

	Population.		Population.
Texas	2,235,523	New Mexico	153,593
Indiana	2,192,404	Montana	132,156
North Carolina	1,617,947	Idaho	84,385
Kansas	1,427,096	Oklahoma	61,834
Mississippi	1,289,700	Wyoming	60,705
Arkansas	1,128,179	Arizona	59,620
Louisiana	1,118,587	Nevada	45,761
Florida	391,422
Rhode Island	345,506	Total	12,604,790
District of Columbia	230,392

Now, for the purpose of showing what disposition was made of the 79,702,288 pounds of oleomargarine consumed during the last year, I submit a statement showing the States into which it was shipped, together with the number of dealers in each State and the number of pounds so disposed of:

Yellow oleomargarine sold contrary to law in 1899.

	Number of dealers.	Quantity sold.		Number of dealers.	Quantity sold.
		Pounds.			Pounds.
Alabama	21	226,053	New York	14	222,788
California		74,923	North Dakota	18	7,710
Colorado	95	1,123,537	Ohio	1,005	8,830,989
Connecticut	5	134,255	Oregon	3	41,250
Delaware	48	40,475	Pennsylvania	717	11,433,341
Georgia	61	495,004	South Carolina	24	256,159
Illinois	2,020	18,638,921	South Dakota	4	55,432
Iowa	3	79,922	Tennessee	83	714,640
Kentucky	217	1,490,577	Utah		8,450
Maine	17	102,274	Vermont	1	2,990
Maryland	58	1,791,950	Virginia	121	1,159,400
Massachusetts	108	2,083,889	Washington	5	63,345
Minnesota	30	1,345,865	West Virginia	172	1,206,865
Missouri	231	3,133,313	Wisconsin	23	714,742
Nebraska	73	1,024,985
New Hampshire	19	445,583	Total	5,492	62,825,582
New Jersey	296	5,875,975

Oleomargarine sold in States where legal to color.

	Number of dealers.	Quantity sold.		Number of dealers.	Quantity sold.
		Pounds.			Pounds.
Alaska	5	18,080	Mississippi	17	104,622
Arkansas	35	380,389	Montana		446,022
Arizona	5	78,767	Nevada		625
District of Columbia	61	816,848	New Mexico	12	115,650
Florida	82	590,225	North Carolina	9	110,224
Idaho	3	58,224	Oklahoma	10	117,398
Indiana	306	3,923,228	Rhode Island	333	3,594,984
Indian Territory	21	152,278	Texas	162	1,518,264
Kansas	186	1,658,544	Wyoming	5	39,547
Louisiana	140	1,043,502
Michigan	109	2,092,521	Total	1,501	16,860,142

From this statement it will appear that out of the 79,702,288 pounds sold during the last year, 62,825,582 pounds were sold in States which have passed laws forbidding the sale of this very article. Take the State of Illinois, for instance. It has a law forbidding the sale of oleomargarine when colored to resemble butter. Yet last year there were sold in that State 18,638,921 pounds. The State of Pennsylvania has a law to the effect that the manufacture or sale of any imitation or adulterated butter not produced from pure milk or cream is prohibited, yet this State last year disposed of 11,433,341 pounds of an imitation which was not produced from pure milk or cream and which was colored to resemble pure butter.

These statements are sufficient to convince anyone that the State laws intended to regulate the sale of this colored article are inefficient, and hence the necessity for more stringent national legislation. The very fact that the laws enacted by 32 States, representing four-fifths of all our people, are openly and intentionally violated and defied by a few manufacturers should be sufficient to convince every member of this body that it is his duty to cordially support a measure which is intended to prevent such deception and fraud.

For the purpose of more clearly understanding the importance of this subject let us consider for a moment what it means when we say that 83,000,000 pounds of this article were placed upon the market and disposed of during the last year. Creamery butter is usually packed in 60-pound tubs. If this substitute was so packed there would be 1,385,684 tubs. If placed side by side they would reach a distance of 3,400 miles; and if loaded in farm wagons, as butter is usually loaded, these wagons would form a procession 400 miles in length.

This production is equivalent to the average butter production of 415,650 cows, representing a value of $12,469,500. A creamery using an average of 10,000 pounds of milk per day would require a period of six hundred years to produce as much butter as these 17 factories annually produce of this substitute.

Now, our friends upon the other side insist that this conglomeration of hog and beef fat is "just as wholesome," "just as nutritious," and "just as healthy" as pure butter, and I have no doubt they have been able to get chemists to render opinions to this effect. It should be remembered, however, that chemists do not always have the opportunity of examining samples from all kinds of oleomargarine.

Take, for instance, the statement of the manufacturers themselves. Some of them have been writing to us here this winter and they have said that oleomargarine is made, first, of oleo oil, the selected fat from beef that is obtained from caul fat; second, neutral leaf lard from the hog; and third, cotton-seed oil, and that these ingredients are churned together in milk and are salted and colored to suit the taste. Now I am ready to admit that each of these ingredients, if of choice and selected stock and free from disease or filth of any kind, may possibly be considered wholesome; but is all oleomargarine made from only these ingredients?

Now, for the purpose of comparison, let us examine the report of the Secretary of the Treasury made in answer to our resolution and compiled from the sworn statements of the manufacturers. It reads as follows:

Quantities and kinds of ingredients used in the production of oleomargarine in the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899; also, the percentage each ingredient bears to the whole quantity.

Materials.	Pounds.	Percentage each ingredient bears to the whole.
Neutral lard	31,297,251	34.27
Oleo oil	24,491,769	26.82
Cotton-seed oil	4,357,514	4.77
Sesame	486,310	.53
Coloring matter	148,970	.16
Sugar	110,164	.12
Glycerin	8,963	.01
Stearin	5,890	.007
Glucose	2,550	.003
Milk	14,200,576	15.55
Salt	6,773,670	7.42
Butter oil	4,342,904	4.76
Butter	1,568,319	1.72
Cream	3,527,410	3.86
Total	91,322,260	100

Quantities and kinds of ingredients used in the production of oleomargarine in the United States for the month of December, 1899; also the percentage each ingredient bears to the whole quantity.

Materials.	Pounds.	Percentage each ingredient bears to the whole.
Neutral lard	3,735,777	31.88
Oleo oil	3,369,085	28.84
Cotton-seed oil	511,157	4.34
Coloring matter	21,753	.18
Sesame	50,500	.43
Sugar	14,111	.12
Stearin	12,705	.10
Glycerin	1,212	.01
Glucose	2,340	.02
Butter	106,130	.90
Salt	800,156	6.83
Milk	1,889,467	16.13
Butter oil	727,062	6.20
Cream	471,688	4.02
Total	11,713,743	100

Here we find that something besides the three oils which the manufacturers mentioned are used. We for the first time discover that glycerin, glucose, sugar, stearin and other such ingredients are used to produce this "wholesome" and "nutritious" article of food. It should be noticed how rapidly the use of stearin is increasing. During the whole year ending June 30, 1899, it averaged only .007 per cent, while for last December it reached 10 per cent of the whole product. And what is this ingredient the use of which is increasing so rapidly? It is usually understood to be the hard fat from the beef, which ordinarily was used for tallow, soap, candles, and other such articles. There is, however, a new kind of stearin now upon the market. We find that in the manufacture of certain grades of cotton-seed oil, in the refining of which caustic soda and potash are largely used, the refuse, being the solid matter which remains, is "known as stearin and used in the butterine and soap-making industries." This undoubtedly is the ingredient, the use of which enables the manufacturers to guarantee that their product will "stand up" in hot weather and keep in any climate.

There is also proof that during the last year some one or more of these 17 manufacturers of oleomargarine have produced an article which contained from 9 to 11½ per cent of paraffin, which is "a colorless, odorless, translucent, waxy, solid mixture of hydrocarbons derived from methane, rich in carbon and indifferent to most reagents. It is contained in bituminous coal and petroleum, from which it is separated by distillation." On account of its ability to resist atmospheric action, this waxy, by-product of coal tar and petroleum has been used as a coating for the obelisk now standing in Central Park in order to prevent it from being ruined by the action of the weather. Now, possibly the human stomach can digest a substance that time and the elements can not destroy, and some may consider that this substance when mixed with the membranous fat which covers the intestines of the steer, and the leaf lard of the hog, and the oil of cotton seed, together with glycerin, glucose, and other such commodities, is "just as nutritious" and "as easily digested" and "as perfectly wholesome" as butter.

There may be many people who willingly and knowingly are anxious to buy and consume this substitute made from these by-products of the stock yards and oil refineries in place of butter from the dairy or the creamery. If so, they should be given an opportunity to procure it in its natural state and at its true value. My own judgment is that if this substitute is just as wholesome, nutritious, and digestible as butter, nature made a great mistake when it provided milk for the sustenance of the young.

Let us see what Secretary Wilson says regarding this matter. In an interview published in one of the local papers he says:

"The Grout bill, as I understand it, proposes to tax imitations of butter. I am utterly unable to find a reason why this should not be done, and I believe it to be the paramount duty of Congress to pass the bill without delay. There is no comparison between genuine butter and oleomargarine and all claims to the contrary are easily disproven. The butter of the cow, which is composed of that fat and casein, sells on its flavor. All other fats are different from this. Whenever the manipulation of cow's milk is conducted under cleanly conditions and at a proper temperature, a flavoring element enters it by reason of microscopic fat growths, which are bacteria. These bacteria make the fine flavor for which we pay 20 cents a pound and more, and also add to the digestibility and healthfulness of the product. Other fats do not contain these germs for the reason that there is nothing in them upon which they may live and multiply.

"Now, when the millionaire or the laborer go to market and are led into purchasing these cheaper fats, rigged and jockeyed in such a way as to imitate butter, they are not only deceived and robbed, but they are made to introduce into their stomachs and the stomachs of their families substances that are injurious to their health, beyond any question. The deleterious qualities, of body fat and tallow, such as are largely used in the production of imitation butter, can not be eliminated by deodorizing processes or such things."

It should also be borne in mind that the manufacturer of oleomargarine, when using oleo oil, may think the oil is the pure extract of caul fat, but he has no assurance of that fact, and under the present law the Government inspectors have no way of knowing what particular fats have been used to produce this oil. I have no doubt but what the greater quantity of this oil is made from all kinds of scraps and fats of different kinds collected from all the different butcher shops and stock yards of the country,

It can not be possible that all oleo oil is made from caul fat, and that this fat is procured at the stock yards where the cattle are inspected, because everyone who is familiar with the shipment of dressed beef from the great stock yards at Chicago and other Western cities knows that the caul or kidney fat goes with the quarter or the carcass, and if this particular fat only is used it must be collected from all the different meat dealers in all sections of the country and shipped back to the stock yards for the purpose of making it into oleo oil.

Now they come to us and say that if this legislation is enacted it will result in great injury to the stock-raising sections of the country where beef and hogs are raised in large quantities, and resolutions have been sent here by the stock-raising associations alleging that if this bill was passed it would cause a loss of from $2 to $4 per head on each steer and at least 20 cents per head on each hog.

Just consider for a moment these figures and see whether their statements are well founded.

Last year there were slaughtered at Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, and St. Louis 3,908,985 head of cattle. Add to these the number slaughtered at other points and the grand total would be about 5,000,000 head. Now the report from the Secretary of the Treasury which I have just submitted shows that there were used during the last year 24,491,769 pounds of oleo oil in the production of oleomargarine. This from 5,000,000 head of cattle would be an average of a little less than 5 pounds per head. The average price of oleo oil during the last year was about 8 cents per pound.

The value of this production per head would then be about 40 cents, but it must be remembered that if this fat had not been used for oleo oil it would have been used for tallow, candles, soap, or other industries, from which at least one-half of its value would have been realized, so that the loss could not possibly exceed 20 cents per head. A similar calculation will show that only about 2 pounds of neutral lard was produced on the average from each hog killed during the last year, but this would have been used for lard and other products had it not been used in making oleo, so that the loss, if any, on hogs would be but a trifle.

Again they come to us and say that to enact this legislation would destroy the great cotton-seed industry of the South, and some of our friends from that section of the country have strenuously opposed this legislation on this account, and yet we find that only about 4.77 per cent of this product is cotton-seed oil, although, as a matter of fact, "butter oil," which is in the list of ingredients used, is the trade name for another kind of cotton-seed oil used in making some grades of oleomargarine, so that it is fair to say that the amount of cotton-seed oil is about 9 per cent of the whole product.

As I understand it, the manufacturers of this article agree that its natural color is white. Each of them, however, strives to so color his product that it will resemble pure butter, plainly for the purpose of defying the law and selling it, not under its true name and for what it is, but as butter. For instance, one of the largest manufacturers of this product in Chicago issues to the trade a card which shows samples of his product by color and number, and directions are given to the trade to purchase by number. I have here one of these cards. No. 1 on this card is marked "No color;" No. 2, "Denver;" No. 3, "Wisconsin;" No. 4, "Country Rolls;" No. 5, "Cincinnati," and so on. With this he sends out a letter or a notice to the trade which reads as follows:

CHICAGO, April 5, 1899.

NOTICE TO THE TRADE.

Inclosed find a color card, which is as near the color of our butterine as the printer's art can represent. Our aim in sending you this card is to aid you in selecting the proper color suitable to your trade. Mistakes are easily made, but hard to remedy.

In nearly every section of the country there is a difference in the color of butter, and even in certain seasons of the year there is a change, as you will have noticed. In winter butter is of a lighter color than in summer; in many sections this is the result of the difference in feed or pasture.

We can give you just what you want at all seasons if we know your requirements. As an example, No. 1 has no coloring matter; No. 2 a little coloring, and so on to No. 8, which is the highest colored goods we turn out. Preserve this card, order the color you want by number, and we will send you just what you want.

This evidence shows that the manufacturers intentionally study to deceive the people. The notices call attention to the fact that winter butter is of a lighter color than summer butter, and in order, therefore, to more thoroughly fool the people the manufacturer is prepared to furnish a substitute colored to suit the particular season of the year. Again he says that there are "sections of the country where there is a difference in the color of butter," and he therefore is prepared to supply the different sections with a different shade of this substitute in order that the dealers may more thoroughly deceive their customers. Could anything show more positively the intention of these people to not only violate the law themselves but to urge and instigate others to violate it purely for the purpose of increasing their profits?

The fact is that they go further than this and guarantee to their trade, or to those who buy from them, protection from the laws, and in my own State where our dairy and food commissioner has undertaken to prosecute people for the violation of these laws, the oleomargarine trust of Chicago has not only hired attorneys to defend the people so complained against, but have furnished money for their bail and have paid their fines when they were convicted.

Messrs. Swift & Company, one of the leading manufacturers of oleomargarine, says they have the right to make their goods as attractive and as pleasing to the eye as they can, and for that reason they have a right to color their oleomargarine the same as the farmer colors his butter. They also make the claim that they were the originators of the use of coloring matter, and that the leading creameries throughout the country were quick to take advantage of the new idea and that now butter makers copy from them in coloring their product. Every one knows that the natural color of pure butter is yellow. In summer when the cows can feed upon green grass the butter takes on a deeper shade than in winter and for that reason we have what is known as "June color" in butter.

The use of coloring matter in butter is not for the purpose of deception, but for the purpose of giving it a uniform tint. To color butter is not to deceive. It is not colored to represent oleomargarine. It is not colored to represent anything else than butter. It is well known that while butter of the same color may differ in quality, yet the constituent parts of butter are such that no manipulation can enable it to be sold for something which it is not. It advertises itself. Its odor and flavor quickly reveal any impurities in it contained. If adulterated in any way it immediately becomes a substitute and the manufacturer is liable to a heavy penalty for violation of the revenue laws. This fact should always be borne in mind, namely, that the coloring of butter deceives no one. It is sold as butter. The purchaser knows that it is butter whether it is colored or uncolored, and he buys it as such, its value being determined not by its color, but by its quality. This is not true of oleomargarine. It is colored, not as a matter of taste, but for the definite and well understood purpose of deceiving the purchaser or consumer and compelling him to use something which he would not otherwise use.

During the Fifty-fifth Congress I introduced the first measure which proposed a tax of 10 cents per pound upon oleomargarine when colored in imitation of butter. Soon after this the editor of a western paper, in commenting upon the subject, said that it would be equally as just to impose a tax upon wool when colored as upon oleomargarine when colored. This is not a parallel case. The natural color of wool is white, or nearly so. To color it black or brown or gray is purely a matter of taste. It is still wool, and we buy the cloth knowing it to be wool, we choosing the color which we prefer. Woolen cloth is not colored black or brown or gray to represent cotton, and when so colored it is not sold as cotton. No article the value of which is above that of the substitute is made in imitation of the substitute. The temptation is to so manipulate the cheaper article that it may resemble and thus take the place of the dearer one. This is what is done with oleomargarine.

The ingredients contained in this conglomeration average about 8 cents per pound. It can be manufactured and placed upon the market at a cost, including the Government tax, of from 10 to 12 cents per pound. If sold as oleomargarine it could not be sold for more than from 14 to 16 cents per pound at retail. Knowing this, it is deliberately colored so that it resembles butter; is put in packages made to resemble butter packages, and is sold as such and at the price of the pure article, thus giving an immense profit to the dealer and furnishing the incentive for him to violate the law.

This proposed legislation is to increase the tax from 2 to 10 cents per pound when the article is colored in imitation of butter. The result will be that either oleomargarine will be advertised and sold upon its own merits and for what it is, in its uncolored state, or, if those who manufacture it desire to persist in defrauding the people and in forcing upon the market a counterfeit made in imitation of something which they know is better and which they know the people are more anxious to obtain, they must pay the increased tax and allow the Government to derive the benefit therefrom.

The coloring of oleomargarine does not add to its digestibility. If people now buy it because they want it, knowing that it is oleomargarine, they will still buy it, even though it is not colored. If there is a demand for it because of its superiority in quality, then to color it is a crime, as by so doing there is danger of deception and fraud.

Whether the increased production of oleomargarine increases the value of steers and hogs, or whether to curtail its production will increase the value of the dairy cow and the dairy farm, are not the most important questions involved in this proposed legislation. I admit that the dairymen of the country have a legitimate interest in this legislation. They do not ask for it as any matter of favor, but they do ask it and they are entitled to demand it of us as a matter of right. The dairymen of Wisconsin expect to compete with the dairymen of New York and the other States, but neither should be compelled to compete with the by-products of some other industry which is made to resemble the dairy product and placed upon the market as such.

The dairy interest is one of the greatest interests of this country; probably more people are employed in it and more people are dependent upon its prosperity than any other single industry of the country. Those engaged in it have a right to ask us to care for their interests, and it is no more than fair and just that we should recognize their claim and give them that protection which the Government has a right to give, and which in other instances it has given, against fraud and counterfeit.

The dairy interest is not the only one to be considered in this connection. The consumer has rights and he is entitled to such legislation as will enable him to know that he is receiving that for which he asks and for which he pays his money. The consumer who wants oleomargarine is entitled to have it, but the consumer who wants butter has some rights also. He is entitled to know that when he calls for butter and pays the price of butter he receives butter and not something dressed up in the garb of butter.

I care not whether this substitute is just as wholesome and nutritious as the pure article. Horseflesh may be just as wholesome as beefsteak, but when we ask for the latter we do not want the butcher to give us the former. Butter and oleomargarine are each entitled to be sold upon their merits, the consumer to have the right to purchase either at its fair value.

I have never believed and do not now believe that the oleomargarine industry should be wiped out of existence. The proposed legislation is not for that purpose; it is solely for the purpose of preventing fraud and deception and compelling the article to be placed upon the market and sold for what it is, and to prevent it from being sold for what it is not.

The first clause of this bill, that which gives to the several States jurisdiction over the original package as soon as it comes within the borders of that State, should not be objectionable to anyone. The Supreme Court have practically declared that under the police power of the State they have that right now, and especially when it involves the question of the regulation of food products. There can be no objection, however, to such legislation as will further strengthen that proposition. The second section of the bill proposes to reduce the tax from 2 cents to one-fourth of 1 cent per pound on oleomargarine when not colored. As a result, if oleomargarine is placed upon the market in its natural state anyone who chooses to buy it knowing it to be oleomargarine can then obtain it at its value and will receive the benefit of this reduction.

The passage of this bill is demanded by the dairy interests of the country. They demand this because they believe that hog butter should be compelled to go into the market under its own color and should not be allowed to steal the color of butter in order to deceive the people and increase the profits of the oleomargarine trust. That their position may be fully understood I desire to submit the following resolution, passed at the last annual meeting of the Wisconsin State Dairymen's Association, these resolutions being similar to those passed by other State associations:

Resolved, That the dairymen of Wisconsin, as represented in this meeting and by this association, which for twenty-eight years has labored to make Wisconsin a great dairy State, believe and declare—

1. That oleomargarine, colored like butter, is a commercial fraud.

2. That oleomargarine, under its own name and color, is a legitimate article of commerce.

3. That Congress has the constitutional power to tax any business to the point of extinction which it regards as prejudicial to the public welfare.

4. That the great bulk of oleomargarine colored in imitation of yellow butter is consumed as and for butter, and that in its sale the final purchaser is cheated and the producer of an honest product unfairly deprived of his legitimate market.

5. That we, as dairymen, neither desire nor ask class legislation, but we are certain of our right to ask and demand of State and national legislatures all possible constitutional restrictions upon the traffic in a counterfeit food product which must depend for its profits upon the deception of the public.

The consumers of butter products demand the passage of this measure. They have the right to know that all food products are pure and are not counterfeits and cheats. They insist that they shall be protected from the deception and fraud practiced by the dealers in oleomargarine. These people are watching us. They will know whether we have been faithful to the trust imposed. You who are obstructing the consideration of this measure will have something to explain to your people. You may be able to prevent action upon this measure at this time, but I give you fair warning now that when we meet here next December this bill will come up for consideration. Knowing the justice of our cause, knowing as I do that this is a conflict between the oleomargarine trust on the one side and the people who love honesty and despise fraud on the other, I warn you that the fight will be on till justice prevails and the rights of the people are respected.

Increasing Expenditures and Expenses of Government—If Those in High Places are Recreant to Their Trust, What Can be Expected of Those in the Lower Ranks.

SPEECH

OF

HON. JOHN C. BELL,

OF COLORADO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 2, 1900.

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 128) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—

Mr. BELL said:

Mr. SPEAKER: At the close of the fiscal year 1895 we owed $901,672,966.74, and at the close of the fiscal year 1899 we find, under President McKinley's Administration, with the great war tariff and the Dingley law, that the debt is $1,155,320,235.19, or an increase of $253,647,268.45.

At the close of the fiscal year 1895 the population was 69,753,000, with a per capita indebtedness of $12.93. At the end of the fiscal year 1899 we had a population of 76,011,000 and an indebtedness of $1,155,320,235.19, a net increase of $253,647,268.45, or a per capita increase of $2.27.

Receipts during the fiscal year 1895 were $390,373,203, or $5.69 per capita collected from the people.

During the fiscal year 1899 they were $610,982,004, or a per capita collection from the people of $8.04, a net increase of $2.45.

During the fiscal year 1895 the total disbursements were $433,178,426, or a per capita expenditure of $6.21.

During the fiscal year 1899 the total disbursements amounted to $700,093,564, or a per capita expenditure of $9.21, an increase of $3.

Now, what is the cause of this great increase in taxation, in public indebtedness, and in public expenditure? It finds its source in the sanguinary and useless wars waged in the Philippine Islands.

Let us see what were the expenditures of the State, War, and Navy Departments in 1895, as compared with 1899:

War Department, 1895	$53,898,370
Navy Department, 1895	29,208,069
State Department, 1895	1,185,046
Total, 1895	84,291,485

In 1899 the expenditures were:

War Department	$232,395,365
Navy Department	64,354,735
State Department	22,871,614
Total, 1899	319,621,714
Total, 1895	84,291,485

Expenditures of 1899 over 1895, $235,330,229, which enormous sum is chargeable principally to the Philippine war.

There is one prominent Department and one only in which the expenses have been decreased. The payment for pensions in 1896 was $139,280,078.15. In 1899 it had been decreased to $138,355,052.95. The number of pensioners on the rolls had been increased from 970,678 to 991,519. So with over 20,000 pensioners more the old soldiers received $1,000,000 less. In 1900 the pensions for the Spanish and Philippine soldiers increase the appropriation again to $145,245,230.

The only branch of the Government which practices economy is that which provides for the old soldiers. The Pension Department for the first time since 1890 allowed fewer claims for the civil-war soldier than were filed and are therefore further behind than they were a year ago, and allowed the fewest number of claims that have been allowed since 1885.

I have obtained the figures for 1900 too late to analyze them, but I will append the same hereto that anyone desiring to extend the comparison may do so.

Appropriations, fiscal years 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, and 1901, made by the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses and at the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

Title.	Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, fiscal year 1901.	Fifty-fifth Congress.		Fifty-fourth Congress.
		Fiscal year 1900.	Fiscal year 1899.	Fiscal year 1898.	Fiscal year 1897.
Agriculture	$4,023,500.00	$3,726,022.00	$3,509,202.00	$3,182,902.00	$3,255,532.00
Army	114,220,095.55	80,430,204.06	23,193,392.00	23,129,344.30	23,278,402.73
Diplomatic and consular	1,771,168.76	1,714,533.76	1,752,208.76	1,659,308.76	1,642,558.76
District of Columbia	7,576,869.31	6,834,535.77	6,426,880.07	6,186,991.06	5,900,319.48
Fortification	7,383,628.00	4,909,902.00	9,377,494.00	9,517,141.00	7,377,888.00
Indian	8,198,089.24	7,504,775.81	7,673,854.90	7,674,120.89	7,390,496.79
Legislative, executive, and judicial	24,176,532.53	23,410,840.79	21,625,846.65	21,690,766.90	21,519,324.71
Military Academy	653,589.67	575,774.47	458,689.23	479,572.83	449,525.61
Navy	65,080,916.67	48,099,909.58	56,098,783.68	33,003,234.19	30,562,660.95
Pension	145,245,230.00	145,233,830.00	141,283,830.00	141,263,880.00	141,328,580.00
Post-Office	113,648,238.75	105,634,138.75	99,222,300.75	95,665,338.75	92,571,564.22
River and harbor	561,000.00	16,091,841.94			12,659,550.00
Sundry civil	65,298,885.95	48,385,930.86	48,490,212.26	53,611,783.38	33,096,710.19
Deficiencies	15,679,512.46	25,005,912.26	349,772,389.96	10,557,417.34	15,341,911.07
Total regular appropriations	573,517,256.89	517,558,212.05	768,835,084.26	407,657,801.40	396,375,024.51
Miscellaneous	3,500,000.00	28,744,590.24	6,560,311.29	999,057.90	416,010.06
Permanent annual appropriations	132,712,220.00	128,678,220.00	117,836,220.00	120,078,220.00	119,054,160.00
Grand total	709,729,476.89	674,981,022.29	893,231,615.55	528,735,079.30	515,845,194.57

Let us inquire if this great expenditure was necessary. To a reasonable extent, yes. There has never been an Administration of the Government more reckless in its expenditures than the present one.

There never has been an Administration of this Government that has so completely recognized bossism nor one that has secured such gross incompetency in general, nor one that has so completely recognized the claim that to the individual ward heeler and political scavenger belongs the spoils, as the present one.

Take the proverbial incompetency in the offices throughout the country; take the disgraceful incompetency of the officering of the recent Volunteer Army by the appointment of inexperienced boys of great papas which entailed untold misery and numerous deaths upon our soldiers and untold expense upon the people, and take the wholesale scandals and thieving in the Philippine Islands and in Cuba, and you have the most collossal monument establishing the folly and dire ruin that follows a government run by political heelers and men appointed merely because they are efficient ward workers.

The people are absolutely ignored in the selection of their appointive officers. The Senate and Congressional bosses are awarded the places for the purpose of building up their political machinery, and these appointments have been made, not for the good of the service, but for the strengthening of the political machines of the direct beneficiaries.

The boast has been going the rounds of the newspapers that the depositories in the Philippines are loaded with the savings of American citizens and employees there, and following close upon the heels of that comes the dispatches that corruption, bribery, and espionage is rampant there. When you take the infinitely greater distance and the complete censorship of the press and the necessarily lax administration of affairs there, there is no doubt but the scandal in Cuba and the festering corruption in every branch of the service there is but a mere speck on the horizon as compared to the pillage in the Philippine Islands.

It was to be hoped that this spoils system might be withheld from the judiciary, but, as set forth in the public press, in the new United States judgeship at Buffalo, over the protest of the bar association and the people against allowing a mere political worker to don the ermine of justice, it was announced that both Senators recommended Mr. PLATT'S political manager in the Buffalo district, and the President could hardly turn down such a recommendation, so he was appointed.

The developments in the Senate in the last few days show how everything political is honeycombed with corruption, and it even reaches the highest places. Where the Executive of the nation is required to appoint a board of appraisers with not more than two of the same political party, he appoints two Republicans, and the notorious William D. Bynum, chairman of the Gold Democratic national committee, and who worked incessantly and untiringly for the election of President McKinley and has been standing manfully by him ever since and is known to be in the Republican party, was audaciously named by the President as a representative of the Democratic party. This was such a flagrant violation of the statute that a Republican Senate rebuked the act of the Executive by refusing to confirm the appointment.

Congress recently passed an act for the formation of a nonpartisan commission composed of five Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, five Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and nine members to be appointed from civil life by the President of the United States, the President's appointees to draw a salary of $3,000 per annum and expenses while traveling over the country, and the other members drawing no salary and expected only to be advisory, and to give the benefit of their experience at such times as they could when not engaged in the performance of Congressional duties.

The President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives faithfully performed their duties in appointing representatives from the different political parties as contemplated in the act, but when it was passed up to the President he appointed eight partisan Republicans and one Gold Democrat, a most ardent supporter of the present Administration, as a compliance with this statute. This was such a flagrant violation of the law that a strongly Republican Senate has just voted an amendment so as to require the President to fill vacancies with other than Republicans.

The last Congress passed an act prohibiting the sale of intoxicating or malt liquors upon or about premises used for military purposes in as explicit language as it seems possible to use; nevertheless the President's Attorney-General construed the law off the statute books, and the President feigns to be bound by such an opinion, although, upon a complete poll of the House and Senate, as I understand, there was scarcely a Representative or Senator to be found, if there was even one such, who did not declare that it was the intention and understanding of all those voting upon the subject that it was absolutely prohibitive, and the President can not, as a man of ordinary sense, read the act without at first blush becoming convinced that there is a positive law forbidding the establishment of these canteens in the Army, yet he defies it.

Now, I ask, what can be expected of officials in the lower ranks or the people at large when the highest officer of the land openly defies the law and makes it subservient to his will?

We have also observed in the last few days the trust representatives in the Senate and those directly interested leading the Government into the very jaws of the armor-plate trust, and we have had the remarkable spectacle of a United States Senator standing in his place on the floor of the Senate and announcing that one of the managers of one of the great ship yards recently complained to him that the Republican campaign committee had extorted from his firm the enormous contribution of $400,000 to the Republican campaign fund upon the assurance that the Government would give his firm sufficient advantageous contracts to enable him to recoup his losses caused by this contribution.

With all these things staring us in the face and with monopolies and trusts intrenched in the Cabinet, in the Departments of the Government, and in Congress, what can the people expect but this extortionate and ruinous expenditure of their money?

What do these trusts and combines care about war taxes or other assessments so long as they can so manage the prevailing party that they may abstract their assessments tenfold from the public Treasury?

In a report a short time since the chairman of the Post-Office Committee in the House, Mr. LOUD, declared that a private individual could run our Post-Office Department as well as it is run now and make a profit of from thirty-five to forty million dollars a year. The exposure of transportation and other extortions reaching millions in this Department has not made even an impression upon those in charge of the Department.

The Commissioner of Pensions recently said to a committee of Congress that he had 100 employees on his rolls many of whom could hardly get to the office and could be lopped off without any injury to the service, but he said the moment he dropped one of them from his rolls he was set upon by the political friends of the employee and was forced to reinstate him.

And a few days ago it was developed that the chief of one of the bureaus of the Interior Department drawing a salary of $1,800 per annum and acting as Congressional clerk to his home member at a salary of $1,200 per annum, making a total of $3,000 a year, besides running a boarding house in the city of Washington, applied to Congress and it passed a bill pensioning him at $50 per month upon the theory that he was totally disabled from working for a living, in the face of the fact that his income was shown to be at least $3,000 per annum from these other sources.

Also, there has been no extravagance of this Government that approaches the promotion and schemes of retirement worked up by the Executive for the officers of the Army and Navy. Throughout the last two years he has been constantly promoting those of about the age of retirement, that they might be put upon the retired list with a princely salary, to be drawn from the pockets of the people. This has not been confined to those who earned recognition upon the field of battle. It has been most numerous among those then in civil and social life or in the War, Navy, and Pension departmental works. It seems a part of the plans of the growing aristocracy to maintain a great line of retired officers in these great spectacular social affairs. The display of their gold lace and handsome uniforms ornaments these state occasions.

The present Administration has also outdistanced anything before heard of in history in its creating of commissions to junket about the world at an enormous expense and practically accomplishing nothing.

With all of these things emanating from the highest officials in the Union, can it be expected that those in the lower ranks will practice economy or discrimination? These things are contagious and account, in a large measure, for the enormous expenditure of money under this Administration.

Importation of Farm Products.

ADDITIONAL REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD L. HAMILTON,

OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, 1900.

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 139) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—

Mr. HAMILTON said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I avail myself of leave to print for the purpose of printing in the RECORD a comparative statement showing importations of ten farm products through the custom-houses at Detroit and Port Huron, Mich., during the first year under the Wilson-Bryan tariff law and the first year under the Dingley tariff law. These figures are official, and were furnished me by the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department.

Importations of ten farm products through custom-house at Detroit, Mich.

Articles.	First year under Wilson-Bryan tariff.	First year under Dingley tariff.
Barley.....bushels..	55,441	7
Beans and peas.....do.....	132,920	2,008
Butter.....pounds..	4,783	3,028
Corn.....bushels..	17,806	90
Eggs.....dozen..	1,790,790	415
Hay.....tons..	256	8
Hides (raw).....pounds..	1,084,609	105,563
Oats.....bushels..	603	170
Potatoes.....do.....	99,404	3,118
Wool.....pounds..	175,844	None.

Importations of ten farm products through custom-house at Port Huron, Mich.

Articles.		First year under Wilson-Bryan tariff.	First year under Dingley tariff.
Barley	bushels	2	None.
Beans and peas	do	20,032	5,452
Butter	pounds	1,656	691
Corn	bushels	10,024	224
Eggs	dozens	1,940	20
Hay	tons	199	None.
Hides (raw)	pounds	1,074,510	65,772
Oats	bushels	125	3
Potatoes	do	36,435	617
Wool	pounds	27,411	None.

Trusts.

SPEECH
OF
HON. W. H. RYAN,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, May 31, 1900.

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—

Mr. RYAN of New York said:

Mr. SPEAKER: To my mind there is no matter of greater import to the welfare of our country than the question of trusts, brought to our immediate consideration by this joint resolution. I wish to have it known as far as my remarks may travel that the time spent in consideration of this measure is so many wasted moments and that there is no intention of passing it into law. I believe its foundation has been laid in insincerity. Had the Republican members of this House a determined purpose to put a stop to the crushing influence of the trusts they would not have waited until the session was drawing to a close. While at times, and at this particular time, we may question the sincerity of the Republican members of this House, we can not question their ability. If you were earnest in this matter and had a desire to regulate the trusts you could have reported a bill early in the session and put it through just as you put the financial bill through. You had no intention of passing the Nicaraguan Canal bill through both Houses of Congress. You had no intention of passing the bill repealing the stamp tax, and you have less practical purpose in introducing and reporting an anti-trust bill at this time.

The Ways and Means Committee gave extended hearings to the great interests of the country, who desire and are justly entitled to a repeal of the infamous war-revenue tax. What were they held for? Did the committee have any intention of presenting to this House a measure reducing or repealing this tax? I say no; not a bit of it.

Personally I shall vote against the joint resolution and for the anti-trust bill, and yet I know that it will not become a law. Why? Because it would cut the trusts away from governmental privileges as a reaper cleans the field. It would destroy their power to control the manufactured products of this country. It would destroy their power to control the raw material. It would destroy their power to make political slaves of the men who are forced through the very existence of these trusts to depend upon them for the essentials of life.

Without the Republican party the trusts would fall, and without the trusts the Republican party would have fallen long ago.

The growth of these trusts has never in the history of this country been so rapid as it has in the last three years under a Republican Administration. They have sprung up like mushrooms in the corner of the pasture and we begin to wonder if they will ever stop. Unluckily for the man unendowed with a heritage of wealth, and I say it with sincere regret, the trusts have been given the power to limit the reward of a faithful and persistent exercise of brawn and brain until they have "pressed down upon the brow of labor" that blistering crown of despair. Curb the trusts. Curtail their influence and power for evil. You ask me how? I say pass your bill with amendments offered by the minority, including that amendment which reads:

> Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to apply to trade unions or other labor organizations, organized for the purpose of regulating wages, hours of labor, or other conditions under which labor is to be performed.

Pass it in both Houses of Congress. Lay it upon the President's desk, and if the Administration is desirous of ending this aggrandizement of wealth and power, the President will sign it.

Will you do it?

No, my Republican friends, you will not. The country knows that you will not do it. I know it and you know it. It is useless to say more.

Mr. Speaker, I will ask the indulgence of the House while I quote here the remarks of James R. Keene, a Wall street millionaire. He says:

> The people of this country must arouse themselves. The coming election is of more importance, from the standpoint of a pure and true Americanism, than any that has transpired since the second election of Lincoln. Money is in the saddle; it is riding down the institutions of this country with a confident insolence that tells of its firm belief in its own invincibility. It is running the Government to-day in its every branch and arm.
>
> If money's power in molding public affairs goes forward for four years more as it has for four years past, the name of American liberty will only be worth a recollection as a matter of history. Money is pressing the people backward step by step. What is to be the end? If it goes on, there are, as matters trend, but two solutions. One is socialism, and the second is revolution. The American people must defend themselves from money just as they once guarded their forest frontiers from the savage. Unless they come solidly shoulder to shoulder for their rights, and come at once, Bunker Hill will have been a blunder, Yorktown a mistake.
>
> [Applause.]

A gentleman who preceded me on the floor stated that when a man gave expression to such views as these it is surely a matter of patriotic duty and of wisdom that they should be considered in the spirit of all soberness, and that men should reason together and contemplate the gravity of the situation, and I agree with him. I agree with him when I say that I envy no man because of his wealth. I would incite no difficulties between labor and capital nor widen the breach between the rich and the poor, but I believe that Mr. Keene has not misrepresented the actual situation, and that something must be done, and that speedily, to shatter the control of monopoly; to lighten the burden, to soften the yoke, and restore the confidence of the people in the equality and integrity of legislation, or disastrous consequences may be foreseen.

While on this question of deception of the people, a word for the stamp tax. The Republican party has no more intention of regulating or curtailing the power of the trusts than they have of redeeming the pledges they made to the people of the country when war with Spain was declared. They gave their promise to the country that when that war had ceased this stamp tax would be repealed. The people took them at their word. The druggists, the insurance interests, the large and small manufacturer and retailer all willingly contributed their share. With a patriotic zeal the brewers of the United States came to the front with an additional war tax of $35,000,000. Have they no rights that should be considered now?

Delegation after delegation from each of these interests have appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means but to appeal against a predetermination. The injustice of the allotment of this tax was explained to the committee, and I here quote what Mr. Charles H. Clark of Pennsylvania, who visited the committee with his fellow-druggists, said:

> It means, simply stated, if I may be permitted to use the expression in its naked deformity, you come up among the everlasting hills of where we have our factory in Pennsylvania and take $7,000 out of my pocket, which I want, and which you have no use for whatever, and you send it up to the Treasury Department and then the Treasury Department sends it over to a bank in New York and that bank loans it out at interest and puts the money in the pockets of its stockholders. [Applause by bystanders.]
>
> The whole point I want to make for myself is this: When there is war we are willing to do just as much for our country as anybody else, and we have always done it. We furnished about 600,000 pieces of material for use of the soldiers in Cuba, and we have evidence which we can produce to you showing that those articles preserved the lives of our soldiers; and on a great many of the articles we sold at about half price to the Government, on account of the competition, we were compelled to place revenue stamps, and we did not care anything about it; it was something that we did with pleasure. But when the time of peace comes and there is no exigency of war, and there is no other exigency, when you do not want that money, I say that, while you have the legal and constitutional right to do it, you have no moral right—allow me to say with all courtesy—you have no moral right to take that money out of my pocket.

Mr. Clark, in response to a question, said:

> If there is an oppressive or unjust taxation on anybody, it ought to be taken off. That is a good general statement to make. I have had the honor of speaking on the platform in political campaigns with one of the members of this committee, and I will say that if I were to go out on the stump next fall, and on the Democratic side (and I do not believe I ever would do that), I would not ask anything better than to be able to prove that a Republican Congress is permitting $30,000,000 or $50,000,000 to be taken away from the people to be sent over to be distributed through New York banks.

I personally attended the hearing given to the brewery interest of the country before the Ways and Means Committee. I do not differ with the man who believes there is merit in the manufacturing of liquor, nor do I differ with the man who does not, but when a tax of $1 per barrel additional is placed upon this product strictly for war-revenue purposes, and that war has ended and the tax is not then taken off, I differ materially with the men or party who insist upon the retention of the tax. The emergency is over, but the emergency tax is still in force. The surplus in the Treasury is increasing, and we ask what is to become of this money. Is it to go back to the people, or is it to go to those favored New York banks? I think to the latter.

The brewers paid, according to the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for the fiscal years 1898 and 1899, $108,159,979.

One-half of this amount was the extra war tax. The total increase in internal-revenue taxes for these two years was $126,748,587. The brewers alone paid over 40 per cent of these increased taxes. They can not continue to bear these burdens and continue their business. This tax could be taken off and there would still be more revenue than is needed to pay the expenses of the Government. An act of justice can be done in removing this tax and at the same time reduce the surplus of which the people complain.

William J. Bryan and the Trusts.

REMARKS
OF
HON. AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, and Tuesday, June 5, 1900,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. TERRY said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. There is no time left to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask unanimous consent for the indulgence of the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks the indulgence of the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I trust I am old enough in political life to know a wolf in sheep's clothing. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There is one here more ravenous than the one that attacked the child of Llewellyn. Under the guise of an effort to destroy the trusts this is really a measure drawn in their interests. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is being used to tide over a Presidential election. The House will pass it, and the Senate lay it away until after the election. I know that William J. Bryan is alleged to have advocated a constitutional amendment to down the trusts, but this in its terms no more resembles Mr. Bryan's proposition than a deck of cards resembles a Bible. [Laughter.] I would as soon drink a cocktail made out of nitric acid under the guise of a soda cocktail as to vote for this resolution. [Laughter.] No man in his right senses, it appears to me, can eat asafetida and fancy it molasses candy. I stand by the action of the Democratic caucus. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Tuesday, June 5, 1900.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, on June 1 I said that I knew that William J. Bryan was alleged to have advocated a constitutional amendment to down the trusts, but that the joint resolution under discussion in its terms no more resembled Mr. Bryan's proposition than a deck of cards resembled a Bible. This morning I received the following letter from Mr. Bryan:

JUNE, 2, 1900.

MY DEAR MR. CUMMINGS: I see that the Republicans are asserting that I think a constitutional amendment necessary for the annihilation of the trusts. I have never said or believed that an amendment was necessary. I have urged legislation which I believe to be constitutional, and have said that I favor a constitutional amendment if the decisions of the Supreme Court declare such legislation unconstitutional. The Republican party does not want to destroy the trusts. During this session of Congress the Republicans have unanimously supported a proposition to give to national banks control of the currency and thus create a paper-money trust. I inclose copy of Chicago antitrust speech, which discusses the question of constitutional amendment.

Yours, truly, W. J. BRYAN.

Mr. Speaker, that the country may distinctly understand what Mr. Bryan did say I append a copy of the speech delivered at the Chicago antitrust conference on February 19, 1900. The Democratic position is here distinctly stated:

MR. BRYAN'S ADDRESS.

MR. CHAIRMAN, LADIES, AND GENTLEMEN: I appreciate the very kind words spoken by Governor Stanley in presenting me to this audience. I am glad I live in a country where people can differ from one another, differ honestly, express their convictions boldly, and yet respect one another and acknowledge one another's rights. I am not vain enough, however, to think that any good will which has been expressed by the people toward me is due to personal merit. If I have had political friends it is because people believe with me in certain ideas, or, rather, because I believe with them in certain ideas. It is the idea that makes the man. The man is only important as he helps the idea.

I come this morning to discuss in your presence a great question—a question of growing importance to the American people. The trust principle is not a new principle, but the trust principle is manifesting itself in so many ways and the trusts have grown so rapidly that people now feel alarmed about trusts who did not feel alarmed three years ago. The trust question has grown in importance, because within two years more trusts have been organized, when we come to consider the capitalization and the magnitude of the interests involved, than were organized in all the previous history of the country, and the people now come face to face with this question: Is the trust a blessing or a curse? If a curse, what remedy can be applied to the curse?

I want to start with the declaration that a monopoly in private hands is indefensible from any standpoint, and intolerable. I make no exceptions to the rule. I do not divide monopolies in private into good monopolies and bad monopolies. There is no good monopoly in private hands. There can be no good monopoly in private hands until the Almighty sends us angels to preside over the monopoly. There may be a despot who is better than another despot, but there is no good despotism. One trust may be less harmful than another. One trust magnate may be more benevolent than another, but there is no good monopoly in private hands, and I do not believe it is safe for society to permit any man or group of men to monopolize any article of merchandise or any branch of industry.

What is the defense made of the monopoly? The defense of the monopoly is always placed on the ground that if you allow a few people to control the market and fix the price they will be good to the people who purchase of them. The entire defense of the trusts rests upon a money argument. If the trust will sell to a man an article for a dollar less than the article will cost under other conditions, then in the opinion of some that proves a trust to be a good thing. In the first place, I deny that under a monopoly the price will be reduced. In the second place, if under a monopoly the price is reduced, the objections to a monopoly from other standpoints far outweigh any financial advantage that the trust could bring. But I protest in the beginning against settling every question upon the dollar argument. I protest against the attempt to drag every question down to the low level of dollars and cents.

In 1859 Abraham Lincoln wrote a letter to the Republicans of Boston, who were celebrating Jefferson's birthday, and in the course of the letter he said: "The Republican party believes in the man and the dollar, but in case of conflict it believes in the man before the dollar." In the early years of his Administration he sent a message to Congress, and in that message he warned his countrymen against the approach of monarchy. And what was it that alarmed him? He said it was the attempt to put capital upon an equal footing with, if not above, labor in the structure of government, and in that attempt to put capital even upon an equal footing with labor in the structure of government he saw the approach of monarchy. Lincoln was right. Whenever you put capital upon an equal footing with labor or above labor in the structure of government you are on the road toward a government that rests not upon reason, but upon force.

Nothing is more important than that we shall in the beginning rightly understand the relation between money and man. Man is the creature of God and money is the creature of man. Money is made to be the servant of man, and I protest against all theories that enthrone money and debase mankind.

What is the purpose of the trust or the monopoly? For when I use the word trust I use it in the sense that the trust means monopoly. What is the purpose of monopoly? You can find out from the speeches made by those who are connected with trusts. I have here a speech made by those who are connected with the trusts. I have here a speech made by Charles R. Flint, at Boston, on the 25th day of last May, and the morning papers of the 26th, in describing the meeting, said he defended trust principles before an exceedingly sympathetic audience, and then added: "For his audience was composed almost exclusively of Boston bankers." "We thus secure," he says, "the advantages of larger aggregations of capital and ability; if I am asked what they are, the answer is only difficult because the list is so long."

But I want now to read to you a few of the advantages to be derived by the trusts from the trust system. "Raw material bought in large quantities is secured at lower prices." That is the first advantage. One man to buy wool for all the woolen manufacturers. That means that every man who sells wool must sell it at the price fixed by this one purchaser in the United States. The first thing is to lower the price of raw material. The great majority of the people are engaged in the production of raw material and in the purchase of finished products. Comparatively few can stand at the head of syndicates and monopolies and secure the profits from them. Therefore the first advantage of a monopoly is to lower the price of the raw material furnished by the people. Note the next advantage: "Those plants which are best equipped and most advantageously situated are run continuously and in preference to those less favored."

The next thing, after they have bought all the factories, is to close some of them and to turn out of employment the men who are engaged in them. If you will go about over the country, you will see where people have subscribed money to establish enterprises, and where these enterprises, having come under the control of the trusts, have been closed and stand now as silent monuments of the trust system.

Behold the next advantage: "In case of local strikes and fires, the work goes on elsewhere, thus preventing serious loss." Do not the laboring men understand what that means? "In case of local strikes or fires, the work goes on elsewhere, thus preventing serious loss." What does it mean? It means that if the people employed in one factory are not satisfied with the terms fixed by the employer, and strike, the trust can close that factory and let the employees starve while work goes on in other factories, without loss to the manufacturers.

It means that when the trust has frozen out the striking employees in one factory and compelled them to return to work at any price to secure bread for their wives and children, it can provoke a strike somewhere else and freeze the workmen out there. When a branch of industry is entirely in the hands of one great monopoly, so that every skilled man in that industry has to go to the one man for employment, then that one man will fix wages as he pleases, and the laboring men will share the suffering of the man who sells the raw materials.

"There is no multiplication of the means of distribution, and a better force of salesmen takes the place of a large number." That is the next advantage named. I want to warn you that when the monopoly has absolute control brains will be at a discount and relatives will be found to fill these positions. When there is competition every employer has to get a good man to meet competition, but when there is no competition anybody can sit in the office and receive letters and answer them, because everybody has to write to the same house for anything he wants. There is no question about it. A trust, a monopoly, can lessen the cost of distribution, but when it does so society has no assurance that it will get any of the benefits from that reduction of cost. But you will take away the necessity for skill and brains; you will take away the stimulus that has given to us the quick, the ever-alert commercial traveler. These commercial evangelists, who go from one part of the country to the other proclaiming the merits of their respective goods, will not be needed, because when anybody wants merchandise all he has to do is to write to the one man who has the article for sale and say, "What will you let me have it for to-day?"

And here is another advantage: "Terms and conditions of sale become more uniform and credit can be more safely granted." The trust can not only fix the price of what it sells, but it can fix the terms upon which it sells. You can pay cash, or, if there is a discount, it is just so much discount, and you have to trust to the manager's generosity as to what is fair when he is on one side and you on the other. I have read some of the advantages which a great trust magnate thinks will come to the trust.

What is the first thing to be expected of a trust? That it will cut down expenses. What is the second? That it will raise prices. We have not had in this country a taste of a complete trust, a complete monopoly, and we can not tell what will be the results of a complete monopoly by looking at the results that have followed from an attempt to secure a monopoly. A corporation may lower prices to rid itself of competitors; but when it has rid itself of competitors, what is going to be the result?

My friends, all you have to know is human nature. God made men selfish. I do not mean to say that He made a mistake when He did, because selfishness is merely the outgrowth of an instinct of self-preservation. It is the abnormal development of a man's desire to protect himself; but everybody who knows human nature knows how easy it is to develop that side of a man's being. Occasionally I find a man who says he is not selfish, but when I do I find a man who can prove it only by his own affidavit.

We get ideas from every source. An idea is the most important thing that a man can get into his head. An idea will control a man's life. An idea will revolutionize a community, a state, a nation, the world. And we never know when we are going to get an idea. Sometimes we get them when we do not want to get them, and sometimes we get them from sources which would not be expected to furnish ideas. We get them from our fellow-men; we get them from inanimate nature; we get them from the animals about us. I once got a valuable idea from some hogs. I was riding through Iowa, and saw some hogs rooting in a field. The first thought that came to my mind was that those hogs were destroying a great deal in value, and then my mind ran back to the time when I lived upon a farm and we had hogs.

Then I thought of the way in which we used to protect property from the hogs by putting rings in the noses of the hogs; and then the question came to me, Why did we do it? Not to keep the hogs from getting fat, for we were more interested in their getting fat than they were; the sooner they got fat the sooner we killed them; the longer they were in getting fat the longer they lived. But why did we put the rings in their noses? So that while they were getting fat they would not destroy more than they were worth. And then the thought came to me that one of the great purposes of government was to put rings in the noses of hogs. I do not mean to say anything offensive, but we are all hoggish. In hours of temptation we are likely to trespass upon the rights of others.

I believe in self-government. I believe in the doctrines that underlie this Government. I believe that people are capable of governing themselves. Why? Because in their sober moments they have helped to put rings in their own noses, to protect others from themselves, and themselves from others in hours of temptation. And so I believe we must recognize human nature. We must recognize selfishness, and we must so make our laws that people shall not be permitted to trespass upon the rights of others in their efforts to secure advantages for themselves.

I believe society is interested in the independence of every citizen. I wish we might have a condition where every adult who died might die leaving to his widow and children enough property for the education of his children and the support of his widow. Society is interested in this because if a man dies and leaves no provision for his wife and children the burden falls upon society. But while I wish to see every person secure for himself a competency, I do not want him to destroy more than he is worth while he is doing that. And I believe the principle of monopoly finds its inspiration in the desire of men to secure by monopoly what they can not secure in the open field of competition. In other words, if I were going to try to find the root of the monopoly evil, I would do as I have often had occasion to do—go back to the Bible for an explanation—and I would find it in the declaration that the love of money is the root of all evil.

I will not ask you all to agree with me; we have not met here as a body of men who agree. We have met here as a body of men who are seeking the light, and each ought to be willing to hear what every other person has to say, and each of us should desire the triumph of that which is true more than the triumph of that which he may think to be true.

Let me repeat that the primary cause of monopoly is the love of money and the desire to secure the fruits of monopoly; but I believe that falling prices, caused by the rising dollar, have contributed to this desire, and intensified it, because people, seeing the fall in prices, and measuring the loss of investments, have looked about for some means to protect themselves from this loss, and they have joined in combinations to hold up prices to protect their investments from a loss which would not have occurred but for the rise in the value of dollars and the fall in the level of prices.

Another thing that, in my judgment, has aided monopoly is a high tariff. Nobody can dispute that a tariff law, an import duty, enables a trust to charge for its product the price of a similar foreign product plus the tariff.

Now, some have suggested that to put everything on the free list that trusts make would destroy the trusts. I do not agree with this statement as it is made so broadly. I believe that the high tariff has been the means of extortion, and that it has aided trusts to collect more than they otherwise could collect. But I do not believe you could destroy all trusts by putting all trust-made articles on the free list. Why? Because, if an article can be produced in this country as cheaply as it can be produced abroad, the trust could exist without the aid of any tariff, although it could not extort so much as it could with the tariff. While some relief may come from modifications of the tariff, we can not destroy monopoly until we lay the ax at the root of the tree and make monopoly impossible by law.

It has been suggested that discrimination by railroads has aided the trusts. No question about it. If one man can secure from a railroad better rates than another man, he will be able to run the other man out of business. And there is no question that discrimination and favoritism secured by one corporation against a rival have been largely instrumental in enabling the favored corporation to secure practically a complete monopoly. Now, that can be remedied by laws that will prevent this discrimination; but when we prevent the discrimination, when we place every producer upon the same footing and absolutely prevent favoritism, monopoly may still exist. The remedy must go further. It must be complete enough to prevent the organization of a monopoly.

Now, what can be done to prevent the organization of a monopoly? I think we differ more in remedy than we do in our opinion of the trust. I venture the opinion that few people will defend monopoly as a principle, or a trust organization as a good thing, but I imagine our great difference will be as to remedy, and I want, for a moment, to discuss the remedy.

We have a dual form of government. We have a State government and a Federal Government; and while this dual form of government has its advantages, and to my mind, advantages which can hardly be overestimated, yet it also has its disadvantages. When you prosecute a trust in the United States court it hides behind State sovereignty; and when you prosecute it in the State court it rushes to cover under Federal jurisdiction—and we have had some difficulty in prosecuting a remedy.

I believe that we ought to have remedies in both State and nation, and that they should be concurrent remedies. In the first place, every State has, or should have, the right to create any private corporation which, in the judgment of the people of the State, is conducive to the welfare of the people of that State. I believe we can safely intrust to the people of a State the settlement of a question which concerns them. If they create a corporation, and it becomes destructive of their best interests, they can destroy that corporation, and we can safely trust them both to create and annihilate, if conditions make annihilation necessary. In the second place, the State has, or should have, the right to prohibit any foreign corporation from doing business in the State, and it has, or should have, the right to impose such restrictions and limitations as the people of the State may think necessary upon foreign corporations doing business in the State. In other words, the people of the State not only should have a right to create the corporations they want, but they should be permitted to protect themselves against any outside corporation.

But I do not think this is sufficient. I believe, in addition to a State remedy, there must be a Federal remedy, and I believe Congress has, or should have, the power to place restrictions and limitations, even to the point of prohibition, upon any corporation organized in any State that wants to do business outside of the State. I say that Congress has, or should have, power to place upon the corporation such limitations and restrictions, even to the point of prohibition, as may to Congress seem necessary for the protection of the public.

Now, I believe that these concurrent remedies will prove effective. To repeat: The people of every State shall first decide whether they want to create a corporation. They shall also decide whether they want any outside corporation to do business in the State, and if so, upon what conditions; and then Congress shall exercise the right to place upon every corporation doing business outside of the State in which it is organized such limitations and restrictions as may be necessary for the protection of the public.

I do not believe that the people of one State can rely upon the people of another State in the management of corporations. And I will give you a reason: I have here a letter that was sent out by a Delaware corporation, with an office in New York. It is a most remarkable document—the most remarkable document on this subject that has ever fallen under my observation. We have talked about New Jersey having a law favorable to trusts. I have a letter here which shows that in Delaware they adopted a law for the purpose of making Delaware more friendly to the trusts than New Jersey. Let me read the letter. It is a little long, but it will repay reading.

The State of Delaware has just adopted the most favorable of existing general corporation laws—one marking a forward step in the evolution of corporations. It does not encourage reckless incorporation, nor permit the existence of wild-cat companies; but it furnishes at the least expense ample rights to stockholders, and reduces restrictions upon corporate action to the minimum. The enactment is not the result, as in the case of most States, of hesitating, halting, enacting, amending, and repealing, but it is a logical and systematic measure, framed by a committee of able lawyers appointed by the legislature to examine the various statutes of the various States, and prepare a bill which should embody the good and eliminate the bad points of existing law. The law is based broadly upon that of the State of New Jersey, and embraces all the beneficial provisions and safeguards found in the laws of that State. It has, however, in many respects, advanced far beyond New Jersey, and makes Delaware a much more attractive home for business corporations.

In the following salient provisions the Delaware and New Jersey laws are substantially identical, namely: Any three persons may organize a corporation; second, it may engage in any lawful business excepting banking; third, its existence may be perpetual or limited; fourth, it may purchase and deal in real or personal property wherever situated and to any desired amount; fifth, it may be a mortgagee or mortgagor; sixth, it may conduct business anywhere in the world; seventh, stock may be issued for property purchased (and in Delaware for services rendered), and in the absence of fraud the judgment of the directors as to the value of such property or services is conclusive; eighth, it may easily wind up its affairs and dissolve itself; ninth, its capital stock may not be more than $2,000, and only $1,000 of this need be subscribed for; tenth, the amount of capital stock which it may issue is unlimited; eleventh, it may file its certificate of incorporation and even commence business before any sum whatever is paid in; twelfth, it may have different classes of stock, with different privileges or restrictions; thirteenth, the charter may be easily amended; fourteenth, only one director need be a resident of Delaware; fifteenth, the capital stock may be easily diminished or increased; sixteenth, the corporation may be readily merged or consolidated into other corporations; seventeenth, it may own and vote upon the stock of other corporations; eighteenth, the incorporators may or may not limit the authority of the directors as to the liabilities.

"The Delaware law possesses the following decided advantages: First, the original fee to be paid for incorporation is small—about three-fourths of that in New Jersey, for instance; second, the annual tax is very small—one-half that in New Jersey. Delaware is a small State and does not need a very large revenue. Third, stockholders and directors may hold their meetings wherever they please and need never meet in the State of Delaware. (New Jersey stockholders must meet in that State.)" You see it is a decided advantage over the New Jersey law in that respect. "Fourth, the original stock and transfer books (which in a New Jersey corporation must be kept in the State) may be kept in or out of Delaware, in the discretion of the company; fifth, the examination of the books by intermeddlers is much more difficult under the Delaware law than under the laws of any other State; sixth, the liability of the stockholders is absolutely limited when the stock has once been issued for cash, property, or services; seventh, stock may be issued in compensation for services rendered, and in the absence of fraud in the transaction, the judgment of the directors as to the value of such services is conclusive. (In New Jersey authority is given to issue stock for property, but not for service.) Eighth, for certain important classes of corporations—as, for instance, railroads, railway, telegraph, cable, electric light, steam heating, power, gas-piping lines, and sleeping-car companies, the advantage is still more marked."

I wish we had some way of knowing what the additional advantages are, after having read the ordinary advantages.

"Ninth, the annual report of a Delaware corporation is required to give no secret or confidential information.

"Tenth, the certificate need not show, nor need public record be in any way made of, the amount of stock subscribed by any incorporator."

And then the letter adds: "This company is authorized to act as the agent and trustee of corporations organized under the Delaware law. It will maintain the principal office of the company in Delaware and keep an agent in charge within the State. It is formed for the purpose of facilitating the incorporation of companies in Delaware and of aiding them to comply, at a minimum expense, with the requirements of the Delaware law. We are ready to aid and give full information to incorporators or their counsel. We do not interfere between attorney and client. We do not conduct a law business. Copies of the Delaware law, and blank forms of information concerning Delaware corporations, furnished on application.

"All communications to us are confidential."

A VOICE FROM THE GALLERY. Colonel, Delaware and New Jersey are both Democratic States, are they not?

Mr. BRYAN. They were not in 1896.

ANOTHER VOICE FROM THE GALLERY. Has the gentleman any more questions to ask?

Mr. BRYAN. I am very glad to have questions asked, because we are seeking the truth.

I have read you this letter in order to show you that where a State can gain an advantage from the incorporation of these great aggregations of wealth it is not safe to place the people of other States at the tender mercies of the people of such a State as may desire to collect its running expenses from the taxation of corporations organized to prey upon people outside.

I read the letter to show how impossible it is for the people in one State to depend for protection upon the people in another State; and while, as I say, I believe the people of every State should have the power to create corporations and to restrain, to limit, and, if necessary, to annihilate, yet I believe that no complete remedy will be found for the trust until the Federal Government, with a power sufficiently comprehensive to reach into every nook and corner of the country, lays its hands upon these trusts and declares that they shall no longer exist.

I am here to hear, to receive information, and to adopt any method that anybody can propose that looks to the annihilation of the trusts.

One method has occurred to me, and it seems to me a complete method. It may not commend itself to you. If you have something better, I shall accept it in the place of this which I am about to suggest. But the method which occurs to me is this: That Congress should pass a law providing that no corporation organized in any State should do business outside of the State in which it is organized until it receives from some power created by Congress a license authorizing it to do business outside of its own State. Now, if the corporation must come to this body created by Congress to secure permission to do business outside of the State, then the license can be granted upon conditions which will, in the first place, prevent the watering of stock; in the second place, prevent monopoly in any branch of business; and, third, provide for publicity as to all of the transactions and business of the corporation.

A VOICE. Colonel, would such a law be constitutional?

Mr. BRYAN. I was going to come to that. I am glad you mentioned it. What I mean to say is that Congress ought to pass such a law. If it is unconstitutional, and so declared by the Supreme Court, I am in favor of an amendment to the Constitution that will give Congress power to destroy every trust in the country. The first condition which I suggest is that no water should be allowed in the stock. I do not agree with those who say it is a matter entirely immaterial whether a corporation has water in its stock or not. It may be true that, in the long run, if you are able to run as long as the corporation can, the stock will fall to its natural level; but during all that time the harm goes on; during all that time the trust demands the right to collect dividends upon capital represented by no money whatever. I do not believe that any State should permit the organization of a corporation with a single drop of water in the stock of that corporation. The farmer can not inflate the value of his land by watering the value of that land. The merchant in the store can not inflate the value of the goods upon his shelves. Why should the corporation be permitted to put out stock that represents no real value?

Why, there are instances where there are $4 of water for $1 of money.

A VOICE. Seven.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, a man suggests seven. Do I hear a higher bid? I have known it to be twelve; but I am a conservative man, and I must maintain my reputation. No man can defend stock that does not represent money invested, and only in the case of a monopoly can you secure dividends upon stock that does not represent money invested.

We had a law in Nebraska that was intended to regulate railroad rates. One railroad in our State was capitalized and bonded for more than five times what it would cost to duplicate the road, and yet the judge held that in fixing rates and in determining what was fair compensation for the railroad we had to consider the watered stock as well as the actual value of that road, and when the case went to the Supreme Court the Supreme Court rendered a decision which, while I can not quote its exact language, was in substance this: That in determining what was a reasonable rate we had to take into consideration a number of things besides the present value of that road, measured by the cost of reproduction.

If the watering of the stock is permitted, then the cry of the innocent purchaser is raised, and you will be told that you must protect the man who bought this stock. No man ought to stand in the position of an innocent purchaser who buys stock in a corporation if that stock does not represent actual money invested, because he can find out what the stock stands for if he will only investigate; but, as a matter of fact, the holders of watered stock are able to collect dividends. Now, if this license is granted, then the first condition can be that any corporation desiring to do business outside of the State in which it is organized shall bring to that board or body proof that that stock is bona fide and that there is no water in it. In my judgment, when you take from monopoly the power to issue stock not represented by money you will go more than half the way toward destroying monopoly in the United States.

The law should provide for publicity. As has been well said by men who have spoken here, corporations can not claim that they have a right, or that it is necessary, to cover their transactions with secrecy; and when you provide for publicity, so that the public can know just what there is in the corporation, just what it is doing, and just what it is making, you will take another long step toward the destruction of monopoly.

But I am not willing to stop there. I do not want to go one or two steps; I want to go all the way, and make a monopoly absolutely impossible. And therefore, as a third condition, I suggest that this license shall not be granted until the corporation shows that it has not had a monopoly and is not attempting a monopoly of any branch of industry or of any article of merchandise—and then provide that, if the law is violated, the license can be revoked. I do not believe in the Government giving privileges to be exercised by a corporation without reserving the right to withdraw them when those privileges have become hurtful to the people.

Now, I may be mistaken, but as I have studied the subject it has seemed to me that this method of dealing with the trusts would prove an effective method; but if you once establish the system and require the license, then Congress can from year to year add such new conditions as may be necessary for the protection of the public from the greed and avarice of great aggregations of wealth. I do not go so far as some do, and say that there shall be no private corporations, but I say this: That a corporation is created by law; that it is created for the public good, and that it should never be permitted to do a thing that is injurious to the public, and that if any corporation enjoys any privileges to-day which are hurtful to the public, those privileges ought to be withdrawn from it. In other words, I am willing that we should first see whether we can preserve the benefits of the corporation and take from it its possibilities for harm.

A DELEGATE. Would you apply that to rich individuals also? Suppose Rockefeller did it on his own account?

Mr. BRYAN. We have not reached a point yet where an individual has been able to do harm, and, in my judgment, if we would abolish those laws that grant special privileges and make some men the favorites of the Government, no man, by his own brain and muscle, could ever earn enough money to be harmful to the people.

A DELEGATE. What will you say to the banks reporting five hundred millions of money in the vaults and four billions of loans?

Mr. BRYAN. Well, I would say it would not be safe to have all the loans collected at once.

Following out the suggestion the gentleman has made, I want to add to what I have said to this extent; My contention is that we have been placing the dollar above the man; that we have been picking out favorites and bestowing upon them special privileges, and every advantage we have given them has been given them to the detriment of other people. My contention is that there is a vicious principle running through the various policies which we have been pursuing; that in our taxation we have been imposing upon the great struggling masses the burden of government, while we have been voting the privileges to a few people who will not pay their share of the expenses of the Government.

Every unjust tax law is an indirect form of larceny. If, for instance, a man who ought to pay $10 only pays $5, and one who ought to pay only $5 pays $10, the law that compels this contribution from these two men virtually takes $5 from one man's pocket and puts that $5 into the other man's pocket, and I have claimed that when we collected our taxes we were making the poor people pay not only their share, but the share of the men whom they have no chance to meet at the summer resorts. I have been gratified to note the progress that you have been making in Illinois toward more equitable distribution of the burdens of government. I heard it stated that there was a time only a few years ago when the agricultural implements owned by the farmers living within the city limits of Chicago were assessed for more than all the money in Chicago returned for taxation by private citizens. I do not know whether it was true or not, but I saw it stated as a fact. There are some people who have visible property, others who have invisible property, and the visible property is always taxed.

The invisible property has too often escaped, and as a result the people owning visible property have not only paid their own taxes, but the taxes that should have been paid by the owners of invisible property. I have advocated an income tax because I believe it the most just tax. I do not mention it to argue the question here, because I want to avoid the discussion of any question that might be considered partisan. If the Government will quit picking out favorites, and follow the doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to no man, I have no fear that any man, by his own brain or his own muscle, will be able to secure a fortune so great as to be a menace to the welfare of his fellow-men. If we secure a government whose foundations are laid in justice and laws exemplifying the doctrine of equality before the law—if we can secure such a government and such laws—and wealth is then accumulated to a point where it becomes dangerous, we can meet that question when it arises, and I am willing to trust the wisdom of society to meet every question that arises and remedy every wrong.

SIGMUND ZEISLER. What will you do, Colonel, with the multimfillionaires that already exist? Suppose they should hold and acquire all the industries—all the factories—and particularly industries?

Mr. BRYAN. Do you mean before our laws go into operation?

Mr. ZEISLER. The multimillionaires that already exist.

Mr. BRYAN. In the first place, private individuals have not been able to secure monopolies, and are not likely to do so. As to the multimillionaires now in existence, I would wait and see whether they would die off soon enough to relieve the country of danger. Life is short. If, however, their accumulations should become a menace, I would then consider what measures would be necessary for the protection of society. And this brings me to what I regard as a very important branch of this subject. I am glad the question was asked; it calls attention to the difference between an individual and a corporation. Every trust rests upon a corporation—at least, that rule is so nearly universal that I think we can accept it as a basis for legislation. Every trust rests upon a corporation, and every corporation is a creature of law. The corporation is a man-made man.

When God made man as the climax of creation, He looked upon His work and said that it was good, and yet when God finished his work the tallest man was not much taller than the shortest, and the strongest man was not much stronger than the weakest. That was God's plan. We looked upon His work and said that it was not quite as good as it might be, and so we made a fictitious person, called a corporation, that is in some instances a hundred times, a thousand times, a million times stronger than the God-made man. Then we started this man-made giant out among the God-made men. When God made man He placed a limit to his existence, so that if he was a bad man he could not do harm long; but when we made our man-made man we raised the limit as to age. In some States a corporation is given perpetual life.

When God made man He breathed into him a soul, and warned him that in the next world he would be held accountable for the deeds done in the flesh; but when we made our man-made man we did not give him a soul, and if he can avoid punishment in this world he need not worry about the hereafter.

My contention is that the government that created must retain control, and that the man-made man must be admonished: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," and throughout thy entire life.

Let me call your attention again to this distinction. We are not dealing with the natural man; we are not dealing with natural rights. We are dealing with the man-made man and artificial privileges.

What government gives the government can take away. What the government creates it can control, and I insist that both the State government and the Federal Government must protect the God-made man from the man-made man.

I have faith that these questions will be settled, and settled right, but I want to protest against this doctrine that the trust is a natural outgrowth of natural laws. It is not true. The trust is the natural outgrowth of unnatural conditions created by man-made laws. There are some who would defend everything, good or bad, on the ground that it is destiny, and that you can not inquire into it. The fact that it is proves that it is right; the fact that it is proves that it has come to stay, and the argument most frequently made in defense of a vicious system is, not that it is right and ought to stay, but that it has come to stay whether you like it or not. I say that that is the argument that is usually advanced in behalf of an error—it is here, it has come to stay—what are you going to do about it?

I believe that, in a civilized society, the question is not what is, but what ought to be, and that every proposition must be arranged at the bar of reason. If you can prove that a thing is good, let it stay; but if you can not prove that it is good, you can not hide behind the assertion that it is here and that you can not get rid of it. I believe that the American people can get rid of anything that they do not want—and that they ought to get rid of everything that is not good. I believe that it is the duty of every citizen to give to his countrymen the benefit of his conscience and his judgment, and cast his influence, be it small or great, upon the right side of every question that arises. In the determination of questions we should find out what will make our people great and good and strong rather than what will make them rich. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." Shall we decide the ethics of larceny by discussing how much the man is going to steal or the chances of his getting caught? No, my friends, we must decide questions upon a higher ground, and if you were to prove to me that a monopoly would reduce the price of the articles that we have to purchase, I would still be opposed to it for a reason which, to my mind, overshadows all pecuniary arguments. The reason is this: Put the industrial system of this nation in the hands of a few men, and let them determine the price of raw material, the price of the finished product, and the wages paid to labor, and you will have an industrial aristocracy beside which a landed aristocracy would be an innocent thing.

I may be in error, but, in my judgment, a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, will be impossible when a few men control all the sources of production and dole out daily bread to all the rest on such terms as the few may prescribe. I believe that this nation is the hope of the world. I believe that the Declaration of Independence was the grandest document ever penned by human hands. The truths of that declaration are condensed into four great propositions: That all men are created equal; that they are endowed with inalienable rights; that governments are instituted among men to preserve those rights, and that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. Such a government is impossible under an industrial aristocracy. Place the food and clothing, all that we eat and wear and use, in the hands of a few people, and instead of being a government of the people it will be a government of the syndicates, by the syndicates, and for the syndicates. Establish such a government and the people will soon be powerless to secure a legislative remedy for any abuse.

Establish such a system, and on the night before election the employees will be notified not to come back on the day after election unless the trusts' candidate is successful. Establish such a government, and instead of giving the right of suffrage to the people you will virtually give the right of suffrage to the heads of monopolies, with each man empowered to vote as many times as he has employees. I am not willing to place the laboring men of this country absolutely at the mercy of the heads of monopolies. I am not willing to place the men who produce the raw material absolutely in the hands of the monopolies, because when you control the price that a man is to receive for what he produces you control the price that he is to receive for his labor in the production of that thing.

The farmer has no wages, except as wages are measured by the price of his product, and when you place it in the power of the trust to fix the price of what the farmer sells you place it in the power of the trust to lower the wages that the farmer receives for his work, and when you place it in the power of the trust to raise the price of what he buys you do the farmer a double injury, because he burns the candle at both ends, and suffers when he sells to the trust and again when he buys of the trust.

Some people have tried to separate the laboring man who works in the factory from the laboring man who works on the farm. I want to warn the laboring men in the factories that they can not separate themselves from those who toil on the farm without inviting their own destruction. I beg the laboring men in the factories not to join the monopolies to crush the farmer, for as soon as the farmer is crushed the laboring man will be crushed, and in a test of endurance the farmer will stand it longer than the laboring man.

I come from an agricultural State—one of the great agricultural States of this nation—and I want to say to you that while our people are, I believe, a unit against the trusts, we can stand the trusts longer than the laboring man can; we can stand all the vicious policies of government longer than the laboring man can. The farmer was the first man on the scene when civilization began, and he will be the last one to disappear. The farmer wants to own his home; he ought to own it. I think that this nation is safer the larger the proportion of home owners. I want every man with a family to own his home; the farmer wants to own his home, but if you will not allow him to own his home, he can rent. He will have to be employed to work the farm.

Take his farm from him by mortgage if you like, but the man who forecloses the mortgage and buys the property will not work the farm. He will need the farmer to work for him, and he will have to give the farmer enough to live on or the farmer can not work. When prices fall so low that the farmer can not buy coal he can burn corn. But when prices fall so low that the coal miner can not buy corn, he can not eat coal. You can drive the farmer down so that he can not buy factory-made goods; but his wife can do like the wife of old—make the clothing for the family off of the farm; but when you close your factories it will take all of the accumulated wealth of the cities to feed the people brought to the point of starvation by vicious, greedy, avaricious legislation.

But, my friends, why should we try to see who can hold out the longest in suffering? Why try to see who can endure the most hardships and yet live? Why not try to see who can contribute most to the greatness and to the glory and to the prosperity of this nation? Why not vie with each other to see who can contribute most to make this Government what the fathers intended it to be? For one hundred years this nation has been the light of the world. For one hundred years the struggling people of all nations have looked to this nation for hope and inspiration. Let us settle these great questions; let us teach the world the blessing of a government that comes from the people; let us show them how happy and how prosperous people can be. God made all men, and He did not make some to crawl on hands and knees and others to ride upon their backs. Let us show what can be done when we put into actual practice the great principles of human equality and of equal rights. Then this nation will fulfill its holy mission, and lead the other nations step by step in the progress of the human race toward a higher civilization.

SECOND SPEECH.

I would not occupy the time again, but for the fact that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Foulke] has referred to a plan which I suggested, and I am afraid that he does not fully understand it.

Just a word in regard to the plan: I want to repeat that it was not presented as the only plan, nor is it necessarily the best plan. It is simply a plan. I was sorry that, when the gentleman got through destroying this plan, he did not suggest a better one. Political agnosticism is of no great value to the public. Not to know what to do is often a convenient position to occupy, but it contributes very little to the settlement of a question.

My plan is this: First, that the State has, or should have, the right to create whatever private corporations the people of the State desire.

Second, that the State has, or should have, the right to impose such limitations upon an outside corporation as the people of the State may think necessary for their own protection. That protects the rights of the people of the State to say, first, what corporations they shall organize in their State, and, second, what corporations they shall permit to come from other States to do business in their State.

Third, that the Federal Government has, or should have, the right to impose such restrictions as Congress may think necessary upon any corporation which does business outside of the State in which it is organized.

In other words, I would preserve to the people of the State all the rights that they now have, and at the same time have Congress exercise a concurrent remedy to supplement the State remedy. When the Federal Government licenses a corporation to do business outside of the State in which it was organized, it merely permits it to do business in any State, under the conditions imposed by that State, in addition to the conditions imposed by the Federal Government. I would not take away from the people of the State any right now existing, but I would have the Federal Government and the State government exercise the powers that may be necessary to annihilate every monopoly.

I do not agree with the gentleman that you can not annihilate a monopoly. I believe it is possible to do so. While the gentleman was speaking I could not help thinking of the lines of a song. While he was destroying every remedy suggested, and yet presenting no other, I thought of the lines:

"Plunged in a gulf of deep despair,
Ye wretched sinners lie."

Now, it is a great deal easier to find fault with a remedy proposed than to propose a remedy which is faultless. Macaulay—I think he is the author of the remark—has said that if any money was to be made by disputing the law of gravitation, able men could be found to write articles against the truth of that law. I have no doubt that any remedy that is proposed will be assaulted. But those who believe that the trusts must go will accept the best remedy they can find, try it, and then accept a better one, if a better one is proposed, and keep on trying until the people are protected.

Now, this is a conference. We have not met here to destroy the trusts. Every law for the annihilation of the trusts must be secured through political action. We are here to discuss the questions. We are here to contribute what we can and to hear what others have to say. We are here to consider the various remedies proposed. I am not sure the remedy which I propose is unconstitutional. I am not sure that the Constitution would prohibit such an act of Congress as I suggest. Suppose that Congress should say that whenever a corporation wants to do business outside of the State it must apply to and receive from some body, created by Congress for the purpose, a license to do business. Suppose the law should provide three conditions upon which the license could be issued:

1. That the evidence should show that there was no water in the stock.
2. That the evidence should show that the corporation has not attempted in the past, and is not now attempting, to monopolize any branch of industry or any article of merchandise; and
3. Providing for that publicity which everybody has spoken of and about which everybody agrees.

Suppose that is done. Who is here to say that such a law would be unconstitutional? The Supreme Court, in deciding the Knight case, did not say that a broader law than the present one would be unconstitutional. It is true that there are things in the decision which suggest that, but until that question is presented to the court you can not say that the court has passed upon it. It is also true that Justice Harlan, in his dissenting opinion, assumed that a broader law would be held unconstitutional, but no one has a right to say that if such a law as I suggest were passed and reviewed by the Supreme Court it would be held unconstitutional. But suppose the law is passed and held unconstitutional; then we can amend the Constitution.

The gentleman suggests that it is a difficult thing to get two-thirds of both Houses and three-fourths of the States to favor such an amendment. That is true. It is a difficult thing; but if the people want to destroy the trusts, they can control two-thirds of both Houses and three-fourths of the States. But what is the alternative? Sit down and do nothing? Allow them to trample upon you, ride rough-shod over you, and then thank God that you still have some left? The people are told to be contented; but I think contentment may be carried too far.

I heard of a man once who had been taught to be contented with his lot, and finally became very poor, and traded off his coat for a loaf of bread. Before he had a chance to eat the bread a dog came along and snatched it away from him. He felt a little indignant at first, but finally that feeling of contentment came back to him, and as he watched the dog turn around a corner in the road carrying the bread away, he said: "Well, thank God, I still have my appetite left."

Now, there are people who seem to think we ought to be satisfied with anything. My friends, the American people are entitled to the best that there is. The American people are entitled to the best system on every subject. I believe when these questions are presented to the American people they will select and secure the best system. I do not believe it necessary for us to sit down quietly and permit a great aggregation of wealth to strangle every competitor. I do not believe that it is in accordance with our dignity as a people, or in accordance with the rights of the people, to say that because a great corporation is organized, therefore, it should be permitted to go into the field of a rival, undersell it until it bankrupts it, raising the money by higher prices somewhere else. I don't think it necessary for us to do that.

I have only suggested a plan. It may not be the best plan. If you have anything better, propose it. If there is any amendment that you can think of that will improve it, suggest it. I am anxious to apply a remedy.

Let me suggest one other thing that I believe will be a step in the right direction. The great trouble has been that, while our platforms denounce corporations, corporations control the elections and place the men who are elected to enforce the law under obligations to them.

Let me propose a remedy—not a remedy, but a step in the right direction. Let the laws, State and national, make it a penal offense for any corporation to contribute to the campaign fund of any political party. Nebraska has such a law, passed two years ago. Tennessee has such a law, passed two years ago. Such a measure was introduced in the State of New York, but so far it has not become a law.

You remember the testimony taken before a Senate committee a few years ago, when the head of the sugar trust testified that the sugar trust made it its business to contribute to campaign funds, and when asked to which one it contributed replied that it depended upon circumstances.

"To which fund do you contribute in Massachusetts?" was asked. "To the Republican fund." "To which fund in New York?" "To the Democratic fund." "To which fund in New Jersey?" and the man replied: "Well, I will have to look at the books; that is a doubtful State."

Now, that is almost a literal reproduction of the testimony of one great corporation on the subject of campaign contribution. I don't mean to say that that remedy will be a complete one, but I believe that when you prevent a corporation from contributing to campaign funds you will make it easier to secure remedial legislation, because some corporations are compelled to contribute; they are blackmailed into contribution, and such a law would protect a corporation that did not want to contribute, and also prevent a corporation from contributing that did want to contribute.

If the people are in earnest they can destroy monopoly, and you never can do anything in this until the people are in earnest. When the American people understand what the monopoly question means, I believe there will be no power, political, financial, or otherwise, to prevent the people from taking possession of every branch of Government, from President to the Supreme Court, and making the Government responsive to the people's will.

Such, Mr. Speaker, are the words of William J. Bryan, as annotated by himself. I submit that they completely refute the charge that he has favored this constitutional amendment or anything in any way resembling it.

Trusts.

SPEECH

OF

HON. THEODORE F. KLUTTZ,

OF NORTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, 1900.

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—

Mr. KLUTTZ said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I regard the proposal of this amendment by the majority at this time as one of the most remarkable of all the phenomena of legislation.

For six long months the Republican majority, with absolute control of this House, with a stalwart in the chair, with carefully constituted committees, with iron-clad rules, has sat here stolid, indifferent alike to appeal and abuse; deaf to the remonstrances of the minority, and to the demands of the people for legislation for the extirpation, or at least the repression, of trusts.

Deaf, dumb, and blind for six long months, that majority, in the very closing hours of the session, just six days before the time fixed for adjournment, has at last awakened to the fact that the demands of an outraged and indignant public must, in show at least, be heard. The smitings of guilty conscience, the realization that something must be done, coupled with the fear that something might be done to curb the trusts, has found hypocritical and fraudulent expression in both the matter and the manner of this proposed constitutional amendment.

Let me quote it in full:

ARTICLE XVI.

SECTION 1. All powers conferred by this article shall extend to the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and all territory under the sovereignty and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to define, regulate, prohibit, or dissolve trusts, monopolies, or combinations, whether existing in the form of a corporation or otherwise.

The several States may continue to exercise such power in any manner not in conflict with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 1 seeks to write into the Constitution the false and imperialistic theory, which in the recent Porto Rican discussion was so ably combatted not only by the Democratic minority, but also by such able lawyers on the Republican side as MCCALL, LITTLEFIELD, CRUMPACKER, SMITH, LORIMER, and others, that the Constitution does not ex proprio vigore extend over all territory under the sovereignty and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

No constitutional amendment has ever contained such language or admission, and none ever will, so long as the American people are mindful of the teachings of the fathers and the traditions of liberty. To enact this section into law would be to admit that territory may be acquired, held, and governed by the United States outside of and without regard to the Constitution, unless that instrument shall be expressly extended to such territory by Congress or by constitutional amendment. It would admit all the claims of the imperialists, and make the President imperator indeed.

Even a cursory reading of section 2 will expose its true character and intent. It strikes down the power of the States, does away with the last fragment of the doctrine of States' rights, and lodges in Congress the sole power—to define, regulate, prohibit, or dissolve trusts, monopolies, or combinations, whether existing in the form of a corporation or otherwise.

Mark the language! If this amendment be adopted, the Congress has this awful, exclusive, controlling power, and has it absolutely. With a Congress controlled and dominated by the trusts, as this Congress is, can any sensible man doubt how that power would be exercised? Corrupt combinations of capital for the oppression of labor would go unscathed, while combinations of labor for protection against such corrupt combinations would be "defined" as unlawful with a vengeance.

The tobacco trust would have nothing to fear, while the tobacco growers and manufacturers who dared combine to resent its rapacity would soon find themselves "defined" into the penitentiary. But why multiply illustrations?

Under this amendment the trusts would need but to buy and control one house of Congress to effectually prevent any legislation whatever against them.

And how transparently deceitful and fraudulent is the second paragraph of this section:

The several States may continue to exercise such power in any manner not in conflict with the laws of the United States.

The merest tyro in the law can not be deceived by false pretense like this.

Congress will have the power not only to regulate the interstate operations of the trusts—and it has this power now—but it will have the right to invade the States and to "define" and crush any corporation or combination in any State, whether engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or not, regardless of the laws of such State.

When Congress legislates it makes "the laws of the United States," and under this amendment no State may make any law in conflict therewith. Thus, supreme power is sought to be conferred upon Congress, and the States stripped of all power over their own corporations or those of other States doing business within their borders. Trust-ridden, trust-controlled, trust-supported, trust-loving as the Republican party is, do you expect any sane man to believe that you intend, expect, or desire this amendment to become a part of the organic law of the land?

Delude not yourselves thus. If you had intended or desired to secure its passage why did you hold this amendment back to the closing days of the session? Why did you refuse the Democratic minority of the committee the poor privilege of even seeing it until it was ready for introduction into the House? Why did you bring it in under a cast-iron rule, which permitted no opportunity of amendment and which allowed time for only the most meager discussion? Why did you, purposely, so objectionably frame it as to render its acceptance by the Democratic minority impossible?

The poor explanation of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that it is the plan of the majority, that the majority must take the responsibility, and that therefore the minority must have no voice in framing it, but be content to vote for or against it without power of amendment, is so weak as to demonstrate the absence of all possible excuse or explanation for this remarkable course of the majority.

True, the majority must take the responsibility for legislation, but here a two-thirds majority is required. You have no such majority, and can therefore have no hope of passing this amendment without large help from the minority; yet you deny that minority all help in framing or considering it, and deliberately frame it so as to render their support impossible.

Out upon such humbug.

Then again, you can not but know that even if the gantlet of this House was run, your amendment could not possibly pass the Senate at this session, and would hang up for service in the next Presidential election; after which, if you again succeed in deluding the people and buying the Presidency, you could easily have it defeated in the Senate, and the farce would be over. Besides, you might use it as a threat to fry more fat out of the trusts. You know, too, and the country knows, that even if this amendment should pass both House and Senate, there can be no hope of its ratification by three-fourths of all the States, without which it can never become a part of the Constitution.

Unless I am greatly mistaken in the temper and patriotism of this House, your proposed measure will be ignominiously defeated here and that defeat will have the approval of the people of this great Republic.

You are indulging in a cheap "play to the grandstand," but, ostrich-like, you are befooling only yourselves. As evidence of this I call attention to but two of the many unmistakable utterances of the press on this question.

First, I commend this extract from the Washington Post, a great independent paper, which supports the Administration whenever it can do so without stultification.

DEMOCRATIC POSITION ON TRUSTS.

Our Democratic friends in Congress are to be congratulated upon the attitude they have assumed toward the constitutional amendment proposed by the House Committee on the Judiciary, of which Hon. GEORGE W. RAY, of New York, is the chairman. Mr. RAY'S proposition is obviously impracticable, and, as many believe, was intended to be so. By supporting it the Democrats would have deliberately connived at a virtually permanent retirement of the trust issue; withdrawn it from the campaign, and thereby robbed their party of one of its most powerful engines of war. They express their utter disbelief in the sincerity of any representative Republican effort to curtail the power of the trusts. It would have been, therefore, suicidal on their part to commit themselves to an arrangement most palpably calculated to serve the alleged purposes of their antagonists.

There was still another serious objection, which is set forth in clause 3 of the resolution adopted by the Democratic caucus on Tuesday night:

"3. We oppose and urge Democrats in Congress to vote against the constitutional amendment proposed by the Republican majority of the Judiciary Committee unless amended by striking out section 1 thereof and adding thereto in section 2, in lieu of these words, 'The several States may continue to exercise such power in any manner not in conflict with the laws of the United States,' the following: 'Nothing in this article, nor any act of Congress in pursuance thereof, shall operate to abridge or impair any of the rights or powers held by any of the States prior to its adoption.'"

It seems to be the case, therefore, that the Democrats regarded the Ray proposition not only as a scheme to postpone, perhaps indefinitely, all governmental action against the trusts, and incidentally to entrap the Democrats into withdrawing the issue of the campaign of 1900, but also, in case the amendment should be finally adopted, as an abridgment of the rights and powers of the States. Certainly, holding such opinions, they could not have taken any course other than that referred to. Their present position, in this matter at least, seems to be unassailable.

I further beg to commend to your prayerful consideration the following from the Washington Times, and particularly to the extract therein contained from the rabid, radical Administration organ, the New York Sun:

THE SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT.

The agents of the Administration in the House of Representatives will be welcome to whatever satisfaction is coming to them on account of their cheap political trick in taking up a proposed constitutional amendment ostensibly aimed at their masters, the trusts, six days before the date set for adjournment.

Some of the majority leaders in the House are hugging themselves over the achievement, believing it to be a monster of ingenuity which will "put the Democrats in a hole;" but it will do nothing of the kind. Its hypocrisy is so barefaced and its object so clear that it will serve to bring the richly deserved contempt of the country upon its authors and supporters. This view of the matter is held by eminent Republican as well as Democratic authorities. The leading organ of the party in the country, the New York Sun, yesterday editorially referred to the Jenkins joint resolution in these terms:

"When we say plainly that this is the most dishonest and therefore the most discreditable piece of work achieved during the present session by the leaders of Republican policy in the House, we are not speaking of the merits of the proposed amendment. Its revolutionary character, the sweeping change it would effect in the entire system of our institutions, the bestowal upon Congress of an unlimited and arbitrary power over all private business in all the States and without regard to State lines or State rights, need not even be discussed. There is no more prospect of its adoption by a two-thirds vote of both House and Senate, and of its ratification by the legislatures of three-fourths of the forty-five States than there is of the adoption of a constitutional amendment vesting in the Federal Government the direct management of all the myriad industries of this land.

"The dishonesty of the performance lies in the fact that there was no expectation on the part of the author of this resolution, or of the Republicans on the Judiciary Committee who favorably reported it, or of the Republicans in the House who were willing to vote for it, that the proposed sixteenth amendment will ever amount to more than a campaign trick of the cheapest and unworthiest description."

When one of its chiefest exponents denounces its action, as the Sun does, the Republican party need not indulge in any celebration over its blank-cartridge shot at the monopolistic elements which own and control it and furnish the money with which it expects to carry the next Presidential election. A more doddering piece of campaign idiocy than the sixteenth pretendment proposed against the trusts, by the men who are in Congress only by the grace and money of the trusts, is not to be found in all the pages of a not overclean American political history.

No, gentlemen of the majority, your little piece of peanut politics will only bring down upon you the deserved contempt of an outraged and long-suffering people. They know that your party is, and has been, the promoter, the friend, the shield and buckler of the trusts. They know that your Attorney-General, purposely selected, with ample power in the laws already on the statute book, has utterly failed to proceed against or prosecute a single one of the trusts. They know that it was with the money contributed by the trusts that you debauched election officers, bribed and intimidated voters, bought States, and stole the Presidency and the Congress; and they know you are playing to do it again.

They have suffered under the insolence and arrogance, the heartlessness and grinding cruelty of these corrupt and criminal aggregations of ill-gotten capital; they have traced the evil to its source, and know whence comes this brood of hell. They wage no war on capital as such; they welcome and would foster productive industry and enterprise, but they have determined in their righteous wrath that the trust must go. They have listened to their sorrow to the siren song of Republican promise, and they know that the only hope of relief from the domination of the trusts, the only hope of the salvation of the plain people of this country from industrial slavery, lies in the rout and defeat of the Republican party and the election of a Democratic President and Congress.

Well may you trim and dissemble; well may you try to deceive yet once again, by feigning to legislate against your makers and masters. The people are aroused to the importance of this mighty contest, and though the odds are great, right will prevail against might, truth against falsehood, the people against the trusts.

Nor is this the only count in the mighty indictment which you will have to answer at the ballot box in November.

Your frequent and flagrant infractions of the Constitution; your disregard of solemn promises to the Porto Ricans; your murder of our brave soldiers in the Philippines by incompetent generalship; your determination to crush out liberty in these islands; your anglomania, which has committed you to the obsolete Hay-Pauncefote treaty and renounced our right to build, fortify, and protect an American isthmian canal; your utter denial of even an expression of American sympathy for the suffering South African Republics; the reign of loot and plunder in which your officials have reveled in Cuba and the Philippines; your ill-smelling scandal of Gage and the City National Bank; your absolute refusal to lighten any part of the burdens of the war taxes; all these, and many others of like ilk, are the sins for which you will be called to answer at the bar of enlightened and outraged public opinion. Your record is such as no party can successfully face. If your eyes were not holden, you would even now see, what all the world sees, the handwriting on the wall, the "Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin" of the Republican party.

Twelve Years of National Administration, 1888 to 1900—The Fallacies of W. J. Bryan Exposed.

SPEECH

OF

HON. CHARLES N. FOWLER,

OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 2, 1900.

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—

Mr. FOWLER said:

Mr. SPEAKER: This Government being one of, by, and for the people, is in effect a great corporation, in which every voter is a stockholder.

Every four years the stockholders have a meeting to select a manager of its affairs. It is a simple, plain, business proposition. On the 6th of November every voter will have an opportunity to express his opinion as to the honesty and capacity of the two great parties. No one will have the hardihood to say that either of the great parties, if intrusted with power, would proceed to steal money out of the Treasury.

Nor will any sane man have the audacity to say that either Mr. McKinley or Mr. Bryan is personally dishonest, however widely he may differ from the one or the other upon political questions. Capacity alone, then, of leaders and parties is left for comparison, discussion, and decision. It is not sufficient that a national Administration, through its policies, shall keep some of the people employed some of the time or some of the people employed all of the time or all of the people employed some of the time. But a truly wise, patriotic, and American Administration should keep all of the people employed all of the time, and that, too, at the highest wages paid to man.

To every intelligent, fair-minded man, who is a patriot before he is a partisan, the experience of the past twelve years must be suggestive at least, if indeed not conclusively convincing upon his judgment, absolutely binding upon his political conscience, and all-controlling upon his action on election day.

Do you candidly, honestly, and earnestly seek to know the truth? Go to the exchanges of the clearing houses of the country, where the products of labor upon the farm and in the factory are so well and accurately reflected. No broader generalization of the activities and prosperity of our people, in every trade and occupation, in every nook and corner of our Republic, can be found.

Amount of the exchanges of the clearing houses of the United States from 1888 to September, 1900.

1888	$48,750,886,813
1889	53,501,411,510
1890	58,845,867,995
1891	57,298,737,938
1892	60,883,572,428
1893	58,860,682,455
1894	45,028,490,716
1895	50,975,155,046
1896	51,935,651,733
1897	54,170,545,659
1898	68,900,661,776
1900 (seven months)	53,689,443,478
1900 (estimated five months)	38,347,745,340
Total for 1900	92,037,588,818

From 1888, during the four years of Republican Administration, exchanges of our clearing houses steadily increased from $48,750,886,813 in 1888 to the magnificent total of $60,883,572,438 in 1892.

But from 1892, during four years of Democratic rule, our clearings fell from $60,883,572,438 to $51,935,651,733 in 1896, running as low as $45,000,000,000 in 1894.

Mark this, and how great the contrast: From 1896, during Mr. McKinley's Administration, we have gained on an average more than ten billions each year, the exchanges having gone up from $51,935,651,733 in 1896 to the surprising sum of $92,037,588,818 in 1900.

Do we hope to keep American labor employed, with our vast mechanism of production, two-thirds or even one-half of the time, to supply our own needs, we must capture the markets of the world. We must send out our manufactured goods as well as our raw materials. The mechanic and the farmer are alike equally and mutually interested in this conquest of the fields of consumption. Therefore your interest, indeed the interest of every man under the flag, is obviously with that party which has achieved this much desired, indeed necessary, result. Again, let us supply the fatal comparison of policies.

Exports of the United States from 1889 to April, 1900.

Year.	Amount.	Per cent of manufactures.
1888	$695,954,507	19
1889	730,242,609	18
1890	845,293,828	17
1891	872,270,283	19
1892	1,015,732,011	15
1893	831,030,785	19
1894	869,204,937	21
1895	793,392,599	23
1896	863,200,487	26
1897	1,032,007,603	27
1898	1,210,291,913	28
1899	1,203,931,222	28
For ten months up to May, 1900, they were	1,172,749,430
Estimated for two months	234,549,886
Total for 1900	1,407,299,316	30
Manufactures exported this year	442,189,794

From 1888 to 1892, during a Republican Administration, we increased our exports $319,787,505, reaching the then gratifying figure of $1,015,732,011.

From 1892 to 1896, during a Democratic Administration, our exports decreased by $152,531,524, falling from $1,015,732,011 to $863,200,487.

From 1896 down to June 30, 1900, with two months estimated, during McKinley's Administration, our exports have gone up from $863,200,487 in 1896 to $1,400,000,000, gaining $537,000,000, or nearly doubling; and of this vast export of $1,400,000,000 more than $400,000,000 are manufactured goods, and would require in their production more than a million of American mechanics.

Nor need we limit the comparison of the exports of the last four years to those of the preceding four years nor any four years in our nation's history, but boldly challenge a comparison of these matchless years with the whole previous life of the nation. Mark this: The excess of exports over imports during President McKinley's Administration is nearly four times as great as it was for the one hundred and six years before he became President of the United States.

To attest this fact I submit the following letter received by me on June 1 from the Bureau of Statistics:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., June 1, 1900.

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry of to-day, I have to inform you that the excess of exports of merchandise over imports from 1790 to March 1, 1897, was $383,028,497, and the excess of exports of merchandise over imports from March 1, 1897 to March 1, 1900 was $1,483,537,094.

Very respectfully,

J. D. WHITNEY, Acting Chief of Bureau.

Hon. CHAS. N. FOWLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

"The poor ye have always with you" is as true to-day as when the morning stars sang together, and no one need go far to find poverty and suffering in the most prosperous days of the most prosperous years of the most prosperous nation of the world's history, because incompetency, shiftlessness, mistakes, and misfortunes always have produced and always will produce want and woe. But when the great mass of the people, as the decades come and go, get higher and higher wages, and live in better and better homes, and constantly increase their holdings in the building-loan associations, life-insurance companies, and savings banks of the country, you may depend upon it that we are moving grandly on to a higher and better civilization, and that the party whose policies render these improved conditions possible is indeed the true party of the people, rather than that political organization which sings a tale of woe and feeds upon ignorance, prejudice, discontent, and every ism that springs from shortcomings and mental disorder.

Actions speak louder than words. Let the facts show which of the great parties is the true benefactor and real party of the people.

The comparative resources of the savings banks from 1888 to 1900.

1888-89	$1,622,612,215
1889-90	1,742,617,001
1890-91	1,854,517,069
1891-92	1,964,044,861
1892-93	2,013,775,147
1893-94	1,980,744,189
1894-95	2,053,761,328
1895-96	2,143,307,163
1896-97	2,198,824,474
1897-98	2,241,344,991
1898-99	2,400,831,472
1899-1900 (partly estimated)	2,550,000,000

It will be readily observed that the savings increased during President Harrison's Administration from $1,622,612,215 to $2,013,775,147, or $391,162,434; and that during President McKinley's Administration they increased from $2,143,307,168 to $2,550,000,000 or more than $400,000,000, while they only a little more than held their own during Mr. Cleveland's Administration. Hence, it would seem to be very plain where the real interest of the honest, frugal, American laborer lies.

It is well known that during those frightful, those distressing, those horrifying years of Democratic rule many business men placed their capital with savings banks to get some interest temporarily while awaiting the return of Republican days of hope and prosperity, and that if this amount were known and could be deducted there would have been a great falling off from 1893 to 1897.

What is so apparent in this table can be demonstrated in a hundred other ways; but nowhere more authoritatively, plainly, and significantly than here. American toilers, do you wish to continue to thrive and save, or again to swear because you "did not think" or "did not know that it was loaded?"

Does the country need any additional proof of this overwhelming contrast? Look upon the scenes around you, and then think of the days, the weeks, the months, aye, the years, when employer and employee alike sweat blood because of anxiety that ruin would overtake the one while want and starvation faced the family of the other.

Let no man venture to assert that the unparalleled activity of all our productive energies, human and mechanical, marks a temporary outburst peculiar to the last year of the expiring century, for a review of the commercial banking institutions of the country speaks more loudly for the policies of the Republican party than any facts yet submitted. Through them flows the blood of commerce, and in them will be found at any given time the commercial power of the nation to employ labor and distribute its product.

Resources of national banks for years 1888 to 1900.

1888	$2,815,700,000
1889	2,998,300,000
1890	3,141,500,000
1891	3,213,100,000
1892	3,510,100,000
1893	3,109,500,000
1894	3,473,900,000
1895	3,423,600,000
1896	3,263,600,000
1897	3,705,100,000
1898	4,003,500,000
1899	4,650,300,000
1900	4,811,956,000

From the fall of 1888 to the fall of 1892, during a Republican Administration, national banks gained in resources $694,400,000, going from $2,815,700,000 to $3,510,100,000.

From the fall of 1892 to the fall of 1896, during a Democratic Administration, the national banks lost in resources $256,500,000, going down from $3,510,100,000 to $3,263,600,000.

From the fall of 1896 to April 26, 1900, during McKinley's Administration, the national banks have gained in resources $1,548,356,000, going up from $3,263,600 to $4,811,956,000. It will be observed that the increase in both Republican periods was constant and gradual throughout, demonstrating the influence and power of far-reaching policies which alone can bring about uniform and universal prosperity worthy the genius of the American people.

The Democratic party came into power in 1892, and had complete control of the legislative department, the House of Representatives and the Senate, as well as the Executive, and left behind a wreckage of business and a slaughter of enterprise, a destruction of values, and a period of suffering without parallel in American history.

President Cleveland denounced the tariff bill then passed as one of perfidy and dishonor, and refused to father it. But it is not too much to say, in the light of subsequent events, that had he had his way hardly one stone of American industry would have been left upon another.

The ostensible object of the Wilson bill was to secure cheap raw materials and, with constant labor at low wages, capture the markets of the world. The actual result was that we lost our own markets, the exports fell off more than two hundred millions, our labor was thrown out of employment, and the only promise realized was low wages, but our people had very little of those.

The Republican party came into power in 1896 upon two distinct pledges: The maintenance of the gold standard and a tariff for the protection of our labor, which should at the same time produce a sufficient revenue to support the Government. The very day the decision of the people was known capital sought the channels of trade, and then was ushered in a period of prosperity without a parallel in the records of mankind. This favoring circumstance was supplemented in the spring of 1897 by the passage of the Dingley law, wisely adjusting our tariff to our conditions and our needs.

Other important events, materially affecting the operations of the Treasury, followed in quick succession. In December, 1897, the Pacific Railway debt was adjusted, and within ten days $58,448,228.75, in equal installments, was paid to the Government.

In January, 1898, $29,904,952 of matured bonds were paid off, and in September, 1898, $14,004,560 more were paid. The Spanish-American war soon brought in its train large appropriations, which of necessity became significant factors in the operations of the Treasury.

The fifty millions defense fund was at once placed at the disposal of the President. In June the war loan of two hundred millions was effected. Upon the ratification of the Paris treaty in April, 1899, the sum of $20,000,000 was paid to Spain.

In November, 1899, because of our irresponsive system of currency, the commercial conditions of the country became so disturbed that the Secretary of the Treasury came to its rescue and wisely relieved the situation by purchasing twenty millions of Government bonds.

As a result of the war three hundred and seventy-two millions have already been paid out.

Finally, in perfect accord with Republican policy, the Secretary has begun the reduction of the public debt by calling in twenty-five millions of Government bonds now subject to redemption.

To all these vast movements of money in and out of the Treasury another stupendous transaction has been superadded by the fulfillment of the remaining pledge of the Republican party at St. Louis when it declared in favor of the maintenance of the gold standard. The very hour it became known that the control of the United States Senate had passed to the Republican party this pledge was started on its road to redemption; and now, thank God, our standard of values is no longer subject to the caprices of a President or Secretary of the Treasury, and our Government credit has been raised above that of any other nation, Great Britain paying 2¾ per cent upon her debt, while nearly one-third of our Government obligations has been refunded at 2 per cent, the amount reaching $290,000,000, and the saving in interest being more than $8,000,000.

All these gigantic transactions have been crowded into the short period of three years, and yet, notwithstanding the fact that every movement of money or currency to or from the Treasury must necessarily correspondingly affect the quantity of money and currency in the hands of the people, Mr. Gage, perfectly familiar with banking, thoroughly informed upon all economic questions involved, and with a broad and statesmanlike grasp of the situation, has kept the money of the Treasury and that used in commerce in constant equilibrium, so that through no act or word even of his has the slightest shock been given to trade, commerce, or the finances of the country.

In strict accordance with the law of June 3, 1864, and the well-established practice of the Government—notably, in 1879, upon the resumption of specie payment, when John Sherman deposited $279,544,615 with the banks to prevent contraction, and again in 1888, when Mr. Fairchild, a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, for the same reason deposited with the banks $61,546,000—Mr. Gage, carefully avoiding all favoritism or local advantage, expansion or contraction at any point, distributed the Government deposits, which at no time reached one hundred millions, among 260 banks located in 43 different States.

With what masterly skill he kept our money and currency, which is the very lifeblood of commerce, running a natural course, and prevented the vast transactions of the Treasury from producing any adverse influence upon trade, the amount of cash in the Treasury at the following dates clearly demonstrates:

July, 1898	$222,601,730.13
October, 1898	304,550,685.89
January, 1899	282,086,984.43
April, 1899	275,986,434.22
July, 1899	273,859,780.70
October, 1899	283,497,897.49
January, 1900	273,159,422.86

When the administration of the Treasury from 1897 to 1901 and the achievements of these four years are viewed by the historian, the name of Lyman J. Gage will be written with those of Robert Morris, Alexander Hamilton, Albert Gallatin, Hugh McCulloch, and John Sherman; and, with passing time, will shine more and more as this galaxy of names brightens.

The Dingley bill, the war-revenue measure, the establishment of the gold standard, and the funding of the debt into 2 per cent gold coin bonds, with the currency privileges, have had a most marvelous and salutary effect upon the balances of the Treasury and the monetary condition of the country.

In the light of coming events we should not fail here and now to compare and observe the effect of Republican policies upon the circulation of the country, more especially because of the unwise and unfortunate relation of the United States Treasury to the business of the country growing out of our demand obligations. Under present conditions it is of the utmost importance that the business of the Treasury should be wisely and profitably managed and that our revenues should always exceed our expenditures. Conscious of this fact, let us see to which of the parties should the business affairs of the country be committed.

Excess or deficit of revenues over expenditures from 1889 to June 1, 1900.

Year.	Surplus.	Deficit.
1889	$87,761,080.50
1890	85,040,271.97
1891	26,838,541.96
1892	9,914,453.60
Total	209,554,348.18
1893	2,341,074.29
1894		$69,803,280.58
1895		42,805,223.18
1896		25,203,245.70
1897		18,052,454.41
1898		38,047,247.60
1899		89,111,559.67
1900 (11 months)	63,334,217.37

Although the Democratic party was in power and in charge of the Government for four years in time of peace, it increased the bonded debt $262,335,800, and yet had an aggregate deficit of $135,470,055.17.

The Republican party had a surplus for the four years 1889–1892 of $209,554,348.18, and for the four years 1897–1900, within which time a Republican Administration carried on the Spanish-American war and so adjusted the revenues to the needs of the country as to produce a surplus in excess of expenditures of more than $63,000,000 the present year, and yet the increase of the debt was not so great by sixty-two millions as during the four years of Democratic rule.

The Republican party turned over the Government to the Democrats in March, 1893, with a bonded debt of only $585,029,330, and this was increased to $847,365,130 in times of peace.

For the purpose of prosecuting the war the debt was increased in 1898 by $200,000,000, and now stands at $1,046,048,750, less such an amount of the twenty-five millions of 2 per cent bonds as the Secretary of the Treasury may have already redeemed.

Confronted by these facts, must not every fair-minded man who appreciates the absolute importance of the successful operations of the Treasury to every business enterprise, to the employee as well as to the employer, confess the unwisdom, the risk, the danger of again turning over the affairs of this country to the Democratic party, which has had no business experience for more than fifty years which has not resulted in dire disaster, not only to the Government but to all the people as well?

Do you need further evidence to completely overwhelm you and remove the last vestige of doubt, turn to the gold movement for the past seven years:

Gold imports and exports.

Year.	Imports.	Exports.
1893		$87,506,463
1894		4,528,942
1895		90,063,721
1896		78,884,882
1897	$44,633,200
1898	104,985,517
1899	51,452,517
Total	201,071,234	201,003,808

During the four years Mr. Carlisle was Secretary of the Treasury $201,003,808 of gold was exported; while during the first three years of the recent Administration, or down to June 30, 1899, we imported $201,071,000, making a difference in favor of Republican policies of $402,076,808.

Nor is this all. When the people voted to turn over this Government to the Democratic party in 1892, there was in circulation among the people $24.44 per capita; but when the people elected William McKinley in 1896 there was but $21.10 per capita in circulation.

After a little more than three years of Republican rule there was, on the 1st day of June, 1900, $26.77 per capita in circulation.

Money in circulation.

	March 1, 1897.	June 1, 1900.
Gold coin (including bullion in Treasury)	$516,315,696	$618,535,530
Gold certificates	37,544,819	204,049,299
Standard silver dollars	55,378,762	67,645,528
Silver certificates	363,709,501	408,477,649
Subsidiary silver	60,709,595	75,658,587
Treasury notes of 1890	85,546,621	78,636,759
United States notes	200,734,616	322,752,949
Currency certificates, act of June 8, 1872	76,525,000	4,785,000
National-bank notes	219,230,343	294,057,570
Total	1,675,694,953	2,074,087,871

Population of the United States March 1, 1897, estimated at 72,807,000; circulation per capita, $22.97.

Population of the United States June 1, 1900, estimated at 77,676,700; circulation per capita, $26.71.

Nor is this table, showing the actual amount of money of various kinds in circulation, more interesting or important than the following, which discloses the general stock of money in the United States March 1, 1897, and June 1, 1900:

General stock of money in the United States.

	Mar. 1, 1897.	June 1, 1900.
Gold coin (including bullion in Treasury)	$702,521,724	$1,041,531,374
Gold certificates
Standard silver dollars	436,868,343	487,497,976
Silver certificates
Subsidiary silver	76,514,618	81,672,075
Treasury notes of 1890	117,550,280	79,440,000
United States notes	346,681,016	346,681,016
Currency certificates, act of June 8, 1872
National-bank notes	234,236,327	300,569,759
Total	1,914,372,308	2,337,392,200

However, it should be observed before leaving these tables that there is scarcely anything which is more likely to mislead the public mind than the statement so often made by the Democratic party as now organized, that the amount of money in any country bears any relation to the prices of that country or in any way reflects the commercial condition of that country. Local conditions, under the operation of economic law, will invariably control the per capita circulation.

In support of this statement I desire to call your attention to the following facts:

Per capita circulation in the United States.

1808	$5.00
1845	9.00
1873	15.85
1892	21.40
1900	26.77

Per capita circulation in different States in 1899.

New York	$37.00
Rhode Island	26.00
Washington	23.00
South Dakota	8.00
Mississippi	2.00
Arkansas	3.00

Per capita circulation in different nations in 1899.

Straits Settlements	$53.82
Hawaii	50.00
Siam	42.68
France	36.15
South American States	33.18
Australasia	31.68
Holland	26.76
Germany	19.84
England	17.05
Spain	15.22
Canada	12.13
Sweden	9.80
Mexico	9.12
Norway	7.6
Russia	6.3
Turkey	3.7
Bulgaria	2.3
Japan	1.75

Certainly no one will contend that Great Britain, with only $17.05 per capita, is not a far more progressive and prosperous country than the Straits Settlements, with its $53; Hawaii, with its $50; Siam, with its $42; France, with its $36.15, or the South American States, with their $33. Nor will anyone think of comparing the prosperity of Siam, with its $42 per capita, with that of Japan, with but $1.75 per capita.

Anyone who cares to investigate at length the question of per capita circulation and prices will find that there is no more relation between them than there is between the Chicago platform and the eighth commandment.

Mr. Speaker, so many of the specious statements, unsupported declarations, and fallacious arguments made by Mr. Bryan in 1896 have been exposed, controverted, and utterly destroyed by the experience of the past four years that I can not refrain from calling the attention of the House and the country to a few of them.

At Newton, Iowa, on August 10, 1896, he used the following language:

> The law upon which we base our fight is as sure as the law of gravitation. If we have a gold standard, prices are as certain to fall as the stone which is thrown into the air.

In the following November the people voted to maintain the gold standard and elected McKinley; and prices have been rising ever since. Just the reverse of what he prophesied.

At the notification meeting, held at the Madison Square Garden, New York City, in his speech of acceptance he used this language:

> A gold standard encourages the hoarding of money, because money is rising; it also discourages enterprise and paralyzes industry.

The people established the gold standard by their votes, and every dollar of every kind has come from its hiding, enterprise has been encouraged beyond the dreams of any man, and industry has called for more men than the country could supply. Just the reverse in every particular to his dire prediction.

At New Haven, Conn., he said:

> No party ever declared in its platform that it was in favor of hard times, and yet the party that declares for a gold standard in substance declares for a continuation of hard times.

The very hour that the result of the election was known, times began to grow better.

At Minneapolis, Minn., he said:

> The gold standard means dearer money; dearer money means cheaper property; cheaper property means harder times; harder times means more people out of work; more people out of work means more people destitute; more people destitute means more people desperate; more people desperate means more crime.

Every month since the national election money has been growing easier, lower, and cheaper; property of every description has been gradually but constantly rising; fewer and fewer people are out of work; fewer people are destitute and crime has constantly decreased. These statements, with the various changes rung on them, constitute all that Mr. Bryan said in those unnumbered speeches in 1896, and there is hardly a shred of fact or truth left in any one of them.

Mr. Speaker, to demonstrate how little Mr. Bryan knows or comprehends of economic principles and the experiences of our country, or how much he must suppress, if he does know, I desire to call the attention of the House to Bulletin No. 27 of the Department of Labor, now under the supervision of that greatest and most reliable of our statisticians, Carroll D. Wright. On page 263 Mr. Wright gives a tabulated statement of prices from July 1, 1890, to July 1, 1899, which I now include in these remarks:

Wholesale prices of commodities, January, 1890, to July, 1899—Relative prices.

SUMMARY BY GROUPS.

Date.	Food.	Cloths and clothing.	Fuel and lighting.	Metals and implements.	Lumber and building materials.	Drugs and chemicals.	House-furnishing goods.	Miscellaneous.	All articles.
January, 1890	99.2	101.9	99.0	106.8	104.1	104.5	100.0	94.1	102.0
April, 1890	97.8	102.2	99.5	103.5	104.2	112.1	100.0	97.6	101.9
July, 1890	95.5	102.1	100.7	105.3	98.8	104.5	100.0	103.8	100.4
October, 1890	103.3	102.4	100.6	105.7	101.1	105.4	100.0	104.5	103.1
January, 1891	103.0	100.3	100.6	98.1	100.5	97.4	102.2	100.4	100.6
April, 1891	104.8	98.5	99.7	97.5	99.3	100.1	100.0	104.0	100.7
July, 1891	99.6	97.9	100.7	95.1	97.1	92.0	100.0	101.5	97.7
October, 1891	101.5	97.6	99.8	94.0	97.7	92.2	100.0	97.5	97.9
January, 1892	98.1	97.0	99.6	94.1	97.1	91.2	98.3	96.8	96.5
April, 1892	93.3	96.0	97.9	92.3	96.9	85.7	96.8	99.3	94.2
July, 1892	94.8	96.2	98.9	92.3	95.0	88.3	96.5	95.9	94.5
October, 1892	97.7	98.3	99.3	90.7	94.6	87.6	95.9	90.9	94.7
January, 1893	103.8	98.9	104.1	88.9	97.7	88.3	92.7	89.8	97.2
April, 1893	102.6	98.3	106.3	89.4	94.5	91.4	90.7	92.7	96.6
July, 1893	96.1	95.6	105.2	87.6	92.6	87.0	88.9	86.9	93.1
October, 1893	101.0	93.0	105.2	84.4	93.1	81.9	87.9	87.1	93.0
January, 1894	94.2	90.0	105.8	80.6	91.2	83.1	84.2	87.0	89.6
April, 1894	87.8	87.8	100.8	79.0	88.7	86.8	83.0	85.1	86.7
July, 1894	87.5	86.2	102.0	79.4	87.4	83.6	83.3	86.2	86.0
October, 1894	93.3	85.4	101.6	78.2	86.9	82.1	82.7	84.5	86.9
January, 1895	90.3	80.0	100.8	76.1	87.8	83.7	78.5	84.3	84.7
April, 1895	91.5	79.4	98.4	75.9	88.4	82.0	79.5	83.3	84.7
July, 1895	87.9	83.6	98.4	84.7	86.4	78.9	76.2	83.1	85.2
October, 1895	85.8	88.3	98.6	89.1	85.4	75.7	81.8	83.9	86.3
January, 1896	84.4	87.2	97.5	83.7	85.6	81.9	79.2	84.2	85.2
April, 1896	80.2	83.3	97.7	85.6	83.1	82.0	77.8	82.3	83.0
July, 1896	75.8	81.4	100.1	85.4	81.8	82.4	78.1	88.5	81.5
October, 1896	78.9	82.8	100.9	83.7	82.4	80.1	79.2	88.5	82.4
January, 1897	79.6	82.3	99.3	80.1	83.1	81.9	76.7	88.4	82.0
April, 1897	78.2	81.4	97.8	78.8	83.0	77.9	78.7	89.2	80.9
July, 1897	76.0	81.4	97.8	77.4	82.6	77.0	78.4	89.6	79.9
October, 1897	83.1	83.0	97.8	80.6	85.7	81.5	76.4	91.6	83.6
January, 1898	83.4	80.8	98.1	79.4	86.5	86.3	74.1	90.5	83.3
April, 1898	82.9	80.9	94.4	79.7	86.7	85.4	74.9	94.1	83.3
July, 1898	83.2	80.9	95.5	81.4	86.0	92.1	73.8	94.6	84.2
October, 1898	84.2	80.3	93.6	81.6	88.3	88.9	74.9	93.6	84.4
January, 1899	86.6	80.7	90.8	83.2	94.1	90.7	79.5	94.3	86.5
April, 1899	87.1	82.5	91.2	96.1	97.1	97.8	86.5	96.6	90.6
July, 1899	85.9	84.5	89.8	107.9	99.9	95.9	92.1	95.7	92.9

From this table one may learn that practically all that Mr. Bryan has ever said on the money question and prices is not so. Taking 100 as the price level, from 1890 to 1893 prices gradually fell, until they reached 81.5 on July 1, 1896. On October 1, six months after Mr. McKinley became President, the price level had risen to 83.6. In July, 1899, the price level had risen to 92.9 per cent, or 15 per cent; and, after a somewhat careful and quite general investigation, I am convinced that the price level, July 1, 1900, will be approximately what it was in 1890, or at 100, or show a rise of 25 per cent in four years.

In October, 1890, when the price level was the highest, standing at 103, the per capita circulation was $22.82; and in July, 1897, when the price level was at the lowest point, 80, the per capita circulation was just the same, or $22.49; and now, though our per capita circulation is $26.77, we have not yet reached the price level of 1890.

That the opinion of Mr. Bryan upon the gold and silver question and upon money and prices has been proved utterly worthless, I believe all students of economics will agree.

Mr. Bryan, believing that there are more people in the United States who have nothing than who have something, has laid down his platform in the first sentence of his article in the North American Review for June, 1900, when he asserts that "the issue is between plutocracy and democracy." Again he is to bear the torch of unrest, discontent, and disorder, bringing forward the walking delegate, and again is he to try to array class against class, when there is not and can not be any such thing as a class war in this country. Only an enemy to the nation and the people would seek to engender it for his own personal, ambitious, and selfish ends, caring not what havoc might be wrought. He knows and everyone knows that nearly every brilliant star in the firmament of success has won its way through a bitter struggle, steadied always by hard necessity.

On page 757 of this article, he makes an attack upon the protective tariff in these words:

> High duties were placed upon the necessities of life on the ground that infant industries required assistance, with the result that the owners of the aided industries grew rich, while home owning decreased and tenancy increased among the consumers.

If he has taken pains to investigate this question, he knows that just the reverse of his statement is true; but he is bent on making a large portion of our people believe that they are about to be eaten alive, and therefore they should proceed to fight their supposed destroyers.

One page 759 he uses these words:

> After six thousand years of search and saving, the total volume of gold and silver money is about eight billions, nearly equally divided between the two metals.
>
> Upon this basis of metallic money rests a large volume of paper money, and upon the various forms of money rests the world's indebtedness.

Think of this supposed economist saying that the debt of the United States rests upon the money in the Treasury of the United States; for all outside of the Treasury is owned by whomsoever may at any time happen to have possession of it. Did our debt of nearly three billions at the end of the civil war rest upon the few greenbacks that happened to be in the Treasury, or did it rest upon the property, credit, and honor of the nation?

Does the enormous debt of the city of Chicago rest upon the few hundred thousand dollars there may be in the coffers of the city at any given time, or upon the property, credit, and honor of that great municipality?

Does the mortgage of $500 upon a farm rest upon the $5 in the pocket of the farmer, or on his land, credit, and honor?

He sells his wheat crop in the fall to the grain buyer and receives a check for each load, and from day to day deposits the checks in a bank, and at the end of the season gives his own check for $500 to the man who holds the mortgage, which is then canceled, and a part of the world's indebtedness is paid; and that night the evidence of a part of the world's indebtedness is burned up in the kitchen stove, with the happy wife and children standing by. Not a dollar, not a 5-cent piece, has ever figured in the transaction.

The production of gold last year was $315,000,000. It will exceed that this year, and I am informed by the very best authority that it will in all probability reach $400,000,000 in 1901, an amount equal to both the gold and silver produced in 1892, or in the next twenty years the world will produce as much gold alone as the world has collected of both gold and silver in all its history.

In the same article can be found these remarkable words on page 761:

> A currency issued and controlled by banks and secured by government bonds creates a paper-money trust.

Mr. Speaker, it is very doubtful whether the writer of these words knows what a bank is or what a bank does.

If what the gentleman says is true, then there has been a bank trust since the national-bank system was established in 1863. There are 3,583 national banks, but there are 9,732 other banks of various kinds in the United States, any one of which could become a national bank if good enough and it desired to do so. A bank is nothing more nor less than a merchant, precisely as the groceryman who sells vegetables and canned goods is a merchant.

The banker deals in credits, selling his own, which are well-known, and buying those around him, which are little known; and if he can use his credit profitably in the form of a bank note, he will proceed to take out circulation; and if it proves unprofitable, as it often does, he will retire the circulation, precisely as the grocery merchant quits dealing in canned tomatoes or any other commodity if it proves unprofitable. The national-bank circulation was $352,000,000 in 1882 and only $122,000,000 in 1890, showing that credit in the form of bank notes was unprofitable.

Mr. Bryan has detected a prejudice against national banks in some quarters, and desiring to avail himself of it as a political asset, he considered that a sufficient reason for an attack upon them, and his false and senseless remark just quoted.

If one believed what the Democratic candidate says in this article about monopoly and trusts, he would be compelled to think that more than half of the American people were in favor of both, when no intelligent person is in favor of either.

In the light of the decisions of the Supreme Court, interpreting the constitutional provisions with regard to interstate and foreign commerce, Mr. Bryan's suggestion that a license be granted must appear to every intelligent business man or lawyer whose opinion is worth having as most superficial and trivial.

Again, attacking the tariff, he observes:

> The tariff has been a bulwark to the trusts.

If the democratic free-trade country of Great Britain did not contain more trusts and great aggregations of capital than any other country in the world, we might be called upon to seriously consider his assertion. Again, the greatest and most conspicuous trusts in the United States are not protected to the millionth part of a cent, viz, the Democratic ice trust of Tammany Hall and the Standard Oil Company.

Again, in his article in the North American Review he vaporized as follows on page 765:

> The Democratic party is better able to undertake this work now than it was a few years ago, because all the trust magnates have left the party. The Republican party is less able than ever before to make a successful war against trusts, because it numbers among its membership all the trust magnates it ever had, and in addition to them it has all the Democratic party formerly had.

Does Mr. Bryan believe one single word of that paragraph? If so, let him read this list and, rising, like an honest man, retract.

The following is taken from a published list of Democratic stockholders in the ice trust:

New York City officials.

Robert A. Van Wyck, mayor.
J. Sergeant Cram, dock commissioner.
Charles F. Murphy, dock commissioner.
H. S. Kearny, commissioner, public buildings, etc.
M. P. Breslin, dock department.
John Whalen, corporation counsel.
Randolph Guggenheimer, president of council.
E. R. Carroll, clerk, general sessions.
G. V. Brower, Brooklyn park commissioner.

Democratic judges.

Martin McMahon, general sessions.
E. L. Fursman, supreme court.
H. A. Gildersleeve, supreme court.
G. C. Barrett, supreme court.
G. L. Ingraham, supreme court.
James Fitzgerald, supreme court.
Miles Beach, supreme court.
J. E. Newberger, general sessions.
Edward Patterson, supreme court.

Democratic leaders.

Richard Croker.
Augustus Van Wyck.
Eugene D. Wood.
A. N. Brady.
Thomas F. Gilroy.
John F. Carroll.
Hugh J. Grant.
Hugh McLaughlin.
Arthur Sewell, of Maine.
John D. Crimmins.
Maurice Untermeyer.
Theodore W. Myers & Son.

Does not Mr. Bryan know that practically all the wealthy Democrats who have ever been identified with the Democratic party are still within its fold, and that of those men now conspicuously identified with the great aggregations of capital quite as many are Democrats as Republicans? Then why, if he is an honest man, does he attempt, under this cloak of false pretenses, to steal what ever prejudice there may be against these aggregations of capital!

Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus.

Practically the whole civilized world has now gone to the gold standard, Japan and India being the more recent and important countries. Commenting upon the effect of its adoption by Japan, the Financial Chronicle of New York of June 5 said:

> Steadiness in exchange, resulting from Japan's abandonment of a fluctuating standard had one immediate and natural consequence: It greatly stimulated the country's aggregate foreign commerce. Total volume of outward and inward trade rose from 177,970,087 yen in 1896 to 443,225,900 yen in 1898.

The government of India, in its financial statement for the year ended March 31 last, sums up its achievement in monetary reform in this sentence:

> India has at length emerged from the period of transition in her currency, has reached the goal to which she has been struggling for years, has established a gold standard and a gold currency, has attained that practical fixity in exchange which has brought relief alike to the private individual and to the government finances.

And the minister of finance for India, in his report for March 31 last, says:

I do not venture to claim for one moment that government foresaw the enormous inrush of gold which has been brought about by the withdrawals of silver upcountry on account of famine relief, by unusual movements of grain, and by the requirements of an exceptionally large rice crop in Burmah, and also by capital coming out of India. But it is not unfair to claim that the reasons which decided government to take instant action have proved sound, and that, independently of the abnormal causes to which I have referred, the operation of other causes on which government relied has not disappointed us.

As I have said, we have been nearly swamped (temporarily) by gold. The amount in our currency reserve on April 1, 1899, was £2,000,000 ($10,150,000). It stood on March 7, 1900, at £7,069,800 ($35,849,000); the amount accumulated in London under Act II of 1898 stood at £1,500,000, making an aggregate of £8,569,800 ($42,845,000). The difficulty has been that of meeting the demand for rupees in exchange for the gold tendered to us.

In the face of these figurse; in the face of the result of our own decisive action in 1896; in the face of the fact that our foreign commerce, in and out, now approaches twenty-five hundred millions; in the face of the fact that the rank and file of the Democratic party, as you meet and talk with them privately, declare that sixteen-to-oneism is deader than Hector, will not every intelligent man, when he reads these words in Mr. Bryan's North American Review article, page 761:

The contest upon this question must be between those who believe in the gold standard on the one side and, on the other side, those who believe in a financial policy made by the American people for themselves—

I say, will not every intelligent man doubt either the good faith or the good sense of Mr. Bryan?

Are the American people so bereft of reason, so completely hoodooed, that they will not question anything and everything he may say hereafter? Let us be frank with each other. Let us be honest with ourselves. Is not William Jennings Bryan the veriest, the humbuggiest humbug that has ever played in the rôle of a Presidential candidate?

The whole campaign of the Democratic party in 1892 was waged against high prices as a result of the protective tariff.

The whole campaign of the Democratic party in 1896 was waged against low prices as the result of the gold standard.

The whole campaign of the Democratic party in 1900 is likely to be waged against high prices as a result of combinations.

Oh, consistency, thou art indeed a jewel, but thy name is not Democracy.

Mr. Speaker, every American citizen who has a day's work to sell, every man who has a dollar to make, every man who has a dollar to save, is deeply interested in the result of the coming election. Like wise, patriotic business men, let us review the achievements of the last three years. Let us consider what they mean to us as a people, to us as individuals, and hold ourselves personally responsible for the result of our action.

When was our condition worse than during those four Democratic years of 1892–1896? When was it better than during the past three years? When have there ever been, not only in our own history but in that of every other country, such mighty strides in clearings, in foreign exchanges, in gold accretions, in bank resources, in savings deposits, and in universal prosperity as since Mr. McKinley became President of these United States? What naval achievements of the world's history can shadow the valor and glory of Manila Bay and Santiago Harbor? When was so vast an army mobilized and sent to the field of action with equal dispatch? When, in commercial diplomacy, was Hay's "open door" to the Orient matched?

Will a too kind and generous act of the President toward a hot-headed but tried and true old soldier, who had often bared his breast to death's messenger; will a delayed baggage train, a box of spoiled meat; will a dishonest public official, quickly removed and looking through an iron grate; will a constitutional quibble; will any or all of these nothings weigh against the stupendous achievements and eternal glory of the last four years of the century?

The American people stand for fair play and love justice. They symbolize those immortal sentiments and saving virtues of the human race:

Love, not hate.
Concord, not discord.
Reason, not prejudice.
Wisdom, not passion.
Truth, not error.
Facts, not fiction.
Experience, not experiment.
Construction, not destruction.
Law and order, not anarchy.
Honor, not dishonor.

On November 6 we will move grandly onward and upward, not backward and downward, and this nation will be saved through the intelligence, justice, and patriotism of the American people.

Military Academy Appropriation Bill.

SPEECH
OF
HON. WILLIAM SULZER,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, June 5, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11538) making appropriations for the Military Academy—

Mr. SULZER said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: As no gentleman on this side of the House desires to occupy further time, I have no objection to taking up the bill under the five-minute rule. However, before that is done I desire to submit some remarks in regard to this bill and other matters. The bill under consideration has been carefully considered by the Committee on Military Affairs and is unanimously reported. I do not believe there is a single item in it that can possibly be objectionable to any member of this House.

In this connection I want to say that I am, always have been, and always expect to be a friend of the Military Academy at West Point. I should like to see the Military Academy made a great national university to which any poor boy would be eligible, if he possessed the necessary mental and physical qualifications, where he might receive at the hands of the Government not alone a splendid technical education, but also a splendid military education. I believe it would be for the best interests of the Government and all concerned if the Academy were enlarged and made a great university of learning.

THE BONDHOLERS' PROFIT.

Already we witness the first evils of this culminating atrocity of class legislation. United States bonds are advancing in price as a matter of course. When the refunding begins under the Republican financial scheme the premium paid by the Government for the old bonds will amount to so enormous a sum that, added to the extension of time, the national debt will be increased by several hundred millions, all of which goes into the pockets of the bankers and money lenders and comes out of the pockets of the people. This mortgage on posterity is easily figured. The interest-bearing debt amounts to $850,000,000, and has nine years to run at 4 per cent; increased to thirty years, to run at 2 per cent, with premium on old bonds now quoted at 134 and advancing. Let any elementary arithmetician make the calculation. Who gets this profit, and who pays it? The bondholders, foreign and domestic, get the profit, and the producers of our country pay it.

HANNA'S BARGAIN WITH WALL STREET.

In my opinion, one of the worst features of this act is the part which consummates the bargain made by MARK HANNA with the national bankers of Wall street during the campaign of 1896. They aided the Republicans then, and now they receive their share of the spoils. For three years the Republicans have waited and hesitated to pass this abomination, fearing the wrath of an outraged and indignant people. But another national campaign is near at hand. They need help again, and in order to get it have unconditionally turned the finances of a great Government over to the national banks.

The powers this act gives the national banks are far-reaching and most dangerous. It turns over to them the finances of the people—the lifeblood of trade and commerce—and gives them the right to contract or expand the currency at will. This right should never be surrendered by the Government. I say, and time will demonstrate it, that if you give the control of the money supply to the national banks, they will soon absorb the wealth of the people and own the Government. It is an enormous power; a power that can create panic or prosperity, happiness or misery, to thousands and millions of people. I say it is too great a power to be given to any corporation, and if once given and set in motion for selfish ends and for sordid purposes, will be a fruitful source of woe and misery to hundreds and to thousands of our fellow-citizens.

NATIONAL BANK MONOPOLY.

It gives the monopoly of issuing money to the national banks, and hence the right to expand or contract the currency of the people whenever it suits their convenience. No corporation should have this power to make or destroy. It deprives the Government of one of its greatest attributes of sovereignty and gives to the national banks the right to paralyze at their will every industry in the country. It is the most daring attempt the banks have ever made by law to seize one of the greatest weapons for good or evil known to civilized man. For the Government to surrender this prerogative and delegate away this power is a crime against every citizen in this land and will work woe and misery to millions yet unborn. I am opposed to the Government delegating away its powers to the national banks. The Democratic party should vigorously oppose conferring any additional powers on or granting any greater privileges to the national banks. In my judgment they already possess entirely too much power. They are doing to-day, only to a greater extent, what the United States Bank did in the days of Andrew Jackson. The right to coin and issue money is one of the greatest prerogatives of the Republic and one of the highest attributes of its sovereignty. It should not be delegated, transferred, assigned, or set over to any national bank, to any trust, or to any monopoly.

THE TRUSTS MUST GO.

The Democratic party is unalterably opposed to trusts. This is a paramount issue, and we must keep it to the front in the coming campaign. I want to see the Democratic party take an advanced position against the evils of the trusts and the sordid greed of monopolies.

To-day the great trusts of the country are practically supreme. Many of them are so intrenched in power that they are to all intents and purposes above the law and no longer amenable to legislative action. The crying evil of the times is the power and the sway of the trusts. They endanger not only our free institutions, but our free men. The battle cry of the Democratic party should be, "The trusts must go!"

THE OLD FIGHT OVER AGAIN.

Mr. Chairman, the great campaign of 1900—a campaign that will determine the future of the Republic—has practically begun and is now on. We know who the standard bearers of both parties will be. We know Mr. McKinley will be renominated by the Republicans, and we know about what the Republican platform will be. We know William J. Bryan will be renominated by the Democrats just as sure as the sun will rise to-morrow morning, and we know what his platform is. It will be the old fight over again, with none of the issues of 1896 eliminated, but some new ones added. I want to speak briefly about some of the imperative issues in the coming campaign—a campaign as momentous as any ever held in this country and which will determine whether the people shall rule, the Republic live, and our free institutions survive. These issues are now made, inexorable events and the people have made them. They can not be ignored and they must be discussed and settled by the people in the coming campaign.

STANDS SQUARELY ON THE CHICAGO PLATFORM.

The creed of the Democratic party to-day is the Chicago platform. The Democracy will take no step backward in regard to its principles. We have tested them in the loyalty of American manhood, and vindicated them in the crucial fire of 6,500,000 of honest, incorruptible, and intelligent voters, and in our next national convention we will not apologize for our righteous convictions or surrender our fundamental principles. The people know we are right, and they will sustain us if we are true to ourselves and go forward without faltering. We have struggled too long to give up now. On the morning of victory we will not haul down our flag.

I believe in the fundamental principles of the Democratic party. I believe in sticking to our party. I am not a bolter. I stand squarely on the Chicago platform, and I have no apologies to offer for my support of William J. Bryan or for my loyalty to the principles enunciated in that magnificent document. In my judgment, it is the best platform the Democratic party ever adopted, and notwithstanding all that has been said against it, I believe the day is not far distant when every principle enunciated in it will be enacted into law. In the next national Democratic convention the question will be not what shall we take from it, but what shall we add to it.

FOR THE MONEY OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. Chairman, the money question is still an issue and will be an issue until the money of the Constitution is restored and the rapacious and sordid greed of the national banks is checked and curtailed by law. By the signature of the President the iniquitous Republican gold standard bank currency and bond bill is now a law, and the people will ere long have an opportunity of feeling and observing its disastrous and oppressive operation. The Republican party has made this law a party question, and it can not be eliminated from discussion as a leading issue in the coming campaign.

A VICIOUS POLITICAL MEASURE.

It is one of the most vicious political measures ever passed through Congress. It commits the Government unalterably by law to the single gold standard and makes all obligations, public and private, payable in gold. It strikes out the word "coin," which means gold or silver, in all Government bonds, inserts in its place the word "gold," and in addition thereto it authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds without limit whenever he pleases, and makes the bonds payable in gold. It refunds the national debt and turns the finances of a mighty people over to the money lenders. It violates the obligations of the contract between the Government and the bondholder, in the interest of the bondholder, and provides that the currency of the people shall be issued by the national banks, and gives them the right at will to expand or contract the currency. It is the most startling and the most daring departure from time-honored and well-fixed financial principles ever made in our history, and the result will be as disastrous as it is far-reaching. It reverses our financial system, repudiates the platforms of both parties, and revolutionizes the monetary methods of a century.

The money power, the bondholders, the trusts, the syndicates, and the plutocrats secured the passage of this law, and the Republican party to-day is their lackey, and in every department of the Government carries out their wishes and registers and records their decrees.

BIMETALLISM A LIVING ISSUE.

Make no mistake. The enactment of this law will not settle the controversy. No great question is ever settled until it is settled right. Bimetallism is a living issue, and will be of paramount importance to mankind as long as civilization uses money for trade and commerce. Gold never was the friend of liberty. It never fought a battle for humanity. No people in a great crisis ever found it a faithful ally. It has been the agent of panic, the minister of despair, the advocate of calamity, and the high priest of cruelty. I am against the gold standard. In time it will have to go.

THE EVIL OF THE TRUSTS.

These gigantic combinations constitute, in my judgment, the greatest menace at the present time to our democratic institutions. They control the supply, monopolize the product, and dictate the price of every necessary of life. They force out of legitimate employment thousands and thousands of honest toilers. They enhance prices, reduce wages, and write the terms of their own contracts. They destroy competition, paralyze opportunity, assassinate labor, and hold the consumers of our country in their monopolistic grasp. They levy tribute on every man, woman, and child in the Republic. They blight the poor man's home, darken the hearthside of his children, and cloud the star of legitimate hope. They control legislation, escape taxation, and evade the just burdens of government, while their agents construct and maintain tariffs to suit their selfish ends and greedy purposes. They imperil trade, stagnate industry, regulate foreign and interstate commerce, declare quarterly dividends on watered stocks, and make fortunes every year out of the people. Their tyrannical power, rapid growth, and centralization of wealth is the marvel of recent times and the saddest commentary on our legislative history.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY STANDS FOR THE TRUSTS.

The people who oppose and condemn trusts will receive no encouragement from this trust-ridden and trust-owned Administration. The Republican Attorney-General is the mere creature of the trusts and will take no action against them.

The Republican party in all its power stands fearlessly for trusts and is openly and boldly supported by trusts. Every trust in the country was for William McKinley for President in 1896, and every trust will zealously and loyally aid him in 1900. If you ask what for, I answer for value received, for the blessing of a pliable Secretary of the Treasury and a derelict Attorney-General, for a lively sense of favors yet to come, and above all and beyond all for MARK HANNA, who runs the Republican machine for the benefit of the trusts and who turned down in Ohio an honest and fearless attorney-general who was brave enough to do his duty and courageous enough to make an attempt to enforce the law against the Standard Oil trust, the greatest, the most relentless, and the most cold-blooded monopoly of them all.

The Republican party is the party of plutocracy. It stands to-day for economic errors that rob the many for the benefit of the few, for financial heresies that centralize wealth and paralyze industrial freedom, for political policies that enslave the masses.

To sum it all up, the Republican party stands for HANNA and the Republican party is HANNA. What a difference between the party of Lincoln and the party of HANNA.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY OPPOSED TO TRUSTS.

The Democratic party is the party of the plain people. It is opposed to trusts and monopolies, to special privileges. It stands for the supremacy of the law. It believes in freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of action, freedom of trade, and free institutions. It believes in the Constitution, in fostering commerce, unfettering trade, establishing industry, aiding enterprise, maintaining equal opportunity, defending liberty, unshackling the mind and the conscience, and handing down unimpaired to future generations the blessings of our free institutions.

While the Republican party is in power the trusts will flourish like a green bay tree.

When the Democratic party comes into power a Democratic President will appoint a Democratic Attorney-General who will enforce the law against the trusts, and they will dissolve and disappear like mist before the rising morning sun and be gone forever.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY FAVORS AN INCOME TAX.

The Democracy will strenuously struggle for the adoption by law of a graduated income tax. This is the fairest, the most just, and the most equitable tax, and makes the accumulated wealth of the land bear its just share of the burdens of Government. This is an imperative issue and we must relax no effort to bring about its final consummation. The unjust, the vexatious, and the burdensome war tax must go and the income tax must take its place. We must not lose sight of this.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

The Democracy favors the building and the owning of the Nicaragua Canal by the Government of the United States, in our own way, and with our own money without the aid or consent of Great Britain.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. Chairman, I favor electing Senators in Congress by a direct vote of the people.

The right to elect United States Senators by a direct vote of the people is a step in advance, and progress in the right direction.

In my judgment the people can and ought to be trusted. If the people can not be trusted, then free government is a failure and our institutions are doomed.

United States Senators should be elected directly by the people. The Senate is rapidly becoming a plutocratic club for multimillionaires, and the people demand a change in their mode of selection.

There can be no doubt that the sentiment in favor of this change is increasing every year, that a great majority of the people now demand the right to vote directly for United States Senators, and this sentiment will continue to increase and the just demand of the people will continue to grow until the will of the people is complied with.

I am an old-fashioned Democrat. I belong to the Jefferson school. I trust the people, and I believe in the people. I believe with him that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. I want to restore to the people the right now delegated to the legislatures, so that the Senate as well as the House of Representatives will be directly responsible to the people, and the Government become more and more a pure democracy, where brains, fitness, honesty, ability, experience, and capacity, and not wealth alone, shall be the qualifications for the upper branch of the Federal Legislature. Let us demand this reform in our next national platform and make it an issue in the coming campaign.

THE DEMOCRACY IS FOR THE TOILER.

The Democracy is now and always has been the party of the plain people, and is and always will be the friend of the toiler. Only through its agency can the masses hope for relief. The Republican party has never been the friend of the toilers and the wage-earners. Nearly every law now on the statute books in the interest of honest workmen was put there by Democratic votes, and in the future, as in the past, the masses of the people must look to the Democratic party for help.

FAVORS AN EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

In the name of Democracy I make an earnest plea for an eight-hour law in the nation and in every State. The laborer demands this law, and the Democratic party is irrevocably committed to its passage.

In my judgment, no man ought to be compelled to work more than eight hours a day. That is long enough. Labor organizations all over the country are asking for the enactment of an eight-hour law. It is fair and it is just to the employer and to the employed.

I want to say that I am, and always have been, a friend of the wage-earners. I want to see, and I hope the day is not far distant when we shall see, the eight-hour law the law all over the land, and rigidly enforced in every State, every city, every town, and every village in the country. I believe it will be beneficial to the laborer, advantageous to the community in which he lives, and for the best interests of the Government. Too long hours make the wage-earner a poor workman. Shorter hours, in my opinion, will produce better results all around and for all interests concerned. Every writer on political economy confirms this conclusion, and as great an authority as John Stuart Mill lays it down as a fundamental principle that any scheme for the amelioration of the social condition of the wage-earner which does not proceed on this proposition as its foundation is for all permanent purposes a delusion and a snare.

I am and always have been an advocate of shorter hours for a legal working day. The history of the past teaches us that every reduction in the hours constituting a day's work has resulted beneficially. These reductions in the hours of labor have decreased intemperance, increased knowledge, made better homes, happier and better-clothed wives and children, brighter and more prosperous firesides, and in every way benefited the social relations, promoted the moral, economical, and financial condition of the producing masses of our land.

The record will show that the Republicans in the United States Senate defeated the eight-hour bill, and every workman in the country should vote against the party responsible for this outrage.

IS THERE A SECRET ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE?

Another issue that is destined, in my judgment, to play a leading part in the coming campaign, is our true relations with the British Empire. Have we a secret understanding with the British Lion, or does official America simply sneeze when Downing street takes snuff? Is there a tacit agreement, or is it simply an abject and humiliating surrender of American rights to British interests? This will be talked about. It can not be kept out of the campaign.

THE DEMOCRACY IS AGAINST AN ALLIANCE.

I think it can be safely asserted that the party we belong to is against an alliance, expressed or implied, with Great Britain, especially when the representative of the British Government is Joseph Chamberlain, the Benedict Arnold of the cause of Irish home rule, and the instigator of the war against the struggling patriots in South Africa.

We need no alliance with Great Britain. All we need now, as in the past, is a firm reliance on our own greatness, our own ability, our own integrity, our own power to defend our rights, protect our citizens, and legislate for ourselves on every proposition regarding our own welfare, our own happiness, and our own well-being. The spirit of 1776 and 1812 still lives. The Republican party is in favor of this alliance; the Democratic party should be strenuously opposed to it. Its consummation means national disintegration.

I am opposed to an Anglo-American alliance, expressed or implied, especially when its object is the advancement of imperialism, the march of armies, the downfall of republics, the destruction of free institutions, the enslavement of man, and the perpetuity of the power of kings.

The American people should cry out against this sacrifice of principle, this surrender of rights, before it is too late. England never was and never will be our true and lasting friend. You can not make monarchy harmonize with democracy. Their principles are antagonistic and their associations incompatible.

"England will never be our friend," said Jefferson, "until we are her master."

APING ENGLAND.

Sometimes when a representative of the people goes to one of the Departments in Washington he feels that he is trespassing on John Bull's territory. In our own capital city this aping of England is going from bad to worse. I often wonder what the spirits of the patriot fathers think about it.

The White House seems to be enveloped in an English fog, the Administration seems to be more English than American, the Constitution is kicked from pillar to post, the Emancipation Proclamation trampled under foot, the Declaration of Independence sneeringly referred to as a glittering generality—not up to the times of force and grab—and the Cabinet officers industriously turn up the bottom of their trousers when it rains in London. What a spectacle we witness at the capital of the nation!

My friends, it is too bad the Declaration of Independence is not as popular at home as it used to be. I know it is no more popular now with kings and queens than when it was written, but I am American enough to believe that it is just as true to-day as it was in 1776, when it sounded the deathknell of the divine right of kings and proclaimed to all the world a government based on the consent of the governed. But it seems to be in such disfavor in Washington at the present time that the pro-English Secretary of State has locked it up in a safe, and the Anglo-American ambassador to the gilded court of St. James takes delight in making after-dinner speeches to tipsy lords and dukes about the beauties of imperialism and the ironclad friendship of England and America.

"Beware of perfidious England," said Napoleon. And I say she never had a friend she did not deceive, and she never had an ally she did not betray.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Why, things have gone so far in this regard that a Republican Congress refused to pass a resolution of sympathy for the heroic Boers, and the Administration seems to be secretly conspiring with Great Britain for the destruction of our two sister Republics in South Africa. Can we forget our glorious past? Shall we forget our own struggles and our own prayers for help in the trying days when we were fighting England for our liberty and our freedom? Where is the spirit of liberty that animated the patriotic fathers at Lexington and Bunker Hill, at Saratoga and Valley Forge, at Monmouth and Yorktown? Do the eloquent words of Patrick Henry and James Otis, of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, of Benjamin Franklin and Gouverneur Morris no longer inspire resistance to tyranny and hatred of oppression?

Is American patriotism dead? Has the spirit that animated the people in 1776 and 1812 been forgotten? Is the Declaration of Independence no longer potent for the upbuilding of republics and the perpetuity of free institutions? Is our form of government a farce?

Shall we tear down our monuments, trample in the dust the Constitution, send back to France the statue of Liberty, and turn to the wall the picture of the Great Emancipator?

If democracy and free institutions find no answer here, then indeed is government of the people and by the people and for the people doomed—republics a thing of the past—and the message of the future an imperialistic cry of destruction, of oppression, and of tyranny.

THIS IS THE GREAT REPUBLIC.

This is the great Republic—for a century it has been the beacon light of the world. Shall the light now go out? Why should we secretly aid Great Britain? Should we not rather be true to our traditions and openly sympathize with the Boers? Look about you, my friends, and answer. It seems the very altars of our liberty are being betrayed by men in high places who are sworn to guard them.

England must not be permitted to crush the Boers and steal their homes. Her criminal march of devastation must be checked. God bless the embattled farmers of South Africa! is my fervent prayer, and from the ashes of the conflict may there arise a greater and a grander republic—the glorious United States of South Africa.

If I mistake not the signs of the times, the friends of liberty in this country will make this an issue in the coming campaign.

NO MILITARISM—NO IMPERIALISM.

The Democratic party is opposed to militarism and to imperialism. They go hand in hand, and one can not stand without the other. They are twin brothers—relics of brute force and mediæval barbarism. They have no place in a republic. We realize what they mean when we witness the horrors and the tyranny of the "bull pen" of Idaho, and the cruel injustice to and criminal aggression against our fellow-citizens in Porto Rico. United States soldiers in Idaho acting as policemen for the trusts and treating honest and innocent citizens worse than Siberian convicts, and United States soldiers in Porto Rico acting as a guard for the Ohio syndicate while it plunders the hurricane-stricken inhabitants of the little the Spaniards left them. It is enough to bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every honest and patriotic citizen in the Republic. These issues are imperative. They will not down. They will be discussed on every occasion in the coming campaign.

NO NEED OF A VAST REGULAR ARMY.

As Democrats we should do all in our power to defeat the now avowed policy of the Republican party to increase the Regular Army of our country to 100,000 soldiers. We do not need this vast army in time of peace. We should favor a great navy to protect our coast and our commerce, but we should, if we are true to the people and to our principles, vigorously oppose this enormous increase in the Regular Army. A large standing army in a republic is a menace to civil liberty.

We have no need of an immense standing army in time of peace. The Regular Army is the most undemocratic institution we have. In time of trouble, in case of war, the Republic should rely on its citizen-soldiery and its volunteer forces. It is contrary to the true principles of the Democratic party to permit the military power to become supreme and paramount to the civil authority. A desperate effort will be made by the Republicans to pass the act to creat a great standing army, and if it succeeds it will burden the taxpayers of the country for its maintenance $150,000,000 a year. Every Democrat and every wage-earner in the land should be alive to the dangers of this Republican movement and do all in his power to frustrate it.

THE TREND OF IMPERIALISM.

Since the ratification of the treaty of peace between Spain and the United States the island of Porto Rico has been and is now a part of the territory of this country, and the Constitution applies to it, and should apply to it, just as much as it applies to the District of Columbia or the Territory of Arizona. To contend otherwise is preposterous.

The people of Porto Rico are citizens of the United States and entitled to the same privileges, the same rights, and the same immunities under the Constitution that the people of any other Territory are entitled to in the Federal Union. The law compelling the citizens of Porto Rico to pay a tariff tax on their goods, wares, and merchandise to and from this country is unwarranted, unjustifiable, unprecedented, un-American, and, in my judgment, unconstitutional. In all our past history no political party ever dared to attempt to pass such a law—a law as inhuman as it is unfair.

The Constitution regarding this matter is clear and plain. Section 8 of Article I says in language that can not be misunderstood:

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises; * * * but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

PORTO RICANS DEPRIVED OF SELF-GOVERNMENT.

The Republican party has deprived the Porto Ricans of self-government and given them a military government. They have no representation in Congress. Under Spanish rule they were represented by twelve representatives and four senators in the Spanish Cortes. They had their own local legislature and absolute home rule. Why, under the circumstances, I ask, in the name of all that is fair and just and decent, should we now tax them and rob them?

Have we liberated them from monarchical tyranny only to enslave them in industrial oppression? The poor people of Porto Rico will speak, and the great heart of the Republic will answer and respond in the coming campaign. The American people will never repeat in the dying year of the nineteenth century the crimes and the blunders of George III in the closing years of the eighteenth century. In the sisterhood of States there must be no stepdaughters. The flag we all love must not be used as a cloak to rob and oppress our fellow-citizens at the dictation of the trusts and to bolster up the falling Republican protective-tariff fallacy.

My sympathy is with the struggling citizens of Porto Rico. I want to extend to them the right hand of fellowship, and under the folds of the American flag and by virtue of the law of the land welcome them into the Federal Union. I want to help them, and not injure them. I want to save them, and not destroy them. I want them to love the Union, not hate us and despise our institutions.

I want to keep faith with them, and do unto them as we would that others should do unto us. I protest against this mad march toward imperialism with all the emphasis I can command, and I solemnly warn my countrymen that the day is not far distant when the Republic will be destroyed if the wrongs and the usurpations of the Republican party are allowed to go unheeded, unchecked, and unrebuked.

The manhood of this country must speak out, the great conscience of America must find voice, the citizenship of the Republic must assert itself ere it be too late and all is lost!

REPUBLIC OR EMPIRE.

Now, my friends, a few words in conclusion. We are entering a most momentous political campaign to determine the question whether the trusts or the Government shall survive; whether the Republic shall live or the empire shall come and the man on horseback govern; whether the people or the plutocrats shall rule—whether this land shall continue to be a government of the many for the many or an oligarchy of the privileged and for the favored few. You ask me what will the outcome be. I can not tell; but I believe history repeats itself; that God in His infinite wisdom raises up a man from the plain people for every crisis, and in the pending crisis we have such a man, a born leader of men, whom we can all trust and whom we can all follow, and who will lead us to victory and rescue the people from the money lenders and the money changers.

A hundred years ago the Democratic party—the party of the plain people—after a most momentous campaign, came into power under the matchless leadership of its famous founder, Thomas Jefferson, and the impetus his Administration gave to popular government carried forward free institutions unimpaired for a century.

We are beginning another momentous campaign under the leadership of a second Thomas Jefferson—the stalwart, the fearless, the gallant, and the intrepid young leader, of Nebraska, William J. Bryan—to test the perpetuity of popular government and of our free institutions, and by the grace of God and the power of the freemen of America he will win, and the impetus his administration will give the Government of Jefferson, of Jackson, and of Lincoln will carry it forward unimpaired for another century, and generations yet unborn will sing the gladsome song that the government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, in this connection I wish to print in the RECORD some data regarding pension matters.

Think of having for Commissioner of Pensions a man who regards every veteran as a greedy, cunning impostor and every veteran's widow as an immoral adventuress.

The foregoing is from the editorial column of the issue of August 24, 1899, of the National Tribune, of Washington, D. C., the best and most widely circulated journal devoted to the interest of Union veterans. In the Presidential campaign of 1896 this paper gave the Republican candidates cordial, hearty, and loyal support, contributing perhaps more to their success at the polls than any other newspaper then circulated. Every issue of the Tribune during the last campaign vigorously lashed and venomously abused Mr. Bryan and his supporters, ascribing to him and them the basest, most unpatriotic motives and intentions. Upon Mr. McKinley and the seraphic band in his train it lavished all the eulogistic platitudes available, and his inauguration as President, it prophesied, would mark the deliverance of the "old soldier element" from the arbitrary rulings, the cruel delays, and other harassments which marked the last régime of Grover Cleveland.

A recent issue of the National Tribune contains the following:

AN OPEN LETTER.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: With his usual fecundity of falsehood, the Commissioner of Pensions has deluged you with a freshet of misinformation as to the manner in which he is managing the Pension Bureau and executing the laws passed by previous Congresses for the benefit of the soldiers, and which it is your duty to see are properly carried out.

Let us dissipate the fog and mist with which he has persistently deceived you by the clear sunlight of a few facts, as well known to you as to us, if you will stir your remembrance.

The management of the Pension Bureau under Lochren was so intensely obnoxious as to arouse the strongest condemnation from all sections of the country and classes of the people. Even Cleveland had to yield to it, and in the last year of his administration he removed Lochren by promotion to another place, and replaced him by Dominic I. Murphy, with instructions to greater liberality.

As the Presidential election of 1896 approached it was felt that no party could go before the country with any hope of success without repudiating and denouncing the management of the Pension Bureau. Even the Democratic party put this denunciation of Lochrenism and indorsement of Murphy, who had at the eleventh hour succeeded him and reversed his policy, in its platform:

"Recognizing the just claims of deserving Union soldiers, we heartily indorse the rule of the Commissioner of Pensions that no name shall be arbitrarily dropped from the pension roll, and the fact of enlistment and service should be deemed conclusive evidence against disease and disability before enlistment."

The People's Party placed among its "demands:"

"7. We favor just pensions for our disabled Union soldiers."

The National Party said:

"11. Ex-soldiers and sailors of the United States Army and Navy, their widows and minor children, should receive liberal pensions, graded on disability and term of service, not merely as a debt of gratitude, but for service rendered in the preservation of the Union."

The Gold Democrats said:

"We favor a liberal policy of pensions to deserving soldiers and sailors of the United States."

But the declarations of the Republican party were of the utmost importance, since it was intrusted with power, and thereby firmly pledged to do what it had promised. It said:

"The veterans of the Union armies deserve and should receive fair treatment and generous recognition. Whenever practicable they should be given the preference in the matter of employment, and they are entitled to the enactment of such laws as are best calculated to secure the fulfillment of the pledges made to them in the dark days of the country's peril. We denounce the practice in the Pension Bureau, so recklessly and unjustly carried on by the present Administration, of reducing pensions and arbitrarily dropping names from the rolls, as deserving of the severest condemnation of the American people."

Now, in spite of all these declarations;

In spite of the most specific one made by the Republican convention;

In spite of the tremendous feeling throughout the country which led to these utterances;

In spite of the mandate of the people, clearly expressed at the polls in 1896, when the pension question was a leading issue;

In spite of the solemn promise of the Republican party that if intrusted with power it would remedy these grievances, Henry Clay Evans has revived and continued every odious practice of William Lochren, and has intensified and harshened many of them.

No matter what Mr. Evans or any of his apologists may say, we challenge him to point out—with one exception—one instance in which he has abrogated or in the least mitigated a single harsh feature of Lochren's rule.

The one exception was rule 228, relating to the preparation of affidavits. This is a most comprehensive challenge, it is easily understood, its terms are definite, and it covers the whole question. It is a test that Mr. Evans can not object to. If he has mitigated Lochren's practice anywhere, or in any degree, let him point it out.

Now, we submit that this is a bad record with which to go before the country.

* * * * * * *

"AN OLD SOLDIERS' ADMINISTRATION."

This was the tempting bait held out by the Republican managers to the veteran voters in the campaign of 1896. In his selection of a Commissioner of Pensions President McKinley ignored the applications for the position of many gallant and worthy comrades and nominated for the position H. Clay Evans, whose military record is given in the National Tribune, issue of July 13, 1899, in an article entitled "When? Where? How?"

In an editorial defense of Commissioner Evans the Wilkesbarre (Pa.) Record says:

General Evans lives in Tennessee, but he is a native of Pennsylvania, served throughout the civil war in the Union Army, and was thrice severely wounded in battle. He settled in Tennessee after the war, but has never had anything in common with the irreconcilable sectionalists of the South in a political way.

This is highly important, and comes in the nature of an astounding revelation to those who have thought themselves pretty familiar with "General" Evans's record as a quartermaster's clerk in the Forty-first Wisconsin, a one-hundred-day regiment, which was organized June 8, 1864, at Milwaukee, and mustered out September 24, 1864, "by reason of expiration of term of service."

* * * * * * *

The Forty-first Wisconsin—Mr. Evans's regiment—took out 578 men, lost 6 by disease, 2 deserted, and 570 were mustered out at the end of one hundred days.

That the Pension Bureau is not manned as largely by Union veterans as many suppose is apparent from the following statement contained in the number of The National Tribune dated August 28, 1899:

EMPLOYEES IN THE PENSION BUREAU.

Mr. Evans makes a great trumpeting over the fact that there are 506 veterans and 32 widows of veterans employed in the Pension Bureau. This is another one of his half facts, which are worse than downright lies. If there is any branch of the Government which should literally overflow with veterans and their widows, it is the Pension Bureau. In fact, there ought to be nobody else employed there. Now, what do we find? There is a total of 1,741 employees in the Pension Bureau. Of these but 506 are veterans and 32 veterans' widows. That is, less than one-third are veterans and veterans' widows. Everywhere the men and women appointed by Hoke Smith and William Lochren are in the ascendant. Civilians really control the Pension Bureau, in spite of all that Evans says. The chief man in the Commissioner's room is a civilian, and there is no veteran in his room. The medical referee is a veteran, but the two men who really run that division are civilians, and it is doubtful if one of them, who was the chief executioner under Lochren, is even an American citizen.

The law clerk is a civilian.

Veterans have been removed from the board of review to promote civilians.

The chief of the special examination division is a civilian, and his room is being filled up with civilians.

The chief of the middle division is a civilian, and so are both of his assistants.

The chief of the mail division is a civilian, and so are both his assistants.

The superintendent of the building is a civilian.

Five of the most important of the sixteen divisions are under the direct control of the civilians, and constantly civilians are advanced over the heads of better clerks who are veterans.

THE CHARGES IN DETAIL.

In its issue of July 13, 1899, The National Tribune says:

THE INDICTMENT AGAINST EVANS.

Mr. Evans is so industrious in trying to befog the public mind and distract attention from his misdoings by senseless clamor about wicked pension attorneys and fraudulent claims that it is very necessary to repeat from time to time the causes of complaint which the veterans have against him and which can not be met by shrieks against pension attorneys and more or less mythical frauds.

It was the will of the people, expressed in the most decisive manner at the polls in 1896, that the methods of Cleveland and Lochren in the Pension Bureau were wrong—cruelly unjust—and should be promptly reversed. Mr. Evans was put into office to do this work and render justice to the veterans and their dependent ones. If he had no intention of doing this, he sought and accepted the office with a willful purpose of deceiving. No man in the country knew better what the people wanted and what they expected. He took as much part as other campaigners in denouncing William Lochren's outrages and promising the veterans just reforms. Yet he has not removed a single cause of complaint against his predecessor; he has not righted a single one of his wrongs; he has not ameliorated a solitary injustice.

This puts the whole case against him in a nutshell. This disposes effectually of his wearisome clatter about pension attorneys and frauds. It sweeps away the fog of misstatement and juggling chicanery of facts with which he seeks to obscure the real issue.

If William Lochren was deserving of the severest censure in 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896, Henry Clay Evans deserves the same in 1897, 1898, and 1899.

If Lochren's methods were indefensible outrages, Henry Clay Evans's must be branded by the same term.

If Lochren was the bitter enemy of the veterans, and maliciously perverted the laws in order to persecute and defraud them, Henry Clay Evans is just as blamable, for he has followed Lochren's footsteps with servile fidelity. Lochren's words are his words; Lochren's rules are his rules, and Lochren's sins are his sins.

He is in reality much more guilty, for Lochren entered office with the avowed intention of cutting down the pension roll and narrowing the scope of the pension laws. Evans, on the other hand, sought and received the office with the implied pledge to the people of the United States that he would undo Lochren's baleful work, and restore to the Pension Bureau the rightful interpretation of the laws which had obtained under President Harrison.

In the same issue (July 27, 1899) the National Tribune prints the following:

LINCOLN POST'S INDICTMENT.

The most crushing indictment yet presented by any Grand Army post against Pension Commissioner Evans is that drawn by Lincoln Post, No. 1, of Topeka, Kans., the largest and most influential post in the Department of Kansas. It is a model document of its kind, which we earnestly wish could be imitated by every post in the United States. It is the work of a committee of three able comrades of the post—J. K. Hudson, J. G. Wood, and J. W. Sidwell. They are all men of the highest standing in the community, and the chairman is the only man in Kansas who received a brigadier-general's commission at the outbreak of the Spanish war. Very creditably, he has not, like too many other comrades, allowed official favors to bias his judgment when the interests of his comrades were concerned. The document is thoroughly dignified in tone, but intensely in earnest, and its recital of facts is overwhelming. It begins by detailing the assaults upon the comrades by the newspapers, and how successfully they were repelled. It then goes on:

But a more insidious and despicable enemy to the veteran and his pension still lurked behind the Presidential warrant as Commissioner of Pensions.

His first effort against the pension claimants was covert and avowedly in their behalf. If the pension attorneys could be disbarred by the Pension Bureau a great point would be gained. So he began a systematic effort to abuse, until many resented the treatment and began to criticise the Pension Bureau and its Commissioner. This was meant to him. The attorneys out of the way, the claimants would be utterly powerless. Like a ship at sea without a rudder, driven hither and yon by wind and wave, claimants would have been helpless, and in the end would have been compelled to yield. It must be conceded that nine-tenths of the claimants can not properly draw a petition, much less comply with the technical requirements of the rules and regulations of the Pension Bureau. So that men who make a business of booking up on the acts of Congress, decisions of the Interior Department relating to pensions and kindred claims, the rules and regulations of the Pension Bureau, and have a ready command of good English at pen's point are alone competent to prosecute such claims. Comparatively few claims would have ever been allowed had the claimants been unaided. Knowing the weakness and inability of the great majority of claimants, instead of insisting upon lending a helping hand and affording every facility for the establishment of just claims, for unjust and fraudulent claims are not in issue, he has thrown every obstacle in the way, and was willing to sponge from the slate the roll of attorneys if he had dared.

The indictment then proceeds to arraign Evans for his determined insistence that every pension claim is a fraud, with the burden of proof that it is not being put upon the claimant and every obstacle thrown in his way in demonstrating its truth.

The indictment supports its counts by specific instances drawn from a host with which the Post is perfectly familiar. Only a limited number of these can be given without unduly swelling the document, but they are all very pertinent.

First is the case of Louisa Kratzer, a poor, hard-working widow of an excellent soldier who left her a meager little farm to support herself and family of children. The testimony shows that the utmost value of the proceeds of the farm never exceeded $62 a year, and this was only wrung from it by the hardest kind of toil. Her claim for a pension was "rejected because she is not without other means of daily support than her daily labor."

Adel Rainer, another poor old widow, who makes a living by house cleaning and washing, had her claim rejected on account of a charge of unchastity, preferred by some unknown accuser. Yet all of Mrs. Rainer's neighbors, who have known her as an irreproachable wife and mother for a long period of years, scout the charge and are willing to testify to her good character. But the Pension Bureau will not hear the evidence in her favor, nor will it give the name of the creature who slandered the poor old washerwoman.

D. L. McElfresh, insane, himself and family are denied a pension because it has been discovered by the Pension Bureau that he was kicked on the head by a mule when he was 12 years old. There is not an atom of testimony connecting that kick with his present condition, but evidently the Bureau construes the kick into "vicious habits."

David C. Whitner has proved total inability for labor, caused by progressive disease of the brain, resulting from a sunstroke. His condition constantly grows worse with advancing age. The proof of the incurrence of his disability and its effects is beyond doubt, but because it has been pending for a long time, and carries a large amount of arrears, Evans refuses to allow it.

I. I. Wagner received injuries in the raid on the Weldon Railroad and at Hatchers Run, which have resulted in heart disease and paralysis, from which he is dying. He has thoroughly proved up his case, but Evans refuses to allow it, to the great indignation of all Wagner's neighbors, who are familiar with him and his history.

Ray Richards is the child of an old soldier, and absolutely helpless on account of "Pott's disease," which set in when he was 4 years old. The Pension Bureau refuses to grant a pension because it claims that the law specifies he must likewise be "insane or idiotic."

Thomas H. Haskell, a member of the post, was allowed by the examining board "fifteen-eighteenths" which would give him $50 a month. He was allowed but $8, and this not till after his death, and his widow has been unable to get anything.

Harriet Neiswander, a widow of excellent reputation, married at first a man who left her, and from whom she never heard again. After a number of years she remarried, this time to a veteran, who died and left her a farm, from which she receives a rental of $300 a year, but from this sum must be deducted taxes, insurance, repairs, and interest on a mortgage, so that she has never had more than $52 a year. The Pension Bureau rejects her claim on the double ground that she has not proved her first husband's death and that she has an income.

These are a few of the many cases within the knowledge of the Post that could be cited supporting the committee's conclusions that—

"Henry Clay Evans, Pension Commissioner, has made arbitrary rules governing attorneys in the prosecution of claims in the Pension Bureau which have worked detrimentally to claimants; that he has locked up and refused adjudication of 15,000 soldiers' orphans' and 5,000 dependent mothers' claims; that he has rejected claims for reasons wholly unwarranted by law or equity; that he has demanded testimony of claimants touching transactions which had nothing whatever to do with the merits of the claims; that he has erroneously interpreted plain provisions of law for the evident purpose of defeating claims; that he has "held up" claims for the purpose of delaying the payment of the large amount they would draw if allowed; that he has accepted ex parte reports against the character of female pensioners and when petitioned for a hearing, for the purpose of vindication of life and reputation against foul and false aspersions, refused. He has submitted to interviews and written articles for publication which reflect upon the pension roll as a whole."

The report of the committee concludes:

"The retention of Henry Clay Evans, Pension Commissioner, after a two and a third years' trial, are sources of profound regret to all veteran soldiers.

"Your committee, believing that the maintenance of law, the judicial application of wholesome rules in its enforcement, to the end that honor may be given to whom honor is due, is the highest and best form of civilization, offer the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we hereby request President McKinley to remove Henry Clay Evans, Pension Commissioner, at once, and then select a man of legal attainments, with broad, generous impulses and sympathies, with fine executive ability, and withal a man who knows from personal experience what it is to be with the boys on the firing line."

The report and resolutions were unanimously adopted.

On August 31, 1899, the National Tribune presented the following:

THE INDICTMENT AGAINST EVANS.

As this is our last issue before the meeting of the national encampment, we recapitulate in succinct form the indictment that the veterans of the country and their widows have against Commissioner Evans. Every "count" in this indictment is supported by positive and unbreakable evidence that would infallibly convict him before any jury and in any court in the country. We cite with each "count" the evidence in support of it, which the reader can examine and verify for himself. "P. D." refers to Pension Decisions made by Assistant Secretary of the Interior Webster Davis, and which can be found in many lawyers' offices or obtained by application at the Interior Department. It is an official publication, and therefore public information.

Henry Clay Evans became Commissioner of Pensions at the close of an administration which was notorious for the narrowness, unfairness, injustice, not to say illegality, of its construction and administration of the pension laws. On him devolved the duty of formulating and putting into effect the policy of the new Administration, which there were the best of reasons for believing would be fair and just to the beneficiaries of the pension laws. But we found him soon devising means to obstruct and delay the ends of justice—to create new obstacles to the speedy adjudication and payment of claims.

First count.—Among his first official acts of importance was one which in effect required that all completed increase claims under the general law, based on disability not covered by the pension certificate, be sent to the special examination division for investigation, a course which was equivalent to burying these claims for from one to three or more years. (Instructions to Chiefs of Adjudicating Divisions, 1897.)

Second count.—He instituted a practice of refusing to consider any claim for increase of pension until a year had elapsed since the previous adjudication. (Order No. 862, dated December 24, 1897.) This he did without consultation with his superior officers of the Interior Department, and by a decision rendered March 30, 1898, he was required to abrogate this practice and reinstate the former practice dating from 1882. (P. D., 9, page 285).

Third count.—In disregard of the law and taking upon himself the right to administer the laws or not as he saw fit, he refused to consider lawful pension claims because the applicants were apparently residing beyond the limits of the United States. (Act of March 2, 1895; order dated November 23, 1897.) He was required to abandon this practice and subordinate himself to law. (P. D., 9, page 437.)

Fourth count.—He prohibited any evidence obtained on special examination being made known to and permitted to be examined by claimant or attorney after the receipt of same in the Pension Bureau, alleging that the claimant had the right to follow the special examination in person or by attorney, but knowing that it is the exception rather than the rule where a claimant is able to himself follow or employ another to follow a special examination, often extending over several States. This he did in disregard of a rule and the settled practice of the Interior Department (December 19, 1891), and was required to return to the former practice. (P. D., 9, page 471.)

Fifth count.—He adopted measures to defeat the act of July 18, 1894, relative to the right of claimant or attorney to inspect reports of examining surgeons. The enactment was in consequence of the action of the Lochren administration taking away the privilege of inspection of such reports, and though Mr. Evans professed to believe that his action was strictly in accordance with the law, it was clear that he desired to restore so far as possible the Lochren practice, with the evident incidental purpose of "getting even" with attorneys whom he claims were instrumental in the passage of the law. (Order dated October 21, 1897.)

He was required to abrogate this practice and restore that in full accordance with the spirit of the law. (P. D., 9, page 478.)

Sixth count.—To retard and obstruct the settlement of claims which he does not wish to allow, save at his pleasure, he adopted rules making it a disbarring offense for any attorney to seek, or to even suggest to a claimant to seek, information through a member of Congress as to the official status of a pension claim; and through evidently misleading representations as to the status of the work of the Bureau and the character of claims in which inquiry is made through members of Congress, he secured formal approval of said rules. (Rules 22 and 23, approved March 10, 1898.)

Seventh count.—In disregard of a decision construing the law relative to the pension title of remarried dependent mothers under the act of June 27, 1890 (P. D., 6, page 30), he instituted a practice of rejecting the claims of all such, having covertly secured the formal approval of such practice by embodying the rule therefor in an alleged codification of existing practice in April, 1898. He was required to amend his self-instituted rule and regard the law and the decision of the Department. (P. D., 10, dated June 21, 1899.)

However, it is the truth that none of the claims rejected under his infamous ruling set aside by the decision (P. D., 10, dated June 21, 1899), have ever been reopened and allowed, he claiming that the decision is not "res adjudicata." Yet common sense, or a desire to be reasonably honest in his endeavor to do right, should have readily pointed his plain duty to recall from the rejected files all such claims and adjudicate them in accordance with the construction of the law promulgated by his immediate superior.

Eighth count.—He continues to reject the just claims under the act of June 27, 1890, of those denied by the last Administration, and to cut off from the pension roll those who escaped the merciless "revision" perpetrated by his immediate predecessors; and the city of Chicago and elsewhere has inaugurated experimentally an iniquitous and unwarranted inquisition to discover possible fraud and to complete the work of Lochren and Hoke Smith and cut off those pensioners held entitled under the Harrison Administration and who have heretofore by some chance escaped the blights of the Hoke Smithism and Lochrenism. No one desires to shield the malefactor, but there is no warrant in law for the indiscriminate and insulting investigation put upon the innocent many by the present Commissioner to seek out the possible guilty few, that he may win anew the plaudits of the press that finds special satisfaction in all that puts upon the pensioners the stigma of dishonor and dishonesty.

Ninth count.—He continues to nullify the act of March 6, 1896, passed by Congress to correct an abuse and misinterpretation of the act of June 27, 1890, by the Cleveland Administration; and until required by the direction of his superior officer, refused to apply the law, even to the extent permissible under the interpretation of the former administration, unless specifically requested by claimants. (P. D., 10, dated December 21, 1898.)

Tenth count.—Contrary to the law and the rights of claimants to choose, he has rejected thousands of claims on the alleged ground of "no benefit," whereas the claims should have been granted and the claimants permitted to elect which of two pensions they would prefer to receive. He was required to discontinue this practice. (P. D., 10, dated December 7, 1898.)

Eleventh count.—For nearly two years he has unlawfully withheld from settlement all general law claims of children over 16 years of age, in disregard of the law and decision of the Department (P. D., 7, page 435); meanwhile using every effort to secure such a construction of the law as will enable him to reject and deny these lawful claims, the matter being now pending on his renewed request for reconsideration of the questions of law.

Twelfth count.—He has for the past year unlawfully withheld from official consideration in ordinary course of business the just claims of soldiers and sailors of the Spanish war, many of them sons and other relatives of soldiers and sailors of the rebellion, on the misrepresentation that the War Department has been unprepared or unwilling or unable to furnish required information from the official military records, whereas the War Department has been ready and willing to furnish desired reports on twenty-four hours' notice. (National Tribune, June 29, 1899.) The unlawful and unjustifiable action of the Commissioner of Pensions in this class of claims furnishes striking evidence of his personal feelings and disposition toward all beneficiaries of the pension laws, there being with respect to this class of claims no room for the slanderous objection or suggestion that the claimants have for many years slept on their alleged rights and the claims are therefore presumably of doubtful or fraudulent character.

Thirteenth count.—It is notorious that claims filed under the general law before July 1, 1880, and therefore involving arrears to date of discharge, are rejected by his direction unless supported by record evidence, and if supported by record evidence are buried in the special examination division, the evident purpose being to reject if not to delay indefinately all claims requiring a large first payment.

Fourteenth count.—He has rejected thousands of claims for invalid pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, the applicants in which are 62 years of age and over, notwithstanding that under the Mexican war pension act of January 29, 1887, claimants 62 years of age are regarded as pensionably disabled and entitled to the rating of $8 per month, and notwithstanding that 62 years is the compulsory retirement age of the Regular Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

Fifteenth count.—Upon manifestly misleading representations as to the status of the official business of the Pension Bureau he procured the reduction of the office force of the Pension Bureau by 100 (July 1, 1898), notwithstanding that the delays in action and settlement were then great, and have continued notoriously so to the present time, being as great as if not greater than for many years past, thousands of claimants being unable to secure any action on their claims, or learn what, if any, additional evidence is necessary, weeks and months growing into years without any information of any character being elicited as to the official status of the claim. It is worthy of note that a discrimination appears to be made against claims on file many years, and therefore involving considerable sums as arrears, the official reports as to the average amounts of first payments bearing out what has become noticeable in this regard. (Annual Report, 1898, page 23.)

Sixteenth count.—Notwithstanding the great number of just and valid claims awaiting settlement for many years, he has diligently avoided their consideration in order that he may be able to turn back unexpended into the Treasury large amounts of the appropriations for pensions. (Annual Reports, 1897, 1898, 1899.)

Seventeenth count.—He has sought to deprive claimants of the benefit of advice of counsel by forwarding to them direct the orders for medical examination, expecting and desiring that claimants, without knowledge of their rights and privileges and without due regard for their interests, will place themselves at a disadvantage and afford a greater opportunity for the rejection or delay of their claims. (Order 361, dated April 14, 1898.)

Eighteenth count.—While criticising, both in the public press and in official reports, the work of the examining surgeons appointed and retained by him on grounds of fitness, and showing the fallibility of the examinations made by them under his direction, he nevertheless habitually regards their reports as absolutely correct when unfavorable to the claimants, and, as the personal knowledge and experience of thousands of claimants attest, wholly disregards favorable reports on slight pretext or no pretext whatever. (See Associated Press reports and annual report for 1898.)

Nineteenth count.—Before he had been in office a year he entered upon a course of tirade against alleged pension frauds, his pratings in the public press in the form of inspired articles and statements purporting to be "interviews" rivaling and eclipsing in misrepresentation and maliciousness anything of similar character published during the preceding Administration. (Associated Press reports.)

Twentieth count.—He has studiously invited and obtained the approval, to a large degree, of the same portion of the public press that applauded the "revision" and alleged "reforms" instituted by Lochren and Hoke Smith, and has claimed personal credit for the detection and suppression of alleged frauds and for reducing the pension roll or permitting a minimum increase. The same press that acclaimed Lochren and Hoke Smith as wise and just finds joy and satisfaction in Henry Clay Evans. At the same time he has cunningly sought and obtained credit with the press friendly to the Union survivors of the war of the rebellion and their interests, by an apparently considerable number of allowances, a large percentage of which, however, have represented little or nothing of substantial benefit to the alleged beneficiaries, being reissues, duplicates, renewals, supplementals, and the like.

Twenty-first count.—He has vilified the wives of survivors of the war of the rebellion, wickedly attributing to them unworthy, mercenary motives in their marriages, not only in the public press but in official reports (Annual Report, 1898), and has sought in Congress to obtain legislation to cut off the helpmates of the declining years of invalid pensioners.

Twenty-second count.—He has vilified in the public press the claimants whose just claims have been unjustly rejected by him, insinuating that they are rejected because fraudulent, and that every honest, lawful claim is granted promptly and freely by him. (Associated Press reports.)

Twenty-third count.—He has vilified in the public press all survivors of the war and others acting as the authorized representatives of pension claimants, characterizing them as "buzzards," and alleging that they are regularly engaged in the prosecution of known fraudulent claims, and that through his thwarting of such attempted frauds he has incurred the ill will of the attorneys and thereby of the order of the Grand Army. This he has done notwithstanding that attorneys admitted to practice before the Department are obliged by law and the official regulations to furnish satisfactory evidence that they are of "good moral character and in good repute" (act of July 4, 1884, section 5), and are subject to disbarment for offenses far less grave than wittingly prosecuting fraudulent claims. After broadly characterizing the attorneys admitted and continued in good standing by his official superiors of the Department, he proposes no reform or remedy for the alleged corruption and disregard of law but the absolute prohibiting of the employment or recognition of attorneys, agents, or counsel whatever in behalf of pension claimants and the vesting of the prosecution as well as the adjudication of pension claims in the Commissioner of Pensions. (P. D., 10, dated December 7, 1898.)

Twenty-fourth count.—Instead of desiring and suggesting, as was his privilege and right, the abrogation of rules and practice instituted under the late Administration, and working great wrong and injustice and disregard of the letter and spirit of the law, especially with regard to the act of June 27, 1890, he prefers and seeks the continuance of odious measures and practice, particularly Order 225, of June 9, 1898. The alleged Treatise on the Practice of the Pension Bureau, prepared and published under his direction in April, 1898, instead of being the vehicle, or even the means of suggestion, of the obviation of harsh measures and a liberalizing of the practice, was used as a means to covertly introduce new obstructions and limitations with regard to increase claims (page 117) and dependent mothers' claims (page 116), as already shown, the whole codification being approved en bloc upon his evident misrepresentation as to the character of the publication.

Twenty-fifth count.—He resolves all doubts against the claimant, as the experience and observation of thousands attest, and has not originated nor instituted a single practice looking to a greater liberality in dealing with claimants.

Twenty-sixth count.—His every official recommendation has been looking to restriction and limitation upon existing rights under the pension laws (Annual Reports, 1897, 1898), in glaring contrast with those of most of his predecessors. (Annual Reports, 1887, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1896, and others.)

In the number dated November 9, 1899, the National Tribune felt forced to make this rejoinder to the press bureau of the Ohio Republican political machine:

A WILLFUL FALSEHOOD.

During the campaign in Ohio just ended, the Democrats, for their own purposes, and entirely without our knowledge and consent, took up the "Indictment against Mr. Evans," which the National Tribune had published prior to the meeting of the national encampment, and prefacing it with some remarks of their own, gave it a very wide circulation. A number of Republican papers replied to this in an article first appearing in the Ohio State Journal, in which it was said:

"There is not an old soldier in Ohio who does not know that the National Tribune is published by a firm of pension attorneys, and that it is the official organ of that firm and not of the old soldiers."

This is absolutely and unqualifiedly false, and known to be so by the men who wrote the article and caused its publication.

They know very well, as does every other man who is at all familiar with the National Tribune, that it has not the slightest connection of any kind with any pension attorney or firm of attorneys. No man engaged in the prosecution of claims has a cent's worth of interest in the National Tribune except as a subscriber. Not one of the proprietors of the paper receives a pension, is an applicant for a pension, nor will probably ever be.

The veterans of Ohio are all pretty well acquainted with the men who edit and publish the National Tribune. They have been intimately acquainted with them for many long years and known where they have stood unwaveringly through all political perturbations on all questions connected with the interests of veterans.

With the Ohio veterans such an egregious falsehood as this is likely to prove a damaging boomerang to its utterers.

PENSIONERS OLDER—PENSIONS SMALLER.

In its issue of August 31, 1899, the National Tribune prints the following:

CONCLUSIVE FIGURES.

It is impossible for any thinking man to examine the reports of the Commissioner of Pensions without finding the most conclusive demonstrations of Mr. Evans's cruelly harsh policy toward the veterans. Plain figures everywhere, and all the time, give the lie to Evans's industrious and plausible sophistications about his fair treatment of the veterans. For example, let us examine the number of those on the roll under the act of June 27, 1890, and find what proportion of them are receiving the highest rating allowed by law—$12 a month.

Let us premise that this rating was intended by the framers of the law to be granted to every man who was disabled in any considerable degree. And it must inevitably follow that, with the premature aging of the veterans, every year must greatly increase the proportion of those who are legally entitled to the highest rating.

At the time President Harrison retired from office, in 1893, there were 377,203 veterans on the roll under the act of June 27, 1890. Of these 204,909, or 54 per cent, received $12 a month. When under Commissioner Lochren there were 392,440 on the rolls, of whom only 165,783, or 43 per cent, received $12 per month. Evans cut down the ratio still further. In 1898 there were 413,909 on the roll, of whom but 163,367, or only 39½ per cent, received $12 a month.

That is, carrying out the rightful intent and purport of the law, Commissioner Raum gave 5½ men out of every 10 the maximum rating. Commissioner Lochren cut down this proportion to a little over 4 men in every 10, and Commissioner Evans—though the veterans are six years older than when General Raum was in office, much more broken down, and consequently legitimately entitled to a higher rate—reduces it even below that established by the much-denounced Lochren.

These figures are convincing as to Evans's animus.

The foregoing, in connection with the following brief editorial from the issue of the Tribune, dated August 24, 1899, would seem to indicate that even the Cleveland-Lochren "reign of terror" was more bearable than the McKinley-Evans crusade:

It is a very significant feature that in spite of the advancing age and increasing disabilities of the veterans, the average annual value of the pensions is being steadily reduced. Under General Harrison's Administration the annual average value of the pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, was $116.30. Lochren reduced it to $109.29. Last year Evans got it down to $108.11. Remember that, with fewer pensions on the roll, this means a general reduction of allowance to every pensioner.

GET THE FACTS.

That the money power in the campaign of 1900 will stop at nothing to mislead Union veterans and distort the facts as to their base betrayal by the McKinley-Evans combination there can be no doubt. Statistics will be artfully juggled or willfully falsified to this end. That Commissioner Evans has already been caught in some glaring misstatements of fact is apparent from the following article printed in the issue of the National Tribune dated September 7, 1899:

THE COMMISSIONER'S AMENDED REPORT.

The Commissioner has favored the press with another and more extended abstract of his report, evidently for effect on the national encampment. It shows several changes from the first abstract, which was evidently put out as a feeler and to draw the fire of his opponents. We give the essential part of the abstract elsewhere.

Taking it up seriatim, the first notable thing is that there are 9,204 survivors and 8,175 widows of the Mexican war on the rolls. This is a larger proportion to the actual fighting force in that struggle than the veterans and widows on the pension roll bear to the actual fighting force in the field during the rebellion. It makes an aggregate of 17,379, or more than the entire strength that we had on Mexican soil at any time during the two years' struggle.

It is another illustration of how much more liberally the Mexican war pension law is construed than those relating to the war of the rebellion.

He shows that the total number of pensioners has been cut down from 993,714 in 1893 to 991,519 in 1899, a decrease of 2,195. He does not—dares not—attempt to reconcile this showing with his statement further on that the number of claims pending June 30 was 477,239, among which were 69,468 from veterans who have not yet received any pension whatever. What possible pretext can he give for cutting down the pension roll 2,195, while he confesses that there are 69,468 veterans, to say nothing of their widows, who have been waiting for years to have their claims allowed, and while he has a force of 1,741 clerks ostensibly engaged in the work of adjudicating claims? The mere statement is sufficient.

He has cut down his first statement of the amount he returned to the Treasury by about $212,240, and now places it at $1,644,948. This would have put about 17,000 of those long-waiting 69,468 on the rolls at $8 a month.

He says that the total "allowances" for the year was 89,054. Here comes in his crafty juggling, for the total additions to the roll were but 40,991, leaving the enormous number of 48,063, or much more than half the entire number issued for the sole and obvious purpose of "padding," and making a pretense of doing work, where little or none of any real benefit to veterans was done. He will claim that this enormous number represents increases, yet the average annual value of all pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, is but $108.99, or $3.16 less than the point at which Lochren left them. (Report of June 30, 1895.) The average annual value of all pensions on the roll is but $132.74, a decrease of $1.25 from the point where Lochren left them (Report of June 30, 1895), and a decrease of $2.36 from the point where Raum left them.

The whole payment under the general law was but $71,115,703, where it was $72,052,143 nine years ago, and was $85,292,931 when General Raum left office.

The whole payment under the act of June 27, 1890, was $64,321,400, where it was $68,259,537 the year that General Raum left office and $61,686,732 when Murphy went out.

The Bureau's greatest industry during the year was directed toward rejections and making "allowances" which did not allow. There was an astounding total of 107,919 rejections to 37,077 actual allowances, or nearly 3 for 1. The actual allowances averaged about 700 a week, the rejections over 2,000. And what is equally startling is that of the total of 107,919 rejections 89,421 were on "medical grounds." "No benefit" was alleged in 5,000 cases and "legal grounds" in 13,498 cases. That is, nearly 9 out of every 11 claimants had proved up their cases beyond a doubt and had to be defrauded of their rights by injecting some medical quibble. Think of the flagrant cruelty and injustice of paltering and juggling about their physical condition with men every one of whom is past 50 and prematurely aged by reason of the hardships and strains they endured in the service of their country.

He says, "The Commissioner has given the right of way to original claims in which no pension has ever been granted," etc.

In his report for 1896 he estimated that there were 75,000 of these. This year he says there are 69,468. That is, he has given the "right of way" to 5,532, or about 1 in 15. These are probably those that he has been compelled to grant by Congressional or other pressure.

He has allowed but 333 of the 17,560 Spanish war claims filed. A few months ago he made as an excuse that he could not get the necessary data in regard to these from the War Department. General Ainsworth at once nailed this by saying that every call from the Pension Bureau had been, and could always be, answered inside of twenty-four hours.

The Commissioner admits that Lochren's Order 225, which was the subject of general denunciation in 1896, and which was condemned by the national encampment at Cincinnati, is still in force, and says that no change has been made from his predecessor's course under it.

His recommendation in regard to admitting to the pension list men who previously served in the rebel army is intended to benefit him politically in Tennessee.

His concluding paragraph about the liberalization of the laws and practices is given a direct, flat contradiction by instances of bitter injustice furnished by every community in the country where veterans and their widows reside.

FACTS THAT WILL NOT DOWN.

The annual reports of the various Commissioners of Pensions are interesting, especially to persons who are concerned in the subject to which they relate. The accompanying table, covering a period of eight years, has been compiled from such official documents, and furnishes some rather painful contrasts:

Pension statistics.

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Original allowances (new pensions).				Increases, etc.	Restorations to roll.	Total allowances.	Rejections, all classes.	Dropped from roll.
	General law.	Act of June 27, 1890.	Miscellaneous.	Total original.
Harrison-Raum:
1892	25,163	198,760	1,014	222,937	79,009	2,227	304,167	102,928	25,306
1893	17,813	99,408	4,409	121,630	56,705	2,004	180,339	115,221	33,630
Cleveland-Lochren and Murphy:
1894	10,491	24,846	3,748	39,085	26,235	2,398	67,718	132,873	37,531
1895	9,126	28,442	1,617	39,185	76,447	4,206	119,638	103,355	42,411
1896	7,827	31,361	1,186	40,374	33,311	3,873	77,558	97,280	44,093
1897*	†8,302	†40,709	910	‡56,953	‡25,762	‡4,433	‡94,535	76,234	41,222
McKinley-Evans:
1898*	§8,117	§43,647	884	45,796	§26,760	‖3,327	‖68,826	85,629	46,651
1899	6,451	30,625	1,001	37,077	32,148	3,914	73,139	107,919	43,186

*During over ten months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, D. I. Murphy, a Democrat, served as Commissioner of Pensions, and during the remaining two months of that fiscal year there was no material change in the practice. Certificates had been prepared in 6,852 original, 762 restoration, and 7,057 increase and miscellaneous claims during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, which rightfully should be credited in the statistics for that year, but Commissioner Evans held them up until after July 1, 1897, as he admits in his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and uses them to pad out his showing for 1898. In the figures given for the years 1897 and 1898, the allowances mentioned have been, as they should be, added to the figures as to 1897 and deducted from those of 1898.

†As incorrectly given in Commissioner's report for 1897.

‡Increased by allowances which should have been credited. See note above.

§As erroneously set forth in Commissioner's report for 1898.

‖Decreased by allowances erroneously claimed for 1898. See note above.

AN APOLOGY IS IN ORDER.

Previous to January 7, 1893, the basis of the adjudication of veterans' claims, under the act of June 27, 1890, was Pension Bureau Order 164, issued in 1890, as follows:

That all claimants under act of June 27, 1890, showing a mental or physical disability or disabilities of a permanent character, not the result of their own vicious habits, and which incapacitate them for the performance of manual labor, rendering them unable to earn a support in such a degree as would be rated under former laws at or above $6 and less than $12 per month, shall be rated the same as like disabilities of service origin; and that all cases showing a pensionable disability which, if of service origin, would be rated at or above $12 per month, shall be rated at $12 per month.

Approved.

GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.

CYRUS BUSSEY, Assistant Secretary.

BUSSEY ASSAILS OLD SOLDIERS.

After the election of Cleveland in 1892, Cyrus Bussey made the following savage assault upon the old soldiers, which will be found in his published decision on the pension appeal of Henry Weike, dated January 7, 1893:

The foregoing order (164, see above) has governed the practice of your Bureau in the matter of rates, under the act of June 27, 1890, since the date of its issue. It appears, however, that said order as understood by the Department when approving it, may have been misconstrued by your Bureau, so far as it has been your practice to add the separate nominal and schedule rates allowed for several disabilities in making a rating under this act. This has resulted by reason of the fact that it has been your practice under the old law to combine these rates where the total does not exceed seventeen-eighteenths. The question as to the correctness of that practice is not now before the Department for decision. It is deemed proper to state that the Department in approving said Order No. 164 did not intend that small rates should be added together, as, for example, three or more rates of two-eighteenths in order to make a rate under the provisions of said act. A man may have two or more separate afflictions, either one of which considered singly entitles him to a two-dollar rate under the old law, and yet in the aggregate they may not disable him for the performance of manual labor to a much greater degree than either of them existing alone. Or he may have one serious disability and one or more slight disabilities, the latter of which do not have any appreciable effect upon the degree of incapacity for manual labor occasioned by the former.

* * * * * * *

It is directed that the views herein expressed be observed in the future adjudications of claims under the act of June 27, 1890.

It has been charged that the motive of this attack by Secretary Bussey on his former comrades was to avenge the defeat of Mr. Harrison by giving the old soldiers an effective object lesson; others have charged that his action of January 7, 1893, was an effort to square himself with the incoming mugwump Administration, hoping thereby to hold his job, which paid $3,500 a year. Whatever the facts on this point are, it is certain that the Harrison Administration and General Bussey were careful to wait until after the election of 1892 before they promulgated the repeal of Order 164.

When the Cleveland-Lochren Administration came into power, with its gold-standard, money-power prejudices against Union veterans, it was not slow to avail itself of the weapon provided for it by General Bussey in his Weike decision. On May 27, 1893, it promulgated Order 225, which indorsed Bussey's emasculation of Order 164, and Lochren's much abused revision of the pension roll followed, the statistics of which, as appears from Lochren's report of 1895, were as follows:

Whole number of claims revised	104,100
Pensions dropped	4,149
Pensions reduced in rate	22,638
Number of adverse actions taken	77,373

It was to this harrying of old soldiers that the Republican platform of 1896 referred in these terms:

We denounce the practice in the Pension Bureau, so recklessly and unjustly carried on by the present (Cleveland) Administration, of reducing pensions and arbitrarily dropping names from the rolls as deserving the severest condemnation of the American people.

The absolute insincerity and colossal perfidy of the McKinley-Evans Administration in its relations with Union veterans, before and ever since the election of 1896, is made clearly manifest by the report of Evans for the fiscal year of 1899, which was approved by Secretary Hitchcock and President McKinley, and is one of the executive documents transmitted with the last annual Presidential message. In attempting to excuse the appalling number of his rejections (107,000) in a single year, the Commissioner says, on pages 28 and 29 of his report:

A very large percentage of rejections is made in claims for increase, for restoration, for rerating, and for arrears of pension under the act of March 6, 1896.

This is largely the result of the adjudication of claims under the provisions of Order No. 164, from October 15, 1890, to January 7, 1893, when the said order was revoked by the Department in a decision handed down in the case of Henry H. Weike. During this period pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, were granted so generously, the greater number at the maximum rate or total disability. Following this, under Order No. 225, of May 27, 1893, a large number of claims were readjudicated in 1893, 1894, and 1895, many having their pensions stopped and many others reduced. During the first-mentioned period claimants were pensioned for all disabilities incurred since their service at the same rate, up to $12 per month, as for like disabilities (or even with greater liberality) of service origin. For the first three years after the passage of the act of June 27, 1890, there were added to the roll, under this most liberal construction of the law, 313,798 invalids and 85,667 widows.

A great many of these pensioners were granted a higher rate than their disabilities warranted under a proper construction of the law, and while their ability for self-support by manual labor may have increased since the date of the allowance of their claims, their capacity for earning such support is not impaired in a degree warranting a higher rate under the provisions of Order No. 225, which superseded Order 164. These claims for increase must therefore be rejected on the ground that the rates of pension are fully commensurate with the degree of disability now shown.

* * * * * * *

A large percentage of rejections arises from claims filed under the act of March 6, 1896, for arrears of pension from date of filing the first application. When claims are adjudicated under the act of June 27, 1890, the date of commencement of pension is fixed after careful consideration of the evidence, and if a rate is warranted from the date of the first application the pension is made to commence at that date. If a ratable disability is not shown from date of first application, the commencement of pension is fixed from the date of filing the application under which a ratable disability is shown. This action results in the filing of a large number of applications asking for a prior date of commencement, and many of them must be necessarily rejected.

Many applications have been filed for restoration of rates under the act of June 27, 1890, that were reduced under the provisions of Order No. 225. When the medical examinations held under these applications and the evidence on file fail to show a disability warranting restoration to former rate of pension, the claim must be rejected.

If the Cleveland-Lochren administration deserved "the severest condemnation of the American people" for "reducing pensions and arbitrarily dropping names from the roll," what treatment should the McKinley-Evans administration receive from their outraged countrymen for obtaining office under false pretenses and then continuing and openly indorsing the very abuses so unscathingly denounced by the Republican convention of 1896?

The Republican party should make proper amends to Mr. Cleveland, for it has not only stolen his imported gold standard but has absconded with his pension policy as well.

OLD-LAW CLAIMANTS THE WORST SUFFERERS.

The National Tribune, issue of September 9, 1898, editorially asserts:

It is not only the claimants under the act of June 27, 1890, that have a heavy grievance against Henry Clay Evans's cruelly illiberal administration of the Pension Bureau. These have been made most prominent because they are the most numerous and because the bitter injustice to them could be easiest explained. But every class of claimants are treated the same way, and all suffer alike. If there is any difference, the claimants under the old laws, who are suffering from disabilities traceable to their service, are treated the worst. Their cases are postponed from year to year, and when brought to adjudication all the chances are against them. There were 992 old-law claims adjudicated during last July, of which but 98 were allowed and 834 rejected—that is, 89 out of every 100 were rejected and only 11 allowed. A very large proportion of those allowed were Regular Army and Navy claims for disabilities ncurred since the rebellion.

In a previous issue, that of June 22, 1899, the National Tribune explains how claims under the general or old law have been delayed and defeated in an article entitled:

WHERE HE MAKES THE LAW.

Mr. Evans is now loudly proclaiming that the "law" prevents him from doing this and that that he should do, but in every instance that he cites it is not the law, but his narrow and unjustifiable interpretation of the law. Rather, it is Lochren's perversion of the law, which Evans has inherited, continued, and made in many instances harsher.

Nearly all claims under the old law are rejected on service origin, unless there is a record of existence in service of the alleged disability, or testimony of an Army surgeon. It makes no difference how many officers or first sergeants or comrades testify to the existence and origin in service, or how strong they testify, the board of review simply refuses to believe the evidence, and rejects on the convenient ground that origin in service is not satisfactorily established.

Occasionally one of these claims is appealed to the Secretary and allowed by him if there is strong Congressional influence behind it.

When Commissioner Evans first came into the office, he issued instructions that all such claims should be sent to the field. The board did not quite catch the cue, and referred them to S. E. "per Commissioner's order." The chief clerk then instructed the reviewers that they should not say that, but refer for reasons, stating them. Thereafter the claims were generally rejected without referring to the special examiner; but, if not, the rejection was and is still made on return from the field. No claim of that class can be found allowed in the Bureau for eighteen months last past.

This sly practice overturns standing decisions and all rules on legal weight of evidence and goes further than ever before under existing laws. During Cleveland's first Administration the rule was applied to new disabilities; but not to original disabilities (Laura Wright, 2 P. D., 253.) This estoppel was expressly overruled and removed by the Harrison Administration (Laura Wright, 3. P. D., 191; Gillespie and Eddings, 6 P. D., 54); and the Harrison practice was followed with protests by Cleveland's last Administration (7 P. D., 36, Strange case; Jones, 8 P. D., 304.) The McKinley Administration holds the same as the last Cleveland Administration (Lee, 9 P. D., 214.) But this does not make any difference to an adverse Commissioner. He goes right ahead with his unlawful rejections, trusting that but few cases will be appealed in his day, and that Congress will never send an investigating committee to weigh the evidence in 15,000 or 20,000 of such claims as a sample. It would take as large a lot as 20,000 of these rejected claims to give a just idea of the enormity of his offending.

What we want is a Commissioner who will execute the laws as Congress makes them—not defeat them by his juggling rulings and technicalities.

Evans must go.

SPANISH-WAR VETERANS ALSO VICTIMS.

During the period between June 30, 1898, and July 1, 1899, although 17,560 claims for pensions on account of the war with Spain were filed, only 303 of such claims had been allowed. To this cruel neglect of the brave boys who were wounded at El Caney and San Juan Hill, and contracted permanent diseases in the fever camp of Chickamauga and in other unsanitary rendezvous, is directed the twelfth count of "The indictment against Evans," contained in the issue of August 31, 1899, of the National Tribune, which reads as follows:

Twelfth count.—He has for the past year unlawfully withheld from official consideration in ordinary course of business the just claims of soldiers and sailors of the Spanish war, many of them sons and other relatives of soldiers and sailors of the rebellion, on the misrepresentation that the War Department has been unprepared or unwilling or unable to furnish required information from the official military records, whereas the War Department has been ready and willing to furnish desired reports on twenty-four hours' notice. (National Tribune, June 29, 1899.) The unlawful and unjustifiable action of the Commissioner of Pensions in this class of claims furnishes striking evidence of his personal feelings and disposition toward all beneficiaries of the pension laws, there being with respect to this class of claims no room for the slanderous objection or suggestion that the claimants have for many years slept on their alleged rights and the claims therefore presumably of doubtful or fraudulent character.

OUR NEW PENSIONERS.

Under this title, in what purports to be a personally written article printed in the issue of the Los Angeles Times of May 13, 1900, Commissioner Evans flippantly discusses the pension status of our brave boys who have followed the flag in Cuba and the Philippines and have received wounds or incurred other disabilities in the line of duty. At the outset he says:

Uncle Sam owes much to the small-caliber bullet. The missile that maims makes pensioners; the one that causes a clean wound without disabling saves the exchequer of the country the expense of maintaining a man whose devotion to duty has cut him out of the ranks of the workers. The new pension list strikingly illustrates the immense difference between the bullet wound of the civil war and that of the late struggle in Cuba and the present one in the Philippines.

There have been, all told, almost 28,500 claims filed on account of the Spanish war and the Philippine insurrection. A good many of these will never be allowed. Numbers of applications for pensions, however, will be made later, as after the civil war, when few claims were filed immediately peace was declared, but numbers when the ills directly traceable to the hardships of campaigning began to make their presence felt. It is certain that when these later claims are filed the number of claims arising out of the late war with Spain will be proportionately greater than those filed after the civil war.

Note the genuine money-power prejudice which crops out in his first two sentences. The saving of life in the use of a modern bullet by our enemies does not appear to gratify the Commissioner half so much as his contemplation that "a clean wound saves the exchequer of the country." To the money power and its minions the saving of pension money is the great consideration, and "the expense of maintaining a man whose devotion to duty has cut him out of the ranks of the workers" has ever been resented and begrudged. This and the plutocratic mania of regarding a pension claimant as a fraud, and a disabled veteran who does not apply for a pension as ipso facto a hero, is apparent from the following paragraph of the Commissioner's creed:

Many will go on the list who have no right there. Numbers will not be there who have a perfect right to be. We can not examine every case, and frauds will occasionally victimize the Pension Office. As a set-off against these there are many patriotic Americans, especially among the regulars, who bore their sufferings without a murmur, went back to duty when discharged from the hospital, and are to-day serving in the ranks, when a few affidavits and a bold front would have carried their pension application through and given them perhaps that which they deserved far better than some whose names now figure on the list. All honor to these patriots who refuse to take advantage of the natural hesitancy of the Pension Bureau to turn down cases that have any claim on the national money box.

THE SPY SYSTEM.

One of the chief causes of complaint against the Cleveland-Lochren Administration of the Pension Bureau was that veterans and veterans' widows were constantly annoyed and harassed by a swarm of detectives, technically known as "special pension examiners."

That this system has continued and flourished under the McKinley-Evans régime is demonstrated in an article published in the issue of the National Tribune of November 9, 1899, entitled:

THE SPECIAL EXAMINATION FARCE.

Mr. Evans is spending every year $400,000 on special examinations. Under General Raum and his predecessors the special examiners were sent into the field to help claimants complete their claims; that is, the examiner acted with judicial impartiality. His purpose was to get at the actual facts of any case, and if he discovered any facts which would help the claimant, he gave him the benefit of them, as well as the adverse effect of facts that were against him.

Mr. Lochren changed all that. He made the special examiners a corps of spies to find reasons for refusing or taking away pensions, and Mr. Evans has continued this system and aggravated it. He has made all hopes of promotion to the corps of special examiners, or of retaining the place when once there, rest on servile sleuthness in scenting pretexts for denying or dropping pensions. See what sums have been expended on this disreputable work by Lochren and Evans:

LOCHREN.

1893	$225,000
1894	400,000
1895	500,000
1896	500,000
Total Lochren	1,625,000

EVANS.

1897	$500,000
1898	450,000
1899	403,000
Total Evans	1,353,000
Grand total	2,975,000

That is, nearly $3,000,000, or enough to put 30,000 claimants on the rolls at $8 a month, has been spent in the disgraceful work of spying around, gathering up neighborhood gossip as to whether this old pensioner is able to hoe in his garden or that old widow has had a lapse from virtue.

In the issue of the National Tribune of November 16, 1899, appears the following manly and indignant protest against the McKinley-Evans practice of causing special pension examiners to propound vile and insulting questions to soldiers' widows:

SPECIAL EXAMINERS.

Editor National Tribune:

The Globe-Democrat says that Mr. Evans, Pension Commissioner, denies that insulting questions are asked widows of soldiers, except in cases where charges were made. Mr. Evans evidently does not know what is going on in his office, and has never seen the book of instructions that special examiners in the field carry around with them.

At the request of a soldier's widow I was present when the special examiner was taking her statement and that of witnesses in her case, as to the income from a piece of property and valuation. This property had been bought for her and her children for a home by two rich relations, and was in trust. There was n o charge of immorality. I saw and read the letter from the Commissioner as to the nature of the inquiry. The examiner, after asking quite a number of questions as to her financial condition, and she explaining how her relations had bought this property for a home, said: "Madam, I am about to ask you a very impudent question, but I have no discretion in the matter, as I must follow my instructions," picking up the book from the table. "Well, what is it?" said the lady. The examiner then said: "Madam, have you, since the death of your husband, cohabited with anyone?" The widow answered "No," and began to cry. I then denounced such questions as an insult to a soldier's widow.

This widow is as fine a lady and as well connected as any in this city, and the only trouble in her case was that she had been left without a dollar, and herself and her four children to provide for and educate; and because friends had seen proper to assist her her case must be investigated and she insulted. If it were not for the great publicity and mortification it would cause the lady, I would send on her and my affidavits as to the facts as stated.

JAS. M. WILSON, St. Louis, Mo.

THE CHICAGO VICTIMS.

Under this heading the National Tribune, in its issue of August 10, 1899, savagely denounces the McKinley-Evans attempt to besmirch the good names of the widows and mothers of Union veterans of the State of Illinois, as follows:

According to the Commissioner of Pensions' report for 1898, there were the following numbers and classes of pensions paid from the Chicago agency, now suffering from a raid of Henry Clay Evans's special examiners:

General law:
Army invalids	27,785
Army widows	7,574
Army nurses	64
Navy invalids	1,038
Navy widows	349
Act of June 27, 1890:
Invalids	25,416
Widows	7,030
Navy invalids	2,359
Navy widows	836
War of 1812—widows	107
War with Mexico:
Survivors	629
Widows	636
Indian wars:
Survivors	81
Widows	263
Total	76,067

Every one of these is being subjected to a mean, vicious espionage, that eagerly snaps up every scrap of malicious neighborhood gossip as a chicken would a fly. There are 17,695 widows and 64 nurses among them. Nearly all of these are quite elderly women, who married their husbands at the close of the war, and have lived irreproachable lives as wives and mothers. Now, every one of these has to undergo this degrading inquisition. No matter how old and infirm they may be, how blameless the lives they have lived, how high the esteem in which they are held by their neighbors and brethren and sisters in their churches, the special examiners act on the presumption that they have been guilty of disreputable conduct, and nose around for every scent that will confirm this theory. And Henry Clay Evans, as grand inquisitor, decides in his star chamber in Washington whether these suspicious, these malignant whisperings, are true. He allows his victim no chance to defend herself. He pronounces sentence, and there is no appeal for the poor old woman, who loses not only her little pension, but in the closing years of her life her reputation, carefully maintained through blameless girlhood, wifehood, and motherhood, is wickedly snatched away.

A Chicago comrade of high standing in the Grand Army of the Republic writes us:

"The gang has been enlarged on the pensioners of Chicago. They go from house to house, and are more persistent than the cheekiest of lightning-rod agents. They are simply insulting in their way of cross-examining the man who draws $6 and the widow who is in receipt of $8. This is the worst deal that has ever been given our people. It is an accusation that strikes an old soldier more deeply than all the abuse they have ever had heaped upon them, boiled down, and you can not treat the matter too harshly. Mr. Evans is spending over $100 a day here in his infamous inquisition. How is that for 'economy?'"

A MICHIGAN VICTIM.

Another instance of the McKinley-Evans persecution of a soldier's widow is narrated in a communication printed in The National Tribune, August 3, 1899, under this caption:

"SAVING MONEY" BY RUINING THE REPUTATION OF A MOST WORTHY AND BLAMELESS OLD WOMAN.

Editor National Tribune:

As the recognized champion for right and justice to the veterans of our civil war, will you be so kind as to insert the following in your valuable paper:

Mrs. Mary M. Elliott, of Roscommon, Mich., widow of the late Daniel Elliott, a volunteer soldier of our civil war, had been granted a widow's pension of $8 per month. Being old and decrepit, she was hired as a servant by one William C. Carpenter, also a veteran and a pensioner, to do his housework, etc., Carpenter being a widower. Everything went on smoothly for a number of years, Mrs. Elliott being respected and loved in this community as a chaste, law-abiding woman, and not the least suspicion was thrown upon her character by reason of being employed by the said Carpenter. About a year ago Mrs. Elliott received a communication from the Pension Bureau at Washington that her name was struck from the pension rolls, charges having been made against her that she was living in open, notorious, and unlawful cohabitation with one W. C. Carpenter.

She at once set to work to refute the charges, and at least 40 affidavits made by our best citizens, among them being our sheriff, prosecuting attorney, president of the village, judge of probate, county treasurer, ministers, doctors, and merchants of this village, were forwarded to Washington, bearing testimony, under oath, that the charges preferred against Mrs. Elliott were untrue and without any foundation whatever.

A special examiner was finally sent to Roscommon. After taking testimony under oath and gathering in all possible evidence, pro and con, for two or three days, this special examiner stated to me that there would be no trouble for Mrs. Elliott to have her pension restored; that he was fully satisfied that the charges were not proven, and that his (the examiner's) report to the Pension Bureau would fully vindicate Mrs. Elliott.

What was her astonishment when she received a letter a few days ago apprising her that her application for restoration of pension had been rejected upon the report of the special examiner.

The people of Roscommon have been grossly and wantonly insulted by the Commissioner of Pensions; he has branded them as liars, unworthy of belief, and as perjurers; he has given preference to anonymous letters, and rejected the sworn testimony of at least 40 good citizens of this community.

A poor old woman, nearly blind, unable to sustain herself, is now thrown upon this cold world without any cause, either to starve, to live on charity, or to go to the poorhouse, and the widow of one of the fallen heroes of our great civil war.

Verily, the reward she receives from this our great and good Government as the widow of a soldier is to be recorded in history as an everlasting shame and stain upon the heads of those who must shoulder the responsibility of one of the greatest injustices ever perpetrated.

CHAS. L. DE WAELE.
Prosecuting Attorney, Roscommon, Mich.

Commenting on the shocking disclosures as to the cowardly, insulting, and outrageous espionage on and interrogations of the widows and mothers of Union veterans, which is and has been part and parcel of the McKinley-Evans pension policy, The National Tribune says editorially in its issue of August 10, 1899:

AN IGNOBLE INQUISITION.

Actuated by his monomania as to frauds on the pension roll—almost desperate to substantiate his slanders upon the veterans and their widows—frenetic to advertise his shrewdness and cunning to the public, Henry Clay Evans has revived another of the obnoxious devices of William Lochren. He has sent to Chicago a band of thirteen special examiners, chosen with great care as to their aptitude for the work, on an extraordinary fraud hunt. Not that there have been any developments to call for this unusual inquisition. There has been nothing to indicate the existence of frauds there. They are sent thither with drag-net instructions, in the hope that they may find something that will bolster up their falling chief.

They are instructed to take the whole list of 76,000 pensioners paid by the Chicago agency and make a house-to-house investigation of every one of them, listening to and encouraging all manner of neighborhood gossip concerning each one of them and following up every clew that may be obtained which promises to furnish a pretext for dropping from the roll. If the pensioner is a man, every tittle-tattle about his present or previous habits of life is to be carefully listened to and inquired into. His ability to work is to be discussed with his neighbors and preponderance given to the statements of those who are, for any reason, unfriendly to him. If the claimant is a widow, her income must be made a matter of rigid inquiry, that she may not have more than the $96 a year, which, by the grace of Henry Clay Evans, she is allowed. And particular attention must be paid to any whispers against her character.

This inquisition would not be so atrocious if its victims were given any chance to meet those who bear witness against them and to learn what accusations spite, jealousy, or neighborhood enmities may have led them to make. But they are not allowed this natural right of every American. Their enemies furtively whisper innuendoes and calumnies to the examiner in some dark corner, and the first the victim hears is that the Commissioner has exercised his summary power of dropping him or her from the roll. We recently published two flagrant instances of how this worked in the cases of poor old women of unimpeachable character. In one the prosecuting attorney of Roscommon County, Mich., testified over his own name how a poor old half-blind widow of his city, who worked as a servant for her living, had been reported by some anonymous miscreant for unchastity, and though the charge was on the face of it absurd, though the special examiner who investigated the case confessed as much, and though 40 of the leading citizens of Roscommon joined in a certificate of the poor woman's good character and an indignant protest against her vilifier, Commissioner Evans refused to restore her to the roll or give the name of the vicious slanderer. Lincoln Post, of Topeka, Kans., certified to another similarly aggravated case.

The special examiners who are doing this odious work are only human. No matter what may be their likes or dislikes as to the duty upon which they are sent, they know that their standing in the office, their retention of their positions, and their chances for promotion all depend upon the activity and zeal that they show in attacking the character of every man and woman on the pension roll. The more to the discredit of any pensioner that they can find and send in the better will the Commissioner be pleased, the better their standing in the office, the greater their chances for promotion.

If the results obtained in Chicago justify it, other agencies will be visited in like manner.

How much longer must the veterans stand these persecutions?

Illustrative of the tendency to a clash between the interests of the money power, which is behind the imperialistic policy of the present Administration, and the pensioned and pension claiming of our citizens, the following able articles from recent issues of the National Tribune, the most prominent organ of the Grand Army of the Republic and of veterans generally, are worthy of thoughtful perusal and consideration.

The following is from its issue of September 21, 1899:

A FIGHT TO A FINISH.

The selfish, sordid, greedy, ungrateful money power, mostly concentrated in New York, Philadelphia, and Boston, and largely represented and controlled by men who have come into the country since the close of the rebellion, has entered upon an organized campaign to reduce pension expenditures. It can not bear to see $140,000,000 a year taken from its control and distributed among the common people all over the country. This makes money more plentiful everywhere and easier to get. It reduces the rate of interest and cuts down the profits of the great lending corporations. It puts a great sum of money completely out of the control of the financiers, and so they hate pensions with the consuming hatred of men whose "pocket nerves" are irritated.

On the other hand, the small merchant, the dealers of all kinds, the great mass of common people everywhere, to whom this money is immediately paid by the pensioners, should be actively in favor of pensions. They are their great relief from the money monopolists. There can be no better machinery for preventing money stagnation and congestion than this of quarterly disbursements to the common people in every town and village of the great sum which the Government pays in satisfaction of the just claims of the men who saved its very existence.

The money power controls the papers of the metropolitan cities and is using them mercilessly against pensions. It is now a fight to a finish. If they can prevail, pensions will continue to be cut down, and the vast number of veterans and their widows who go to their graves every year defrauded of rights bought with their dearest blood will be greatly augmented. The question now is sharply presented as to which is the stronger, the men who own money or the men who have made and are making the nation the greatest on earth.

The National Tribune is on the side of the men who fought and saved the nation and who have built up its farms, its factories, and its varied industries. It is not against the men who merely own money except when and where they are antagonistic to the higher rights of those to whom the country owes everything.

The National Tribune of September 21, 1899, says:

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE ACCOUNT.

Commissioner Evans, in his annual report for 1899, parades the fact that there "have been $2,389,910,974.74 paid out since 1860 for pensions." These figures are strongly at variance with those usually given in books of reference, which make the total amount paid since 1861 $2,289,425,128, or over $100,000,000 less than Mr. Evans's figures and for four years longer time. But let that go, and accept Mr. Evans's figures. The object of Mr. Evans in publishing these figures is, of course, and in accordance with his usual practice, to prejudice public opinion against the veterans, by showing that they have dipped inordinately into the Treasury and made themselves a heavy burden on the taxpayers.

Now, facts and figures out of their places and out of their relations are worse than lies, and the dangerous falsehood of this statement is that it is cunningly unaccompanied by any sort of comparison with the payments to the other class of the nation's creditors—the men who lent it money, instead of offering it themselves.

The Government urgently needed two things during the war—money and men. It wanted to borrow the first and have the other given it. It wanted those who had money to risk a portion of it at big interest on the Government's being able to maintain itself, and it wanted the men by millions to risk limbs, health, and life itself to maintain its existence. The money lenders were more reluctant to lend their dollars than the men were to enlist, and more than once, at critical times, they actually "struck" against lending any more.

Altogether they lent the Government $2,381,530,294. This was in paper dollars worth all the way from par down to 38.7 cents in gold. Much the greater part was lent at a time when the greenback was worth in the neighborhood of 50 cents. If we assume that the average gold value of the dollars which they lent the Government was 66¾ cents, which is far above the actuality, it would make the total gold value of their loans $1,587,686,862. For this loan they have received back in principal, interest, premiums, etc.—all in gold—and inclusive of the bonds they still hold, the incredible sum of $5,353,569,900!

That is, they have gotten back nearly $4 for every dollar that they lent the Government.

They have gotten more than twice as much as has been paid in the way of pensions to the survivors and widows of the 2,320,272 men who gave an average of three years' service to the Government.

They have been paid an equivalent of about $70 in gold for every man, woman, and child in the country to-day!

This, too, was paid them when the country was not half so rich as it is to-day, and taxation sat more than twice as heavily.

Remember that the money lenders have received $5,353,569,900!

This is an inconceivable amount of money. It approximates the total valuation of the country and everything in it, according to the census of 1850, only eleven years before the war. Then the assessed valuation of every acre of land, every house and lot, every factory, every mile of railroad, all the crops and live stock, including slaves, was only $6,024,666,900, or but $671,097,000 more than has been paid the money lenders since 1861 for their lendings to the Government during the war.

There is still another important feature. All this vast amount was raised by the most drastic taxation at a time when the wealth of the country was only a fraction of what it is now. A very large proportion was paid by the ex-volunteers, who on their return became the great body of wealth producers of the loyal portion of the country, which bore the whole burden of taxation for many years. The veterans cheerfully endured all this in order to pay the money lenders the last cent that they could possibly claim under their contracts. Now the money lenders, with base ingratitude, turn around and fight giving the veterans even scant justice in their age and need.

Still another feature: Every man who enlisted in the Union Army made a financial sacrifice. Taking everything at full cash value, the Government gave him $1,036 for three years' service. Every man capable of being a soldier could have earned at least twice that by remaining at home; therefore each man made an average donation of at least $1,000 for the privilege of serving the Government three years. Multiplying this by 2,320,000, the number of men who gave the Government an average of three years' service, we have the astounding amount of $2,320,000,000, or about as much freely given the Government as the bondholders lent it.

The Government has paid in pensions to those who were disabled and to the widows and orphans, according to Mr. Evans's figures, $2,389,910,974.74. It has therefore scarcely paid back to those who were wrecked in its service as much as those who enlisted freely donated to it, in addition to risking their lives and all that life could give in order to rescue it from destruction.

The nation has not been generous to the men who saved its existence.

It has not paid its plain money debt to them.

It has not begun to treat them with that scrupulous recognition of their claims that it displayed toward the bondholder.

The National Tribune of September 28, 1899, says:

INGRATITUDE OF THE GREEDY MONEY POWER.

One single illustration will well show the graceless ingratitude of the money power, which is now fighting pensions to the men who gave their blood and lives to place that power where it is to-day.

All through the rebellion the greedy cormorants of Wall street fattened on the needs and misfortunes of the country. While the patriotic youth of the land were striving even unto death to save the country—while they were enduring the strains of fateful campaigns, the tense anxieties of months and years of wavering fortunes, the anguish of defeat, the exultation of victory—while the inmates of every home in the North woke each morning with apprehensions as to what news the day would bring of the fate of the loved ones—these men were cunningly plotting to make gain out of every event—defeat or victory, fruitless marches or repulsed assaults. A defeat, or even the failure of the Union Army to win a decided success, merely meant to them that the Government would need more money; that they could drive a harder bargain with it, and that what they had already lent was not so desirable an investment. They kept steadily to their determination not to lend a dollar more than the loyal portion of the country would be likely able to pay if the Southern States succeeded in establishing their independence.

The gold value of the greenback dollar—the Government's promise to pay—was their measure of belief in the Government's ability to sustain itself.

July 11, 1864, saw them in a condition of mind when they wanted to abandon the sinking hulk. Their purely selfish view saw all the chances against the Government. The mighty armies which had been raised during the winter had, after three months of the bloodiest fighting in human annals, apparently been fought to a standstill. They saw Grant's maimed and decimated army bloodily repulsed from the impregnable intrenchments around Petersburg. Sherman's magnificent force of 100,000 men, with which he had started from Chattanooga in May, had been unable to score a single complete success over the rebels, and was lying before the intrenchments around Atlanta, seemingly unable to advance, and sure of destruction if it attempted to retreat. The force which Banks had led up the Red River had been driven in humiliating rout. Two separate armies had been chased out of the Shenandoah Valley, and the confident rebels were even then at the gates of Washington. The cowardly money changers felt that all they could hope for was some salvage out of the wreck, and this feeling was represented by the fact that on July 11, 1864, they demanded and got $285 in greenbacks for $100 in gold—that is, they would only pay a fraction over 35 cents for a greenback dollar. They estimated that the chances were nearly two to one against the Government's being able to sustain itself and pay anything.

Up to that time they had lent the Government $1,359,980,768 in paper dollars, and held its bonds for this amount. According to their own figures this was then worth but $475,975,767. There was then outstanding $833,718,984 in paper money, which was, by the same figures, only worth $291,801,615. This was only the beginning of the story. There were hundreds of millions of dollars more of bank, railway, mining, and manufacturing bonds and stocks, of other bonds, notes, bank deposits, trusts, legacies, contracts, etc., all depending upon the gold value of the greenback dollar.

If the men who were fighting the battles of the Union had been as cowardly and unpatriotic as the money lenders; if the men who emerged from the bloody hell of the Wilderness and Cold Harbor, only to undergo renewed slaughter on the Appomattox; if those who had fought their way for 100 miles through the mountain fastnesses of Georgia, had been as faint-hearted and reckless of the country's future as the Wall street cormorants, and said, as they might well have said, "We are tired and discouraged by this ceaseless slaughter; we will fight no more," then the value of the greenback, and all of the wealth depending on it, would have gone no one knows whither. Billions of dollars of valuation would have simply disappeared. They would have been crossed off the account books, as the Confederate bonds, money, and all values depending on them were at the close of the war.

But the soldiers—the men and their representatives who are drawing pensions to-day—did nothing of the kind. They were determined that the country should be preserved, no matter what might be the cost to themselves in life and limb. They went on and took Atlanta, they drove the rebels out of the Shenandoah Valley, and they hammered away at Petersburg with renewed zeal. Their brethren on the sea took Mobile, and by the end of October they had put such a different face on matters that the money changers were willing to pay 48.3 cents for the Government's promise to pay a dollar. That is, in about ten weeks they had, by reckless expenditure of their blood and lives, increased the value of the greenback dollar over 13 cents—more than one-third its price on July 11—and correspondingly enhanced the price of every bond, share of stock, mortgage, note, trust, etc., in the whole country.

In May, 1865, after these same soldiers had forced the surrender of Lee and Johnston, ten months after the greenback had been selling for 35 cents, it was selling for 73.7 cents.

That is, inside of ten months these men who are now the objects of the abuse of all the papers controlled by the money power, by their unflinching determination and regardlessness of self, more than doubled the value of every bond, share of stock, paper dollar, and paper evidence of value in the whole country, and added billions to the actual wealth of the money power.

Yet this same power, with Henry Clay Evans as its venal tool, is now engaged in a campaign of defamation against these men and their widows, and striving to deprive them of their pitiful little pensions in their old age.

The National Tribune of October 5, 1899, says:

THE SELFISH AND UNPATRIOTIC COWARDICE OF THE MONEY POWER.

In previous articles we have shown how the greedy money power of New York and other Eastern cities was ready to abandon the country in July, 1864, and struck at it viciously in its most vulnerable part, by depreciating its money until the greenback dollar was worth but a little over 35 cents in gold. It was the time of all others when they should have patriotically rallied to its assistance, and offered it their wealth as freely as the volunteers in the field were offering it their blood, to rescue it from destruction. While the soldiers in the field, who had stained with their blood every step in the long miles from the Rappahannock to the James, and from Chattanooga to Atlanta, felt that they would rather die than see the Southern Confederacy succeed, the selfish and cowardly money power refused to risk another dollar—even those despised greenback dollars—to help the Government maintain itself.

The Secretary of the Treasury, William Pitt Fessenden, in his report dated December 6, 1864, tells pathetically of the Treasury's struggles with these cormorants:

"The prospect of negotiating a loan in the ordinary way was by no means flattering, as the notice for a loan of $33,000,000 advertised on the 25th day of June had been withdrawn on the 2d of July, the Secretary having reason to believe that such a loan would not be taken on terms which it would be for the interest of the Government to accept."

That is, in the seven days they convinced the Secretary that they would not give him even so small a loan as $33,000,000, no matter what the straits of the Government. This, too, at a time when money was unprecedentedly plenty, and the amount asked for represented but $11,550,000 in gold, upon which the Government offered to pay over 12 per cent.

Then the hardly pressed Secretary called a meeting in New York of the managers of the New York, Boston, and Philadelphia banks, and other financial corporations, and tried to get them to lend him $50,000,000 upon bonds and other securities of the United States. He was terribly in need of $130,000,000 for supplies and ammunition for Grant's and Sherman's hard-fighting armies, and which the contractors prudently refused to furnish until they got the money. Again the bank managers refused to help, and the Secretary came back to Washington entirely empty handed. Then, July 25, he appealed to the people with an advertisement of a national loan. This did not meet a satisfactory response, and in his despair the Secretary turned to the men who were fighting the battles of the country—the men who were then under the fire of the enemy in the trenches around Petersburg and Atlanta. Out of their meager little $16 a month they lent the Treasury $20,000,000.

The grateful Secretary says:

"The Secretary * * * was gratified to find that these notes were readily taken in payment to a large amount by our gallant soldiers, in many instances not only receiving them with alacrity, but expressing their satisfaction at being able to aid their country by loaning money to the Government. The whole amount of notes thus disposed of exceeded $20,000,000, and the Secretary has great satisfaction in stating that the disposal thus made was not only a relief to the Treasury, but proved a benefit to the recipients, in affording them a safe and valuable investment and an easy mode of transmitting funds to their families."

Of course the $20,000,000 which the volunteers loaned the Government became a "safe and valuable investment," because the soldiers stuck to their work for eight or nine months longer, and by "sending Early whirling up the valley," by clinging to the throat of Lee's army around Richmond, by running him down through the mud and rain to Appomattox, by marching to the sea and through the Carolinas, and by crushing Hood's army at Franklin and Nashville, made not only their loan gilt-edged, but put many billions of dollars into the pockets of holders of greenbacks, notes, stocks, shares, and bonds of every description.

What a contrast is presented between the glorious, all-conquering faith and self-sacrifice of the soldiers and the paltering selfishness of the money power at the moment when the nation's fate hung trembling in the balance.

Yet to-day, when the money power has reaped unknown billions of dollars from this steadfastness of the soldiers, it wages a war of cruel calumny to rob them of their meager pensions in their needy old age.

It is heartless and shameful.

The National Tribune of October 12, 1899, says:

PENSIONERS VERSUS BONDHOLDERS.

Altogether the bondholders lent the Government $2,381,530,294.

These were greenback dollars, varying in value all the way from par down to 35 cents.

Very much of this was lent when the greenback was worth in the neighborhood of 50 cents or less, as the following table, showing the aggregate debt for the year and the average value of the greenback, will show:

Year.	Total debt.	Average value of greenback.
1861	$90,580,874	Par to 88.3
1862	365,304,826	88.3
1863	707,531,634	68.9
1864	1,359,930,763	49.2
1865	2,381,530,294	63.6

The increase of the debt from year to year indicates the amount of the lendings that year, and the price of the greenback indicates the real gold value of the same. For example, in the fiscal year ending August 31, 1865, the debt increased $1,021,599,531, or almost half the total amount, and the gold value of the greenbacks lent varied from 39.4 cents to 73.7 cents. The earlier part of the year it was far under 50 cents, going as low as 35 cents July 11, 1864.

If we assume, therefore, that the average value of all the dollars lent was as much as 66⅔ cents, we are making a very strong assumption in favor of the bondholders. Yet this will make the total value of their lendings only $1,587,686,862. For this they have been paid back—counting in the market value of the bonds they still hold—the enormous sum of $5,353,569,900, or nearly four times the value of their original lendings! To show this at a glance, we restate it in the form of an account:

MONEY LENDERS IN ACCOUNT WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Dr.		Cr.
To amount of debt repaid to date	$1,796,496,034	By paper dollars loaned up to August 31, 1865, $2,381,530,294. Gold value of same at 66⅔ cents	$1,587,686,862
To bonds yet outstanding, $585,024,200. To market value of same at $125	731,292,825
To interest to date	2,705,917,633
To premiums	119,863,408
Total	5,353,569,900	Total	1,587,686,862

Now, let us take the other side of the account—that of the men who gave years of their lives, their health, their strength, and even their lives, where the bondholders only lent a portion of their wealth.

The War Department statistics show that there were an average of 2,320,272 men who gave three years' service to the Government. These men received for this, counting everything at current money values, as follows:

Two years' pay, at $13	$312
One year's pay, at $10	102
Three years' clothing, at $42	126
Three years' rations, at $9 a month	324
Bounty	100
Additional bounty	100
Total	1,154

Average pay per annum, $384.66⅔.

Now, every one of those strong, able-bodied young men was capable of earning from double to quadruple that amount, and would have gotten it if he had stayed at home and received the high wages then ruling. Skilled mechanics received from $3 to $6 and $8 per day. Farmers got as high as $3 a bushel for wheat, $1.50 for corn, $1 a pound for wool, etc. We shall not be overstating it when we estimate the average wage-earning capacity of the men from the Union Army at $1,200 a year. Therefore each of them made an average donation to the Government for the privilege of serving it of about $2,000.

If we multiply this by the aggregate, 2,320,272 three-years men, we shall have the astonishing total of $4,640,544,000. That is, the men who fought the battles of the country actually donated to the Government about twice as much as the bondholders lent it. We can reduce all our estimates very much and still show that the soldiers gave outright to the Government more than the money power lent it.

The payment of pensions is not an offset to this. Pensions are given in compensation for injuries and disabilities received in the war. They are in satisfaction for an actual debt incurred by the Government when it sent the men on the march and into battle, and have no relation to the sacrifice made by men to enter the Army. But they are associated in the public mind with rewards to the soldiers, and therefore they can be put in opposition to the rewards given the men who lent the money.

The total amount paid out for pensions since 1861 foots up $2,289,420,128, or much less than half the amount paid the bondholders. To be exact, the money lenders have received $3,034,149,772 more than the soldiers, and the present rate of about $140,000,000 could be continued for over twenty-one years before the aggregate paid the pensioners would reach the present aggregate paid the bondholders.

The soldiers of the Union were resolute in their belief that the bondholders should be paid, as they have been. They held it to be right and just that the Government should pay the last cent that could be justly claimed by those who lent it money in its hour of need. They taxed themselves mercilessly to do this, and presented a solid front against all schemes of repudiation, no matter how artful and seductive.

Now, it is the basest ingratitude for the money power to be arrayed solidly against justice to the men to whom it owes so much.

On December 14, 1899, the National Tribune said:

THE UNIVERSAL BENEFIT OF PENSION EXPENDITURES.

Few who read and are influenced by the constant tirade against the "burden of pension expenditures" stop to reflect that there is a much greater fact to be offset against this. That is, the incalculable, incomputable, but nevertheless direct and positive, dollars-and-cents value of the periodical disbursements for pensions to the merchants, retail dealers of all kinds, physicians, and professional men, the mechanics and artisans of the whole country. It is they who, in the end, receive the most benefit from pension expenditures. In a very little while every dollar of the $140,000,000 annually paid out for pensions finds its way into the pockets of men who have stores and shops, large or small, who sell dry goods, clothing, shoes, hats, groceries, meat, family supplies, drugs and medicines, who practice medicine or dentistry, who run blacksmith, carpenter, or other shops, or who are, in short, doing anything useful for the community in which the pensioners live.

Entirely differing from any other class of Government creditors, the pensioners immediately spend every dollar that is paid them directly among their neighbors in the village where they reside. They are the very opposite of the bondholder, who takes his interest to pay the expenses of himself and family in Europe; or the contractor who locks his gold and greenbacks up in the vaults of a safety deposit company, or some other man who may expend his check on the subtreasury in silks and diamonds and French wines. The pensioner's dollars are all for the prime necessaries of life, such as his neighbors around him make their living by supplying.

The direct benefit of this to the business men and artisans of every village and town in the country is simply beyond computation or expressing. It is a mighty power to keep money in healthful circulation and promote general prosperity. Capitalists may get frightened, clutch all the money in reach and lock it up in vaults; bankers may put the screws on "accommodations;" operators may plot to tighten the money market; strikes may occur to stop work and wages; mills may shut down; crops may fail; grasshoppers devour; floods waste and hurricanes devastate, but so long as pensions are paid there will be some ready money coming into town every three months, upon which business can be done. There will be money in circulation which will be independent alike of the manipulations of selfish financiers and the misfortunes to trades and agriculture.

Take, for example, the State of Ohio. There are 105,627 pensioners in the State, who receive every year $15,456,006.90. As there are 88 counties in the State, this would make an average of 1,200 pensioners to each county and an average payment to each county of $175,630. That is, the Treasury distributes among the people of each county in Ohio an average of $43,900 every three months.

Can there be any overestimation of the benefits which flow to every merchant, every shopkeeper, every retail dealer, every mechanic, every artisan, of the quarterly payment of this great sum directly to the people of the county? There is not a man in the whole county, no matter what he does or what business he is engaged in, but within a very short time after pension day gets some of this money in his pocket. Even if he is only a day laborer he finds some one more ready to hire him and pay him good wages than he would be were it not for this.

And the certainty that this money will come—that it can not be prevented by Wall street panics, or bankers' schemes, or trade disturbances, or crop failures—enables men of all kinds to go ahead and make their arrangements with a degree of confidence which they otherwise would not have. From the quickness with which this money passes into circulation and from hand to hand among all classes it does more good than millions would if doled out through the timid and stringent methods of the banks.

Then there is the question "of the burden on the taxpayer." No matter what he may say for the purposes of argument, every decently informed man knows that the fund from which pensions are paid is not the slightest burden on any taxpayer. As a rule, the customs duties and internal-revenue duties were imposed and are maintained more for the protection of American industry, and the regulation of certain traffics, than to secure the revenue. Take, for example, oleomargarine, from which the Government receives about $2,000,000 a year. This tax was levied to restrain the production and sale of bogus butter and cheese, and the revenue part was a mere fiction. Before the war with Spain called for extraordinary expenditures, the Government had to find a way to return to the people the money it was obliged to collect to protect American manufacturers and to regulate the whisky, beer, and tobacco trades. The people demanded that certain duties be imposed on imported goods and on the distillation and sale of whisky, the brewing and sale of beer, and the manufacture and sale of bogus butter and cheese. What was done with the proceeds of those duties was a secondary question. The imposition of the duties was the main thing and in this they were resolute. The expenses of the Spanish war are now being rapidly met, and we shall soon return to the same condition. "The burden on the taxpayer" is the most absurd of partisan fictions.

In paying pensions the Government is not only meeting its just obligations to those whom it is overwhelmingly indebted, but incidentally it has hit upon the most effective way in which to return to the whole people, without partiality or favoritism, the money it is compelled by a mandate of the people to collect for economic and moral purposes.

SAVING MONEY.

The money power controls the McKinley-Evans administration of pensions affairs just as it did during the Cleveland-Lochren régime, and it gloats with satisfaction as it contemplated the millions of dollars appropriated by Congress for the payment of pensions has been filched from the pockets of deserving, infirm, and needy veterans, their widows and other dependents, through the refusal of the McKinley-Evans combination to carry out the pledges to "the old-soldier element" made in the campaign of 1896. Upon this subject the National Tribune, in its issue of November 9, 1899, has this to say:

NO "LOOTING THE TREASURY."

It suits Mr. Evans and his literary bureau to keep up a great pretense that the veterans and their widows are ravenously eager to "loot the Treasury" and riot in the hundreds of millions of dollars hoarded there, and that the only thing which prevents this dire robbery is Mr. Evans's superhuman shrewdness and unparalleled integrity.

As we have frequently said before, we have not the slightest objection to any public man trumpeting his own ability and honesty to any extent that he can impose upon newspaper space so long as he does not attempt to build himself up at some one else's expense.

But nothing can be more aggravatingly untrue than this brazen claim. The difference between Evans's policy of niggardly injustice and one of fair and honest interpretation of the pension laws represents in the aggregate an astonishingly small sum, instead of the tens of millions which Evans would make out.

When it is remembered that $8 a month is only $96 a year, it will be seen that he has to deprive an immense number of people, poor old men and women, of their rights in order to save even so much as $1,000,000 a year.

For example, since Mr. Evans has been Commissioner he has turned back into the Treasury, of money that Congress gave him to pay the just claims against the Government—

In 1898	$3,166,000
In 1899	1,746,000
Total	4,912,000

Congress certainly had no idea that the Treasury was being "looted" when it freely and willingly appropriated that money, and Congress is not noted for its liberality toward public creditors. Its sins are on the side of grudging parsimony rather than on that of generosity. Yet it took the view that at least that much was due the poor, old, long-waiting men and women, and that they should be paid. The sum that Evans turned back would have actually put 50,000 of them on the roll at $8 a month, and as Mr. Evans reported that there were probably 65,000 only original applications on file from parties who have not heretofore received any pensions, this would have, in connection with the year's mortality, virtually cleared up the pension docket.

If this had been done, it would have gone far to satisfy all reasonable expectations as to this Administration's management of the Pension Bureau.

DELAYS SAVE MONEY.

That the downright rejection of pension claims is not the only way to curtail pension payments has been fully demonstrated by the McKinley-Evans combination.

During the discussion of the pension appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1898, Commissioner Evans appeared before the committees of Congress, and although at that time in his Bureau there were then pending over 600,000 pension claims, of which over 200,000 were those of persons who had never drawn pensions, he had the effrontery to ask that his force of clerks be reduced. The money power was then, as now, in full swing, both Houses of Congress had Republican majorities, and it quickly saw the cold-blooded purpose of its faithful servant. A Republican Congress enacted, and a Republican President approved, the law cutting down the clerical force of the Pension Bureau by 110 clerks. This saved the Treasury over $100,000 a year in clerk hire; and, coincident with this reduction of the clerical force of the Pension Bureau, the number of pension claims allowed during the ensuing fiscal year (1899) was reduced by over 14,000; the annual value of the pensions allowed during that period was reduced by $1,200,000, and nearly $2,000,000 of the money appropriated by Congress to pay pensions during the year 1899 was turned back into the Treasury.

Another McKinley-Evans scheme to delay claims, especially those of dependent relatives of Union veterans, is capitally exposed by the National Tribune in its issue of July 6, 1899, under the title of—

EVANS'S TACTICS.

Some of the tactics to which Commissioner Evans has resorted in order to save up millions of dollars from pensions to return to the United States Treasury for this year are very wonderful.

Early in February, 1898, Evans had prepared a little book, signed by him as the author, and published April 9, 1898, instructing the office force what to do, entitled "Practice of the Pension Bureau."

In this book, tucked away nicely in two lines in an out-of-the-way place near the bottom of page 116, is one of his sly tricks which overruled the settled practice and law of eight years' standing in mothers' claims under the act of June 27, 1890, and caused the unlawful rejection of 1,000 of these old mothers' claims.

These are the only words he used to do the hostile work:

"The remarriage of a mother after the death of the soldier is a bar to pension under this act."

This same question had been fully considered by both the Harrison and the Cleveland Administrations on the special requests of Commissioners Raum and Lochren, and decided exactly the other way, both Administrations holding that a mother's remarriage before applying for pension under the June law did not bar her claim if she was still in a destitute or pensionable condition as to property and income. (See decision of August 6, 1890, published in 4 P. D., 240; 6 P. D., page 30; 7 P. D., page 543; 7 P. D., 550, and Ruling 243, of April, 1891.)

* * * * * * * *

On June 25, 1899 (one year and three months after the work of rejecting these mothers' claims began), the first appeal was reached by the Secretary, and Evans's action reversed. But he had accomplished his purpose. The saving had been made for his June, 1899, report.

It will be five years, if these mothers live so long, before all these rejected claims will be reached for reopening. At least half of the mothers will be then dead and the saving made permanent.

Evans is doing a similar wrong to a class of minors' claims under the old law. He is placing them on the "hold-up files," refusing to consider them, although the question has been decided against him and Lochren dozens of times by the Secretary and the Attorney-General. Lochren was simple enough to begin rejecting these minors' claims; and, just as Evans has done with the mothers' claims, rejected some 5,000 before an appeal could be reached to stop him. Evans is profiting by Lochren's experience, and has learned a better way, one that will not give them a chance to appeal. He refuses to act, and as fast as they reach the board of review, he piles them away, if ready for allowance. During the last two years he has piled up 15,000 of these minors' claims that have been submitted for allowance, or for the field, as prima facie complete. He allows the adjudicating division to complete them before he holds them up. These are many of the same claims that have been ready for four and five years, which Lochren rejected on same ground that Evans now holds them up in the board of review. Had he (E.) taken this course with the mothers' claims, he could have worked it for two more years; for only a mandamus can compel him to take them off the hold-up files.

PLEDGES AND PERFORMANCES CONTRASTED.

